The TRYAL of George Borosky alias Boratzi, Chriſtopher Vratz, John Stern, and Charles John Count Coningſmark.

Publiſh'd by AUTHORITY.

On Tueſday the 28*th* of February 1681. The Seſſions of the Peace for the City of London, and of Oyer and Terminer for the City of London and County of Middleſex, which was adjourned over till this day, was held at the Seſſions-houſe in the Old Bailey: And there having been an Indictment found at Hicks's-hall by the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex againſt Charles George Borosky, Chriſtopher Vratz and John Stern for murdering Thomas Thynn Eſq; and againſt Charles John Count Coningsmark as acceſſory before the Fact, the ſaid Perſons being in Newgate, were brought to the Bar to be Arraigned and Tryed: And they being Foreigners, an Interpreter was ſworn to acquaint them in a Language they underſtood, what they were Accuſed of.

Clerk of the Crown. CHarles Borosky hold up thy hand. (Which he did.) Chriſtopher Vratz hold up thy hand. (Which he did.) John Stern hold up thy hand. (Which he did.) Charles John Coningſmark hold up thy hand. (Which he did.)

You ſtand Indicted in the County of Middleſex by the Names of Charles George Borosky, late of the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Labourer; otherwiſe called George Boratzi of the ſame Pariſh and County, Labourer; Chriſtopher Vratz of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; John Stern of the ſame Pariſh and County, Gentleman; and Charles John Coningſmark, of the ſame Pariſh and County, Eſquire; otherwiſe called John Coningſmark of the ſame Pariſh and County, Eſquire: For that you the ſaid Charles George Borosky alias Boratzi, Chriſtopher Vratz and John Stern, not having God before your Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, upon the Twelfth Day of February, in the Thirty Fourth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles the Second, with Force and Arms in the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, in and upon Thomas Thynn, Eſquire; in the Peace of God, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, Feloniouſly, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault.

Assault. And that thou the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, a certain Blunderbuss of the Value of Five Shillings, the said Blunderbuss being then charged with Gunpowder, and Four Leaden Bullets; which said Blunderbuss thou the said George Borosky alias Boratzi in both thy hands so as aforesaid, Loaden to and against the said Thomas Thynn then and there hadst and heldest. And that thou the aforesaid George Borosky alias Boratzi, knowing the Blunderbuss aforesaid, to be so as aforesaid, charged with Gunpowder and Leaden Bullets, to and against the said Thomas Thynn then and there, with Force of Arms, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of thy Malice aforethought, didst Discharge and Shoot off. And that thou the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, with the said Leaden Bullets shot and sent out of the Blunderbuss aforesaid, by the violence and force of the Gunpowder aforesaid: And by thee the said George Borosky alias Boratzi so as aforesaid discharged and shot off, the said Thomas Thynn in and upon the right side of the Body of the said Thomas Thynn, near the short Ribbs of the right side of the Body of the said Thomas Thynn then and there Feloniously, Wilfully, and of thy Malice aforethought didst Strike and Wound; giving unto him the said Thomas Thynn then and there with the Leaden Bullets aforesaid, so as aforesaid shot and sent out of the Blunderbuss aforesaid by force and violence of the Gunpowder aforesaid, by thee the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, so as aforesaid discharged and sent out, in and upon the right side of the Body of him the said Thomas Thynn, near the short Ribbs, on the right side of him the said Thomas Thynn four mortal wounds, every one of them of the breadth of one Inch, and of the depth of six Inches; of which said mortal wounds, he the said Thomas Thynn from the said twelfth day of February in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, unto the thirteenth day of the same Month of February at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields aforesaid, did languish and lived languishing: On which said thirteenth day of February, in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, he the said Thomas Thynn at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields aforesaid, of the mortal wounds so as aforesaid given, died. And that you the said Christopher Vratz and John Stern, then, that is to say at the time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the said George Borosky alias Boratzi; so as aforesaid Feloniously, Wilfully and of his Malice aforethought, done and committed, then and there Feloniously, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought, by force and arms were present, aiding, comforting, abetting, assisting and maintaining the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, the Felony and Murder aforesaid Feloniously, Wilfully and of his Malice aforethought to do and commit. And so you the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, Christopher Vratz and John Stern, the said Thomas Thynn in manner and form aforesaid, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of your Malice aforethought didst kill and murder against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, His Crown and Dignity. And that thou the said Charles John Coningsmark before the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, Christopher Vratz and John Stern in manner and form aforesaid, Feloniously, Wilfully, and of their Malice aforethought, done and committed, to wit, the said twelfth day of February, in the thirty fourth Year aforesaid, at the Parish of St. Martins in the Fields aforesaid, them the said George Borosky alias Boratzi, Christopher Vratz and John Stern the Felony and Murder aforesaid, in manner and form aforesaid Feloniously to do and commit, Feloniously, Wilfully and of thy Malice aforethought didst stir up, counsel, perswade and procure, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Sir Francis Pemberton.

L. Ch. Just. Why you must read this to them now in their Language, or else they can't understand it.

L. Ch. Just. North. You that are the Interpreter, tell them that you are going to interpret the Indictment to them by degrees.

Mr. Vandore. Yes, my Lord, I will.

L. Ch. Just. Don't read all the Circumstantials, but only the substance of the Indictment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown went near the Bar, and dictated to the Interpreter deliberately, who interpreted it to the Prisoners.

L. Ch. Just. Well, you have told them the substance of it, that they are Indicted for killing Mr. Thynn.

Mr. Vandore. Yes.

L. Ch. Just. Well, what says the first man?

Cl. of Cr. I asked him if he be Guilty of the Murder whereof he stands Indicted, and he says he is not Guilty.

L. Ch. Just. Does he say so?

Mr. Vandore. Yes, he says he is not Guilty.

L. Ch. Just. Why now tell him the Formality, that he must put himself upon the Jury here.

[Then Sir Nathaniel Johnson was sworn Interpreter.

L. Ch. Just. Ask him this Question. Tell him he is accused of the Murder of Mr. Thomas Thynn; ask him if he be Guilty, or not Guilty.

Mr. Vandore. He says he is not Guilty, my Lord. I ask'd him just now.

L. Ch. Just. Then Sir Nathaniel Johnson, if you can make him to understand it, tell him; that our manner of Tryal here is by Twelve men, and that is by putting himself upon the Country, and therefore ask him, how he will be tryed. Tell him that the method is by saying, By God and the Country.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he is a very dull kind of man, he knows not how to Answer, nor what to say; nor won't say any thing, that is the truth of it.

L. Ch. Just. Ask him if he be willing to be tryed after the manner of the English.

Sir N. Johnson. Yes, he says he is willing to be tryed according to the fashion of the English.

L. Ch. Just. North. He hath pleaded not Guilty, and the other follows of course.

L. Ch. Just. Ask the other, the Captain, the same thing.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires a French Interpreter, for he speaks French.

L. Ch. Justice. Surely here are enough People that understand French, but ask him if he does not understand English.

Sir N. Johns. He can understand some he says.

L. Ch. Just. Then ask him, whether he be Guilty, or not.

Sir N. Johnson. He says he is not Guilty, my Lord.

L. Ch. Just. Now ask Mr. Stern, but first, ask the Captain howhe will be tryed.

Sir N. Johnson. He says he will be tryed by God, and half his own Country, and half English.

L. Ch. Just. He shall have his Request.

Sir N. Johnson, He desires one thing further.

L. Ch. Just. Look you Sir Nathaniel Johnson, you must tell him this; he shall be tryed by half Foreigners, Foreigners, and half Engliſh; that is it I ſuppoſe he deſires.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he deſires that there may be none of the Jury that are any thing a Kindred or Relation to Mr. Thomas Thynn, nor any particular Friend of his, and he is ſatisfied.

L. Ch. Juſt. No, there ſhall not, we will take care of that. Now ask Mr. Stern then the like Queſtion.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays he is not Guilty.

L. Ch. Juſt. Ask him too how he will be tryed; Whether by a Jury?

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays he's content to be tryed as the others are, by half Strangers and half Engliſh.

L. Ch. Juſt. Now then ask my Lord Coningſmark what he ſays.

Mr. Thynn. He ſpeaks Engliſh, my Lord.

L. Ch. Juſt. But not well enough may be, to underſtand the whole.

L. Ch. Juſt. North. Sir Nathaniel, what does he ſay?

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays it is a Concern of his Life, and therefore he deſires he may have not only one Interpreter, but others: He deſires he may have two or three, that they may make no Miſtake.

L. Ch. Juſt. Very well.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays that I underſtand the Dutch Language; but his Life and Honour are concerned, and therefore he would have three or four.

L. Ch. Juſt. Who would he have?

Sir N. Johnſon. Sir Tho. Thynn ſaid they had one that was brought by them.

Mr. Thynn. That is Vandore, who is ſworn already.

L. Ch. Juſt. Look you, Sir Nathaniel, tell my Lord, if he pleaſes, he ſhall have a French Interpreter; for I know he ſpeaks that Language very well.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays, That High Dutch is his Natural Language, and he can expreſs himſelf beſt in that.

[Then one Vanbaring was called for by the Count, but did not appear.

Wm. Montague, Eſq;

L. Ch. Bar. Sir N. Johnſon, You muſt ask the Count whether he be Guilty of the Indictment, as Acceſſory before the Fact.

Sir N. Johnſon. I have asked my Lord, and Not Guilty he anſwers.

Cl. of the Cr. How will you be tryed?

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, he will be tryed by God and half his own Country, or half Foreigners and half Engliſh; and he deſires they may be Perſons of ſome Quality, as they uſe to treat Perſons of his Quality, and Strangers.

L. Ch. Juſt. There ſhall be ſuch Strangers, tell him. You have Merchants of good Account, I ſuppoſe, upon this Pannel?

Under-Sheriff. Yes, my Lord, they are all ſuch.

Sir N. Johnſon. He deſires he may be tryed diſtinctly from the others.

L. Ch. Juſt. That cannot be: But look you Sir, Pray tell my Lord this, That though the Evidence muſt be given, and the Jury muſt be charged all together, yet in this caſe we will diſtinguiſh his Caſe to the Jury, if there be occaſion.

L. Ch. Bar. And his Evidence will come diſtinct.

Mr. Vandore. My Lord, he asks this Queſtion of your Lordſhip and this Honourable Court, if it be agreeable, and according to the Juſtice of this Nation, that my Lord may be allowed two or three days Delay, becauſe he is to prepare himſelf and Witneſſes for his Tryal.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays this, his Witneſſes are not prepared, and he not having had time to recollect himſelf, ſo as to fit himſelf for his Defence, therefore he begs the favour of the Court, that he may have a day or two's time to recollect himſelf. He ſays he is to anſwer Circumſtances with Circumſtances, my Lord; he ſays he has ſome Witneſſes as to Circumſtances that are very material to anſwer ſuch Circumſtances as are brought againſt him; he does not underſtand the Law, my Lord, nor has had no time to have any Council to inform himſelf.

L. Ch. Juſt. You muſt tell him this, That which he is charged with is matter of Fact that none can inſtruct him in but himſelf, Council can do him no good in ſuch a caſe as this.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays, the Matters that are objected againſt him are only Circumſtances, my Lord, and they require an Anſwer, which he can do by other Circumſtances, and he deſires time to recollect himſelf, two or three days reſpite, he deſires if it were but a little time, a day or two.

Mr. Thynn. My Lord, our Witneſſes are all ready, and the Counſel inſtructed, and wait here to go on.

L. Ch Juſt. North. Look you, pray will you tell him, When the Tryal is once begun, the Jury can neither eat nor drink till they have given their Verdict; that is the Law, and we can't change the Law, therefore we cannot allow him the time he deſires. He knows what he is Accuſed of, and has known it a good while, and has had time to recollect himſelf, and prepare himſelf.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays, the Jury are not yet together, nor charged with him, and therefore till the Jury are charged, he thinks he may have time, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to allow it.

L. Ch. Juſt. Look you, you muſt tell him, that he is to underſtand that here is but one Indictment againſt the Principals and himſelf, and we cannot try this by piece-meals; we cannot try the Principals now, and my Lord Coningſmark another time.

Sir N. Johnſon. If it muſt be ſo, he ſays, he muſt throw himſelf upon your Lordſhip; he hopes he ſhall have nothing but what is juſt and fair, and he hopes your Lordſhip will be of Counſel to him, as the Faſhion of this Country is; if any thing ariſes of Matter of Law, he deſires he may have the Advantage of it: And if he can't have a day or two, he ſays, the Innocency of his Caſe will protect him. Count Coningſmark knowing how innocent he is, won't ſtick for a day or two, but he will be ready to be tryed as your Lordſhip ſhall think fit; he has Innocence on his ſide, and that will protect him.

L. Ch. Juſt. Let my Lord know, that we will be careful in Examining all things that concern him.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, he does not fear it, my Lord, having to do with ſuch Honourable Perſons, nor doubt it at all.

L. Ch. Juſt. Then ſwear a Jury. But look you, my Lord Coningſmark, conſider this, As the Gentlemen of the Jury come to be ſworn, if you do diſlike any of them, you may except againſt them.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays, being altogether a Stranger here in England, and not knowing any of the Perſons, he begs the favour of the Bench, that he may have the Names of thoſe that are Returned of the Jury, and a little time to conſider of it.

L. C. J. That we cannot do: All we can do for you is, we will take as much care as we can, that you may have indifferent Perſons, and Perſons of Quality.

L. C. J. North. Pray tell him, the Law gives him the Privilege of a peremptory Challenge.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, my Lord, he does not know who they are, but they may be Perſons that are touched, and may have ſomething of evil Will or Spleen againſt him. His Father ſerved againſt the King of Denmark, and againſt the Poles and the Papiſts, and his Father was a Proteſtant, and ſerved the Proteſtant Cauſe.

L. C. J. What Country-men are they, Mr. Sheriff?

Under-Sheriff. They are French and Dutch moſt of them, I do not believe there is ever a Dane amongſt them.

L. C. J. We will call all French men, if he had rather have them than Dutch.

Sir N. Johnſon. He would very gladly have them all High Dutch; if not, that he may have ſome.

L. C. J. I thought he had excepted againſt the Dutch.

Sir N. Johnſon. No, againſt the Danes, for his Father in the Wars burnt their Towns.

L. C. J. Examine them as they come to the Book. If there be any of the Roman Catholick Religion, and don't let any ſuch be ſworn.

Mr. Sheriff Pilkington. There is none ſuch amongſt them, I dare ſay.

L. C. J. Sir Nat. Johnſon, tell my Lord, he ſhall have no Roman Catholicks at all.

Sir N. Johnſon. He thanks your Lordſhip. He deſires he may have the Pannel to look upon, and he hopes that is an eaſy Favour.

L. C. J. Let him have the Pannel, if it will do him any good. He is a Stranger, ſatisfy him in what we can.

[Which was delivered to him, and he looked it over.

L. C. J. Tell him as the Jury is called he ſhall have every one of the Outlandiſh-men and Engliſh-men brought before him.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he thanks you for this favour.

L. C. Bar. Sir Nat. Johnſon, tell the Count, They call firſt an Engliſh-man, then a Foreigner, and they ſhall be brought to view.

L. C. J. Pray have you told the other perſons, that their time to challenge is before the Jury is ſworn?

Sir N. Johnſon. The Polander ſays he can challenge none, becauſe he knows none.

L. C. J. What ſay the reſt?

Mr. Vandore. They ſay they know no body, and can except againſt no body.

Cl. of Cr. Call Sir Will. Roberts.

[Who appearing, ſtood up.

L. C. J. My Lord Coningſmark, there is the Foreman.

Sir N. Johnſon. He has nothing to ſay againſt him.

L. C. J. Then hold him a Book, and ſwear him. [Which was done.

Cl. of Cr. Call Mr. Downing.

Interpreter. He ſays he is no Foreigner.

L. C. J. Then he muſt not be ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Moſes Charas. [Who appeared.

Interpret. He has nothing to ſay againſt him. But he himſelf ſays, he does not ſpeak Engliſh, but he deſires to ſpeak French.

Cl. of Cr. Then tell him in French, he muſt lay his Hand on the Book and be ſworn, and hearken to his Oath.

Sir Fr. Winnington. We challenge him for the King.

L. C. J. For what Cauſe?

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, we take it that we need not ſhew any Cauſe, unleſs there be any want of the Number in the Pannel.

L. C. J. Then we muſt do him right, and tell him what Advantage the Law gives him. Tell my Lord, you that underſtand Engliſh, that this Gentleman is challenged for the King, and if the King ſhew any good Cauſe for it, he muſt not be ſworn, elſe he muſt. And the way for him to cauſe the King's Council to ſhew their Cauſe, (if he deſire it) is to challenge all the reſt.

Mr. Williams. We wave our challenge; for the reaſon why we challenged him was, becauſe he did not underſtand Engliſh, which will be no reaſon at all.

Then he was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Sir Henry Ingoldsby.

Sir N. Johnſon. He challenges him, my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Sir William Gulſton.

Sir N. Johnſon. He excepts againſt him, my Lord.

L. C. J. Does he challenge him in reſpect of what I ſaid to him about the Outlandiſh Gentlemen, that the King is to ſhew cauſe? Or how does he challenge him?

Interpret. My Lord, he ſays, he hears he is a Friend to Mr. Thynn.

L. C. J. Well let him be paſſed by then.

Cl. of Cr. Sir John Muſters. [Who did not appear.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, my Lord, he only deſires indifferent perſons.

Cl. of Cr. Henry Herbert, Eſq;

Sir N. Johnſon. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Paget, Eſq;

Sir N. Johnſon. He deſires to ſee him.

L. C. J. Let him be brought into the middle, that he may look upon the Priſoners.

Interpret. He has nothing to ſay againſt him.

Then he was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. James Bucgone.

Interpret. He excepts againſt him.

Cl. of Cr. Claudius Devolee.

Interpret. He excepts againſt him too.

Cl. of Cr. Charles Beelow.

Interpret. He ſays he looks like a Man, and he does not except againſt him. [And he was Sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Ralph Bucknall, Eſq;

Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Earsby, Eſq;

Interpret. He challenges him too.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Nath. Johnſon, pray tell him he can challenge but Twenty.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays very well; he will not do any more. He deſires the favour, that thoſe that he challenges may not come near thoſe that are ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, it ſhall be ſo; we will take care of it.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Gowre, Eſq;

Sir N. Johnſon. He excepts againſt him.

Cl. of Cr. George Hocknall, Eſq;

Interpret. He challenges him. [But then the Count looking in his Paper, retracted his challenge, and he was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Peter Vandenhagen.

Interpret. He ſays nothing to him. [Then he was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Walter Moyle, Eſq;

Cl. of Cr. Andrew Lodderley.

Cl. of Cr. James Burk.

Cl. of Cr. Lucy Knightley, Eſq;

Interpret. He challenges him.

Cl. of Cr. John Haynes, Eſq;

Interpret. He challenges him. He ſays they are all Walloons, and therefore he challenges them.

L. C. J. Why does he except againſt Walloons?

Interpret. Becauſe they have always ſerved againſt the Swedes.

Cl. of Cr. John Lebarr.

Interpret. He does not except againſt him. [And ſo he was ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, count theſe, &c.

Then Proclamation for Information and Proſecution was made: And a Chair was ſet for the Count, at his Requeſt.

Cl. of Cr. GEntlemen, Look upon the Priſoners, you that are Sworn, and hearken to their Cauſe; they ſtand Indicted prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis —— againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty: And for their Tryal, have put themſelves upon God and their Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether they, or any of them are guilty of the Offences whereof they ſtand Indicted, or not Guilty. And if you find them, or any of them Guilty, you are to find what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had at the time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince. If you find them or any of them Guilty, you are to inquire, whether they or any of them fled for it: If you find that they, or any of them fled for it, you are to inquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty; if you find them or any of them not Guilty, nor that they did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence. But if you acquit any one of the Principals ——

L. C. J. That is a Miſtake, it muſt be all the Principals.

Cl. of Cr. If you acquit the Principals, you are not to inquire of Charles John Coningſmark as acceſſory before.

Mr. Keene. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn of this Jury, George Borosky, alias Boratzi, Chriſtopher Vratz, and John Stern, the Priſoners at the Bar, ſtand here Indicted; for that they not having the fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the 12th Day of February, in the 34th Year of the Reign of this King, feloniouſly and voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did make an Aſſault upon Thomas Thynn, Eſq; at the Pariſh of St. Martin's in the Fields, in this County; and that the ſaid George Borosky, having in his Hands a Blunderbuſs, which he knew to be charged with four leaden Bullets, did diſcharge it at Mr. Thynn, and gave him four mortal Wounds, of which Wounds he languiſhed till the 13th Day of February, and then dyed: And that they, the ſaid Chriſtopher Vratz, and John Stern were there preſent, aiding, aſſiſting and abetting him to commit the ſaid Felony and Murder; and ſo that they the ſaid George Borosky, Chriſtopher Vratz, and John Stern, did of their Malice afore-thought, in manner aforeſaid, Murder the ſaid Thomas Thynn. And Charles John Coningſmark, the other Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands Indicted, for that he before the Felony and Murder aforeſaid, ſo done and committed, to wit, the 12th Day of February aforeſaid, did of his Malice afore-thought, move, incite, counſel, perſuade and procure the ſaid Borosky, Vratz, and Stern, to do that Murder, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Indictment they have ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty; and you are to enquire, whether they are Guilty, as they are charged, or no.

Sir Francis Withins. My Lord and Gentlemen, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King, againſt gainſt the Priſoners at the Bar. There are three of them Indicted as Principals in this Murder, the fourth as Acceſſory before. In this Caſe that is now before you, Gentlemen, I cannot chuſe but take Notice unto you, that a Murder of this Nature has never been heard of to be perpetrated upon Engliſh Ground, both in reſpect of the Perſon Murdered, and in reſpect of the Circumſtances of the Fact. For the Perſon Murdered, a Gentleman of that Quality and Eſtate, that he hath left but few Equals behind him. That this Man being in his Coach, ſhould be way-layed, ſurpriſed, murdered, and this Murder committed in the midſt of our Streets, is that which works Amazement in all Engliſh Hearts. And our only Comfort upon this ſad Occaſion is, that there is not one Native of this Countrey found amongſt all thoſe that are Accuſed to be Inſtruments in this Barbarous Fact.

I did Obſerve to you, Gentlemen, before, that there are three named to be Principals; Borosky, whom for diſtinction ſake, I ſhall call by the Name of the Polander, Vratz, who is called the Captain, and Stern, who is called the Lieutetenant. Borosky the Polander, we ſay, was the Man that diſcharged this Blunderbuſs againſt this Worthy Gentleman that was ſlain; but though he was the only Man that diſcharg'd it, yet if we can ſatisfie you that Vratz and Stern were with him at the ſame time, aiding and aſſiſting him when he gave the Blow, they are as much Principals as he that ſhot off the Gun. It will be natural to open to you what is ſaid againſt this Captain Vratz; he is a Swede by Birth, and did formerly belong to Count Coningſmark; he was a Retainer to him. Afterwards, I think in the War he was made a Captain. This Gentleman had been formerly in England, but at the laſt time he came, which was three Weeks, or thereabouts, before the Murder was committed, his Lodging was in King-ſtreet at Weſtminſter. This Captain Vratz, we ſhall prove, did often diſcourſe that he had a Quarrel with Mr. Thynn, that ſeveral times before this Murder was actually done, he ordered his Servant to way-lay his Coach; and upon that very fatal Day, the 12th of February, when this unhappy Accident fell out, having Information that Mr. Thynn was gone out in his Coach, immediately he puts on his Boots, gives Order to his Servant to bring his Cloaths to him at ſuch a Place, becauſe he ſhould remove his Lodging, he ſaid, that Night, that he ſhould bring his Cloaths to the Black-Bull Inn in Holbourn, and bring his Horſe thither too. When he went from his Lodging, the Polander went along with him, and they came to the Black-Bull in Holbourn, where they met with Stern. We ſhall ſhew you, that theſe three Gentlemen being thus Armed, one with a Blunderbuſs, the Second with Piſtols, and the other very well provided, rid out about ſix of the Clock, the Murder being committed about ſeven or eight. At their going out, they enquired which was their way to Temple Barr, they were ſeen to ride through the Strand to St. James's, the Fact was done in the Pall-Mall, and we ſhall ſhew you the way of it was thus; Mr. Thynn paſſing thro' the Street to go home in his Coach, three Perſons came riding up to the Coach-ſide, and while the one ſtopped the Horſes, immediately the Blunderbuſs was diſcharg'd into the Coach againſt Mr. Thynn, and gave him thoſe Wounds, of which the next Morning he dyed. Preſently theſe three Men ran away, but one of them let fall a Piſtol upon the Place, which I ſhall obſerve as a material Circumſtance againſt theſe Perſons, becauſe we ſhall prove whoſe the Blunderbuſs was. Theſe things being done, this Murder committed, and they gone away, it began to work in Peoples Thoughts, and Circumſtances began to come out, that this Blunderbuſs ſhould be ordered to be bought by Captain Vratz, who had diſcourſed with many Perſons about the Quarrel he had with Mr. Thynn, and given Order to his Servant to way-lay his Coach; and theſe Perſons being rid out at that time, there was a great Suſpicion that they did it. Great care there was taken, and great means uſed, as no doubt there would be, to apprehend the Malefactors; and by great Providence it was found out at laſt, that this Captain Vratz, according to his Word, had altered his Lodging, and was got to a Doctor's Houſe, that lived, I think, in Leiceſter-Fields. Being there ſurpriſed, and coming upon his Examination, he did not deny but he was there one of the three that was at the Place when and where Mr. Thynn was Murdered, but he pretended, he did intend to fight him in a Duel, and kill him fairly, as he called it. But Gentlemen, I muſt obſerve this to you, in my ſmall time of Experience of the World, I never knew a Man go to fight a Duel, and carry out with him a Second with a Blunderbuſs. 'Tis not poſſible he ſhould go with ſuch a Deſign as he would inſinuate, but rather with an Intention of Murder. For the Polander, he came into England but the Fryday before, and ſo we ſhall prove to you that which will ſtick hard upon the Count. Upon Fryday, he being landed, he inquires for the young Count's Tutor, which was at an Academy of one Monſieur Faubert's; and there he enquires for the Count's Secretary; he lay there, I think, that Night, and upon Saturday he was conveyed to the Count's Lodgings. There alſo he was lodged for one Night. The Count was pleaſed to beſpeak him a very good Sword, and a Coat for him, that he might be well arm'd, and there he lay on Saturday Night, as I ſaid, the Night before the Murder was committed. Upon Sunday, Gentlemen, there being a Meſſage ſent to this Doctor, where Vratz lay, the Night following that the Count would ſpeak with the Doctor, the Doctor came, and the Doctor and the Polander went away to Captain Vratz's Lodging, and from thence to Holborn, to the Black-Bull, and the Captain was carried in as much ſecreſie as he could, for he was carried in a Sedan; and I think we ſhall be able to prove by the Perſons that carried him, that this was the Man. For the other Gentleman, Stern, the Lieutenant, as they call him, he was an ancient Acquaintance of Capt. Vratz's, had known him long ago in England, and complained to him, that Lodgings might be very dear: but the Captain told him, he had a Deſign; and if he would aſſiſt him as a brave Fellow, would maintain him, and he ſhould not want Money to bear all his Charges. But we ſhall prove that this was the third Perſon that rid out with the Polander, and the Captain in this Garb that I told you of, this Night that the Fact was done. And indeed, Gentlemen, upon their Examination they have every one confeſſed the Fact; even the Polander confeſſed that he did ſhoot off the Blunderbuſs; and Vratz confeſſed that he was there, and the Lieutenant Stern; ſo that if there had been no more more Evidence, it would have been ſufficient to maintain the Iſſue, and in our Circumſtances, it is more perhaps than could be expected. This, Gentlemen, is the principal Sum of the Evidence that will be given againſt the three Principals. For the fourth, Gentlemen, Count Coningſmark, he is a Perſon of great Quality, and I am extraordinary ſorry to find the Evidence ſo ſtrong againſt him, as my Brief imports; I wiſh his Innocence were greater, and our Evidence leſs; for he is a Perſon of too great Quality, one would hope, to be concerned in a thing of this Nature; but that he was the main Abettor and Procurer of this Barbarous Buſineſs, we ſhall prove upon theſe Grounds: Firſt, That he had a Deſign upon Mr. Thynn's Life; for, Gentlemen, coming into England, about three Weeks before this Matter was tranſacted, firſt he lies in Diſguiſe, and lives private, and removes his Lodging from Place to Place frequently; that he ſent a Perſon to inquire of the Swediſh Reſident, whether, or no, if he ſhould kill Mr. Thynn in a Duel, he could by the Laws of England afterwards marry the Lady Ogle? So that Mr. Thynn's death was in Proſpect from the beginning. Gentlemen, We ſhall prove to you, as I did in ſome meaſure open before, that the Count himſelf was pleaſed to give expreſs Order, that the Polander ſhould have a good Sword bought him; that before he came into England, he was very much troubled, by reaſon of the ſtormy Weather, for fear he ſhould be caſt away; that he lodged him in his own Lodging the Night before this Act was perpetrated; and that Captain Vratz was the Morning before, and immediately after, with the Count. Another thing, Gentlemen, that I had almoſt forgot; The Count was willing to be inſtructed in the Laws of England, and inquired, Whether a Man might lawfully ride out upon a Sunday? And being told, That after Sermon he might; he was very well ſatisfied; and the Day he inquired of it, was the Day that the Murder was committed. After the thing was done, Count Coningſmark the next Morning pretended he was to go to Windſor, and leaves his Lodging; but inſtead of going to Windſor (being ſtill in his diſguiſe) he goes to Rotherhith, by the Water-ſide, and there, I think, he continues two or three Days in a black Peruque; (and that is Diſguiſe enough for ſuch a Gentleman.) And afterwards he goes to Graveſend; but, I think, he was upon the Water ſome time, before he thought it convenient to land; and there he was ſurpriſed in this Diſguiſe. And when he was ſurpriſed and taken, he ſhew'd himſelf to be in great diſorder; but being charged with the Fact, acknowledged nothing of the Matter; but how it ſhould come to paſs, that he ſhould lie ſo long diſguiſed, upon no Pretence that can be known, and afterwards to pretend that he had a Buſineſs to effect, and then he was to go into France, that will lie upon him to anſwer. But theſe are the inducing Evidences that we give to you; his keeping the Polander in his Houſe, his diſguiſing of himſelf, and his inquiring, Whether if he killed Mr. Thynn, he might not marry my Lady Ogle? His flight the next Day, and pretending to go to Windſor, when he went quite the other way, and all in a Diſguiſe; and theſe Perſons not having any appearance, or any reaſon whatſoever, for any particular Quarrel to Mr. Thynn, but the Count having ſome diſguſt to him, upon the Terms that the Witneſſes will tell you of by and by, and being related to the Count, we muſt leave it to you to judge, whether theſe Gentlemen did it ſingly and purely upon their own Heads, or whether they were not ſet upon it by the Count.

Sir Fra. Winn. My Lord, I ſhall not trouble you with repeating of our Evidence, but we will begin and call our Witneſſes, directly to prove the Murder done by theſe Gentlemen; we will prove the Fact downright upon them, and then we ſhall afterwards come to the Count.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, firſt we will direct Evidence to the Principals, and then to the Acceſſory. Call William Cole and William Ellers.

L. C. J. Swear ſome Perſons to Interpret the Evidence that ſhall be given: I do it for the ſake of the Aliens that are of the Jury; for ſome of them underſtand no Engliſh, and they will not know what to make of the Evidence, if they do not repeat it to them in their own Language.

Then Vandore and Wright were ſworn for the King.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord deſires that the Doctor and the Taylor that are in Priſon may be ſent for, to be here, for they are Witneſſes for him.

Sir Fra. Winn. We deſire they may be here too, for they are Witneſſes for the King, and I believe they are here, my Lord.

Sir N. Johnſon. Mr. Vandore does not ſpeak French.

Sir Will. Roberts. Mr. Craven ſpeaks Dutch and French very well.

Mr. Craven was ſworn.

Sir N. Johnſon. The Count deſires the favour of Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. Let the Count have Pen and Ink.

Mr. Williams. Call William Cole and William Ellers.

Who appear'd, and were ſworn.

Which is William Cole? Set him up. Acquaint my Lord and the Jury how Mr. Thynn was Aſſaulted, and the manner of it.

Cole. My Lord, my Maſter was coming up St. James's-ſtreet, from the Counteſs of Northumberland's.

Sir Fra. Winn. Name your Maſter.

Mr. Williams. Who was your Maſter?

Cole. Mr. Thynn. And I had a Flambeau in my Hand, and was going before the Coach, and coming along, at the lower end of St. Alban's-ſtreet, I heard the Blunderbuſs go off; ſo upon that I turned my Face back, and ſaw a great Smoak, and heard my Maſter cry out he was Murdered: and I ſee three Horſemen riding away on the right ſide of the Coach, and I purſued after them, and cryed out Murder; I ran to the upper end of the Hay market, till I was quite ſpent, and was able to go no further, and turning back again, my Maſter was got into the Houſe, and I underſtood he was wounded: that is all I know.

Mr. Williams. You ſay you heard a Blunderbuſs go off, and turning back, you ſaw three Men riding away from the Coach.

Cole. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Look upon the Priſoners at the Bar: Can you ſay all them, or any of them were the Men?

Cole.

Cole. No I cannot; I did not ſee their Faces, but I ſaw the Horſe of one of them was a little Bay Horſe.

Mr. Williams. But do you take any of them Men to be one of the three?

Cole. I did not ſee any of their Faces.

Sir Fr. Winn. What time of Night was it?

Cole. A quarter after Eight.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray what day of the Week?

Cole. Sunday.

Sir Fr. Winn. What day of the Month?

Cole. The 11*th* or 12*th* of February.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then, where is William Ellers? Pray do you tell the Court and Jury how Mr. Thynn was wounded, and by whom, and what you know of it.

Ellers. My Lord, I came with my Maſter from St. James's-ſtreet from my Lady Northumberland's, and as I came at St. Alban's-ſtreet, there came three Men riding by the right ſide of the Coach, and as they rid, one of them turned about, and bid me ſtop, you Dog; and juſt as I looked about, the fire was let into the Coach upon my Maſter, and the Men ran away as faſt as they could.

Sir Fr. Winn. How many were there of them?

Ellers. There were three.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were thoſe Men at the Bar, or any of them the Perſons?

Ellers. I cannot tell.

Sir Fr. Winn. What were the words they ſaid when the Coach was ſtopped: Hold, hold, or ſtop, you Dog?

Mr. Williams. What Condition was your Maſter in then? Was he ſhot then?

Ellers. Yes.

Mr. Williams. We will give you ſome Evidence now out of their Examinations.

L. C. J. You had beſt give ſome Evidence of his Wounds.

Mr. Williams. Yes, we will. Call Mr. Hobbs the Surgeon.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Craven, you hear what theſe Witneſſes ſay, tell it to the Gentlemen of the Jury that are Outlandiſh Men, That theſe Witneſſes ſwear, there were three Men did do this thing; the one of them ſtopped the Coach, and the other ſhot into it, but it was at that time of Night, they could not know their Faces, and they all rid away.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, if you pleaſe, the Witneſſes may ſpeak by degrees, and between every Witneſs I will give the Jury an Account.

L. C. J. Well, it ſhall be ſo; but theſe ſay no more than what I tell you, That three Men did do this.

Then he Interpreted it to the Jury.

L. C. J. What ſays that Gentleman to you?

Mr. Craven. He ſays, he hears that three Men did do it, but he ſays, he does not hear that they knew any of them.

Then Mr. Hobbs was ſworn.

Mr. Williams. Had you the ſearching of Mr. Thynn's Body after it was hurt?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes.

Mr. Williams. How did you find him?

Mr. Hobbs. I was with him, Sir, that Night he was wounded, and I found him ſhot with four Bullets which enter'd into his Body and tore his Guts, and wounded his Liver, and his Stomach, and his Gall, and wounded his great Guts, and his ſmall Guts, and broke one of the Ribs, and wounded the great Bone below.

Sir Fran. Winn. What time came you to him?

Mr. Hobbs. About Nine or Ten of the Clock.

Sir Fran. Winn. Did he die of thoſe Wounds?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes he did die of thoſe Wounds.

Mr. Williams. Did you apprehend them all Mortal, or any, or which of them?

Mr. Hobbs. I believe there was never a Wound but it might prove Mortal.

Sir Fran Winn. Now tell us what Day of the Week, and what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. Hobbs. It was Sunday-Night, the 12th of February, I think.

L. C. J. What did you obſerve of the Bullets, was there any thing done to them more than ordinary?

Mr. Hobbs. I could not ſee any thing, I have them here, my Lord.

L. Chief Baron. Were they Iron or Lead?

Then Mr. Hobbs delivered them into Court.

Mr. Hobbs. Two of them, the little ones, may be Iron, for one of them went through a thick Bone, and yet there was no Impreſſion on it.

L. C. J. And this that has the Impreſſion, you think might be done againſt the Bones.

Mr. Hobbs. Yes.

L. C. J. Was this left ragged on purpoſe to do the more Miſchief?

Mr. Hobbs. Which, my Lord?

L. C. J. This that is left at the end here. Would this be more Mortal than another Bullet, or harder to heal?

Mr. Hobbs. No, but as they take up a greater ſpace in flying.

L. C. J. Would not the raggedneſs hinder the healing?

Mr. Hobbs. No, only bruiſe the Fleſh, which bruiſed Fleſh muſt come away before it can be healed. All Bullets wound by bruiſing of the Fleſh.

L. C. J. Well, theſe were the four Bullets that were found in Mr. Thynn's Body?

Mr. Hobbs. I verily believe they are. Dr. Lowre had them out of my Hands for a Day or two, but I believe them to be the ſame.

L. C. J. Was there any lodged in the Stomach?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes, one of the little ones.

L. C. J. Had they broke the great Bone?

Mr. Hobbs. Yes, the great Bone in the bottom of the Belly.

L. C. J. Two of them?

Mr. Hobbs. A great one and a little one; two of them paſſed through that Bone, and lodged in the Back-Bone.

L. C. J. Was any of them gone through the Body?

Mr. Hobbs. One of them lay between the Ribbs and the Skin.

L. C. J. None were got quite through then?

Mr. Hobbs. None.

Sir. Fr. Winn. Call the Coroner, Mr. White.

L. C. J. Tell the Jury, Mr. Craven, what this Witneſs has ſaid.

[Then he Interpreted it]

L. C. J. What ſays that Gentleman?

Mr. Craven. He ſays, 'tis very well, he underſtands part of it.

L. C. J. Do the reſt of them underſtand it?

Sir N.

Sir N. Johnson. He told it in French to the others.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Hobbs have the Bullets again when the Jury have seen them.

[Then Mr. White was sworn.]

Sir Fr. Winn. Now we will ask the Coroner a Question or two. Pray will you acquaint my Lord, what you know of this Murder of Mr. Thynn.

Mr. White. On the Thirteenth of February, in the Afternoon, I sat upon the Body of Thomas Thynn Esq; and I found he had four Holes on his right-side, behind his short Ribbs, and they seem'd to be like Holes made with Bullets. And I gave order to open the Body.

L. C. J. And there the Bullets were found?

Mr. White. There the Surgeon found them.

L. C. J. Were you by?

Mr. White. I was at the taking them out.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit that the Polander should have one to Interpret what is said against him.

Mr. Williams. Captain Vratz, you hear what is said, and understand it.

Interpreter. He says he does understand it.

Mr. Williams. Pray tell the Polander what is said. That is, the two first Witnesses say, Three Persons assaulted the Coach, and one shot into the Coach, and by that means Mr. Thynn was killed, by the shot out of the Blunderbuss; and the Surgeon does say, that these four Bullets were found in his Body.

[Then it was Interpreted to the Polander.]

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, he cannot tell how many Bullets were in, he did not charge it himself, but he fired it, he says.

Sir Fr. Winn. He confesses he fired then.

Sir W. Roberts. My Lord, the Jury desire to know if the Pole can tell who did charge it?

L. C. J. North. Ask him who charged it?

Interpreter. He can tell, my Lord, he says.

L. C. J. It will be not be very material that, for his Evidence can charge no Body but himself.

Sir. Fr. Winn. Now, my Lord, if you please, we will call those Persons, the Justices of the Peace that examined these Men upon their apprehension for the Murther of Mr. Thynn. Call Mr. Bridgman, and Sir John Reresby.

[Who were sworn standing upon the Bench.]

Interpreter. My Lord, he says the Blunderbuss was given him by the Captain.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Bridgman, were you by at the taking of the Examination of these Persons?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, I was. And these were the Examinations that were taken.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were you by all the while?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir John Reresby and I did take these Examinations. And I will read them if you please.

L. C. J. As to that, let it alone, if you please. Mr. Bridgman, when the Polander was examined concerning this Murder, what did he say?

Mr. Bridgman. He owned it, to the best of my remembrance; but I refer to the Examination if I mistake.

L. C. J. Look upon it to refresh your Memory, Sir, and then tell us.

Mr. Williams. Look first what the Polander said, and then we will go on to the others.

Sir Fr. Winn. Now, Sir, will you please to acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, what he or any of them confessed of the Fact.

L. C. J. What the Polander confessed first.

Mr. Bridgman. The Polander upon his Examination before Sir John Reresby and me, did own that he came into England at the desire of Count Coningsmark.

L. C. J. Speak only as to himself; for it is Evidence only against himself.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, his Confession is intire, and we can't separate it.

L. C. J. But we must direct what is just and fitting. His Evidence can charge no body but himself; and that is the reason I would not have his Examination read, for it cannot be read but only against himself.

Mr. Bridgman. Upon his Examination he confessed, that he was present when the Captain stopped the Coach; that he fired the Musquetoon by the Captain's order; and that before he did it, the Captain bid him as soon as ever he stopped the Coach, to fire.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did he confess he did fire?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. North. As he does now.

L. C. J. Look you, now do you tell the Polander, that the Evidence against him is, That he did fire this Musquetoon, or Blunderbuss, or what you will call it?

Interpreter. He does confess it.

L. C. J. Tell him what I say, that this Evidence is given against him, That he did formerly acknowledge he discharged the Blunderbuss into the Coach, when Captain Vratz stopped the Coach.

Interpreter. Yes, my Lord, he says 'tis true, he fired according to his order.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Sir, consider what was confessed by the Captain.

Mr. Bridgman. He confessed he had a design to fight with Mr. Thynn, and Mr. Thynn having several times refused to fight with him, he resolved to oblige him to fight by force, and therefore he had taken these Persons along with him; that if he should fail in his Revenge, or after the thing done he should be pursued, he might make his Escape. He confessed he was there, and stopped the Coach, but the Polonian fired by mistake, for he did not bid him to fire, but only in case he should be hindered from fighting, or making his Escape.

L. C. J. He confessed he came to fight Mr. Thynn.

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he did so.

L. C. J. And that he stopped the Coach?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. You said after the thing was done; what was that thing?

Mr. Bridgman. After he had fought, in case he should be stopped in his Escape, he bid the Polander fire.

Sr. Fr. Winn. Did he confess any thing of the delivery of the Gun to him?

Mr. Bridgman. He confessed the Polander had the Gun, but he said nothing from whom he had it.

L. C. J. Now Captain Vratz, you hear what is said against you by this Gentleman; that you owned you came thither with a design to fight Mr. Thynn, and force him to fight if he should not be willing; and you brought these Men with you to carry you off, in case you should kill him; that you did stop the Coach, and you said you did not give him order to fire, unless he refused to fight you.

Mr. Bridgman. No, unleſs he could not make his Eſcape.

L. C. J. Now what ſay you to this?

Sir N. Johnſon. He deſires to underſtand it.

L. C. J. Why then ſpeak it to him, you that are the Interpreter.

[Then Mr. Craven interpreted it to him in French.

L. C. J. Now ſpeak aloud and tell us what he ſays.

Mr. Craven. He ſays 'tis very true, that he was there, and had that Gentleman and the Polander along with him as his ſervants, Mr. Thynn being a Gentleman that had always a great many ſervants about him. And he ſays, my Lord, that he had received an Affront from Mr. Thynn; upon that, he challenged him, and ſent Letters out of Holland to deſire him to give ſatisfaction by fighting, but could have no ſatisfaction; and therefore becauſe in England Duels were forbid, he thought to make a Rencounter of it, and took theſe Gentlemen along with him, that if ſo be Mr. Thynn's ſervants ſhould aſſault him, or knock him on the head, or hinder him from eſcaping, that they might get him off.

Sir Fr. Winn. I beg one favour of you, Sir, that you would ask him one Queſtion, and that is, What the Affront was that Mr. Thynn gave him?

L. C. J. That he apprehends he gave him?

[The Interpreter asked him.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he ſays, That at Richmond he heard he ſpoke and gave out very ill language of Count Coningſmark, who was his Friend, and a man he had many Obligations to, and ſo of himſelf too, and he would never acquaint Count Coningſmark with it, but would have ſatisfaction, and take the Quarrel upon himſelf, being a Gentleman; he ſays, that he heard that he called him Hector, and gave ſuch ill language as was never to be ſuffered.

Sir N. Johnſon. And the faſhion in Germany is, if they won't fight, to ſhoot them.

Sir Fr. Winn. How can you tell that, Sir? the Interpreter that asked the Queſtion ſays no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Pray will you ask him this, Whether ever he ſaw Mr. Thynn, and how many times?

Mr. Craven. He ſays he has ſeen him ſeveral times in the Play-houſe, and riding in his Coach; he did not ſee him at Richmond, for if he had, he would not have put it up ſo long.

Mr. Williams. I believe he never ſpoke to him in his life.

L. C. J. Ask him that Queſtion, whether he ever ſpoke to him?

Mr. Craven. He ſays he had no Friend to ſend to Mr. Thynn, and he could not ſpeak with Mr. Thynn himſelf; for Mr. Thynn might think that he was not a Gentleman good enough to fight with him.

L. C. J. Ask him this, about what time he ſaw him at the Play-houſe?

Mr. Craven. He ſays he does not remember exactly the time when he did ſee him at the Play-houſe.

L. C. J. Ask him whether this Affront that he pretends, was given him ſince he laſt came over, or when he was in England before?

Mr. Craven. He ſays 'tis eight Months ago ſince he received the Affront.

L. C. J. That was before he went out of England.

Mr. Craven. Yes, it was before.

Sir Fr. Winn. He ſays he writ to Mr. Thynn out of Holland; we deſire to know by whom he ſent his Challenge?

L. C. J. Ask him if he ſent a Challenge to Mr. Thynn, and by whom?

Mr. Craven. He ſays he could ſend no leſs than a Gentleman; and he had never a Gentleman to ſend by, and ſo he ſent his Letter by the Poſt.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Bridgman, now we would ask you concerning Mr. Stern, the Third man.

Mr. Bridgman. Let me have the Examination, and I will look upon it and tell you.

Mr. Williams. Pray do, Sir, tell us what he ſaid.

Mr. Bridgman. Upon his Examination he confeſſed, that the Captain told him, he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, and that if he would aſſiſt him in it, he would make his Fortune. And that the Captain gave him Money to buy the Blunderbuſs.

Sir Fr. Winn. Stern did confeſs that, did he?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he confeſs he was at the Fact?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, he confeſſed he was at the Fact; and he ſaid, when he came beyond Charing-Croſs, he was about ten Yards before, and he heard the Captain ſay, ſtop to the Coach, upon which he turned about, and preſently ſaw the ſhot made, and he ſaw the other Perſons ride away, and he made away after them: and the Captain further told him, that he would give two or three, or four hundred Crowns, to find a Man that would kill Mr. Thynn.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did he ſpeak about Stabbing, or about an Italian?

Mr. Bridgman. He ſaid that the Captain deſired him to get an Italian that would ſtab a Man, and that he would get two Ponyards for that purpoſe; and that it was before the Polonian came over.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence againſt the Captain; but pray will you tell Stern the Lieutenant, what it is that Mr. Bridgman does teſtifie againſt him; that he acknowledged thus and thus before him. And pray ſpeak it again, Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. The Captain told that Gentleman, that he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, with whom he was reſolved to fight; that he wanted a good Servant, and if he would aſſiſt him, he would make his Fortune; that he gave him Money to buy the Muſquetoon, and owned he was there; that he went out with the Captain and Polander on Horſeback, about five or ſix a Clock on Sunday; that they went towards Charing-Croſs, and when they were gone beyond Charing-Croſs, into the Pall mall, he heard the Captain ſay to the Coach-man, Stop; and turning immediately, he ſaw the ſhot go off; and that they riding away, he followed them: and that before the Polander came over, the Captain deſired him to get an Italian to ſtab a Man.

[Then that was Interpreted to Stern.]

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he denies that he ſpoke any thing of four hundred Pound, or about the Italian.

L. C. J. Tell him it is teſtified, that he confeſſed he was at the ſhooting of this Gentleman.

Mr. Craven. He ſays he was there, and being about ten Yards off, he heard one ſay, Hold to the Coach, but he cannot ſay it was the Captain.

Sir Fr. Winn. But was he there?

Mr. Craven. Yes, he ſays he was.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who cauſed him to be there?

L. C. J. Ask

L. C. J. Ask him upon what occaſion he was there?

Mr. Craven. He ſays the Captain intreated him to be there to be his Second, to fight with a Gentleman, and that was the reaſon.

L. C. J. Pray tell him 'tis teſtified here, that he bought the Muſquetoon, and charged it.

Mr. Craven. He ſays he did aſſiſt at the loading of it, he was by.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, my Lord, let us know who it was aſſiſting him?

L. C. J. Why, that is no Evidence againſt any body.

Sir Fr. Winn. But, my Lord, it was delivered to the Polander charged, and we deſire to know who loaded it?

L. C. J. North. That is no Evidence; but yet the Queſtion may be asked, and the Jury may be told 'tis no Evidence.

L. C. J. But we muſt not let the Jury be poſſeſſed by that which not Evidence.

L. C. J. North. Pray will you ask him, Mr. Craven, who helped him to load the Gun.

Mr. Craven. The Captain was by, he ſays, and the Captain and he did it together.

Sir Fran. Winn. Now we will ask Sir John Reresby the ſame Queſtions, You were by, Sir, at the Examinations of theſe three men, pray what did the Polander ſay upon his Examination?

Sir John Reresby. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory with the Particulars; but if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I will read it.

L. C. J. No, refreſh your memory with it, and then tell us the ſubſtance of it.

Sir John Reresby. In general, he did confeſs to me, that he was the perſon that did diſcharge the Blunderbuſs into Mr. Thynn's Coach, and that he was commanded ſo to do by Captain Vratz.

L. C. J. That is the ſubſtance of all.

Sir Fra. Winn. That is as to him, but what did Captain Vratz ſay?

L. C. J. He ſaid, that he did go out with an intention to fight with Mr. Thynn, and did take theſe perſons with him; that he did not order the Polander to diſcharge, but he miſtook him when he bid the Coach-man ſtand, the other apprehended he bid him ſhoot, and he did ſo.

Mr. Williams. What ſaid Stern?

Sir John Reresby. Stern did ſay this, that the Captain told him he had a quarrel with an Engliſh Gentleman, and deſired him to go along with him and aſſiſt him in it, and be his ſecond; but ſaid he, I was chiefly carried out to keep off the people, in caſe there ſhould be a croud about them when they were fighting; this is the chief part of what they did confeſs.

L. C. J. We would not trouble you with more than is material, Did he acknowledge he was there at the time when he was ſhot?

Sir John Reresby. Yes, he did about nine or ten yards off, I think.

L. C. J. All three confeſſed they were there?

Sir John Reresby. Yes, they did ſo.

L. C. J. North. They had a deſign of killing, which was unlawful.

Sir John Reresby. They ſaid, they came on purpoſe to fight.

Sir Fra. Winn. Call Michael Fenderoſton: My Lord, we would willingly ſpare your time, and offer only what is proper in this Caſe, and now we ſhall produce our Evidence againſt the Count, and if any thing fall out in that Evidence that touches theſe three men (which we think will be but the killing of dead men) your Lordſhip will take notice of it. Now we ſhall not go to open the heads of our Evidence againſt the Count, Sir Francis Withins has given an account of the general, and our Witneſſes will beſt declare it.

Mr. Williams. We will begin with Frederick Hanſon. (Who was ſworn and ſtood up.)

Mr. Hanſon. How long have you known Count Coningſmark?

Mr. Hanſon. A matter of four years.

Mr. Williams. Pray do you remember his laſt coming into England?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes my Lord, I do remember it.

Mr. Williams. Then let us know the time.

Mr. Hanſon. I think 'tis above a month ſince.

Mr. Williams. Where was his Lodging firſt?

Mr. Hanſon. The firſt time I ſaw him was in the Poſt-houſe.

Mr. Williams. Did he come privately or publickly?

Mr. Hanſon. Privately to my beſt knowledge.

Mr. Williams. Which was his firſt Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. In the Hay-market.

Mr. Williams. Where there?

Mr. Hanſon. At the corner houſe.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Hanſon. A matter of a week.

Mr. Williams. Pray in all that time did he keep privately at home, or did he go abroad ſometimes?

Mr. Hanſon. I believe he kept his Chamber all the time.

Mr. Williams. Were you with him at any time there?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I was.

Mr. Williams. What Company did uſe to be with him to your knowledge?

Mr. Hanſon. To my knowledge, I have ſeen Dr. Frederick in his Company.

Mr. Williams. One Dr. Frederick, you ſay, Who elſe?

Mr. Hanſon. When I came from Whitehall on a Sunday in the evening, when my Lord was going to bed, I called, if I could be admitted to ſee him, ſo I went in to him, and a little after the Doctor came.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray Sir, at that time that he was in that Lodging, did he wear his own hair, or was he in a diſguiſe?

Mr. Hanſon. That Sunday night he was in his night-Cap and night-Gown, ready to go to bed.

Mr. Williams. When you firſt came to him to the Poſt-houſe, did you go of your own accord, or were you ſent for?

Mr. Hanſon. Count Coningſmark ſent for me.

Mr. Williams. Was it ſent in his own name, or the name of another?

Mr. Hanſon. It was in a ſtrange name, Carlo Cuſk.

Mr. Williams. Have you the Note by you?

Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. In whoſe Character was it writ?

Mr. Hanſon. In the Count's own Character.

Sir Fra. Winn. What was his Name in his firſt Lodging? What Title was he called by, Captain, or what?

Mr. Hanſon. I know of no other name but only the ſtranger.

Sir Fra. Win. Was it known to any Perſon in the Family?

Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. When did he remove from thence?

Mr. Hanſon. I know not.

Sir Fra. Winn. You ſay the firſt place of his Lodging was in the Hay-market, where did you ſee him the ſecond time?

Mr. Hanſon. At a corner Houſe, I know not the name of the Street.

Sir Fran. Withins. Did he direct you to come to him?

Mr. Williams. Had you any diſcourſe with him, what his buſineſs was here in England?

Mr. Hanſon. I asked him, if we ſhould have his company here ſome time; he told me he was come over about ſome buſineſs, and was afterwards to go into France.

Mr. Williams. Then he never told you what that buſineſs was?

Mr. Hanſon. No.

Mr. Williams. Where was his ſecond Lodging, do you ſay?

Mr. Hanſon. It was at a corner houſe, not above two ſtreets off from the former.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue in his ſecond Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. A few days, becauſe the Chimney did ſo ſmoak, that he could have no fire made in it.

Sir Fra. Winn. Then I ask you, in his ſecond Lodging, was he there publickly or privately?

Mr. Hanſon. He was there after the ſame manner that he was in his firſt Lodging.

Mr. Williams. Whither went he afterwards?

Mr. Hanſon. To St. Martins Lane, I think it is called.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Hanſon. There I ſaw him the laſt time before he went away.

Mr. Williams. When was that?

Mr. Hanſon. It was Sunday evening after I came from Whitehall.

Mr. Williams. Was it near the time of killing Mr. Thynn?

Mr. Hanſon. It was about two or three hours afterwards.

Mr. Williams. Was he as private there, as he was in his other Lodgings?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Mr. Williams. What Company came to him thither?

Mr. Hanſon. The ſame that came to him in the other.

Sir Fra. Winn. Who were they?

Mr. Hanſon. The Doctor was in his Company.

Sir Fra. Winn. And who elſe?

Mr. Hanſon. I ſaw one Captain Vratz there.

Sir Fra. Winn. Sir, I ask you upon your Oath, you are a man of underſtanding, did you frequently ſee Captain Vratz in his Company? How often do you remember you ſaw him at his Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. I do not remember that I ſaw Captain Vratz at that Lodging above one ſingle time.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir thus; Did Captain Vratz come with the Count into England this laſt time?

Mr. Hanſon. To my beſt remembrance he did.

Mr. Williams. You ſay Captain Vratz came with the Count to England.

Mr. Hanſon. I believe he was before the Count, but not long before; I can't exactly tell.

Mr. Williams. How long before the Count?

Mr. Hanſon. Truly I can't tell, but I believe not long.

Mr. Williams. What makes you think he came into England with him?

Mr. Hanſon. Becauſe I ſaw him in Company with the Count, as ſoon as I ſaw the Count.

Mr. Williams. Were they in Company at the Poſt-houſe?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Sir Fra. Winn. And you ſaw him once at his firſt Lodging?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, have you carried any Meſſage from the Count to the Swediſh Reſident?

Mr. Hanſon. My Lord, I can ſay this upon my Oath, to my beſt remembrance, Count Coningſmark never charged me, or gave me any poſitive Order to go to the Swediſh Envoy, but he did name the Swediſh Envoy to me, as if he were willing to know his advice; and ſo I being obliged to pay my Reſpects to the Swediſh Envoy, who had treated the young Count and my ſelf very civilly before; and ſo paying my Reſpects to the ſaid Envoy, I did remember the Converſation I had with the Count, and ſpoke with the ſaid Envoy about this buſineſs, and that is all that I can ſay.

Sir Fra. Winn. What was that Meſſage?

Mr. Hanſon. I ſay there was no direct meſſage: But I ſay this was the buſineſs; Count Coningſmark told me in private familiar diſcourſe, that he had heard that Eſquire Thynn had ſpoken ſome abuſive language of him, and he would fain know what the conſequence of this would be, if he ſhould call him to account about this buſineſs; and he named the Swediſh Envoy to me: And I ſaw his deſire was to know his Opinion about the buſineſs, what the conſequence of it would be. So I ſpoke to the Swediſh Envoy, and he gave me this anſwer, That if the Count ſhould any way meddle with Eſquire Thynn, he would have but bad living in England; but what the Law would ſay in that particular Caſe he could not anſwer, but he would enquire, and afterwards would give me an account, but I never ſpake with him after.

Sir Fra. Winn. I ask you, becauſe you have been formerly examined in another place about this matter. Do you remember any thing that ever you heard the Count ſpeaking of fighting with Mr. Thynn?

Mr. Hanſon. Count Coningſmark ſpoke to me in the German Language; I ſpoke to the Swediſh Agent in French; and when I was before the King and Council I ſpoke in Engliſh; therefore I deſire no evil conſtruction may be made of it. I cannot remember the Count ſpake of killing or duelling. On the contrary I can ſwear for Count Coningſmark this, that I am confident he never told me that he had reſolved or would fight with Mr. Thynn, or would call him to account, but if he ſhould call him to account, what would be the conſequence of it.

Sir Fra. Winn. Call him to account, about what?

Mr. Hanſon. The Count in familiar diſcourſe with with me did tell me, that he had heard Esquire Thynn had spoken abusively of him.

Sir Fra. Winn. How had he spoken abusively of him?

Mr. Hanson. He reflected upon his Person and upon his Horse.

Mr. Williams. Was there any thing in that Message about marrying my Lady Ogle?

Mr. Hanson. That was the last part of the Question, That if he should meddle with Esquire Thynn, what the consequence might be, if the Laws of England would be contrary to him in the hopes or pretensions he might have to my Lady Ogle.

Mr. Williams. You mince your words mightily; pray remember your self; did he speak of killing Mr. Thynn, or that Mr. Thynn should be destroyed?

Mr. Hanson. No, his Phrase was; if he should have an advantage of him, when he should meddle with him, or call him to an account, what the Consequence might be; I can say this upon my Conscience.

Sir Fra. Winn. Sir, you are in a place where you are sworn to speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; what Relation have you to Count Coningsmark's Family?

Mr. Hanson. I have no Relation to the Family at all.

Sir Fra. Winn. Are not you Governour to the young Count?

Mr. Hanson. The Countess has given me her younger Son, for me to be his Companion in his Travels.

Sir Fra. Winn. Sir, I ask you a plain Question, let it lye at your own door, if you won't tell the Truth; had you any Conversation with Count Coningsmark, wherein he did desire you to ask advice of the Swedish Envoy or Resident here, about duelling Mr. Thynn, or in case he should kill Mr. Thynn, or upon any such account?

Mr. Hanson. My Lord, I say this was spoken in several Languages, by the Count in Dutch, by my self to the Envoy in French; and I do know I Swore before the King and Council, but I cannot lay this to Count Coningsmark's Charge, for then I must forswear my self.

Sir Fra. Winn. Sir, you can answer me all my Questions in English, if you please, what the Discourse was.

L. C. J. Pray Sir thus, what was the Discourse as near as you can remember it, between Count Coningsmark and you, relating to Mr. Thynn?

L. C. J. North. Tell the whole, Sir, for you are bound to tell the whole indifferently.

Sir Fra. Winn. And pray remember what you swore in another Place.

Mr. Hanson. The Count sent to me a Note, that he had a mind to speak with me, and he entertained me with a familiar Discourse about his Travelling, and about the setling of his business, and thereupon he fell upon other Discourse about Mr. Thynn, and not to mistake, having had time in my own Chamber, I have put it down in writing, to satisfie my Lord and all this Honourable Court, what I can say about this Matter.

Mr. Hanson reads——'Tis very hard to give a true account.

L. C. J. Read it to your self if you will, and tell us the Substance.

Mr. Hanson. If my words may not turn to the prejudice of my Lord Count Coningsmark, but this is the substance of the thing; my Lord Count Coningsmark did tell me in a familiar Discourse, that Esquire Thynn had spoken some reflecting Words upon him; he did desire to know if he did call him to account, whether in this case the Laws of England might not go contrary to his Design, in his Pretensions that he might have upon my Lady Ogle. And in that familiar Discourse, he seemed to think that Monsieur Lienburgh could give him advice. In a little while afterwards, I was paying my respects to the Envoy, and reflecting upon the Count's Conversation, I spoke to him about this business, and his answer was this; he told me, that if he should meddle with Mr. Thynn, he would have no good living in England: But as to the particular Question, what the Consequence of the Law might be, he did not know, but would inquire and tell me, but I never asked him any Question about it afterwards. And if my Conversation with this Count, or with Monsieur Lienburgh, should turn to the Count's prejudice, I should be answerable for it to God and my own Conscience, all the days of my Life. I desire Mr. Thynn's blood might be revenged, but I desire also that innocent Blood may be spared.

Sir Fra. Winn. Pray Sir, will you look upon that Paper, you signed it.

L. C. J. North. Only to recollect your Memory.

Then he was shew'd his Examination before the Council.

L. C. J. Now have you read it over, that there is under your own hand, do you now again deliver the substance of your discourse you had with Count Coningsmark, as you will stand by it.

Mr. Hanson. I see that there are expressions in this Paper.

L. C. J. Speak not what is in that Paper, but what discourse (as near as you can) you had with Count Coningsmark.

Mr. Hanson. My Discourse with Count Coningsmark was this; in a familiar Discourse amongst other things, he spoke, that he heard Esq; Thynn had affronted him, I don't know upon what Subject, but I believe it was words reflecting upon him and his Horse, he did not tell me that he desired me to go, nor did he give me any positive charge to go to the Swedish Envoy, but by the discourse I had with him, I did understand that he was desirous to have his advice, I thought his inclinations were, that I should go and ask his advice; I did not go on purpose to do the Message, nor did I receive any order that can be called a Message in my Life, to my remembrance; but when I came to pay my respects in a familiar Discourse, I did propose this to the Envoy; what might be the Consequence, if the Count should call Mr. Thynn to account; and he told me the same Answer that I have already told you. Now this I desire only to consider, that it was spoken in divers Languages; and if a man should write down my Expressions now, as they came from me, they would upon reading, perhaps, appear not so well; so if these Expressions of mine should turn to Count Coningsmark's Prejudice, as that I should Swear that this Phrase of killing or duelling was used, or that ever Count Coningsmark told me that he resolved to call, or that he would call him to an account, I might do him wrong perhaps, but if he ſhould call him to account, what might be the Conſequence of it.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would not intangle you, but only I would ſeek after the Truth. I do not ask you poſitively, whether he did bid you go to ask Advice of the Swediſh Envoy, that he did reſolve ſo and ſo; but did he diſcourſe it thus, if he ſhould Duel him, or Fight him?

Mr. Hanſon. As I am before God Almighty, I cannot ſay I heard ſuch Expreſſions.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, you confeſs you acquainted the Envoy with it?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Did you bring the Envoy's Anſwer to the Gentleman, or no?

Mr. Hanſon. If I ſhould be upon the Goſpel, I am ſure I cannot exactly tell what was the Expreſſion.

L. C. Baron. What was it that you diſcerned he doubted, if he did call Mr. Thynn to account?

Sir Fr. Winn. He ſpoke in relation to a Marriage, pray what was it?

Mr. Williams. What did that if relate to?

Mr. Hanſon. If he ſhould ask him ſatisfaction about it, having heard that he had ſpoken abuſive words of him.

Sir Fr. Winn. What then was to follow?

Mr. Hanſon. If he ſhould call him to account, then how the Laws of England might do in this Point.

Mr. Williams. To whom?

Mr. Hanſon. To the Count.

Mr. Williams. What ſhould befall him?

Mr. Hanſon. Whether the Law ſhould be contrary to him in the Deſign and Propoſals he might have, concerning the young Counteſs of Ogle.

Mr. Williams. Well, I ſee you will give no reaſonable anſwer to that; but now when came the Polander over into England?

Mr. Hanſon. I cannot ſay poſitively I can tell when he came.

Mr. Williams. But when did you ſee him firſt?

Mr. Hanſon. Upon the Fryday he came and asked me for the Count at Monſieur Faubert's Academy. Now the young Count Coningmark's Chamber and mine joyns together, next to one another, and there came a Man with him, I do not know his Name, but if I ſee the Man I know him.

Mr. Williams. You ſay the Polander came over on Fryday.

Mr. Hanſon. He came to me on Fryday.

Mr. Williams. And he came to you to the French Academy, to enquire for Count Coningſmark?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, he did ſo.

Mr. Williams. Had he any Letters?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, he had two Letters.

Mr. Williams. From whom, and to whom?

Mr. Hanſon. I asked him if he had any Letter for Count Coningſmark, and he ſaid no; but he told me he had two Letters, and the one was to the Count's Secretary, and the other was to the Count's Steward in London. So I gave him back his Letters, and asked him whence he came? He told me, he was juſt come into England. I asked him, whether he had been a great while at Sea? And he told me, yes; and that it was Stormy, and he had like to have been caſt away; ſaid I, I hear you are expected therefore; have you paid your Lodging? No, ſaid he; then ſaid I, go and pay your Lodging, and come to me in the Morning early.

Sir Fr. Winn. You ſay you heard he was expected, pray who expected him?

Mr. Hanſon. The Count; for he had ſpoken formerly twice of the Polander, and in the great Storm thought he had been drowned. To the beſt of my remembrance, I have heard the Count ſpeak twice of this Polander.

Sir Fr. Winn. Of this Man?

Mr. Hanſon. I ſuppoſe it is the ſame.

Sir Fr. Winn. You ſay you ſaw him on Fryday.

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. When did he ſpeak of the Stormy Weather? And that he was afraid the Polander might miſcarry?

Mr. Hanſon. About twelve or thirteen Days before.

Mr. Williams. Now ſay as near as you can what the Count ſaid.

Mr. Hanſon. He ſaid the Polander was a mighty able Man, and underſtood Horſes, and the Count had a mind to buy Engliſh Horſes, and intended to have had this Polander as a Groom to dreſs them after the German way, and no Man was abler than the Polander to do it; and when he ſpoke of it, I went once to the Change, and inquired whether the Ship was loſt.

Sir Fr. Winn. By whoſe Directions did you go to inquire whether the Ship was loſt?

Mr. Hanſon. I had no Direction, but only Count Coningſmark's ſpeaking about it.

Sir Fr. Winn. He ſeemed to be concerned at it, did he?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, he was afraid that the Polander would be drowned.

Mr. Williams. You ſay you directed him to clear his Quarters?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſee him again the next Day?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, he came the next Day.

Mr. Williams. Was he the next Day in Company with the Count or no?

Mr. Hanſon. I brought him to the Count.

Sir. Fr. Winn. Where?

Mr. Hanſon. It was a little before Noon; becauſe I went the back Way, and left him at the Count's Lodging.

Mr. Williams. Did you leave him with the Count?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. Pray, as long as you were there what paſſed between the Count and the Polander?

Mr. Hanſon. I remember very well what paſſed between the Count and him, for I have thought of it. He ſpoke to him, and called him Thou, as to his Servant, and asked him, Where he had been all the while? And he anſwered he had been at Sea, and toſſed up and down.

Sir Fr. Withins. Pray what Directions had you given about a Sword for that Polander?

Mr. Hanſon. I went to the Count's Lodgings, and being deſired by him to ſtay, I deſired he would excuſe me, for I could not ſtay, becauſe I was to go about another Buſineſs; he told me the Fellow was all naked, and he had no Man to ſend to buy him a Riding-Coat; I told him I would very willingly and heartily do it. And after I had dined, I went to an Houſe near the Hay-Market, and bought a Riding Coat, and brought the Riding Coat to the Count's Lodgings. I delivered it to the Count. Then the Count told me his Man had never a Sword, and I asked him how much his Lordſhip would pleaſe to beſtow on a Sword, he told me a matter of 10*s.* or thereabouts; I told him I did not know where I ſhould get ſuch a Sword, nor how to ſend for it, becauſe I was to meet his Brother; but I withal ſaid, it is no matter for that, I will take care you ſhall have it; this Evening I went into St. Martin's-Lane, but could not find ever a Sword worth a Groat. Then I went as far as Charing-Croſs to a Cutler whom I knew, ſo I told him, Sir, ſaid I, I have a Commiſſion to beſtow 10*s.* upon a Sword for a Servant, therefore, ſaid I, I leave it to your Diſcretion, uſe my Friend well, and uſe your ſelf favourably too. I asked him when I ſhould have the Sword, he told me in the Evening; I told him I would call for it when I came from the Play, where I was to be with the Count's Brother. When I came back with the young Count Coningſmark from the Play, I called for the Sword, but he told me it was not ready. I ſeemed to be a little angry, and told him that it was ſtrange, a Gentleman could not get a little Sword ready for him in an whole Afternoon. Well, Sir, ſaid he, pray do not be impatient, I will ſend you the Sword, and afterwards he ſent it to the Academy, and I afterwards ſent the Sword to Count Coningſmark's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. Pray had you this Direction for the Sword, after you had brought the Polander to the Count, or before?

Mr. Hanſon. Count Coningſmark did never give me any Direction or Charge to buy a Sword for him, but I did offer my Service if he pleaſed, becauſe he ſaid, he had no body to ſend.

Mr. Williams. Sir, You do not know the Queſtion, or you won't apprehend it; pray when had you this Direction from the Count to buy this Sword?

Mr. Hanſon. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

Mr. Williams. When was it you brought the Polander to the Count?

Mr. Hanſon. In the Morning.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray let me ask you another Queſtion, when was it you firſt heard Mr. Thynn was kill'd?

Mr. Hanſon. I heard it I believe about eight a Clock in the Evening on Sunday.

Sir. Fr. Winn. Had you any Diſcourſe with the Count about the Murder?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I had.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray tell what that Diſcourſe was?

Mr. Hanſon. I was at Whitehall till ten of the Clock, and then I went to the Count; but I deſire this may not be taken as an extraordinary Viſit, becauſe I uſed to go to him on Sundays in the Evenings, and thoſe three Sundays before he was taken, I uſed to come to him in the Evening, after I had been at Whitehall. When I came into his Lodgings, I found him in his Night-Cap, and his Night-Gown; he asked me what News, I told him I could tell him great News, and that was of the killing of Eſq; Thynn, who was ſhot in his Coach: the Embaſſador of Savoy had told me all that he had heard about it, and I told it him. After I had ſpoken of this Buſineſs, he asked me where his Brother was; I told him, his Brother was at the Duke of Richmond's. And after ſome Diſcourſe I went away.

Sir Fr. Winn. When you told him of the Murder of Mr. Thynn, did he make no Anſwer, nor ſay any thing about it?

Mr. Hanſon. He did not make me any Anſwer, by which I could conclude that Count Coningſmark was any way concerned in the Buſineſs.

Sir Fr. Withins. Pray Sir, I ask you upon your Oath, the Count is a Man of great Quality himſelf; when you told him of ſuch an horrid Murder, what, did he ſay nothing about it?

Mr. Hanſon. He asked me ſeveral Queſtions, what the People did ſay, but I would not make any miſtake.

Sir Fr. Winn. Tell all he ſaid Sir about it.

Mr. Hanſon. I told him the greateſt News I heard was, the killing of Mr. Thynn; and I told him who brought the News, and I told him the Court was heartily angry at it, that ſuch an Accident ſhould happen, and I ſaid it was an Italian trick, not uſed in England.

Sir Fr. Winn. What ſaid he then?

Mr. Williams. Pray do you remember what he ſaid?

Mr. Hanſon. What I have anſwered now. He made me ſuch Queſtions upon this Story as I have told you.

L. C. J. Let him explain himſelf, Pray as near as you can, relate what Diſcourſe you had with Count Coningſmark, that Sunday Night, after you came to him, and told him of the Murder.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did he ſay to you?

Mr. Hanſon. I will tell you my Lord, the Count was ſurpriſed, as every Man would be, to hear of ſo ſad an Accident, and ſo the Count asked me what the People ſaid, ſo I told him what I heard at Whitehall, I cannot call to my memory all the Particulars; but I ſaid the King was heartily ſorry, and all the Court, for ſo ſad an Accident, and I muſt wrong myſelf, or Count Coningſmark; if I ſhould undertake to relate exactly what paſſed, for I cannot remember it.

Mr. Williams. But you ſaid juſt now, that you told the Count it looked like an Italian Trick, not uſed in England.

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. Williams. What did he reply to that?

Mr. Hanſon. Not a word.

Mr. Williams. Did he mention any thing of Fortifications to you then?

Mr. Hanſon. Yes, he gave me a Plan, or a Draught of a Fortification done with his own Hand, and that was all the diſcourſe.

Mr. Williams. So then he diverted the diſcourſe to the Buſineſs of Fortification.

L. C. J. The Evidence is heard, what it is that he ended all the Diſcourſe with, ſhewing him a Paper of Fortifications.

Sir Fr. Winn. But this he does ſay, He asked him what the People did ſay of it?

Mr. Hanſon. For my Life I dare not ſay I remember any more than I have told.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, now will you in French deliver this, for the Benefit of thoſe Jury men that don't underſtand Engliſh.

Mr. Williams. We pray, my Lord, that our Interpreter may do it.

L. C. J. When a Man can ſpeak both Languages, he needs no Interpreter, he is his own beſt Interpreter.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will tell you why I ask it; there is a great deal of difference, I find, where you to examine a Man with the Hair, and where you examine him againſt the Hair: where you find it difficult to make a Man anſwer, you will pump him with Queſtions, and croſs interrogate him, to ſift out the Truth; now if you leave this Man to the Interpretation of what he hath hath ſaid himſelf, he will make a fine Story of it, and we ſhall be never the wiſer.

L. C. J. You may examine him in French if you will.

Mr. Williams. And I underſtand none but Pedlar's French.

Sir Fr. Winn. The truth of it is, what your Lordſhip ſays cannot be oppoſed regularly; but I do appeal to your Lordſhip, and all the Judges, and all the Court, whether this man does anſwer like an ingenuous man; you ſee he ſhifts.

L. C. J. I do not ſee it, nor do I believe any ſee he ſhifts in any thing you ask of him; either he tells you what the Queſtion is, or the Reaſon of it; how far that is a Reaſon, is left to the Jury to conſider.

Sir Fr. Winn. Certainly it can do no hurt to have an Interpreter.

L. C. J. North. My Lord, if there be two ways to take, 'tis beſt to take that which will give ſatisfaction to all Perſons, let him be asked by the Interpreter, what Queſtions the Counſel would have anſwered, and then let him tell his Anſwer in French.

L. C. J. If that be liked better, let it be ſo. Mr. Craven, can you tell the ſubſtance of the Evidence that this Gentleman hath given?

Mr. Craven. No, I cannot, his Evidence has been ſo long, and ſo many croſs Queſtions have been asked.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would ſpare your time ——

L. C. J. But this is the way to ſpend our time.

Sir Fr. Winn. I know your Lordſhip does not value time in ſuch a caſe as this is, but you would have the truth found out.

L. C. J. You muſt repeat firſt the diſcourſe you had with Count Coningſmark.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, we will reduce it to two or three Queſtions. Mr. Craven, will you pleaſe to ask him what diſcourſe he had with Count Coningſmark.

Mr. Craven. He ſays, the diſcourſe he had with Count Coningſmark about the Polander, was, that he came over as a Groom to ſerve him to look after his Horſes; that he had occaſion for ſeveral Engliſh Horſes, and Engliſh Servants to look after them as Grooms; and among the reſt of his Grooms, he intended the Polander ſhould be one, to dreſs his Horſes after the German way.

Sir Fr. Winn. So far he goes as to that, That the Polander came over to ſerve the Count.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, does not he tell you, the Count had a purpoſe to buy Horſes here?

Mr. Craven. He ſays there was a diſcourſe about Bills of Exchange of 7000 Piſtoles to buy Horſes.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray then will you ask him, what diſcourſe he had with Count Coningſmark about the death of Mr. Thynn, and what the Conſequences in Law might be.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he ſays, that the diſcourſe with Count Coningſmark, concerning the Swediſh Agent, was, That in caſe he ſhould ask Satisfaction of Mr. Thynn, for the Affronts that he had given him, not underſtanding the Cuſtoms of the Nation, if he ſhould call him to account, what prejudice it might be to him; for he did not hear, he ſays, that Count Coningſmark deſigned any thing, or reſolved upon killing him, or any thing of that nature; but whether if he ſhould call him to account, what the Laws of England might be.

Mr. Williams. Call John Wright.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, the Count deſires to know if he may be permitted to make his Defence againſt theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. No, he is not to make his Defence now. But pray tell him if my Lord have a deſire to ask any Queſtions of this Witneſs, he may ask what he pleaſes.

L. C. J. North. Let the Queſtion be put to the Interpreter, that we may know what the Queſtion is before the Witneſs gives an Anſwer.

Mr. Craven. He asks him if he has not ſeen him oftner in his Lodging undreſſed than dreſſed? And whether he was not to take Phyſick from his Phyſician?

Mr. Hanſon. I do not remember that in all the time I ſaw Count Coningſmark, I ſaw him dreſſed four times in his Coat, I cannot ſay I remember three times in all. The firſt time when he came, he was in a Campaign Coat; but all the time he was in his Lodging, as I remember, he was in his Night-gown and Cap. As to the other part of his Queſtion, whether I heard that he took Phyſick? I ſay this, When I ſaw Count Coningſmark firſt at his Lodging; when I came to him, on the Sunday Evening, I was told the Count was in Bed: It was late, but I ventured to go into his Room, and ſat a quarter of an hour there; and afterwards the Doctor came in, Dr. Frederick, I ſaw him oftentimes at his Lodging; and at the ſame time the young Count was ſick of an Ague: And when he came one Evening to ſee the young Count, I asked him what was the Diſtemper the Count had? The Doctor anſwered me, that he had not told any body that the Count was ſick, or what he was ſick of, but he hoped in God in a ſhort time he would be recovered.

Mr. Craven. He asks him if he gave him any poſitive Order, that he ſhould go of any Meſſage to the Swediſh Envoy?

Mr. Hanſon. This I have anſwered before, and I ſay now, If this diſcourſe that I had with the Swediſh Envoy, turn to the Lord Count Coningſmark's prejudice, it would grate upon my Conſcience all my life: Count Coningſmark never gave me any poſitive Order to carry any Meſſage; but I did gather, by his diſcourſe, that the Count might be deſirous to know the Envoy's Opinion about this Queſtion; and therefore I thought, the Count deſiring it, I would do it to pleaſe him, rather than by Order. But I do not know that ever the Count had a mind to give me ſuch an Order, but I did it voluntarily.

L. C. J. In plain Engliſh, Did he ever direct you to go to the Swediſh Envoy?

Mr. Hanſon. No, my Lord, he never did direct me.

L. C Baron. How came you to chooſe a Foreigner to know what the Laws of England are?

Mr. Hanſon. I thought it would pleaſe the Count to know his Opinion.

L. C. Baron. But how came you to chooſe a Foreigner, I ask?

Mr. Hanſon. He has been 19 Years here in England, and ſure he ſhould know.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he asks him if ever he told him that he had a deſign to fight Mr. Thynn, or do him any Prejudice, or ſend him a Challenge?

Mr. Hanſon. My Lord, I am upon my Oath, and this I ſay, I ſpeak it before God and the Court, Count Coningſmark did never tell me that he had any mind, or did reſolve to call Eſquire Thynn any ways to account.

Mr. Williams. Call John Wright.

[Who ſtood up, and was ſworn.

Sir Fr. Winn. We ſhall ask him but a Queſtion or two, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. Pray tell me the time when this Polander came into England, that man at the Bar?

Mr. Wright. He came the 10th day of this month.

Mr. Williams. Pray what Ship did he come in? Where did you firſt meet with him?

Mr. Wright. Here in Town.

Mr. Williams. Where was it?

Mr. Wright. At the Croſs-Keys in Throgmorton-ſtreet.

Mr. Williams. Pray when you firſt ſaw him, what did he ask you?

Mr. Wright. He asked me where Count Coningſmark's Lodgings were? I told him, I thought he was at Oxford, I meant the young Gentleman, for I did not know the other was in Town; but I went and inquired, and they told me, it was at Faubert's Academy.

Mr. Williams. Whither went you with the Polander then?

Mr. Wright. I went to my Lord's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. What Lord?

Mr. Wright. The young Count's Lodgings.

Mr. Williams. Well, and what then?

Mr. Wright. And I came to Mr. Hanſon, and he did deliver a Letter to Mr. Hanſon, and I ſtayed there about half an hour, or thereabouts.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Wright. Upon Friday, the 10th day of this month.

Mr. Williams. How long was Mr. Hanſon and the Polander together?

Mr. Wright. About half an hour.

Mr. Williams. What ſaid Hanſon to him in your preſence?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Hanſon ſaid nothing.

Mr. Williams. Was there any thing ſaid about going back, and paying his Lodging, and coming back?

Mr. Wright. Mr. Hanſon came down to me, and told me he was glad to ſee me, and bid me take the Polander back with me, and bring him to him to morrow betimes, for he muſt diſpatch him about his Buſineſs.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then he ſaid nothing to the Polander?

Mr. Wright. No, but to me.

Sir Fr. Winn. Well, what did you do the next morning?

Mr. Wright. I came to him the next morning, to this Polander, and he took his things with him, which was a Sea-bed that he had, and a Gun with a Wheel-lock, and ſome other things.

Sir Fr. Winn. And whither did you bring him?

Mr. Wright. I brought him to the upper end of the Hay-market, Monſieur Faubert's School.

Mr. Williams. To what place did you come in the morning, ſay you?

Mr. Wright. Sir, if it pleaſe, you, I brought him within a door or two of Mr. Faubert's the Horſe-maſter, that teaches to ride the great Horſe; for he did deſire that we might go to an Houſe hard by, becauſe he would not carry his carriage to my Lord, he had a Sea bed, a Portmantle, a Gun, and other things; and ſo I brought him to an Houſe, and there I called for a Pot of Ale; and he put down his things and went out, I thought he had gone to make water, but within a little while after returns again, and Mr. Hanſon comes in with him; he asked me why I did not come ſooner? I told him, I had ſome other Buſineſs, I was with ſome French Merchants to look upon ſome Goods. So he bid the Pole pay me for my trouble, and take up his things, and go along with him; and he did do ſo, and I never ſaw the Pole afterwards.

L. C. J. You that are the Interpreters, repeat what he hath ſaid to the Jury. [Which was done.

Sir Fr. Winn. We have done with this man, the uſe we make of him, is to follow this Polander, and we ſhall bring him to the Count by and by. Call Dr. Frederick Harder.

[Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. The Doctor underſtands Engliſh, don't he?

Sir Fr. Winn. Yes, we are told he does.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known the Count that ſtands there at the Bar?

Dr. Harder. I have known him a good while, it may be this four or five Years. I have known him four or five Years.

Mr. Williams. How long have you known Captain Vratz?

Dr. Harder. About a Year and a half, or two Years.

Mr. Williams. Was my Lord and Captain Vratz acquainted then? Dr. Harder. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Was he in Employment under my Lord? Was he in the Count's Service?

Dr. Harder. He was with the Count, but whether he was his Companion, I cannot tell.

Mr. Williams. Did he live with the Count?

Dr. Harder. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Did Captain Vratz, when the Count came laſt over into England, come over with him?

Dr. Harder. Yes, by my knowledge.

L. C. J. Do you know it or not?

Dr. Harder. Captain Vratz came to me, and told me, my Lord deſired to ſpeak with me, and I went with him to my Lord.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was that the firſt Meſſage you received from the Count?

Dr. Harder. Yes, it was.

Mr. Williams. How long was that ago?

Dr. Harder. The ſame day the Morocco Embaſſador did exerciſe in Hide-Park.

Sir Fr. Winn. How long is that ago?

Dr. Harder. About a Month ago.

Sir Fr. Winn. What, was that his firſt Lodging after he came laſt into England?

Dr. Harder. It was in the Hay-market.

L. C. J. Was it a corner Houſe, as the other Witneſs ſaith, or not?

Dr. Harder. Yes it was.

Mr. Williams. Was the Count a private Lodger there?

Dr. Harder. He lay in his Bed when I came to him; he came as a Traveller privately.

Mr. Williams. Did he go by his own Name, or another Name?

Dr. Harder. No body did queſtion him about his Name, but when I did come to him, I did diſcourſe him about his Body.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, thus; you went often to visit him, pray did you inquire for him by his own Name, or any other Name?

Dr. Harder. He desired that he might be private, because he was to take some Medicines, and he would not have it known.

Mr. Williams. Now Sir, I would ask you, did you observe him to be in any disguise? Did he wear a Perriwig, or how?

Dr. Harder. He had a Perriwig.

Mr. Williams. Was it a fair Perriwig, or what colour?

Dr. Harder. It was brown or black.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, was he in a disguise, or no?

Dr. Harder. He had his own Cloaths, but he had a Perriwig.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray what Name did he go by, his right Name, or any particular Name?

Dr. Harder. In the first beginning I gave him no Name, but said he to me, If any body ask you about me, I would not be known; for if they know that I lie privately thus, they will think I ail some ill Distemper, therefore I would have you call me by the Name of Carlo Cuski.

Mr. Williams. Were you with him, pray Sir, upon the Sunday Morning that Mr. Thynn was murdered?

Dr. Harder. I cannot certainly tell, but I was with him in the Afternoon.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray call your self to mind, Sir.

Dr. Harder. I cannot certainly tell.

Sir Fr. Winn. What time were you with him in the Evening?

Dr. Harder. At nine a Clock at Night, or thereabouts.

Mr. Williams. Did you receive any Letter from Captain Vratz at any time?

Dr. Harder. I did upon Saturday morning, the Saturday before Mr. Thynn was murdered.

Sir Fr. Winn. Have you that Letter about you?

Dr. Harder. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was in the Letter?

Dr. Harder. He desired me to go to the Count, who had a desire to speak with me. I came there, and had some speech with him about his Indisposition. I told him he had better stay till next day before he took Physick, because it was cold Weather. And after that went with the Polander to my Lodging, and the Captain's man came in, and then said, here is a man that will direct you to Captain Vratz's Lodging; which I did not know.

Mr. Williams. Look you, Sir, you say you went to the Count, did you shew the Count that Letter from Captain Vratz, or no?

Dr. Harder. The Count saw it.

Mr. Williams. Then hear a little, When was it you shew'd the Letter to the Count? Was it Saturday or Sunday?

Dr. Harder. It was Saturday.

Mr. Williams. Now, was the Polander then in the Count's Lodgings, or no?

Dr. Harder. Yes, he was.

Mr. Williams. Was there any discourse about him then?

Dr. Harder. I had never seen him in my life.

Mr. Williams. But was there any with the Count?

Dr. Harder. No, not at all.

Sir Fr. Winn. Then, upon your Oath I ask you once more, Was the Polander ever in Company with you and my Lord, at any time?

Dr. Harder. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. Upon the Sunday, upon your Oath?

Dr. Harder. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. Nor the Saturday evening?

Dr. Harder. No, I have not seen him since that morning when the Captain's man took him along with him to his Master.

Mr. Williams. Pray how came the Polander into your company on Saturday morning?

Dr. Harder. I had him from my Lord's that morning.

Mr. Williams. Then my Lord and the Polander were together?

Dr. Harder. No, they were not together.

Mr. Williams. Was the Polander in my Lord's Lodgings?

Dr. Harder. Yes, the Polander was below stairs.

Mr. Williams. And did you take him from the Lodging?

Dr. Harder. Yes, I did.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue with you?

Dr. Harder. Not at all, I went home with him.

Mr. Williams. Had you no discourse with him?

Dr. Harder. No, none at all.

Mr. Williams. Where did you part with him?

Dr. Harder. I brought him to my House; and when he came in a doors, the Captain's man being there, I told him there was a man would shew him the Captain's Lodgings; and he took him away along with him.

Mr. Williams. You say, the Captain's man had the Polander from you; pray name that man.

Dr. Harder. I cannot tell his Name.

Mr. Williams. Was his Name Berg?

Dr. Harder. I believe it was.

Sir Fr. Winn. You say you delivered a Letter from Captain Vratz on Saturday morning to the Count?

Dr. Harder. Yes.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did the Count read the Letter, and tell you the Contents of it?

Dr. Harder. No, it was not sealed.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did not you know the Contents of it then?

Dr. Harder. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, when you delivered the Letter from Captain Vratz to the Count, what did the Count say to you?

Dr. Harder. The Letter was not written to the Count, but it was writ to me.

Mr. Williams. What was the reason that you shewed it to him then?

Dr. Harder. I received a Letter from Captain Vratz, that the Count desired to speak with me; and afterwards I was desired to direct this man, the Polander, to Captain Vratz; and so I directed him to Captain Vratz, and nothing more I know.

Sir Fr. Winn. Well, Sir, one thing more and I have done with you, for you will not I see give a reasonable Answer; pray, when the Polander came along with you from the Count's, did you observe he had any thing about him?

Dr. Harder. He had a great Campaign Coat.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did he seem to have any thing under it?

Dr. Harder. He had a Portmantle under it, I think, or some such thing.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, the Count desires to ask him some Questions.

L. C. J. Let him ask what Questions he will.

Mr. Cra-

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he asks him whether he does not remember, when he first came to Town, he had not his Body full of Spots?

Dr. Harder. Yes, my Lord, when he came from Tangier, he had spots over all his Breast; and it was feared they might get up higher towards his Neck, and indanger him very much.

Mr. Craven. He says, If my Lord pleases, he will shew it openly.

L. C. J. No, there is no need of that Doctor. Did you give him Physick for that?

Dr. Harder. Yes, for that I did administer Physick to him.

Mr. Craven. He says, my Lord, he over-heated himself in riding to Tangier, thinking to do the King and the Nation Service, and the Heat broke out in spots over his Breast.

L. C. J. The Doctor knows nothing of that.

Mr. Craven. He asks whether the Doctor was not desired by him to cure him; whether he did not tell him he would cure him of those Spots?

Dr. Harder. He desired me to administer Physick unto him.

Mr. Craven. He says he went to Strasburgh, and when he came back, he was in the same condition he was in before; and he asks whether the Doctor did not undertake to cure him?

Dr. Harder. Yes, I did administer Physick unto him; and this my own man can testify and be witness of; because my Lord bid me take care that he might be private, for he would not have it known that he did take Physick; but I told my man, said I, 'tis my Lord Coningsmark, and therefore pray take care of him, and see that the Physick be made very well up.

L. C. J. You seem to intimate, as if he lay private to take Physick, pray let me ask you this Question, Did you give him Physick all this time?

Dr. Harder. Not always purging Physick, but some sort of Physick all the time?

L. C. J. What every night and morning?

Dr. Harder. Yes, every day.

Mr. Craven. The Count desires to ask him where he was that unhappy day this Business was done?

Dr. Harder. I found him that day ill, lying down upon the Bed, I asked him how his Physick had worked; he told me he was afraid he had got some cold; and indeed I found him very much disordered, and I went home and fetched him some Physick to take that night.

L. C. J. By the Oath you have taken, was there any other occasion, or had you any other discourse with him, when you came on the Sunday night but concerning his Physick?

Dr. Harder. My Lord, I will tell you the Truth; I never heard the Count speak any word in my life, that he had any concern, or design of any quarrel at all, nor any discourse, but about the administration of his Physick.

L. C. J. Let me ask you this Question, for they desire it here, What was the occasion? And whether you know the occasion, why my Lord altered his Lodgings so often?

Dr. Harder. The first occasion was this, Because it was in the Hay-market; and his Man said it would be quickly known if he did continue there; so he would take another Lodging, which was in Ruperts-Street, and there he lodged three days; but the Chimney did so smoke, that my Lord could not stay, because he could have no Fire in his Chamber, and the weather was very cold, for it did snow, and therefore I told my Lord, it was not so proper for taking of Physick: Thereupon he desired me to take him another Lodging in Queen street, which I did look about for, but it was not ready, so he had a Lodging taken for him in St. Martins lane, where he lodged till he went away.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, the Physick that you gave the Count, did it require his keeping within doors? might not he walk abroad with it, upon your Oath?

Dr. Harder. It did require him to keep in.

Mr. Williams. Pray then, how comes it to pass that the Count so suddenly could go by Water to Gravesend?

Dr. Harder. I do not know what was done afterwards.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would ask you one Question, and I would fain have you give me a fair answer to it, What became of the Letter that Capt. Vratz writ to you, and you shewed it to the Count?

Dr. Harder. It remained there upon the Table.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did not you keep your own Letter?

Dr. Harder. It was not of any Concern.

Sir Fr. Winn If the Letter were written to you, it is not so long since, but you can tell us the Contents of it; pray what were the Contents?

L. C. J. Can you remember what were the Contents?

Dr. Harder. He desired me to go to Count Coningsmark, who would speak with me, and that I would give his man an Answer when I came from him.

Sir Fra. Winn. But what were you to go to the Count to do?

Dr. Harder. Nothing, but the Count discoursed to me about his own Body and Indisposition.

Sir Fr. Winn. But Capt. Vratz was no Physician; why should he send you a Letter to talk about Physick?

Dr. Harder. It was nothing but my Lord would speak with me.

Mr. Williams. We need not trouble our selves with this Fellow, he confesses he found the Polander in the Count's House.

Sir Fr. Withins. Pray, Sir, let me ask you, Who was with the Count on Sunday night?

Dr. Harder. Mr. Hanson was there, I think.

Sir Fr. Withins. Who else?

Dr. Harder. The Captain came in, and went out again.

Sir Fr. Winn. What time of Night was it that Vratz came in to the Count?

Dr. Harder. It was at the same time that I was with him.

Sir Fr. Winn. That he swears to be about nine a Clock; Was it after Mr. Thynn was killed?

Dr. Harder. We had not heard it.

Sir Fr. Winn. Sir, was it nine of the Clock?

Dr. Harder. Yes, it was.

Mr. Williams. You say you found the Polander at the Count's Lodgings?

Dr. Harder. Yes, upon Saturday morning.

Mr. Williams. Then he came along with you from the Count's Lodgings?

Dr. Harder. Yes, to my House.

Mr. Williams. And you parted with him there?

Dr. Harder. Yes, the Captain's man took him away with him.

Mr. Williams. That was Berg, wa'nt it?

Dr. Harder. Yes.

Then this Evidence was interpreted to the Jury.

Mr. Craven. He desires the Jury should know what the Doctor said about his Sickness.

L. C. J. Let it be repeated to them.

Mr. Craven. He desires to know whether he may not speak it in French himself?

L. C. J. No, the Interpreter must do it; (which was done.) My Lord, would you ask any more Questions of the Doctor?

Count Con. No more Questions but them I have asked.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call Thomas Howgood.

(who was sworn.)

Mr. Williams. Pray, did you sell any Sword to the Count?

Mr. Howgood. I sold a Sword to the Governor, a broad Horseman's Sword.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Howgood. On Saturday was fortnight.

Mr. Williams. What time was it that he bespoke it?

Mr. Howgood. He bespoke it half an hour after six at night.

Mr. Williams. What did he say to you when he bought it?

Mr. Howgood. He said he would call for it about eight a Clock at night, when he came from the Play.

Mr. Williams. What kind of Sword was it?

Mr. Howgood. An Horseman's Sword, as broad as two fingers, such as the Gentlemen of the Guards wear.

Sir Fr. Winn. When he came for the Sword, what said he?

Mr. Howgood. He was angry it was not done, and I told him that I would send it to him quickly.

Sir Fr. Winn. Where was it sent?

Mr. Howgood. To the Governor's Lodgings at the Academy.

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, we will call several Persons that were privy to the concealing of this Gentleman, that can give you a better account, Richard Hays and Robert French.

(Robert French appeared, and was sworn.)

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, will you tell my Lord what you know of the Count's concealing himself and changing his Habit.

Mr. French. I never saw him, my Lord, before I came here in Court, but it seems he did lodge in my House three or four days.

Sir Fr. Winn. How long is it since?

Mr. French. Between three weeks and a month ago, just ten days before the Murder.

Sir Fr. Winn. What Name did he go by then?

Mr. French. I did not know his Name.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who used to resort to him at that time?

L. C. J. You say, Sir, you saw him not, what company did come to him?

Mr. French. I did not see him indeed.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray did Capt. Vratz come to him to your House?

Mr. French. He lodged with him all the time.

Sir. Fr. Winn. You say you know Capt. Vratz was there?

Mr. French. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Did Dr. Harder use to come to him?

Mr. French. Yes, several times a day.

Mr. Williams. What Name did he enquire for him by?

Mr. French. The Doctor took the Lodging, and it was for a stranger, I heard no Name at all.

Interpreter. My Lord desires to know, whether you did not suspect he took Physick in the House?

Mr. French. I suppose the Doctor did give you an account of that, I don't know that he did.

Interpret. Did not your Maid know of any such thing?

Mr. French. My Maid is here, she will give you an account.

Sir Fr. Winn. Call Anne Prince; (who was sworn.) Pray do you acquaint my Lord what you know of Count Coningsmark; whether ever you saw him at your Master's House in the Hay-market?

Mr. Williams. Did the Captain use to come to him?

L. C. J. Her Master says he did lie there.

Prince. Yes, he used to lodge there.

Mr. Williams. Did the Captain give him any Physick?

L. C. J. No, but the Doctor did.

Sir Fr. Winn. He only asks a merry Question.

L. C. J. But we are now upon the Life and Death of a man, pray let us have those Questions asked that are serious, not such light things as are permitted in ordinary Cases.

Sir Fr. Winn. Now my Lord, we will call Francis Watts.

Mr. Craven. Maid, my Lord asks, whether he did not take a Vomit in your House?

Prince. Not that I know of.

Sir Fr. Winn. Where is Mr. Gibbons, and Mr John Kid. [Who were sworn, and Mr. Kid stood up.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Kid, pray Sir, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, in what Condition you found the Count at Gravesend. Tell the whole Story, and speak aloud, that all may hear you.

Mr. Kid. I had some Information upon Friday Night of him.

Mr. Williams. Of whom, and what?

Mr. Kid. Of the Count where he was. So I made it my Business to inquire into it. On Saturday in the Afternoon a Gentleman came to me, and gave me certain Information where he thought that Gentleman the Count was. This Gentleman coming to me said, Mr. Thynn is a stranger to me, but, said he, I would not have Mr. Thynn's Blood lie at my door. This same person who is put out in the Gazette, I believe, is at a neighbour's house of mine. Says he, I desire you to be private in it, because it may do you a Prejudice; so we went into a Coach at Charing-Cross to go to a Justice of Peace; I did not know where Sir John Reresby lived, but inquired of Mr. Gibbons, who told me, but he was not at home, and Mr. Bridgman was not at home; so we went to the Recorder, and there we had a Warrant, and then I came by water to Rotherith, and this same Raynes that was Examined, and his Wife where he lay, were gone to Greenwich to carry his Cloaths, a grey Suit, and other Cloaths that he had left. So going down to Greenwich we called every Boat that was upon the River aboard of us, to know whence they came. And we had taken her Sister along with us, and she called out her Sister's Name, Mall Raynes, and her Brother's Name, Derick Raynes, and so at last we got the Boat wherein they were, on board us. And we asked the man, what he had done with the Gentleman that lay at his House? He declared, he was gone away he did not know whither. So I went back again to this Gentleman that gave me this first Information, who did go to him as a Neighbour, to know whither he was gone, and where he was to be found, and where he would land. So he declared the Particulars, That if we missed him that Night, we should have him in the Hope upon Monday Morning, upon a Vessel that was to be cleared on Monday Morning. So upon Sunday Night coming to Gravesend about 8 or 9 a Clock, or thereabouts, there he landed. There were 13 or 14 Swedes at the same House where he was to land. So we thought it convenient to take him at his first landing, for fear of further danger. So I staid at the Red-Lyon Back-stairs, and he landed at the Fore-stairs where the Watermen were. As soon as he was laid hold of, I came to him; said I, your Lordship shall not want for any thing that is convenient. He desired to know, whether I knew him? I told him, yes; and that his Name was Count Coningsmark.

Coning ſmark. That is my Name, ſays he; I do not deny it. So the Mayor came and the Cuſtom-Houſe Officers ſearched him, and found nothing at all of any Arms about him. He deſired he might be uſed like a Gentleman, and ſo he was, for there was no abuſe given to him, as I know of. Coming up the River, the moſt of my diſcourſe was about Martial Affairs; a Serjeant that had the Command of a File of Muſqueteers, which the Deputy-Governour ſent to guard the Count to Whitehall, a Gentleman ſitting there by me was asking me concerning Mr. Thynn's Murder; I told him, that I was at Newgate on Friday, and there I ſaw thoſe that had done that barbarous Fact. With that, my Lord asked, what Lodgings there were in Newgate. And whether the Captain had a good Lodging? I told him a very good one. He asked me, whether he confeſſed any thing? I told him he had confeſſed ſome particulars; And ſaid I, 'tis the moſt barbarous thing that ever was done. Certainly, ſays my Lord, this Mr. Thynn muſt have Correſpondence and Commerce with ſome Lady that this Captain knew, that belonged to the Court, or he would never have done it. As for the Polander, I told him, that he had confeſſed, he wept mightily. With that my Lord ſeemed very much concerned, and took up his Cloaths and bit them, and ſat a while up, but was very much diſcompoſed, and then deſired to lie down.

Sir Fr. Winn. That was, when you told him, the Polander had confeſſed.

Mr. Kid. Yes; my Lord was mightily altered in his Countenance.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you at the firſt time that you ſeized him charge him with the Murder?

Mr. Kid. No, I did not.

Sir Fr. Winn. Was he in a black Perriwig.

Mr. Kid. His Cap fell off, and his Perriwig, juſt as I came to him.

Sir Fr. Winn. Set up Mr. Gibbons. Pray will you tell what paſſed.

Mr. Gibbons. My Lord, As ſoon as ever he came to ſhore, I walked by him, and gave him a little kind of a juſtle, and my reaſon was, to ſee whether he had not a black Coat under his Campaign: I walked cloſe to him juſt in this manner, as he walked along, ſo he turns about again, and went down to the Water-ſide, and asked the Watermen, Watermen, Have you ſtowed your Boat? They anſwered, Yes; Then come away ſaid he; ſo ſoon as he came back again, I catched him faſt hold by the Arm, and the firſt word he ſaid to me was, What do you come to rob me? Said I, my Lord, you are my Priſoner, and I told him I was the King's Meſſenger that had waited there ſeveral days for him; and holding of him very hard, whether that was the occaſion of it, or the Watermen that were on the other ſide of him, he dropped down his Sword between his Legs; but when I named his Name he gave a little ſtart and his Perriwig dropped off of his Face. We went up the Street to the Mayor, and the People crowding about us were very rude and very rugged, and he deſired he might be well uſed. We did all we could to keep the People from him; we went up to the Mayor's Houſe, and when we came there, I deſired he might be ſearched, whether he had any Arms; He ſaid, he had none, and there was none.

Sir Fr. Winn. When you had the Cuſtody of him, whither did you carry him?

Mr. Gibbons. We carried him to the Mayor's Houſe, and after we removed him from his Houſe to an Inn.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did you do the next Day?

Mr. Gibbons. We ſtaid there about ſome 2 or 3 Hours. After an hour or half an hour's time, near upon an hour, my Lord came to me, and asked me my Name; and he ſaid, the reaſon was, that after his Trouble was over, he would give me thanks for my Civility to him. Captain Sinkleer, who ſtood by, gave him my Name before I could, that it was Gibbons. Yes, ſaid I, my Name is Gibbons, and I belong to the Duke of Monmouth: Why, ſays he, the Duke of Monmouth has no Command now, and therefore how could I take him by his Order? My Lord, ſaid I, I do not apprehend you by his Order; you have killed a very good Friend of mine, and had not Providence ordered it otherwiſe, you had like to have killed a more particular Friend, and a Maſter: So, my Lord, he ſeemed to be very ſorry at that; but, ſays he, I don't think they would have done any harm to the Duke of Monmouth.

Sir Fr. Winn. What elſe did he ſay?

Mr. Gibbons. I think I have told you all that is Material.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were you in the Boat at any time, and gave him any Account of the Man's having Confeſſed; what did he ſay to it?

Mr. Gibbons. Sir, I was not there, nor I did not come up in the ſame Boat with him.

Mr. Williams. Did he mention any thing about a ſtain to his Blood?

Mr. Gibbons. I ask your pardon, he did ſo.

Mr. Williams. What did he ſay?

Mr. Gibbons. Says he, it is a ſtain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or one Lodging upon a Counterſcarp will waſh away all that.

L. C. J. What did he ſay was a ſtain upon his Blood?

Mr. Gibbons. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I will tell you. As I ſaid, he asked me my Name, becauſe he would come to give me thanks for my Civility after his Trouble was over; the Captain being quicker than I, told him my Name: Yes, Sir, ſaid I, 'tis Gibbons, and I belong to the Duke of Monmouth; ſaid he, he has no Command now, how could you come upon his Order? Said I, I do not come upon his Command, but you have killed a very good Friend of mine, and a Country-man, and if Providence had not ordered it otherwiſe, you had killed a more particular Friend of mine, and a Maſter, that I had ſerved many Years; ſaid he, I don't think they would have done the Duke of Monmouth any Injury: After that he walked up and down a while, and then ſaid he, 'tis a ſtain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or lodging upon a Counterſcarp will waſh away all that. The Mayor was in the Room, and ſeveral others.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray Sir, one thing more, when you did ſpeak to him of Confeſſion, did he ſay any thing to you about Captain Vratz?

Mr. Gibbons. Sir, he was only asking of me how things were, what the People ſaid, or ſome ſuch thing? I was not forward to tell him at firſt, but afterwards I did tell him, that the Captain had made a Confeſſion, tho' it was a thing I did not know then. Says he, I do not believe the Captain would confeſs any thing.

L. C. J. Did he ſay ſo?

Mr. Gibbons. Yes, he did, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Sir Fr. Winn. We have done with our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. My Lord Coningſmark, will you ask him any thing?

Count Coningſmark. No.

L. C. J. Then the next thing is, You heard the Evidence that is given againſt you. Now you muſt come to your Defence; I will put you in mind of ſome things, my Lord, which things it will concern you to give ſome Account of. It is here laid to your Charge, That you were Acceſſory to this Murder of Mr. Thynn; and that you were the Perſon that directed and deſigned it. And theſe Evidences there are againſt you, that you were cognizant of this, and that you were the Perſon that deſigned this: That you came into England about a Fortnight or three Weeks before the death of Mr. Thynn, that Captain Vratz, who was one of them that killed him, came with you, that he lay at your Lodging, that he was conſtantly with you, that you lay Incognito there, and private, would not be known what your Name was, that you ſhifted Lodgings from time to time, that Borosky the Polander came over by your Order, was brought to your Lodging, was provided for there, that he had Cloaths, and he had a Sword provided by your Lordſhip for him, and that there was care taken that it ſhould be an extraordinary good Sword, that you did diſcourſe to Mr. Hanſon about your calling Mr. Thynn to account, and this much about the time, or a little before the time of his death, and what the Laws of England would be in caſe you ſhould call Mr. Thynn to account; and particularly you deſired to know what Monſieur Lienberg's Opinion might be concerning it, and eſpecially what in relation to my Lady Ogle. And that after all this, Mr. Borosky was not only cloathed by you, but was ſent by you to Vratz, (that the Doctor ſays) and after Vratz, him, that he lay in your Lodging that Night before this evil thing was done, and that after the thing was done, the ſame Night Vratz came to your Lodging and was with you, and had private Conference with you, that the next Morning you got up and went away, tho' you had taken Phyſick the Night before, and tho' you your ſelf, nor your Doctor thought you fit to go abroad, and you go away Incognito, in a Perriwig, diſguiſed, you direct your Servant to carry your Cloaths one way, while you go another; then you go down to the Water-ſide, and lye private near the River, at a Swede's Houſe at Rotherith, for ſeveral Days together; you afterwards take great care to conceal your ſelf by changing your Cloaths, and putting your ſelf in a Garb not like your own, and giving out you were a Merchant or a Jeweller, or ſome other Trade; that afterwards you trifled away the time and went two or three Miles, and then ſtruck in upon one ſide of the River, and afterwards on the other ſide of the River, ſuſpiciouſly up and down not to be known, and this, not like your ſelf in any manner, but in a pittiful poor Diſguiſe, and hire a Sculler to carry you, from whom you concealed your ſelf, and ſo all along you trifled away the time till you were taken at Graveſend; that afterwards when you were taken, you were inquiſitive about the Captain, whether he did confeſs; that you ſhould likewiſe ſay ſome ſuch ſuſpicious Words as theſe, That you believed thoſe that killed Mr. Thynn, had no deſign againſt the Duke of Monmouth, that you believed the Captain would not confeſs, that you ſeemed to be concerned when you were told the Polander had confeſſed; that afterwards you ſhould ſay, my Lord, this is a ſtain to my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or a Lodging upon a Counterſcarp, will take away all this, or waſh it clean. And then, which is alſo teſtified againſt you, that you ſhould ask the Boy that very Morning of the Day the Murder was committed, whether they uſed in London here to permit Men to ride up and down on Horſeback upon a Sunday? Now theſe things, my Lord, it will import you to give ſome account of.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord ſays, he deſires he may anſwer all theſe things one after another.

L. C. J. Let him do ſo. And firſt let him anſwer what his Reaſon was to come into England in ſuch a manner Incognito at this time, and lye concealed when he had been in England before, and lived in a mighty good Equipage and Condition?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he ſays that hearing there was a Peace between Sweedland and England, and Holland deſigned, and like to be confirmed ſuddenly againſt the French, he came with a deſign to ſerve England, and to raiſe a Regiment of Horſe here for the Service of the King of England.

Count Coningſmark. If any ſuch Peace ſhould be, if any appearance of an Alliance between England and Holland, and Sweedland, I had a deſign to propoſe, if I could have a Regiment.

L. C. J. Why did he come unknown, and in a Diſguiſe?

Sir N. Johnſon. Secondly, He ſays, my Lord, the Reaſon of his coming Incognito was; becauſe he had a Diſtemper upon his Arms and Breaſt, and having formerly tryed and employed this Phyſitian, and having experience that he was an able Man, he was reſolved to lye privately till he had cured himſelf, for he could not drink Wine nor keep Company, having this Diſtemper upon him, and he was afraid if he had kept Company it would have hindered his Cure, and he ſhould not have been ſo ſoon cured as if he kept in the Houſe; and he ſays, that his Equipage could not come till after, and he would not willingly appear till he had his Equipage as a Man of his Quality ought to do, and theſe were the Reaſons that made him keep private.

L. C. J. Pray ask him upon what occaſion he did change his Lodgings ſo often?

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, That his firſt Lodging was changed, becauſe it was too cold for him, and he ſays, the next Lodging where he was, thoſe that were there can tell, the Room where he was, ſmoaked ſo cruelly, that he was not able to endure it. And he ſays, he liked the Houſe ſo well, that he ſent to ſee if the Chimney could be mended, and it was not to be done, otherwiſe he had gone back to that Houſe, and he has the Man and his Wife to bear Witneſs of it if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Let him call them.

Count. Call Joſeph Parſons and his Wife [but they did not appear.]

L. C. J. Then

L. C. J. Then ask my Lord this, To what purpose he did bring over this Polander here? He ought to consider of that, and give an account why he brought him hither.

Interpreter. He says this Pole was taken into his Service when he went to Tangier, when he went several Thousand Miles to do the King Service, and he had designed at that time to bring him into England to dress his Horses after the German way.

L. C. J. Had the Polander been a Groom formerly?

Interpreter. He says he thinks he had been Groom to his Unckle before.

L. C. J. But to what purpose did he bring him hither?

Interpreter. He says there was a great discourse about Strasburgh's being besieged, he did design to buy some Horses, for every one did Arm themselves, and he says he sent over 1000 Pistoles to be answered by the Merchants here, to buy Horses.

L. C. J. Hath he any body to prove it?

Count. There is Mr. Risby, Mr. Hanson, and my Brother.

Young Count. My Lord, I had a Bill of Exchange.

L. C. J. For how much Money, my Lord?

Young Count. For 1000 Pistoles to buy Horses, and he has bought one Horse, and was to buy more.

L. C. J. Do you hear, Gentlemen, what he says? He came over to buy Horses, and he returned 1000 Pistoles for that purpose, and his Brother does attest there was such a Sum returned by Bills of Exchange, for the buying of Horses.

Interpreter. My Lord, he says he does fear that the Jury that do not understand English, do not understand his Reasons for being in a Disguise.

L. C. J. Can't he give an account of it himself?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, his Evidence must be Interpreted to them by the Interpreter.

L. C. J. The Doctor's Evidence hath been heard already about the same matter.

Sir N. Johnson. He desires, my Lord, to know this; whether he may not say the same things over again to the Jury in French, there are a great many Persons of Quality that understand it, and they will see whether he speak true.

L. C. J. Let him if he pleases.

Sir Fr. Winn. But then, my Lord, I hope that your Lordship will tell the Jury it goes for nothing without Proof.

Then the Count spake to the Jury in French.

L. C. J. My Lord, I do not know whether the Gentlemen that are of your right Hand heard you or not.

Jury-man. We understand not French.

Then the Count spake it in Dutch.

Interp. He says, if it had not been for the great stormy Weather, the Polander had been sooner in London, for he sent for him before. He says, the Letters go from Strasburgh to Hamburgh in seven Days, and that most commonly Ships do come from thence in eight Days, but in a great deal less time than the Polander came over in. And he says that he writ four Months before to fetch the Polander over, and he might have been here long e're now, if it had not been for the Weather.

L. C. J. Then, my Lord, I would ask you some more Questions, which it concerns you to answer. Upon what occasion did you make your discourse of Mr. Thynn's death to Mr. Hanson? Had you any discourse with him? And upon what occasion?

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he says in common Discourses, 'tis impossible to give an account of the Discourse, or remember the occasion of it so long ago.

L. C. J. Ask him if he had any Quarrel with Mr. Thynn? Or knew Mr. Thynn?

Sir N. Johnson. He says, my Lord, that he never had any Quarrel with Mr. Thynn, nor to the best of his remembrance with his Eyes never saw Mr. Thynn.

L. C. J. Then I ask you this, my Lord, Did you ever hear Mr. Thynn had married my Lady Ogle before you last came into England?

Interpreter. He says, he never heard of it till he was going to Strasburgh, and then all the whole Town did talk of it.

L. C. J. How long is that ago?

Interpreter. Half a Year ago.

L. C. J. Then it was before his last coming into England.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, his discourse with Mr. Hanson, was not when he was last in Town, but before.

L. C. J. Then pray ask him this, What occasion he had to ask the Boy upon Sunday, Whether Horses might ride about the Town of a Sunday?

Interpreter. He says, my Lord, this is a very strange thing, That he should go and ask a Scullion-Boy, whether People might ride on Sundays, when he himself over and over again has rid upon Sundays to Hide-Park, as many Persons of Quality do.

L. C. J. Has he any body to prove it?

Sir N. Johnson. Here is Major Ogletborp (who with divers other Gentlemen testified they had seen him riding diverse times, on Sundays, in Hide-Park)

L. C. J. Then that Question signifies nothing, there could be nothing in that Question.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, he desires that I may be examined concerning the Boy, of what I heard by chance from the Boy himself, and I will give you an account of it upon my Faith and Reputation.

L. C. J. Do so, Sir Nathaniel, say what you can say.

Sir N. Johnson. My Lord, I having had the Honour to serve a while under my Lord's Father, I was desirous, knowing the Honour of the Family, and bearing a great respect to it, to do my Lord all the reasonable Service I could. So hearing my Lord was taken, and in Newgate, I went to wait upon him, and coming there, Mr. Richardson told me, there was a little Boy waited at the Count's Door for his Wages, as he said. So I spake to the Boy, and asked him what doest thou stay for? He told me for his Wages. Said I, certainly my Lord will pay you your Wages; how long have you serv'd him? he said a little while, and then said I, if you lived with him, what do you know of his Business? And then of himself he began and told me, Only this I know, that Vratz, was in my Master's Chamber that Night, and the Polander that Night went out with a pair of Boots under his Arm, and more than this I do not know. Said I, Boy who do you ſerve? Says he, I have no Maſter at preſent, but then of his own accord he told me, Sir Thomas Thynn had promiſed him a place, and in the mean time, I am, ſays he, to go to ſerve my Lord Privy Seal; ſo my Lord gave him Twenty Shillings for his Wages.

Interpreter. My Lord deſires the Boy may be asked whether he did not go to fetch Phyſick.

L. C. J. Ask him, where is the Boy?

Watts. No, I do not remember it.

L. C. J. Now, you ſhould put the Count in mind.

Sir Fr. Winn. We obſerve what a ſort of Interpreter Sir N. Johnſon is: He ſpeaks more like an Advocate than an Interpreter, he mingles Interpreter and Witneſs and Advocate together, I don't know what to make of him.

L. C. J. The Count had taken Phyſick that day.

Sir Thomas Thynn. My Lord, I deſire to be heard, I never ſpake to the Boy in all my Life.

Mr. Thynn. Nor I. But he gave the ſame Teſtimony he gives now, before the King and Council.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Thomas, it does not concern you at all to ſpeak to that, there is no reflection made upon you in it. But my Lord Coningſmark, it will concern you a little, to ſhew upon what occaſion Captain Vratz came to you that Night that Mr. Thynn was killed.

Interpreter. He ſays, my Lord, he can't tell why he came there, it's a proper Queſtion to ask Captain Vratz himſelf.

L. C. J. That can't be.

Interpreter. He ſays, my Lord, he kept his Chamber at that time, he had taken cold upon his taking Phyſick, and the Captain came to give him a viſit, and he never reflected upon any one he came for, he was lying upon his Bed.

L. C. Baron. Pray ask my Lord this, Why this man that was ſent over to attend Horſes, ſhould come upon the Fryday, and a Campaign Coat be bought him on the Saturday, and he furniſhed with a Sword on the Sunday?

Interpreter. My Lord, the Noiſe is great, but I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip deſires to know what was the reaſon, why he bought a Sword for him and a Coat?

L. C. Baron. Ay, and how he came by the Buff-Coat?

Interpreter. He ſays, he had that before.

L. C. Baron. But why muſt he have ſuch a ſtrong Basket-hilted Sword furniſhed him in a day's time?

Interpreter. He ſays, my Lord, As to the Cloaths, when he ſaw him with all his Cloaths torn, he muſt of neceſſity get him a Coat, or elſe he was a ſhame to him, and his Service. And as for the Sword, it was no more (he ſays) then what Servants of his bulk and making uſed to wear.

Sir N. Johnſon. And he ſays, all the Servants of Gentlemen in Germany, wear ſuch broad Swords.

L. C. J. You know it your ſelf, Sir Nathaniel Johnſon, you have travelled there.

Sir N. Johnſon. Yes, my Lord, they do, and the Poles much broader and greater Swords then the others. Here is one in Court that hath a a great broad Sword now by his Side.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, it will import you to give ſome accompt, how, you having brought over this Polander (as you ſay) to chooſe Horſes, and help you in the management of them, to take care of them in the Nature of a Groom, how you came to part with him to Captain Vratz aſſoon as he came over?

Interpreter. My Lord, he ſays, Being that he was ſick himſelf, and there was no hopes of the Alliance between England and Holland, he had no ſuch occaſion for him, as when he wrote for him, and therefore ſaw no reaſon to keep him.

L. C. J. How long was it, before that he wrote for him?

Count. My Lord, after the Seige of Strasburgh, when every body thought there would have been a War, but it was not ſo; therefore I had not need of him, but he had been 7 Weeks at Sea, and my Lord, 'tis a common thing in Germany.

Interpreter. He ſays, 'tis a common thing in their Country, to give Servants away, if there be no occaſion for them.

Count. My Lord, 'tis a common thing in Germany, it may be, it may not be ſo much uſed in England to give a Servant away.

L. C. Baron. What! the next day that he comes over?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir Nathaniel Johnſon?

Sir N. Johnſon. Yes, my Lord, 'tis very frequent in Germany to give a Servant away if there be no uſe of him, for theſe Polanders are like ſlaves.

Interpreter. And, my Lord, he ſays, that Mr. Ruſſel does know, that the Merchant that ſent him over hither is a man of good Repute, and if this man had had an ill Reputation in Germany, he would not have ſent him.

Witneſs. My Lord, I know very well he is a man of very great Credit in Hamburgh, and of great Eſtate.

L. C. J. Did he ſend over this Polander?

Witneſs. Yes, my Lord, ſo I underſtand.

L. C. J. Can you ſpeak of his Credit, Sir Nathaniel Johnſon?

Witneſs. Of the Merchant's Credit I can, my Lord, I know him to be a man of conſiderable Eſtate and Credit. He is a man of ſuch Reputation, that he would not ſend a man of an ill Reputation.

L. C. Baron. Oh Sir, Nemo repente fit turpiſſimus. He could not be ſo ill a man at the firſt daſh, he muſt be a man probable for ſuch a ſervice.

Sir Fr. Winn. You may obſerve, my Lord, how Sir Nathaniel Johnſon, who is Interpreter in the Caſe, is a Witneſs, and argues for the Priſoner too.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir Nathaniel, is a Rencounter the killing of a Man after this manner?

Sir N. Johnſon. A Rencounter is another ſort of thing, Sir, you don't ſpeak as if you were a Soldier.

Mr. Williams. My being a Soldier or not is nothing to the buſineſs, but the Captain ſaid, he intended to have made a Rencounter of it.

Sir Fr. Winn. But my Lord, we deſire to take notice of Sir Nathaniel's forwardneſs; for it may be a Preſident in other Caſes.

L. Ch. J. What do you talk of a Preſident? When did you ſee a Preſident of a like Tryal of Stran-

Strangers, that could ſpeak not a word of Engliſh; but you would fain have the Court thought hard of, for doing things that are extraordinary in this Caſe.

Mr. Craven. My Lord he deſires he may inform the Jury what he ſent for this Polander for.

L. C. J. Let him.

Then the Count ſpake it in French and Dutch.

L. C. J. My Lord, another thing is this, How came your Lordſhip preſently to go away in ſuch a private ſecret manner, and to direct your Cloaths to be ſent as it were to Windſor? And your ſelf to go away, and to make ſuch a private withdrawing of your ſelf down the River in this manner?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, he ſays, that one Markham that is here, came and told him that upon the killing of this Man by the Polander and the Captain who were taken in ſuch a fact, there was a diſcourſe of it that it might turn to his prejudice, and that the Common people do commonly fall upon Strangers, that his Taylor told him, that he heard the Common people name him as concerned in it, and that he believed, if the Common people did catch him, they would tear him to pieces, and ſo his friends did counſel him that he would withdraw himſelf.

L. C. J. Is the Taylor here? Call him.

Interpreter. Call Markham the Taylor (who ſtood up.)

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays that he was afraid the people might tear him to pieces, before he could come to juſtify himſelf.

L. C. J. Look you friend, did you come to Count Coningſmark's Lodgings after Mr. Thynn was killed, on the Monday morning?

Markham. Yes.

L. C. J. What did you tell him?

Markham. I told him nothing, but I was ſent there by Mr. Hanſon, ſays he, tell the Count that the Duke of Monmouth and ſeveral Noblemen have been here: Now I had not ſeen the Count at that time before, but he told me where he lodged, when I came there I told the Count of it, but he told me he knew nothing of it, but ſaid he, I am ſorry if any ſuch thing be done.

L. C. J. But what did you ſay his friends adviſed him to about it?

Markham. I did ſay nothing of it.

Then the Count ſpake to him in Dutch.

Markham. That was afterwards.

L. C. J. What was that afterwards?

Markham. I was told, the people ſaid, if he were taken, he would be knocked on the head.

L. C. J. What time afterwards was it?

Markham. After he went away.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo then?

Markham. Mr. Hanſon told me ſo then, I would not tell a lye for all the World.

Count. He can tell alſo when I went away—— the reſt he ſpake in Dutch.

Interpreter. He ſays this man can witneſs, that he asked his man what money he had left, and he told him that he had not above 10 or 11 l. ſo he put his hand in his bag and took out ſome, and put it into his pocket.

Count. So ill was I provided for an eſcape.

L. C. J. Ask him that Queſtion, do you know any thing of what money he took with him?

Markham. No, I ſaw him take an handful of Silver, but what it was I can't tell.

Mr. Thynn. He had 7 or 8 l. about him when he was taken.

Interpreter. He deſires leave to tell it to the Jury, (which he did.)

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, this will require ſome Anſwer, how came you to tell thoſe Gentlemen that took you, that you believed Mr. Vratz and the reſt would have done the Duke of Monmouth no harm?

Interpreter. He ſays, the people told when he was taken, that the Duke of Monmouth was in the Coach, and that they did follow the Coach a great way, and would not do the Action till the Duke of Monmouth was out of the Coach.

Count. They did tell me, the Crowd that were about me, that thoſe that were taken ſaid they would not do it till the Duke was out.

Interpreter. And he ſays, that gave him ſufficient reaſon to ſay to Mr. Gibbons that he did believe, they had no deſign upon his Grace the Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. He heard it ſo commonly, it ſeems. Now my Lord, there is one thing more that you ſhould explain your ſelf in, what you meant by this, when you ſaid it would be a ſtain upon your blood, yet one Noble Act in War, or the Lodging upon a Counterſcarp would waſh it off?

Interpreter. He ſays my Lord, that tho' he knew himſelf not Guilty of any thing, yet his being taken upon ſuſpicion, and clapped up in Priſon, would be a great diſgrace to him, and would be worſe reſented in his own Country than the thing it ſelf was. It being not the Cuſtom in his Country to take Perſons of his Quality Priſoners in that manner.

L. C. J. Now, my Lord, Is there any perſon that you would have called to ask any Queſtions of? If you have, they ſhall be called.

Count. No, my Lord, but if you pleaſe to give me leave to tell ſomething that may be neceſſary.

Then he ſpake in Dutch.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord, he ſays, if you will give him leave, though it does not come very well from himſelf, yet he deſires to ſay ſomething for his own Reputation.

Mr. Williams. He ſhould be armed with Witneſſes to make his defence.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit for men that ſtand here to ſay any thing that is reaſonable for themſelves. My Lord, if you can ſpeak any thing that you apprehend the Jury can underſtand, ſpeak to them what you pleaſe, ſo as they underſtand it, but do not be too long.

Mr. Craven. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, he ſays he would ſpeak it firſt in French, and then in German.

L. C. J. Ay, but then the Engliſh men of the Jury will not underſtand a word of it; he had better ſpeak in Engliſh to the Jury.

L. C. J. North. My Lord, It is an Indifferent thing, it may be Interpreted, not being matter of Fact.

Sir N. Johnſon. My Lord he ſays it is a great happineſs in all his trouble, that he was in a Country, where he was to appear before a Proteſtant Judicature, himſelf being a Proteſtant, and his fore-Fathers alſo. He ſays that his fore-Fathers under Guſtaphus Adolphus were Souldiers, and did there with their Swords in their hands, and the loſs of their blood endeavour to ſettle the Proteſtant Religion in Germany, and protect it there; he ſays, that it has been the honour of himſelf, and his Family, that they have always been ready to venture their Blood, and their Lives for the Advantage of the Proteſtant Religion, as the Examples of his Grandfather and Father do ſhew, and there never was any thing done by his Family, but what was done for the Honour of his Country, and his Religion; and he ſays, that if any of his former Actions can give any the leaſt ſuſpicion of his being Guilty of this or any foul Fact, he is very willing to lay down his Life, and very willing to have it cut off immediately.

of

Count. Immediately.

Sir N. Johnſon. He ſays, that he is very ready upon all occaſions to ſerve the King of England, and that he loves the Engliſh Nation ſo well, as always to be ready to do any thing to ſerve them.

Count. Without any intereſt in the world, againſt the Will of all my Relations, and I have brought my Brother into England to be brought up into the Proteſtant Religion to ſhew my Inclinations to the Religion, and the Engliſh Nation.

L. C. J. Have you done?

Sir Fr. Winn. Yes, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and we have no matter of Fact to reply unto: but we think it is our Duty, conſidering the Defence my Lord has made, that we ſhould take ſome care to put the King's Evidence a little together, it being a caſe of ſuch nature, and ſo cruel and horrid a Murder.

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel here for the King, and you are Gentlemen upon an inquiry to find out the Offenders in a very great, a barbarous, and a wilful Murder. And, my Lord, in relation to the Principals, I need not ſpend your Lordſhip's and the Jury's time about them; for all thoſe three Men, that are indicted as Principals, do my Lord confeſs the Fact, tho' they do it in a different manner, and tho' in Form of Law they are pleaded not Guilty; yet when they come to be asked the Queſtion, their Guilt flies in their Faces, and they cannot deny it. So then for thoſe three Men there is no need to ſpend time in repeating the Evidence.

But, my Lord, that that ſeems to require the Conſideration of the Jury is, whether this wicked, and horrid Murder be only circumſcribed in the Guilt of it to thoſe three Men that have confeſſed it, or whether any rational man in the World will believe upon the account they give themſelves, that they only had a deſign, a ſtudy, or a delight to kill this Innocent Gentleman. No, my Lord, the thing muſt lie a little deeper, and there muſt be ſome other reaſon why this barbarous Murder was committed, I would crave your pardon for what I ſay. My Lord, I would not ſpeak any thing that ſhould miſlead a Jury in matters of Blood, and I think it was rightly ſaid by your Lordſhip, that when a Man is tryed for his Life, We ought all to behave our ſelves ſeriouſly as in a matter of weight and moment. And ſo it is, I think, a very ſerious thing, and a matter of concernment to us all to inquire who hath ſhed Innocent Blood; for ſuch was this poor Gentleman's Blood that was killed, Innocent Blood.

My Lord, this Count is a very unhappy Perſon to have ſuch a Relation as has been proved to be of the Principals; I will do my Lord no wrong in the repetition, if I do, and am miſtaken, I crave your direction, I am ſure you will correct me in it. Two of the Perſons that are Principals, that was Captain Vratz and the Polander, happen'd to be Perſons Relating to my Lord's Family, as his ſervants. For it is agreed by the Witneſſes that were that Count's Friends, that they came over into England with the Count, the laſt time he came over in that private manner, and 'tis likewiſe proved, and not denied by him, that Captain Vratz was frequently with him, not only to the very day when this bloody Fact was done, but after that great Crime was committed; I ſay, my Lord, 'tis a very unfortunate thing for this Lord, that thoſe men ſhould have ſo near a Relation to him, who have had their hands in it, and can give no account why they did it.

My Lord, I do know (and your Lordſhip has juſtly directed us) that no Evidence from one Priſoner, or the Confeſſion of one can charge the others in point of Evidence; but I cannot but take notice, that Captain Vratz could give no Reaſon in the world for it, but as it were for ſome Affront to the Count and himſelf. But, my Lord, the Evidence that lies heavy upon this Lord at the Bar, is made up of theſe Particulars.

Firſt, that here is a Murder committed is plain, then that this Lord did fly, is alſo plain, and when he did fly, Gentlemen, he kept himſelf in diſguiſe before that Fact was committed, and whether or no the Reaſons be ſufficient that he has given to your Lordſhip, and the Jury, muſt be left to conſideration. He ſays that he had not his Equipage, that he was not very well, and that he could not drink Wine: Thoſe I take to be the Reaſons given, why my Lord Coningſmark did conceal himſelf, till the time after the Fact was committed.

L. C. J. He was taking of Phyſick, and he thought it might be prejudicial to him to drink Wine, or keep company.

Sir Fr. Winn. But, my Lord, theſe kinds of ſhifts, we think, are not able to ballance the Evidence, for that which is truly the Evidence is this Mr. Hanſon, who is very much converſant in that Family, and who did give his Evidence very unwillingly; yet, he did really confeſs that which will go very far in this Caſe; for after he was preſſed ſeveral times (your Lordſhip, and the Court, and the Counſel preſſed him) to tell what was the Reaſon of that diſcourſe he had with the Swediſh Reſident, and he was asked, Had you any Command from my Lord Coningſmark? He anſwered no; but, ſays he, I thought it would pleaſe him, if I could have the Opinion of the Agent or Reſident to know what the Laws of England were, if ſo be he called Mr. Thynn to account, and what the conſequence would be in reference to his deſign upon my Lady Ogle, and upon this he does go, and ask the Queſtion of the Reſident.

Now, what does he mean by this calling to account? We muſt take things according to the Reaſon of them. Certainly it was ſome offence that he had taken to Mr. Thynn, and that is plain in regard when he was asked what the Prejudice did refer to, Mr. Hanſon was pleaſed to name that great Lady, my Lady Ogle, and ſaid ſhe was mentioned, and he did deſire to know what the Influence of the Laws of England would be in that matter, if he ſhould call him to account.

My Lord, I think with ſubmiſſion it carries this in it, as if he had a purpoſe in his mind to call Mr. Thynn to account by quarrelling with him and hazarding him in his Life; I do not undertake, nor would not of my ſelf, to expound it, but this I will ſay, it muſt ſignify ſomething, and muſt have ſome conſideration, and without all doubt a Perſon of this Lord's Quality would not let fall ſuch an Expreſſion, but for ſome end and purpoſe.

My Lord, after Mr. Hanſon had given his long Evidence, which came ſo difficultly from him, we traced it down by ſeveral Witneſſes, Wright, Harder, and others, that this Polander came over, as it happen'd, on the Fryday, (which is a thing that comes mighty cloſe) upon the Saturday, he is provided with a Coat and a Sword; on the Sunday he committed this inhuman bloody Fact. Now it is a mighty unfortunate Circumſtance upon this Lord, that this ſhould be a man whom my Lord Coningſmark ſhould be ſo very much concerned for, that becauſe he was not come, he ſhould be afraid he had miſcarry'd in the Weather, to that his Anſwer was this, that he was ſent for over by him to look after his Horſes, and he had come a great deal ſooner, if it had not been for the ſtormy Weather. But, your Lordſhip obſerves, that it was not above three or four months before, and then by his own ſhewing the buſineſs of Mr. Thynn, and his Marriage with my Lady Ogle was talked of far and near; and ſo, my Lord, it makes the ſuſpicion of the malice the greater, that he who has done this bloody Murder, and has been ſo much under the Command of this Lord's Family, that he ſhould come but two days before, and the Count provide him with a Sword that very day, and then that Letter from Captain Vratz to Dr. Harder, which he carried to the Count, and the Count read, but of which he can tell you none of the Contents; that ſpeak ſomething in regard when the Doctor went away, this Polander was ſent to the Captain by the Doctor; but this is certain, however, there was a Sword that was brought by the Cutler, that Sword was carried up to the Count's Chamber, that Sword was delivered afterwards to the Polander; for he had it on the Sunday morning when he went away with the Boots under his Arm, and the Campaign Coat upon his Back, with a Buff-Coat under it; and he went out, and never returned till the Fact was committed.

I ſay, my Lord, it carries a vehement ſuſpicion, that he was privy to this Murder, becauſe this was a ſervant at his Devotion, and your Lordſhip and the Jury ſee what kind of a Creature he is, likely to do any thing, being at the Command of ſo great a Perſon.

But then, my Lord, to come cloſer to the matter (for I will only repeat that which is moſt material) there is the Evidence of the Boy, who, I muſt ſay, tells you a very ſenſible Story; he tells you upon what account he came to him, that he was there ten Days before the Murder was committed; he ſwears expreſsly, That the Polander lay there the Night before, was there that morning, went away with the Sword, and Dr. Harder with him; that this Murder was committed about eight a Clock at Night, that Captain Vratz came buſtling into the Count's Lodgings, where he lay concealed, and the Boy by agreement, being to go home every Night, ſtaid till half an hour paſt nine, and left the Captain there at that time, and the Captain had been there in the Morning.

My Lord, Surely it is a ſtrange thing, and much to be wonder'd at, that the Captain, who had the management of this Murder, had no where to go for a Refuge, but to his Patron my Lord Coningſmark, reeking hot with Mr. Thynn's Blood, when the Blow was given, within an hour after the Murder committed, (for ſo the Boy ſwears expreſsly, for the Blow was given at eight a Clock) and afterwards he went to the Doctor's to bed about ten a clock at night, as the Doctor hath confeſſed; I take that for a mighty Evidence. And then, my Lord, upon the Monday morning when the Boy comes in, the Count asks him, What was the matter with the Buſtle in the Street the laſt night? Will any man in England believe, but that he had had earlier news of it? And for what reaſon ſhould he ask the Queſtion, if Mr. Hanſon ſpeaks true, who brought the news in from Whitehall?

But the great Queſtion that we wonder ſhould be asked the Boy, is, What Mr. Thynn was? Which certainly was a very odd expreſſion, if we conſider what Mr. Hanſon ſays, That the Count had mentioned him in his diſcourſe, and my Lady Ogle too. One of the Count's Anſwers was, It could not be imagined that he could ſpeak to a Scullion-Boy; but you ſee the Boy ſwears it, and tells it ſo, as that it is very probable.

We now come, my Lord, to give an account of his Flight.

The Father of the Boy comes in the morning: And I would obſerve, tho' he pretended his buſineſs and his diſtemper brought him over, and that he was ill, and under Cure; yet this matter made the place too hot to hold him; ſtay here he durſt not, immediately he forgot his Phyſitian's Preſcriptions, and gave order to his man to ſend away his things. Then the Boy's Father was ſent for, and the Portmantles are given him, and he is told my Lord was going to Windſor; but when he came to Charing-croſs, the things are put into a Coach in the Strand, and from thence they went for Rotherith.

Then came the man at whoſe houſe he lay, and he was a Swede, and by the way I would obſerve, the Witneſſes are moſt of them my Lord's own Friends, unwilling to tell the truth till we get it (and that very hardly) from them. This Man was very unwilling to tell his knowledge, but he got him the Cloaths, which Cloaths, by the bulk of the Man, one would think would hardly fit the Count; but the more he was diſguiſed, the more was his Security; and when he was asked this Queſtion, Why he deſired to have thoſe Cloaths to ſecure him? He ſaid at laſt, It was to prevent Trouble.

Now let us conſider, my Lord, whether the Count has given any Anſwer to that. My Lord, there is nothing in what he ſaid, under pardon. He ſays, He went away, becauſe he was afraid the People would tear him in pieces, before he could juſtify himſelf. If he were innocent, he knew where to go to be ſecure from any hurt from the People; he might have applied himſelf to your Lordſhip, or to any other Magiſtrate. He is ſo ingenious he could not but know he might have protected himſelf under the Government, which which protects and ſecures any man whatſoever if he be innocent.

I have theſe two things more to mention, and then I ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury; and one is the Evidence of Mr. Gibbons, and Mr. Kid.

Mr. Kid gives that which to me is a very material Evidence of what paſſed when they ſeized him: As they were coming up the River, the Count asks him, Whether there were any good Lodgings in Newgate? and particularly expreſſed his Care of the Captain, to ask whether he were well lodged. And when he was told that the Polander had confeſſed, he ſays he ſeemed on the ſudden to be very much concerned, bit his Cloaths, and threw himſelf along with ſome agony. My Lord, an innocent man needed not to uſe any ſuch actions.

Then comes Mr. Gibbons, who was very inſtrumental in the purſuing of him, and is known to be an honeſt Man, he gives this Evidence, That when there was a Diſcourſe about Mr. Thynn, and his old Maſter the Duke of Monmouth, the Count preſently reply'd, They meant to have done the Duke of Monmouth no harm; and walking about the room, on a ſudden, burſt out into this expreſſion, This is a ſtain upon my Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or lodging upon a Counterſcarp, will waſh it all away.

Now, my Lord, as to what he anſwers to this, I ſay any Man may make that evaſion which he would excuſe it by, to ſay that the Accuſation is a ſcandal or a ſtain may be worſe than the Guilt of the Action: But your Lordſhip and the Jury ſee plainly, if ſo be the thoughts of a Man's own Heart be that he is guilty, it will break out ſome way or other. Theſe things I only repeat, I leave them to the Conſideration of the Jury.

But when I have ſaid this, there is one thing more, and that is above all relating to the Captain: Says Mr. Gibbons, I did not know that the Captain had confeſſed, but I did venture to ſay he had; but the Count replied, He did not believe the Captain had confeſſed. My Lord, you ſee how the Captain appears before you, and if the Count will take upon him to ſay, he does not believe the Captain would confeſs; it doth ſtrongly argue he knew as much of the Captain's mind, as he himſelf. Then look upon the reſolute Behaviour of the Captain, the familiarity he lived in with the Count, that he had always been a Dependent upon his Family, it ſhews ſome reaſon for his aſſurance of ſecrecy from the Captain, that he would not confeſs the Author of this moſt notorious Murder, and it lies heavy upon him. My Lord, I look upon the Diſcovery of this as a very miraculous thing; And pray conſider, Gentlemen, where ſhall a Man go to ſettle his thoughts for the Original buſineſs? Do you (or can you) think it was begun, invented and contrived by yonder three Men? To what end or purpoſe; or for what advantage to them? You have heard the Evidence that I have repeated to you; You have heard what this Lord has ſaid for himſelf; how he has fled, and what has been done. My Lord, I will not uſe any thing of Argument to perſwade the Jury; but I cannot chuſe but ſay, we know no where to go for the Author of this villanous Fact, nor whom to accuſe as the prime Contriver, but this Count before you. I pray the God of Heaven to direct you in your Enquiry; and if I have ſaid any thing amiſs, I beg your Pardon for it.

[Then a great Shout was made, which the Court rebuked the People for.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I did not think to have ſaid any thing more in this Caſe; but I muſt crave your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Patience for a few words. As for the three Perſons at the Bar, (the Pole, the Captain and the Lieutenant) it is, Gentlemen, very notorious they are guilty of this moſt Helliſh Murder. But all the labour and difficulty of this matter is, how far this Count is Guilty, or not Guilty.

Pray, Gentlemen, do but obſerve the nature of this Crime, and the manner of our Evidence that has been given you. The Crime he is accuſed of, is, for being Acceſſory to a Wilful Murder; Acceſſory before the Fact; Contriving of it, and laying the Train, which theſe Perſons were made uſe of to fire. This being ſo, it is almoſt impoſſible to give you that clear light and pregnant proof againſt an Acceſſory, as againſt the Principals. The Principal is he that doth the Fact; that is notorious and open. The Acceſſory is the Perſon that prepares the Scheme, contrives the management, firſt ſets the Wheel on work, gives the neceſſary Inſtructions, who lies behind the Curtain. Now, conſidering that, and the nature of the thing, it is impoſſible to give a clearer Evidence than what you have had.

Pray, Gentlemen, do but firſt conſider who hath been the Privadoes and the Intimates of this Count, with whom he has had Conference ſince he came into England, Hanſon, and Dr. Frederick, who are brought as Witneſſes (tho' unwilling ones) againſt him; the Boy that was employed by him. He is in no other hands; I cannot hear he was among any other Perſons but theſe, and Captain Vratz, and the Polander. Theſe are his Company, and thoſe alone with whom he had converſation. Now, Gentlemen, that we ſhould be able to produce theſe very Men (that were his only Companions) againſt him as Witneſſes, is a mighty thing, conſidering the privacy he lay in.

As for Vratz, his moſt intimate Privado, he came over with him into England, lived with him in his firſt Lodging, and was continually with him during his ſtay. So then, what can we expect about this Man, Gentlemen, when he had laid his Deſign with all the privacy he could, would have as little Converſation with Engliſhmen as he could. It was very craftily laid, that he would converſe with none but thoſe that were privy to his Deſign, or had an hand in it in a great meaſure. Then pray conſider how it was carried on, Gentlemen; Vratz, who was the great Commander, and the Polander, who was the immediate Actor in it, had been his own Servants. Vratz, I ſay, he had a great confidence in; he came over with him; and will not any Man believe, that this Man, who eat of his Bread, who lay in his Family, was a likely Man to do this for his ſake that thus cheriſh'd him? For whoſe ſake pray can it be thought to be? Not for his own ſake; for the Captain tells you he never had any communication or converſation with this unhappy Gentleman, Mr. Thynn. So that if it were as they would have it, that they did it out of reſpect to this Count, who who was the Captain's Friend, it will turn upon the ſame point, and confirm the ſuſpicion. Why ſhould the Polander do it, if he had no reaſon to do it upon his own account? For he never ſaw the Face of Mr. Thynn, but was brought hoodwink'd in a manner to the Fact.

Therefore whether it were not done for his ſake, is that which you are to conſider; and as a Proof that for the Count it was done, I ſhall pitch upon one Circumſtance that will bring it home to his door, and that is, the Evidence of Hanſon his Brother's Tutor: And by the way I cannot but repeat it, that this Thread goes thro' all the Cloth, we have no Witneſſes but thoſe of his own familiar Acquaintance and Dependence. Now Hanſon has (tho' very ſhufflingly) told you, the Count and he had ſome Diſcourſe about my Lady Ogle; and tho' we cannot come to know all the Circumſtances, yet he does acknowledge ſo much as that there was mention made of requiring ſatisfaction of Mr. Thynn, or ſome account of him, and what might be the conſequences of the Laws of England, in reference to my Lady Ogle, in caſe he ſhould call him to account. So far he is plain, tho' he will not tell what the Diſcourſe was; that there was a Diſcourſe of my Lady Ogle, of Mr. Thynn, of asking ſatisfaction of Mr. Thynn, or calling him to account, and what the conſequences in Law might be. And pray, Gentlemen, obſerve, being to take Advice about this matter, they would not conſult an Engliſh Lawyer, tho' I ſee one behind him now, but a Foreigner, the Swediſh Agent; not ask the Opinion of one Man of this Kingdom. And then he gives you a mighty Reaſon for it, That the Swediſh Reſident knew very well how to adviſe him in this Affair, becauſe he had lived in England about 19 Years: So that all his Acquaintance and Friends, the Managers of the Buſineſs, and thoſe conſulted with about it, all Outlandiſh-men; I cannot ſay they are all Guilty, but I will ſay this makes our Proof more difficult.

Gentlemen, This being taken notice of as a mighty Circumſtance, I would bring it a little more home to this Gentleman, whom we accuſe as Acceſſory before the Fact. Pray conſider how all along he lay skulking, and hiding himſelf in diſguiſe, and ſhifting his Lodging from place to place. I need not repeat it, but I would deſire you to think of what was concurrent with that very day, and, as it were, concomitant with the very Murder, and that will appear to be ſufficient to ſatisfy any rational Man. We are not picking up an Evidence upon flying Words, or unconcluding Circumſtances, but we offer Facts to you, and Facts are to guide you, you being to compare Facts with Facts. As to his lurking and hiding, this Gentleman gives you no manner of rational account, that he had any buſineſs with any Man in England that ſhould occaſion his lying private; but only he tells you, he labour'd under a Diſtemper that he would not have diſcover'd; and yet take him in that very Diſtemper, and in the proceſs of his Cure, as ſoon as this Fact is over, the next Morning he values neither his Diſeaſe, nor his Phyſick, but goes by Water, and made an Attempt to fly abroad. Will any underſtanding Man believe that he came privately into England, that he lay skulking here, that he made uſe of another Name, and other Cloaths, that he ſhould do all theſe things, and run away ſo immediately after the Fact was done, and all only becauſe of a little Diſtemper of Spots on his Breaſt?

But then, ſays he, it was reported in the World, and told him the next Morning, that the People, the Rabble, would tear him in pieces. He was asked where he had this Report, and he brought up a Taylor, and depended mightily upon it, but the Taylor denied it; and, Gentlemen, he that fails in one thing he ſays, is not to be credited in another without good Proof. He ſays that he ſaid no ſuch thing, ſo that, Gentlemen, this fictitious Argument of his Fear falls to the ground.

Then obſerve what follows upon this villainous Fact; he flies away privately, he goes to a Swediſh Houſe at Rotherith, from thence by a Swede he muſt be put into a Skuller, and that Skuller muſt be towing of him for ſeveral days together, till he come to Graveſend, from whence he was to have gone over Sea. Pray lay all this together, and weigh it well, and ſee if you can imagine any other Reaſon for it all, than what we alledge.

I would obſerve it to you, Gentlemen, and pray think of it, what the Count has ſaid to you in his own Defence in ſo many Languages, without Proof, muſt paſs for nothing. The Court has had a great deal of Patience to hear him, and ſhewn him a great deal of Favour in permitting it; but without Proof, I ſay, it all paſſeth for nothing. And what Proof he hath made of it, I muſt ſubmit to you; for I will not ſpend your time in running into Particulars: And where he has proved any thing, pray compare Facts with Facts, eſpecially that concerning the Captain Vratz, which is not, in my Opinion, to be anſwered, that he lived with him, that he ſhould be with him on the Sunday Morning, that in the Evening he ſhould come thither again after the Fact done, that he ſhould be left in his Chamber, and continue in the Houſe ſo long. Will any one believe, that when Vratz came over with the Count from abroad, lodged with him here, was every day with him in familiar Converſation, ſhould come that Morning before, and in the Evening immediately after, and ſtay with him ſo long, and yet the Count be innocent? Nay, will not any Man rather abſolutely conclude him an Acceſſory to the Murder?

Then, Gentlemen, take into your Conſideration his Flight, and Endeavours to eſcape out of the hands of Juſtice; if there were no more, that is a great Evidence of his Guilt, but you have much more, and as ſtrong as you can deſire or expect. He ſays he was afraid of the People; alaſs he needed not to fear that, he finds a very fair and generous Treatment here, he knew the Temper of our Engliſh Nation well enough, to know they do not preſently fly in Men's Faces; and he could not but know, he might, without danger, reſign himſelf up to the Law if he were innocent.

Gentlemen, We have given you a fair and a full Evidence, we have offer'd you ſufficient Proof in Fact, and have offer'd no Shams to you; and I do not doubt but you will do right to the Honour of England, and the Juſtice of the Nation, which are deeply concerned in this Caſe.

[Then there was a great Noiſe made.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, the Council for the King have been very large in the repeating of the Evidence, therefore you muſt not expect from me, that I ſhould go over it again, in the ſame method that they have done. I will direct you a little as to ſome Points in Law as to this Caſe: Here is, as they tell you truly, a Murder as horrid and barbarous as peradventure can be committed upon any Subject. It is a Murder of a very bad nature, ſo that the repeating of it is enough to make all Men abhor it; it needs no Aggravation, it is in its own nature ſo very barbarous; and thoſe Gentlemen that had a hand in it, muſt certainly needs be aſhamed, and look upon themſelves as not fit to be accounted Men, whoever they be that had any hand in it, ſo barbarous and inhuman, and baſe in its own nature, and ſo unworthy of a Man.

I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, when one Man ſhoots another, and two are with him, tho' they do nothing but come on purpoſe to countenance that evil Fact, that is Murder in them All; All that were preſent are guilty, when ever ſuch an Act is done: And three or four come together, and one does the Fact, and the others ſtand by to countenance it, whether they be there to bring the Party off, or to animate him, and put him into a condition that he may murder and kill, it is Murder in All, and they are All as equally guilty, as he that ſhot, or actually gave the Blow.

Now as to theſe three Perſons here, the Polander that ſhot, Vratz who was with him and ſtop'd the Coach, and Stern that was by with them, they do all acknowledge themſelves to be there at this Murder; the leaſt they ſay for themſelves, is, that they came to countenance a fighting with Mr. Thynn, that is the leaſt any of them ſay; for Captain Vratz makes this his Excuſe, that he intended to kill him (as he calls it) fairly, and the others were to ſtand by to let him make the beſt of it; ſo that they All came with a murderous Intent, and a Murder followed. And I muſt declare this for Law to you, that this is Murder in them All, if you believe themſelves; ſo that I think there is little, very little for you to conſider concerning theſe three Men, but according to what they have acknowledged of themſelves both before the Council, and here likewiſe in your own Preſence, they ſeem All to be guilty of this Murder.

The more doubtful Queſtion is concerning Count Coningſmark, that ſtands here before you, for he was not at the Murder, nor is he charged as Principal; and the Queſtion will be as to him, Whether he commanded, or gave any Authority or Direction to have this Murder committed; That is the thing that is now charged upon him, and without that he cannot be Acceſſory in this Caſe.

Now, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider as to that, ſeveral things are certain and poſitive; That this Polander was once his ſervant; That he was brought over from beyond Sea by his Order; That he was given by him to Captain Vratz; That Vratz was his great Acquaintance, and lay in his Lodging ſome time, tho' not at this very time. Theſe things are plain: Now what Anſwer is given to this? You hear, he ſays, the Polander was taken for him, and hired as a Servant beyond Seas, knowing that he had skill in Horſes; and the Count having remitted Money to buy Horſes, he was willing to have him manage the Horſes, and to have his Judgment in them, and ſent for him three Months before for that purpoſe, and that he came for that purpoſe; but knowing that the occaſion for which he was to buy his Horſes was paſt over, there being like to be no War, and therefore there would be no occaſion for Horſes, he was willing to part with the Polander, as he ſays, is uſual for Perſons of Quality in his Country to do upon ſuch occaſions, to give their Servants to one another; and ſo having cloathed him firſt, he gave him to Captain Vratz: And you hear how much of this is made good by Witneſſes, and how far this is ſatisfactory to you as an Excuſe and Reaſon for this, I leave to you.

There is more too that is very plain: It is apparent that the Count bid him come to his Lodging after this Murder was committed. According to the calculation of the time, it muſt be after the Murder, for that was about eight a clock, and he was there about nine. You hear what Anſwer the Count gives to that; That he came as formerly he had done, he knowing nothing of this, nor of Mr. Thynn's Murder, and that he did not ſpeak to him concerning it.

The next thing, Gentlemen, is, 'Tis plain the Count did lie private when he came to England; and he tells you (he brings the Doctor to witneſs it;) his occaſion of Privacy was, becauſe he had a Sickneſs, which he was loth ſhould be known, having been formerly in ſplendor in England; but now, without his Equipage, he would not publickly appear; and he was afraid, if he appeared in Company, he ſhould be inticed to drink high, and that would retard his Cure. And the Doctor tells you, he was under his Hands for Cure of his Diſeaſe, which was ſome Spots upon his Body.

It is plain too, that Count Coningſmark did go away the next Morning after he had heard of the Murder, he acknowledgeth it himſelf; and that he did conceal himſelf upon the Water. and was taken in ſuch a manner as the Witneſſes ſpeak. But withal he tells you the occaſion of this was, A Stranger here, Captain Vratz, as he heard, was accuſed for the Murder, and ſeized, and he did not know what this might occaſion to him; how the common People might fall upon a Stranger that was of that Man's Acquaintance; and it was through his Fear of the People (leſt they ſhould fall upon him before he could vindicate himſelf) that he withdrew himſelf, and concealed himſelf in this manner. As it was told you by the Counſel it was an unreaſonable fear in him, for there is no ſuch diſorderly proceeding (we thank God) in England; but he tells you he was afraid of it; and if he were, being a Stranger, he might not know our Conſtitution ſo well.

But I muſt tell you another thing for Law, Gentlemen, which was urged by the Counſel for the King. Captain Vratz doth ſay, that he, knowing of an Affront that had been given to the Count, and having received an Affront himſelf, he did, without the Count's knowledge, do this Murder, for Revenge, upon Mr. Thynn. It has been ſaid by the Counſel, it will be all one whether it were with the knowledge of Count Coningſmark, or not. Now, I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, the Law is not ſo: For if a Gentleman has an Affront given him which he does ſeem to reſent, if any of his Servants officiouſly, without acquainting him with it, out of too much Zeal and too forward a Reſpect to their Maſter's Honour, will go and piſtol and kill him that they apprehend has affronted their Maſter, he not knowing of it, it will not charge their Maſter with any Guilt at all. The Law, Gentlemen, is not ſo as was urged; for if it were without the Count's knowledge and direction, if a zealous Captain has gone and over-ſhot himſelf, out of reſpect to his Maſter's Honour, when really it was a Diſhonour to himſelf, and all that were acquainted with it, this cannot lie upon him, to make Count Coningſmark guilty. But it lies upon me to direct you, for otherwiſe you might ſwallow it as a Maxim, to be all one in Law, which it is not.

So that it will return to this, Whether here be any Proof that Count Coningſmark did conſent to this Murder, or any ways countenance the killing of Mr. Thynn, or command any of theſe Perſons to do it.

Look you, Gentlemen, there are ſome ſuſpicious Speeches that are mentioned here of the Count's. One is, that the Boy ſhould ſay that the Count asked him whether Men might ride in London on Sundays? You hear what Anſwer is given to that. The Count denieth that he asked any ſuch Queſtion: And to ſhew and prove that ſuch a Queſtion could not likely be asked, he ſays and proves, by divers Perſons, that it was an ordinary thing for himſelf to ride on Sundays in Hide-Park, before this Buſineſs long.

It is alſo ſaid, that when he was taken, he ſhould ſay, That he did believe they intended the Duke of Monmouth no hurt. Now that he ſaid theſe words he doth not here deny; but he ſays he ſpoke it upon the common Report, that theſe Men had watched the Coach till they ſaw his Grace out of it, and then they did do this Villany; ſo that he apprehended they had no deſign to hurt the Duke at all. This is the anſwer he gives; how ſatisfactory it is, I leave it to you.

Then as to thoſe other Words; That it would reflect upon his Family, and ſtain his Blood; but he preſently recollected himſelf, and ſaid, One brave Action in the Wars, or Lodging upon a Counterſcarp would waſh it off. You hear what he ſays to that: He looked upon it as an Injury to his Family, and it would be ſome ſtain to his Blood, that he ſhould be accuſed of ſo baſe and unworthy an Act; but that Accuſation he thought might be waſhed off; and ſo, though he were innocent, it might be looked upon as a Stain, which a brave Behaviour in the Wars would wipe off.

Gentlemen, Thus, as near as I can, I have given you an Account of the moſt material Things that are objected againſt him, and his Anſwers to them. I muſt leave it to you, whether upon the Evidence which you have heard, you do believe that this Murder was directed or countenanced by Count Coningſmark. If it were, he then is guilty as Acceſſory before, and you muſt find it; but if you believe he did not know it till after the Murder was done, then he is innocent, and you muſt acquit him. And upon the whole, Gentlemen, I muſt leave it to you.

Then, it being late, after an Officer was ſworn to keep the Jury, the Court adjourned for a while; and in half an hour returned; and ſent for the Jury, who came in, and anſwering to their Names, gave this Verdict.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. George Borosky, alias Boratzi, hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) Look upon the Priſoner; How ſay you? Is he guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands Indicted, or not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements?

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Chriſtopher Vratz, hold up thy hand—Is he guilty, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods, &c.

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. John Stern, hold up thy hand ——. Is he guilty or, &c.

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. What Goods, &c.

Foreman. None to our knowledge.

Cl. of Cr. Charles John Coningſmark, hold up thy hand (which he did.) How ſay you, is he guilty of the Felony whereof he ſtands Indicted as Acceſſory before, or not guilty?

Foreman. Not guilty.

Count Con. God bleſs the King and the Honourable Bench.

Cl. of Cr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court hath recorded it, you ſay that George Borosky, &c. and ſo you ſay all.

Then the Jury was diſmiſſed, and the Court ordered to take a Recognizance from the Count, with three Sureties, to appear the next Seſſions and to anſwer any Appeal if brought; after which the Judges went away, and the Recorder, with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen ſtay'd to pronounce Sentence on the convicted Malefactors.

Cl. of Cr. Keeper, Set George Borosky to the Bar, hold up thy hand (which he did) Thou ſtandeſt convicted of Murder, for killing Thomas Thynn Eſq; what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why the Court ſhould not give Judgment upon thee to die according to Law?

Interpreter. He ſays, he prays God to have mercy upon him.

Cl. of Cr. Tye him up. Set Chriſtopher Vratz to the Bar ——

Interpreter. He ſays he hears he is condemned, but he was never rightly examined, nor fairly tried.

Cl. of Cr. Set John Stern to the Bar ——

Interpreter. He ſays he did it for the Captain's ſake, he went as a Second along with him.

Then the Priſoners being tyed all up by the Executioner, Proclamation was made for Silence, during the pronouncing of the Sentence.

Mr. Recorder. You the Priſoners at the Bar, George Borosky, Chriſtopher Vratz, and John Stern, you have been all Indicted for the Murder of a Gentleman of great Quality, Mr. Thynn; a great, and heinous and a crying Crime, that cries aloud for Vengeance: You have been brought to your Tryal, and tried indifferently by a Jury not conſiſting only of the Country-men of the Party ſlain, but compounded of Foreigners and Freeholders of the County too. Theſe impartial Men have found you Guilty, and indeed the Plainneſs of your Guilt is ſuch, that you your ſelves have acknowledged your ſelves Guilty. For when you were apprehended, your Guilt did ſo ſtare in your Faces, and you could give ſo little an account how you had beſtowed that time wherein he was Murdered, that you were forced to confeſs your intereſt in the Fact.

It is our Duty to pronounce the Sentence of the Law againſt you upon this Conviction; but it is alſo our uſage to open the nature of the Crime for which the convicted Perſon is to ſuffer Death, for the Conviction of the Offenders themſelves. Now your Crime is one of the deepeſt die, it is the wilful ſhedding of innocent Blood, to which you could be led by nothing but what you are charged with in the Indictment, the motion and ſeduction of the Devil. This Crime of Murder is put into the higheſt and foremoſt rank. When God himſelf had given Laws to the World under the Old Adminiſtration, after the Command of honouring Father and Mother, in the next place he forbids Murder. This Crime you have committed, and that, with the moſt aggravating Circumſtances that I have ever known attend any Crime of this nature. It was committed upon a Gentleman of great Quality, that was ſo far from giving you any Provocation to it, that you acknowledge your ſelves you never had any communication with him. It was done, upon a Day when you ought to have exerciſed, and buſied your ſelves in Acts of Piety and Religious Worſhip. It was done, in the Streets of the City near the King's Royal Palace. But the greateſt Circumſtance of all is the doing it in ſuch a manner, that is, it was done by way-laying; a ſort of killing the moſt unworthy, the moſt baſe and the moſt ungenerous of all other. For that it gives the Party aſſaulted no liberty for any Prevention, or any Defence by any prudence he can uſe; and the Conſequence of it is, as much as lies in the Malefactor, to deſtroy as well the Soul as the Body; by ſuch an inſidious Murder to take a Man out of this life before he can have any opportunity to prepare for another life. Therefore in our publick ſolemn Prayers in our Church it has very juſtly and worthily been made part of our Liturgy, to pray to be delivered from Murder and ſudden Death.

You that are Strangers in this Countrey, if you had been tried and convicted of a breach of our Municipal Laws, the peculiar Laws of this Kingdom, much Indulgence might be ſhewn to you becauſe of your little acquaintance with the Law. But that is not your Caſe: Your Offence is a tranſgreſſion againſt the Law of God, written in large Characters in the Nature of Man. It is againſt the Laws of all Nations, even your own Countrey from whence you come, and any other Countrey where-ever you could go, are ſevere in their Laws againſt that by which you have broken the Law in ſo foul a Fact. The very Barbarians could ſay, This Man is a Murtherer, and Divine Vengeance will not ſuffer him to live; ſo that they all think the Divine Vengeance concern'd to revenge it.

You have ſlain this innocent Gentleman which is but a ſingle Diſtemper as it concerns him, but if it ſhould go unpuniſhed, it would turn to a peſtilential Contagion. If ſuch Aſſaſſinations and Murders of Perſons ſhould not be ſeverely puniſhed, it were a greater Woe than ever was brought upon this Kingdom. Therefore it is thought fit by his Majeſty to make his Juſtice ſignal and exemplary upon thoſe that have thus baſely and inhumanly brought themſelves under the Cenſure of it. That when the fame of this barbarous Action ſhall go abroad, his Juſtice ſhall alſo be celebrated upon the Actors, and that this Kingdom is maintained by Juſtice.

I have but one thing more to ſay to you, and and that is in tenderneſs to you your ſelves. You are to conſider that you are to receive another Judgment than that you will be condemned by here, and that you may be prepared for that is your great and your only Care. Now it is Repentance that is the only Antidote againſt the ſting of Death. You cannot be found Innocent, your ſelves acknowledge your Guilt, then let it be your care to be found Penitent. For that purpoſe you ſhall have the aſſiſtance of ſome of our learned Divines here, and you will do well to hearken to their good Counſels. I pray God you may ſubmit to Juſtice patiently, and that your Contrition may be correſpondent to your Crime, that ſo you may obtain Pardon and everlaſting Favour from God.

It remains only that we paſs the Sentence of Law againſt you, which is this,

That you ſhall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, from thence to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be ſeverally hanged by the Neck untill you be dead: And the Lord have mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Priſoners were carried away, and the Court adjourned.

FOR that in Hillary Term, in the 30*th* and 31*th* years of this King's Reign, in the Court of King's Bench at Weſtminſter, by a Jury of the County of Middleſex were indicted, Robert Green, Gerald, Clerk, Henry Berry, Lawrence Hill, Dominick Kelly and Philbert Vernatt; for that they by the Inſtigation of the Devil, &c. The 12*th* of October in the 30*th* year of this King's Reign, at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Strand in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, in and upon Sir Edmondbury Godfrey Knight, in the Peace of God and the King then and there being, felonioufly, wilfully, and of their malice aforethought, did make an Aſſault, and kill and murther him in this manner, viz. Green did fold and faſten a Linnen Handkerchief about his Neck, and therewith choaked and ſtrangled him, of which choaking and ſtrangling he inſtantly died: And the others, viz. Gerald, Berry, Hill, Kelly and Vernatt were preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, aſſiſting and maintaining the ſaid Green to kill and murther the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey in form aforeſaid; and ſo they the ſaid Green, Gerald, Berry, Hill, Kelly, and Vernatt in manner and form aforeſaid, him the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey felonioufly, wilfully, and of their malice aforethought, did kill and murther, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity: To which indictment afterwards, the ſaid Term, the ſaid Robert Green, Henry Berry, and Lawrence Hill ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty, and put themſelves upon the Countrey; and after in the ſaid Term of St. Hillary, in the ſaid Court of King's Bench at Weſtminſter, for the Felony and Murther aforeſaid, by a Jury of their Countrey in due manner were tryed, and thereof lawfully convicted and attainted, as by the Record thereof in the ſaid Court of King's Bench at Weſtminſter remaining more fully appears; which ſaid Robert Green, Henry Berry and Lawrence Hill were afterwards executed and ſuffered Death, according to the form and effect of the Judgment and Attainder aforeſaid: And whereas one Miles Prance upon the Tryal of the Indictment aforeſaid, was produced a Witneſs and ſworn for the King, and gave material Evidence againſt the ſaid Green, Berry, and Hill to prove them guilty of the Felony and Murther aforeſaid: And one William Bedloe, John Brown, Elizabeth Curtis, Zachary Skillarne and Nicholas Cambridge upon the Tryal aforeſaid, were Witneſſes in like manner produced and ſworn for the King, and gave diverſe material evidences againſt the ſaid Green, Berry and Hill, to prove them guilty of the ſaid Felony and Murther: And whereas alſo the ſaid Gerald, Robert Green, Lawrence Hill, Dominick Kelly and Philbert Vernatt, at the time of the Felony and Murther aforeſaid were Papiſts, and Maintainers of the Romiſh Superſtitions; And the ſaid Gerald, Dominick Kelly and Philbert Vernatt have fled, and not yet appeared to the ſaid Indictment; And whereas alſo by the Coroner's Inqueſt taken upon the view of the Body of the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey lying dead, before John Cooper Gent. one of the Coroners of the ſaid County of Middleſex by the Oaths of honeſt and lawful men of the ſame County above the number of twelve perſons, it was found that certain Malefactors unknown, Felonioufly and of their malice prepenſe him the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey did ſtrangle and choak, of which he died: The ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain and John Farwel, well knowing the premiſſes, and being perſons Devilliſhly affected, deviſing, practiſing, and with all their ſtrength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of their Kingdom of England to diſturb, and as much as in them lay the due Courſe of the Law to deſtroy, and ſubvert and elude, and the Juſtice of this Kingdom of England to defame and ſcandalize, and as well the ſaid Miles Prance, William Bedloe, John Brown, Elizabeth Curtis, Zachary Skillarne, Nicholas Cambridge, as the ſaid John Cooper, and the honeſt and lawful men ſworn upon Inqueſt aforeſaid, upon view of the body aforeſaid, to bring into the greateſt hatred, contempt and vile eſteem with all the King's Subjects, and to deter the King's Subjects from finding detecting and proving the deſigns of Papiſts againſt our Lord the King and the true Religion now by Law eſtabliſhed, and impiouſly and wickedly deviſing and intending them the ſaid Gerald, Dominick Kelly, and Philbert Vernatt, from undergoing the pains and ſentences by Law upon them to be inflicted, for the murther aforeſaid, and to aid and aſſiſt them (altho' they be Guilty) to be found Not Guilty thereof; And to deceive and beguile the King's Subjects in the premiſſes with their falſe Affirmations and Arguments, and cauſe and procure that it ſhould be believed and eſteemed, that the ſaid Green, Berry, and Hill, the perſons for the Murther of the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey as aforeſaid convicted and executed, had been convicted, and executed unjuſtly, and that the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was felo de ſe, and himſelf had felonioufly murthered. They the ſaid Thompſon, Pain, and Farwel, their moſt impious wicked and diabolical intentions to fulfil and perfect afterwards, to wit the 23*th* of February, in the four and thirtieth year of the Reign of our now Sovereign Lord the King, at the pariſh of Saint Mary le Bow, London, with force and arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, and diabolically, made, compoſed, and cauſed to be printed, a certain falſe ſcandalous and defamatory Libel, Entituled a Letter to Mr. Miles Prance in relation to the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey: In which ſaid Libel amongſt other things, it is contained, as follows, And hearing that the Coroner's Jury or Inqueſt were firſt of Opinion, and accordingly declared, he was felo de ſe, and that there was much Art and Skill uſed to procure their Verdict to the contrary, more particularly the refuſing of the body at their inſtance and requeſt to be opened: And in another place of the ſame Libel, it is further contained as follows, They ſay, that if a Man or any other Creature be ſtrangled or hang'd, and his Body cold, and the blood ſettled in the Veins (as he muſt needs be, if your Evidence be true) (meaning the Evidence of

of the ſaid Miles Prance) run twenty Swords through ſuch a body, not one drop of blood will come out, but on the contrary, his body when found was full of blood, in ſo much that (over and above the Cakes or great Gobbets of congealed putrified blood found afterwards in his Cloths) the Conſtable when he pulled the ſword out of his body, it craſhed againſt his back bone, and gobbets of blood and water guſhed or gubled out of that wound in abundance, not only in that very place where the ſword was pulled out, but in all his paſſage to the White houſe; eſpecially, there where his body was lifted over two high ſtumps, and alſo when he was laid upon the Table, the blood and water ſo iſſued out of that wound, that it ran from off the Table upon the Floor, and from thence into the Cellar; ſo that they do averr, that that wound that he received by that Sword, muſt of neceſſity be the Cauſe of his Death: And in another part of the ſame Libel, it is further contained as follows, They obſerve that Bedloe's before the Committee of Lords, and your Evidence in relation to this Gentleman's Death, are as different as the Eaſt is from the Weſt; for you dogg him out of St. Clements, the other decoys him from Charing-Croſs; you ſwear he was ſtrangled with an Handkerchief near the Stables going to the Water-ſide, Bedloe that he was ſmothered with a Pillow in a Room in the great Court in Somerſet houſe; you ſay that he took Horſe at Sohoe, Bedloe ſays he took Coach at Clarendon-houſe, with many more ſuch like Contradictions; and conſidering the old Proverb, Fore-warned, fore-armed; a further and fuller accompt of the whole matter expect. And that the ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, their moſt impious, wicked and diabolical intentions to fulfil and perfect, afterwards, to wit the third day of March, in the ſaid four and thirtieth year of the Reign of the ſaid late Lord the King, at the ſaid Pariſh of St. Mary le Bow, London aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, evilly, maliciouſly, ſcandalouſly and diabolically, made, compoſed, and cauſed to be printed, another falſe, ſcandalous and defaming Libel; intituled, A ſecond Letter to Miles Prance, in reply to the Ghoſt of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey. In which laſt mentioned Libel amongſt other things, it is further contained, as follows, Next whereas my Letter ſaith (and that truly) that the Coroner's Jury were firſt of opinion, and accordingly declared he was ſelo de ſe, and that much Art and Skill was uſed to procure their Verdict to the contrary. And in another place of the ſame laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things, it is further contained, as follows; And it would be very material, if the Coroner would declare, what he received for that Job, and of whom; and what Evidence he had to induce the Jury to find (as the Inquiſition imports) that he was ſtrangled with a Linnen cloth, a Matter of fact never ſo much as ſpoken of untill you came in with your Evidence, which was not in ſome weeks after; And I do again auerr, that the Body was required by the Jury to be open'd, and was refuſed; and if the Body was in their and the Coroner's power (as the Ghoſt inſinuates) ſuch power was concealed from and denied the Jury. And in another place of the ſame laſt mentioned Libel, it is amongſt other things contained, as follows: He is to underſtand, that Mr. Brown, the two Chirurgeons, (meaning the ſaid Zachary Skillarne and Nicholas Cambridge) and Mrs. Curtis, are no competent (nor can be material) Witneſſes in this Caſe. And in another place of the ſame laſt mentioned Libel, it is further contained, as follows; But Mr. Prance, it will be fully proved, that the Body was full of Blood, and that there were Cakes or Gobbets of dry Blood found in his Cloaths, which with his Body ſtunk extreamly: And it will be alſo fully and effectually proved that his Eyes, Noſtrils, and Corners of his Mouth were Fly-blown. And in another place of the ſame laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things, it is contained as follows: And as to the ſeventh and laſt Paragraph which relates only to the difference betwixt you and Mr. Bedloe's Evidence, I muſt take notice that what you and he ſwears is very contradictory: And in another place of the ſame laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things it is further contained, as follows; But I cannot omit to take further notice of Mrs. Curtis's Affidavit, in relation to the Wax found upon the Cloaths, in which I cannot ſay, but ſhe may ſwear true; but this I do averr, that if it be ſo, thoſe drops were put upon the Cloaths long after he was found. And after the Jury had ſat on the body; for there was no ſuch thing then on the Cloaths. And, I ſuppoſe, this was ſome artifice uſed by thoſe, who either out of intereſt or deſign, were deſirous to confirm his being murthered at Somerſet-houſe. And the ſaid Attorney General for the ſame Lord the King, gives the Court here to underſtand and be informed: That the ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further proſecution aforeſaid, falſly, wickedly, and maliciouſly, their contrivances and intentions aforeſaid, afterwards to wit the 7th day of March, in the four and thirtieth year of our ſaid Lord the King, at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Bow, London, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, maliciouſly, ſcandalouſly, and deviliſhly, compoſed, made and cauſed to be printed, a certain other falſe, ſcandalous, and defamatory Libel, intituled, The Loyal Proteſtant and True Domeſtick Intelligence, or News both from City and Country. In which laſt mention'd Libel, it is contained, as follows, that there is not in the ſaid Letter, (meaning the ſaid falſe, ſcandalous, and defaming Libel,) Entituled, a Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in relation to the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, before firſt mentioned, the leaſt item or circumſtance, but what will be by undeniable Evidence made out to be the Truth: So the ſaid Mr. Prance, having not as yet vouchſafed an Anſwer to that Letter, he will ſpeedily receive a further Letter relating to that Murther, wherein the further truth will not only be fully ſet forth, and other Circumſtances ſet out: And further, that the ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further proſecuting, falſly, wickly, and maliciouſly, their contrivances and intentions aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, wickedly, maliciouſly, and deviliſhly, compoſed, and cauſed to be printed, a certain other falſe, ſcandalous, and defamatory Libel, intituled, The Loyal Proteſtant Intelligence, &c. In which laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things, it is contained, as follows: Whereas Dick Janeway in this day's Mercury, promiſes an Anſwer to the late Letter to Mr. Prance, &c. This is to give him, and all the world notice, That ſuch an Anſwer is impatiently expected by the Author of that Letter, who queſtions not but to prove every Tittle of that Letter, to the

Satis-

Satisfaction of all mankind; And beſides, he is very deſirous that the Courantier (according to his laſt Pacquet of Advice to Rome*) would go on, and uſe his Intereſt, to procure the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and Common Council of* London*, to inſpect the Truth of that Letter; whereby it will appear inevitably, that there is not one* Papiſt or Popiſhly affected perſon concerned in that Letter, or in the proof of the particulars thereof; but the ſame (with divers other material circumſtances relating to the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey*, and the* Fraud and Blind put upon the World in relation thereto) will be more fully, plainly and manifeſtly proved, without giving ill Words, or ſcurrilous Language, or Reflections to any perſons that really are, or ſuppoſed to be therein concerned in any circumſtance whatſoever. And that the ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, in their further proſecution aforeſaid, falſly, wickedly, and maliciouſly, their contrivances and intentions, after, to wit: The firſt day of April, in the four and thirtieth year of the Reign of our ſaid Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Bow, London, aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, maliciouſly, ſcandalouſly, and deviliſhly, made, compoſed, and cauſed to be printed, a certain other falſe, ſcandalous, and defamatory Libel, Intituled, The Loyal Proteſtant Intelligence, &c. In which laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things, it is contained, as follows; Laſt Wedneſday, Nathaniel Thompſon upon Summons appeared before the Lords of his Majeſties moſt honourable Privy Council, about the Letters to Mr. Miles Prance, concerning the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, where he juſtified the Matter, and produced the Authors, who are ready to prove (by undeniable and ſubſtantial Witneſſes, not in the leaſt accuſed or ſuſpected of Popery*, as the malicious Party do ſuggeſt) that every Tittle and Iota of thoſe Letters are true.* And that in another part of the laſt mentioned Libel, amongſt other things, it is contained, as follows; Mr. Thompſon and the Gentlemen his Friends are to attend the next Wedneſday at Council, where they do not doubt, but that Honourable Board will put them into a Method to prove the whole, or any particular, which their Honours in their great Wiſdom ſhall think convenient to be brought to the Teſt or Examination. And further, that the ſaid Nathaniel Thompſon, &c. the Twenty third day of February, in the aboveſaid Thirty-fourth year of our ſaid Lord the King; and divers other days and times betwixt the ſaid Twenty-third of February, and the aforeſaid Thirty-fourth year, and the day of the exhibiting of the ſaid Information at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Bow, London, aforeſaid, knowingly, and every of them knowing the ſaid ſeveral Libels to be falſe, malicious, ſcandalous and ſeditious, with Force and Arms, &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, maliciouſly, ſcandalouſly, ſeditiouſly and deviliſhly, the ſaid falſe, malicious, ſcandalous and ſeditious Libels uttered and publiſhed, and each of them uttered and publiſhed in manifeſt contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, and the Scandal and Defamation of the publick Juſtice of the ſame, to the evil Example of all others in like Caſe offending; and againſt the King's Peace, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Then Proclamation for Information being made, Mr. Thompſon acquainted my Lord and the Jury with the Effect of the Information, as follows:

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Information againſt Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, and it is for writing and printing ſeveral Scandalous Libels, about the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey: In which we ſet forth, that Green, Berry, and Hill, were indicted for the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, and thereof convicted and attainted, and that the ſaid Green, Berry, and Hill, were executed for it; that upon their Tryal for that Matter ſeveral Witneſſes were examined, namely Mr. Prance, Bedloe, and Curtis, and ſeveral others to prove, Sir Edmondbury Godfrey murthered at Somerſet-houſe; and before the Tryal there was an Inqueſt taken by the Coroner of Middleſex, by which it does appear, that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murthered by ſeveral Perſons unknown, and that the Defendants, to reflect upon the Juſtice of the Nation, and ſcandalize the Witneſſes produced at that Tryal, and to make it believed that theſe Perſons died Wrongfully, did write and print ſeveral ſcandalous Libels and Letters, one of them intituled, A Letter to Miles Prance, concerning the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, and in theſe Letters did ſuggeſt, as if he had been felo de ſe, and do reflect upon every one of the Witneſſes, as if they had contradicted themſelves, and alſo do reflect upon the Coroner, as though he had bribed the Jury, and do undertake by theſe Arguments and ſeveral others (that you will hear) to prove that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey murthered himſelf; And that in another Libel that Thompſon printed, called his Loyal, Proteſtant Intelligence, he ſays, he will make it out by a Cloud of Witneſſes: This we ſay is againſt the Peace of the King, and defaming of the Juſtice of the Nation: If we prove this Matter upon them, you are to find them Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, The Matter which you have now before you, is as impudent a thing as ever was done. Gentlemen, Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murthered, and Green and the Contrivers of it have been executed for it; the Matter hath paſſed the Examination of the Parliament, and the King and Council and all; Now this Thompſon is a Printer, I may as well ſay a Printer of Libels, for he does conſtantly print Libels againſt the Religion eſtabliſhed, and the Juſtice of the Nation; The Jury that were impannelled upon the Coroner's Inqueſt, he ſays of them, that they at firſt did agree that he murthered himſelf, and afterwards did return, and find that he was murthered by others: Gentlemen, it is plain that he was murthered by others, and the particular perſons have been tryed for it, and found guilty. Now this Perſon after all this, What does he do? He takes upon him to write a Letter to Prance, (Prance was one of the Witneſſes in that Caſe) he writes it by the name of a Letter, but it is a foul and wicked Libel; and therein ('tis too long for me to mention the particulars) he he ſcandalizes the publick Juſtice of the Nation, he undertakes to vindicate the Murderers, and to accuſe the proceedings of the Nation. But Gentlemen, we will prove theſe Men guilty of framing and publiſhing of theſe wicked Libels, and that is all that is needful to be done upon the point of Evidence. We will call our Witneſſes.

Then Mr. Clare was ſworn, and produced a Copy of the Record of the conviction and attainder of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murther of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey. As alſo a Copy of the Inquiſition, taken by the Coroner of Middleſex, upon the view of the Body of the ſaid Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, whereby it is found that he was murthered by them, ſtrangled with a Cord by perſons unknown. Both which (Mr. Clare having ſworn to be true Copies) were read.

Sir Francis Pemberton. Lord Chief Juſtice. This matter of his being thus ſtrangled, was found before it was diſcovered who did the Murther. It was upon the ſight of the body, and they ſuppoſed it to be done by a Cord, but afterwards it came to light that it was done with an Handkerchief.

Mr. Thompſ. (To the Counſel of the Defendants) If you will put us to prove all, we muſt prove that theſe men were executed.

Then Captain Richardſon was ſworn.

L. C. J. Were theſe men executed for this Murder?

Capt. Rich. Yes, I ſaw them executed.

Then Mr. Prance was ſworn.

Mr. Thompſ. Did you give Evidence upon the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, for the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey?

Mr. Prance. Yes.

Mr. Thompſ. Do you remember that Brown was a Witneſs too?

Mr. Prance. Yes, Brown was.

Mr. Thompſ. Was Curtis a Witneſs, and Mr. Bedloe?

Mr. Prance. That Curtis was, I don't remember, Mr. Bedloe was.

Then Curtis was ſworn.

Mr. Thompſ. Were you a Witneſs at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill?

Mrs. Curtis. Yes, I was.

Then Sir John Nicholas and Sir Philip Lloyd, and William Bridgman, Eſq; were ſworn, and the two Letters in the Information were ſhewed to them.

L. C. J. Were theſe ſhewed to the Defendants, Thompſon, and Pain, and Farwell, at the Council?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Theſe were the ſame, I know becauſe they are endorſed by my hand; Thompſon owned the Printing of both, and one other of the Defendants owned the writing of one of them, and the other of the other.

L. C. J. But Thompſon owned the Printing of both?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Pain and Farwell own the bringing of both to Thompſon to print?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. One owned the one, and the other the other.

Then Sir John Nicholas and Mr. Bridgman teſtified the ſame.

Mr. Saunders, of Counſel with Pain, ſaid to Sir Phil. Lloyd. Did Pain or Farwell own that they brought both, or one the one, and the other the other?

Sir Ph. Lloyd. One the one, and the other the other.

Mr. Saunders. Then pray, Sir, which was that Farwell did own?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. My Lord, my own memory does not tell me which, but here are Notes ſay that Farwell owned the firſt, and that Pain owned the ſecond.

L. C. J. Do you beleive them to be true?

Sir J. Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I took the Notes.

Mr. Yalding. Did he readily diſcover his Authors?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes, he did.

Aſſociat. The Title is thus, A Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in relation to the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey. Shall I read it all?

L. C. J. All of it.

Aſſociat. Read it in theſe words. Mr. Prance.

A Letter to Mr. Miles Prance, in Relation to the Murder of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

Mr. Prance,

PErceiving by ſome late Pamphlets ſeveral Rumors rais'd, as if there were endeavours us'd to aſperſe your Evidence in Relation to the Death of Sir E. B. G. and to lay that Murther upon Himſelf. And remembering the Conſternation, which then was in all people's minds, by the diſcovery at that time of a Dreadful and moſt Horrid Popiſh Plot, which occaſion'd divers to report, and moſt to believe (even ſeveral days before the dead Body was found) That he was Murder'd by the Papiſts at Somerſet-houſe. And hearing that the Coroner's Jury or Inqueſt were firſt of Opinion, and accordingly declar'd he was Felo de ſe; And that there was much Art and Skill us'd to procure their Verdict to the contrary; More particularly, the refuſing of the Body (at their Inſtance and Requeſt) to be opened; and oppoſing the Aſſiſtance of the Coroner of Weſtminſter, who is taken notice of to be a Knowing and Impartial Man in the Execution of his Office;) who was deſir'd to, and did attend for that purpoſe, but was diſmiſs'd with a Guinea; telling him, they had no need of his Service. I made it my buſineſs, partly for Your's, but chiefly for the Truth's ſake, to make a ſtrict Enquiry into the farther Cauſes of the aforeſaid Rumors, and do find theſe particulars very much urg'd, and diſcours'd of, (viz.)

I.

In oppoſition to the Evidence of his being dog'd up and down, and lodg'd in a great Houſe at St. Clement's on Saturday the 12*th* of October 1678. (being the Day he was firſt miſſing.) It is affirm'd he went out of his Houſe that very Saturday Morning about nine a Clock; (which is the laſt time he ever returned thither;) And about ten that Forenoon was in the Fields walking towards Marybone, (in which Pariſh his dead Corps was afterwards found,) and was there met by a Brewer in St. Giles's, who diſcourſed with him; And about eleven of the ſame day he was ſeen paſſing by the Lady Cook's Lodgings near the Cock-pit; After which, he was ſeen in St. Martin's lane, went by the Church, and down Church-lane into the Strand; About one paſſed by the door of one Mr. Ratcliff an Oyl-man in the Strand, and ſoon after was met in the back Court of Lincolns-Inn by two Gentlemen, who obſerved him to make a ſudden turn, and to go out at the back door; They went out at that door alſo, and did ſee him turn the corner Wall, between which place and Turn-ſtile, he was met by a Barriſter at Law; And that a Perſon living near Primroſe-hill, declared before divers Perſons, that he ſaw him about three that Saturday in the Afternoon walking in thoſe Fields, his uſual Walk being that way.

II.

They ſay, the place where, and the poſture wherein he was found, are very remarkable. As to the place; It was in a Ditch on the South ſide of Primroſe-hill, ſurrounded with divers Cloſes, fenced with high Mounds and Ditches, no Road near, only ſome deep dirty Lanes made only for the conveniency for driving Cows and ſuch like Cattle in and out of the Grounds; And thoſe very Lanes not coming near 500 Yards of the place, and impoſſible for any Man on Horſeback with a dead Corpſe before him at Midnight to approach, unleſs Gaps were made in the Mounds, as the Conſtable and his Aſſiſtants found by Experience when they came on Horſeback thither. As to the poſture, his Breaſt was unbuttoned, his Waſtcoat and Shirt put by, his Sword run in under his left Pap next his Skin, the Point coming out at his right Shoulder about ſix Inches, his left Arm doubled under him, (on which his Head ſeemed to lean,) and his right Arm ſtiff, ſtretch'd out upon the Bank, his Belly and Breaſt being ſupported by the ſide of the Bank, his Knees knit together, and with his Hipps a little bending or doubling under him.

And they infer from thence, that he being a tall raw-bon'd Man, (after he had been ſeveral days dead,) could never be crooked ſo as to be cram'd into a Sedan, (which are very low built, and difficult to be carried with proper Braces, much more as you evidenced, with Cords) then ſtraitened, and his Legs opened, and mounted on Horſeback, and then put into the poſture he was found in, and ſtiffened again.

III.

Now altho' the Matters aforeſaid may be ſaid to be only circumſtantial, yet they produce undeniable Arguments againſt your Evidence, viz. They ſay, that if a Man, or any other Creature, be Strangled, or Hanged, and his Body cold, and the Blood ſettled in the Veins, (as he muſt needs be, if your Evidence be true,) run twenty Swords thro' ſuch a Body, not one drop of Blood will come out: But on the contrary, his Body when found, was full of Blood, inſomuch, that (over and above the Cakes or great Gobbets of congealed putrefied Blood found afterwards in his Cloaths) the Conſtable when he pulled the Sword out of his Body, it craſhed againſt his Back-bone, and Gobbets of Blood and Water guſhed or gubbled out of that Wound in abundance, not only in that very place where the Sword was pulled out, but in all his Paſſage to the White-houſe, eſpecially there where his Body was lifted over two high Stumps; and alſo when he was laid upon the Table, the Blood and Water ſo iſſued out of that Wound, that it ran from off the Table upon the Floor, and from thence into the Cellar; So that they do aver that that Wound that he received by that Sword, muſt of neceſſity be the Cauſe of his Death. And they take notice, that ſo much of the Sword as was in his Body, was diſcoloured and blackiſh; and that part that came out at his back was of a dulliſh colour, and the Point thereof was ruſty; Alſo, that the Cloaths, Belt and Scabbard were weather-beaten to rags; his Body ſtunk extremely; his Eyes, Noſtrils, and corners of his Mouth were fly-blown; all which muſt naturally be by his being ſo long in the Air.

IV.

They ſay, That when a Man is Strangled, or Hanged, his Eyes will be extorted, his Face will be ſwelled and black; Whereas his Eyes were ſhut, his Face was pale, only the left part of his Chin, with his Breaſt and Belly being next the Earth, were putrefied, and looked of a blue and greeniſh colour, more eſpecially about the Wound; For that the Blood, when hot, running to the Wound, cauſed the greater putrefaction in that place; whereas, if the Wound had been made after he was Dead, and Cold, the reſt of his Body would have putrefied as ſoon, and as much as there.

V.

They ſay, That the cleanneſs of his Shoes makes againſt your Evidence; For his Shoes were cleaned or rather glazed on the very bottoms of the Soles, occaſioned by his walking in the Graſs, and Graſs-ſeeds were obſerved to ſtick in the Seams of his Shoes; And beſides, there was not one ſpeck of Dirt on his Cloaths, or Legs, not ſo much as a Horſe-hair ſticking thereon; Whereas the Conſtable, and thoſe that went with him, were dirty'd and moil'd up to the very Saddle-skirts, and not eaſily to be cleaned; And Mr. Prance, you know that a tall Dead Man on Horſe-back, cannot lift up his Legs to ſave them from the Dirt.

VI.

As to the looſeneſs of his Neck, and the Rim or green Circle about it, they ſay they are ridiculous and impertinent Arguments againſt ſo many Demonſtrative ones; eſpecially, when there is not a Nurſe, or any Woman of Age, that hath hath buried any Relations, but will tell you it's very common for People to die with Necks as looſe as his was. And the Rim about his Neck was ſo far from being like one made with a Cravat or Handkerchief, that it ſeems to be occaſioned by the great height and ſtiffneſs of his Collar, which was faſt buttoned about his Neck, and on which his Head reſted, and was unbuttoned about ten of the Clock the next day, before the Coroner or Jury came. But if that Rim, or thoſe Bruiſes, that your Evidence ſeems to make the Cauſe of his Death, were really ſo; Then they alledge, that in ſuch caſe, the whole Maſs of Blood would have ſettled there, and his Neck and Bruiſes would have ſwelled, and have been perfect black, which was not in His Caſe.

VII.

They alſo ſay, That all theſe Matters are Notorious, and will be proved by divers credible and undeniable Eye and Ear-witneſſes; And beſides, They obſerve, That Bedloe's (before the Committee of Lords,) and your Evidence in relation to this Gentleman's Death, are as different as the Eaſt is from the Weſt; For you dogg him out of St. Clement's; the other decoys him from Charing-croſs: You ſwear he was Strangled with a Handkerchief near the Stables going to the Water-ſide; Bedloe, that he was Smothered with a Pillow in a Room in the great Court in Somerſet-houſe. You ſay he took Horſe at Soboe; Bedloe ſays he took Coach at Clarendon houſe, with many more ſuch like Contradictions; And conſidering the Old Proverb, Fore-warn'd, fore-arm'd. A further and fuller Account of the whole matter expect, I being loth at preſent to exceed the Bounds of a Letter, I am,

SIR,

Cambridge Feb. 23. 1681. Your very Loving Friend,

TRUEMAN.

London, Printed for M. G. at the Sign of Sir E. B. G's Head near Fleet-bridge.

Sir Francis Winnington. Now read the other Letter.

Aſſociat. This is intitled a ſecond Letter to Mr. Miles Prance in reply to the Ghoſt of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

Mr. Prance,

SInce my Laſt to you of the 23*d* paſt, I have ſeen a prolix, railing, and impertinent Pamphlet, intitled, Sir E. B. G*'s Ghoſt*, and pretended to be an Anſwer to my ſaid Letter. And conceiving you are better acquainted with Ghoſts than my ſelf, I thought fit to direct my Anſwer to that Ghoſt to you, and thereby ſhew the Ridiculouſneſs thereof, as alſo vindicate the Truths contained in my ſaid former Letter, and ſhew you and the World further Circumſtances to juſtify the ſame; and therefore, according to the method of my former Letter, I ſhall proceed by theſe Heads.

And firſt, Not underſtanding what the Ghoſt means, by arraigning the Juſtice of the Nation, unleſs he would aſſert that all that are legally, (are likewiſe juſtly hanged;) and ſo conſequently, that the Mother and her two Sons were juſtly hanged in Gloceſterſhire, for the Murder of the Lady Viſcounteſs Campden's Steward, tho' he afterwards appeared alive; And I do not find that ever his appearance arraign'd the Juſtice of the Nation. And remitting the Conſideration of Mr. Brown's, the Surgeons, and Mrs. Curtis's Evidence in relation to the Blood, to its proper place; and affirming (as the truth is,) that Mrs. Celliers, Mrs. Mary Gibbon, the Newgate Prieſts, James Magragh, and all other Iriſh men, or Iriſh Evidences, or other Papiſt or Papiſts, or Popiſhly affected Perſons whatſoever; as alſo thoſe concerned in the late Sham of his having hang'd himſelf, are ſtrangers to, and had not the leaſt knowledge or intimation of the Contents of my ſaid former Letter, nor any way concerned therein, or in or with any part thereof; (as the ſaid Ghoſt moſt falſly and maliciouſly inſinuates.) I take notice that the ſaid Ghoſt ſeems to admit ſo much of the Truth of the ſaid Letter, as that it was reported divers days before the dead Body was found, that he was murdered in Somerſet-houſe by the Papiſts, and which Report was made even the next Morning after he was miſſing, (being Sunday the 13th of October 1678.) Now I would fain have this Ghoſt to inform the World who firſt raiſed that Report: But as to Mr. Dugdale's Letter of it. I cannot give it any better Anſwer, than that as his Evidence hath ſince been disbelieved in Matters of greater Conſequence; ſo he not producing any ſuch Letter, you muſt give me leave alſo to ſuſpect him in this. But as to the other Evidences of Mr. Birch and the reſt: Theirs I believe to be very true; for it's no Miracle that a Report ſo cunningly raiſed, (without any ground) might as induſtriouſly be promulged to moſt Parts of the Kingdom before the reſpective Days they ſpeak of, eſpecially when the Plot had filled all Men's Heads with Fears and Jealouſies, without which it had not been in the Power or Art of the Ghoſt, or any of his Tribe, to have ſuggeſted the leaſt Surmiſe to contradict his being Felo de ſe.

Next, whereas my Letter ſaith, (and that truly) that the Coroner's Jury were firſt of opinion, and accordingly declared, he was Felo de ſe, and that much Art and Skill was uſed to procure their Verdict to the contrary. This Ghoſt, inſtead of contradicting that Truth, would inſinuate, as if that Letter reflected upon the Reputation of the Jurors, when as there was no ſuch thing employed or intended, they being known to be honeſt Men, of good Reputation, and free from Fraud or Guile, and conſequently the eaſier to be over-reached by the Cunning of thoſe and that Party, whoſe Intereſt it was to deceive them, and who never leave any Stone unturn'd to attain their Deſigns. And I cannot but obſerve how skilful and induſtrious theſe People ſtill are, to hide and prevent the Truth of that Man's Death from clearly appearing and ſhining forth, as without doubt it would, and muſt do, was not the Matter now (as formerly) puzzled with Legends, and long Stories, nothing to the purpoſe. And as to the Coroner's Warrant for burying the Body, and recited in the Ghoſt, it's notorious they are common Tricks, uſed by Men of his Profeſſion, who (if any Money is like to come) will uſually adjourn the Jury, and then make ſuch Warrants (they knowing, that if the Verdict be Felo de ſe, it's then out of their power to give leave to bury the Corps.) And it would be very material, if the Coroner would declare what he received for that Jobb, and of whom, and what Evidence he had to induce the Jury to find (as the Inquiſition imports) that he was ſtrangled with a Linnen Cloth, a Matter of Fact never ſo much as ſpoken of, until you came in with your Evidence, which was not in ſome Weeks after. And I do again aver, That the Body was required by the Jurors to be opened, and was refuſed; and if the Body was in their and the Coroner's Power, (as the Ghoſt inſinuates) ſuch Power was concealed from, and denied the Jury. And it's very probable the Coroner of Weſtminſter's Aſſiſtance was refuſed, for ſome ſuch indirect Doings, for that there was not the leaſt difference betwixt the Coroners in relation to their Juriſdictions; and the Weſtminſter Coroner came not voluntarily of himſelf, but was importuned to be there by Mr. Wigg, and divers others of the chief Inhabitants of St. Martin's Pariſh. And particularly, the Reverend Dr. Lloyd (who Preached the Funeral Sermon) ſpoke to the Coroner of Weſtminſter before he went, ſo that it had been proper to have given the Matters mentioned in that Sermon in Evidence before the Jury. And it's obſervable, the Perſon mentioned to give the Information to the Doctor of the two Wounds in the Body, and that two Hours before it was found, was never produced; For if he had, and that Sir E. B. G. had been murdered, ſuch Perſon might have been ſecured, and thereby the Murderers detected. But I ſuppoſe the Ghoſt will not pretend either that Sermon, or the Pamphlet printed by Nath. Thompſon to be legal, or (indeed) any Evidence at all.

And now, Mr. Prance, being come to the ſeveral Paragraphs of my Letter, I ſhall take them in order as they are placed, and give the Ghoſt particular Anſwers accordingly.

I.

As to Sir E. B. G's Perambulations therein mentioned to be on the Saturday he was firſt miſſing, they are true in every particular, and will be proved by divers able, credible and undeniable Witneſſes. And how vain it is for the Ghoſt to ask, Why theſe Witneſſes did not come in ſooner at the Tryal of Green, Berry, and Hill, do you judge, when all the World remembers the great Torrent that carried all before it in favour of the Plot, and the Murder of Sir E. B. G. by the Papiſts, without which (as T. O. was heard to ſay) his Plot had failed; And when it is duly conſidered, that the two Perſons that firſt found the Body, (for no other cauſe) ſuffered much in their Perſons and Eſtates, by a long and chargeable Impriſonment. And all others that then ſeem'd to doubt of the truth of that Man's being murdered by the Papiſts, were ſtigmatized with the odious Names of Papiſts, and Encouragers (if not Promoters) of the Plot: It will appear no wonder, if People were unwilling to diſcover their Knowledges, or to come voluntarily (without proceſs) to give their Evidence. And how can it be imagined thoſe three unfortunate Men, being kept cloſe Priſoners, could make enquiry after proper Evidences, or (againſt the common Vogue) draw into ſuſpicion the Aſſertion of his being murdered by the Papiſts?

II.

The Ghoſt hath ſo much ingenuity to grant the ſecond Paragraph of my Letter, as to the place and poſture he was found in, but would avoid the inacceſſableneſs of the place, pretending a Lane near, when as that Lane is, in effect, unpaſſable with two on a Horſe, and comes not within 500 Yards of the place, and the Mounds thither very high, and the Conſtable and his Aſſiſtants (tho' they lived in the Pariſh, and well knew the way) were forced to break a Gap in the Mounds, tho' they were ſingly hors'd. And whereas the Ghoſt alledges, That you do not depoſe he was carried to the place wholly on Horſeback, he hath run himſelf into a worſe Dilemma, having made no proviſion of Men (either as to ſtrength or number) to carry ſo great and weighty a Corps, in the dead of the Night, over ſuch Mounds and Fences; but let all inquiſitive People deſirous of Truth, take the pains but to go to the Place (and that without any Burden on their backs) they will ſoon be convinced of the Aſſertion of the difficulty (if not impoſſibility) of the bringing a dead Corps thither, either on Foot or on Horſeback. And the Pretenſions of the Ghoſt's, as to the limberneſs of the Body and Joynts, does not anſwer that Part of my Letter which relates to the impoſſibility of his being put into a Sedan. For his Body, when found was ſtiff; ſo that what limberneſs happened or appeared afterwards, hath no relation to the Queſtion. For it's a certain Maxim, a dead limber Body cannot be ſtiffened. And pray, Mr. Prance, give us an account what became of the Sedan, and the Cords? And how you could carry it with Cords; for the meaneſt Sedan-man in Town will tell you it is impracticable, or rather impoſſible; And you may, if you pleaſe make an experiment with a Cord.

III.

As to the Body being full of Blood, when found; the Ghoſt endeavours to diſprove that Aſſertion, by the Evidence of Mr. Brown the Conſtable, the two Surgeons and Mrs. Curtis, and produceth the Evidence given at the Tryal of Green, Berry, and Hill, and an extrajudicial Affidavit ſince made by Mr. Brown, and another by Mrs. Curtis, to countenance ſuch his Denial. But, Mr. Prance, (when you ſee the Ghoſt) tell him the matter of the Blood will (and I aſſure you and all the World, it will) be proved by divers credible and undeniable Evidence; And that I may pacify the Ghoſt in the mean time, he is to underſtand that Mr. Brown, the two Surgeons, and Mrs. Curtis, are no competent (nor can be material) Witneſſes in this caſe. For Mr. Brown, as he did a raſh and unaccountable Act (to give it no worſe Name) in removing the Body before the Coroner and Jury ſaw it, (which hath occaſion'd all this Diſpute,) ſo he muſt not think to help himſelf by Affidavits, or to juſtify one ill Act by another; And beſides, as he unadviſedly (and contrary to all Law and Practice) removed the Body before the Coroner and Jury came; ſo he did the ſame in the the dark, (about eight a Clock at Night) when the Candle was blown out; whereby it was impoſſible for him to look for any Blood, ſo as to find it: And neither he or the Surgeons (by any Day-light) ſaw the Place where the Body was found, or where the Sword was pulled out, until after 10 a Clock the next Day; before which time much of the Blood was taken up, and the reſt trampled out of ſight by the great Concourſe of the People which came thither. And as for Mrs. Curtis, ſhe only ſaw the Body after it was brought home, when as the Body was ſtrip'd at the White houſe, and a Blanket borrowed there to wrap the Body in. So the World may judge of the Truth of her Affidavit. But (Mr. Prance) it will be fully proved, that the Body was full of Blood; and that there were Cakes or Gobbets of dry Blood found in his Cloaths, which (with his Body) ſtunk extremely. And it will be alſo fully and effectually proved, that his Eyes, Noſtrils, and corners of his Mouth were Fly-blown; tho' the Ghoſt (without the leaſt colour of Reaſon) pretends it to be contrary to Nature and Reaſon; when as common Experience daily evinces the contrary. And I do obſerve, that the Ghoſt omits to take notice of two material Circumſtances in this 3d Paragraph, (viz.) The firſt as to the Sword's craſhing againſt the Back bone: The ſecond, as to that part of the Sword which was in his Body being diſcoloured. And pray, Mr. Prance, do You (or the Ghoſt) give the Reaſons thereof, and of its point being ruſty; as alſo, what was, or could be the Cauſe of the ſpots in the Shirt, Waſtcoat and Drawers of greeniſh Colour, mentioned in Mrs. Curtis's Affidavit.

IV.

As to the 4th Paragraph of my Letter, I perceive the Ghoſt admits, that when a Man is ſtrangled or hanged, his Eyes will be extorted; and admits that Sir E. B. Godfrey's Eyes (when found) were ſhut; only he ſeems to quarrel with the colour of his Face: And, ſeeing he admits his Face not black (as all hanged Mens are, when cold) I care not to conteſt, whether his Face was pale or ruddy, or a little ſwell'd, or not, thoſe being very inconſiderable Circumſtances. But his denying the Putrefaction charged in that Paragraph, and the Conſequences deduced from thence, is not only a great untruth, but is directly oppoſite to the Evidence given by Mr. Skillarne, at the Tryal before mentioned. Page 37, 38.

V.

As to the 5th Paragraph, the Ghoſt is ſo far from anſwering the Aſſertions therein, as that he only quibbles at Words; and begging the Queſtion, deduces thence impertinent and ridiculous Arguments. For it will be proved, that his Shoes were glazed at the bottom of the Soles, and which muſt of neceſſity be occaſioned by his walking on the Graſs. And (Mr. Prance) if you and the Ghoſt will walk thither, you will eaſily experience it, and ſo may any body elſe ſatisfy himſelf in this Speculation: As alſo, as to the Graſs-ſeeds that ſtuck in the ſeams of his Shoes; which is ſo far from being impoſſible at that time of the Year, (as the Ghoſt would argue) as that it will be proved by undeniable Evidence. But (Mr. Prance,) pray ask the Ghoſt how he came there without a ſpeck of Dirt; and who pick'd the Horſe-hairs off his Cloaths; and let him contrive (if he can) a probable or rational way for a dead Man on Horſe-back, to hold up his Legs, or to ſave them or his Cloaths from the Dirt: For though a Man may walk thither very clean, yet it's impoſſible at that time of the Year to ride, either without being dirtied, and and ſome Horſe hairs ſticking on his Cloaths: But perhaps the next Account from the Ghoſt will be, that he either rid with Gambadoes, or elſe a pair of Fiſhermens Boots.

VI.

As to the 6th Paragraph, Pray, Mr. Prance, tell the Ghoſt, his railing againſt Popiſh Nurſes, and Popiſh Midwives, is no Anſwer to the Aſſertions in that Paragraph; for all the Women in the Town are competent Judges thereof, and I hope the Ghoſt will not ſay they are all Papiſts. But pray tell the Ghoſt he takes no Notice of the height of the Collar, and its being faſt button'd about his Neck when found. Nor the concluſion of that Paragraph; and therefore I ſuppoſe he admits it to be all true.

VII.

And as to the 7th and laſt Paragraph, which relates only to the Difference betwixt Yours and Mr. Bedloe's Evidence; I muſt take Notice, that what you and he ſwear, are very contradictory, and much more than I hinted in my ſaid Letter: And though part of it be as he and you were informed; yet you and he ſwear the Informations were received from the Perſons actually concerned in the Murder, and who had confidence enough in Mr. Bedloe (though he refuſed 4000 l. to help to kill him, and 2000 l. to help to carry him away,) as to ſhew him the dead Body, and ſo were under no Temptation of miſ-informing either him or your ſelf. And pray, Mr. Prance, will you let the World know what Reward you were to have for that Job; for certainly you deſerved as much as Mr. Bedloe, and needed more, you having a Wife and Children, and he a Batchelor?

Thus, Mr. Prance, having gone through each Paragraph of my Letter, and anſwered the Ghoſt to your Satisfaction; I ſhould leave here, fearing I have been too tedious already: But I cannot omit to take further Notice of Mrs Curtis's Affidavit, in relation to the drops of Wax found upon the Cloaths, in which I cannot ſay but ſhe may ſwear true; but this I do aver, that if it be ſo, thoſe drops were put upon the Cloaths long after he was found, and after the Jury had ſat on the Body; for there was no ſuch thing then on the Cloaths: And I ſuppoſe this was ſome Artifice uſed by thoſe, who either out of Intereſt or Deſign, were deſirous to confirm his being murdered at Somerſet-houſe, and to carry on the great Lie, and impertinent Story then invented, and given out (amongſt other) that he was laid under the High-Altar there; and if my Information fail not, there were other ſuch like Tricks uſed, which I ſhall make bold to acquaint thoſe more nearly concerned therein, than your ſelf; and ſhall give them to underſtand, that it's no wonder a Man in Sir E. B. G's Circumſtances, ſhould kill himſelf, ſuch accidents being no News to that Family, wherein Melancholy and Diſtraction ſtraction (that often produces ſuch Effects) hath been predominant, and might occaſion the Words he ſpake to Sir Tho. Robinſon, as to his being the firſt Martyr.

And now, Mr. Prance, for a Concluſion, If you were guilty of the murder of Sir E. B. G. how durſt you (as you did) on the Fryday after he was found, go to Primroſe-Hill to ſee the Body, and not be afraid it ſhould at your approach have bled afreſh? And how came you (after Green, Bury and Hill were hanged) to declare in anſwer to a ſolemn Queſtion, that you knew nothing of the death of Sir E. B. G? Pray remember me to your old Friend and Lodger Mr. Renn, my reſpects alſo to your Wife, not forgetting your little Daughter, who gave you ſo good Advice before you took your Journey into Nottinghamſhire, and help'd to take Beddingfield, who was bury'd 14 Months.

I am,

Cambridge, March 13. 1681. Your Loving Friend,

TRUEMAN.

London, Printed for N. Thompſon. 1682.

Then the Aſſociate read out of a Paper, Intituled, The Loyal Proteſtant Intelligence, &c. Number 125. Tueſday, March 7. 1681. the following Paragraph.

March 4. 1682. WHereas the Mayor of Gotham, in his pretended True Proteſtant Mercury of Saturday laſt, ſeems mightily offended with a Letter therein mentioned to be ſent to Mr. Prance, concerning the murder of Sir E. B. Godfrey; and endeavours to avoid the Examination of the Truth of the Matter of Fact contained in that Letter, by his old way of railing and ſtigmatizing all honeſt Church of England Men with the Name of Papiſt, or Popiſhly affected: He, and his Whiggiſh Tribe, are hereby deſired to take Notice, That there is not in the ſaid Letter the leaſt Item or Circumſtance, but what will be by undeniable Evidence made out to be the Truth. So, the ſaid Mr. Prance having not as yet vouchſafed an Anſwer to that Letter, he will ſpeedily receive a further Letter relating to that Murder; wherein the further Truth will not only be fully ſet forth, and other Circumſtances ſet out; but alſo it will thereby plainly appear, that the Reputation of that dead Knight is ſo far from being therein murdered, or the Juſtice of the Nation from being queſtioned; as that it will concern Mr. Prance, Mr. M. G. and all Parties on that ſide, to lay their Heads together more effectually than they did on Wedneſday Morning laſt: For Truth ſeeks no Corners; and, were it not for a vitious and unſanctified Generation of Vipers, need not require an Advocate. For, though a Lie may prevail for a time, and eclipſe the Truth, yet at length Truth will ſhine forth, with the aſſiſtance of that God, who is the Author of Truth it ſelf.

Then a Paragraph out of another of the like Intelligences, was read. The Intelligence was Number 127. Saturday, March 11. 1681.

March 9. 1682. WHereas Dick Janeway, in this day's Mercury, promiſes an Anſwer to the late Letter to Mr. Prance, &c. This is to give him, and all the World Notice, That ſuch an Anſwer is impatiently expected by the Author of that Letter, who queſtions not, but to prove every tittle of that Letter, to the Satisfaction of all Mankind: And beſides, he is very deſirous that the Courantier (according to his laſt Pacquet of Advice from Rome) would go on, and uſe his Intereſt to procure the Lord Mayor, Court of Aldermen, and Common-Council of London, to inſpect the Truth of that Letter; whereby it will appear inevitably, that there is not one Papiſt, or Popiſhly affected Perſon concerned in that Letter, or in the Proof of the Particulars thereof; but the ſame (with divers other material Circumſtances relating to the Murder of Sir E. B. Godfrey, and the Fraud and Blind put upon the World in relation thereto) will be more fully, plainly, and manifeſtly proved, without giving ill Words, or ſcurrilous Language, or Reflections to any Perſons that really are, or ſuppoſed to be therein concerned, in any Circumſtance whatſoever.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. You ſee what they have done; they ſay, What was teſtified againſt the Murderers of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, they ſay was a Lie. They go over all the Evidence given againſt theſe Fellows, and undertake, by undeniable Witneſſes to prove the contrary.

L. C. J. To the Defendant's Counſel, What ſay you to it?

Mr. Saunders. I am of Counſel for Pain, my Lord, the Charge againſt Pain is, That he ſhould own, that he did bring one of theſe Letters to be Printed; I have forgot whether Sir Philip Lloyd ſaid the Firſt or the Second.

L. C. J. The Second he ſays.

Mr. Saunders. If Pain did own it, I think he did more ingenuouſly, than when he did make it, or bring it to the Preſs: But, my Lord, it was a raſh unadviſed Act; but not out of any Malice: My Lord, we will prove that Pain was not a Papiſt, nor any of his Family. My Lord, this cannot juſtify or excuſe them, it will only extenuate their Fault. We will call ſome Witneſſes.

L. C. J. I will hear any thing in this Caſe, be as large as you will, you ſhan't ſay you are ſtinted; for it is a Buſineſs of mighty Concern.

Mr. Gooding. I am of Counſel, my Lord, for Pain: My Lord, We have made Application to Perſons to intercede for us; we are ſorry for what we have done, and have offered to give any Satisfaction.

L. C. J. To me he ſaid, he would make it out by Five Hundred Witneſſes: They would make it as plain as the Day.

Mr. Thompſon. Since the laſt time that was appointed for the Tryal, they have Printed, That they would prove it by Threeſcore Witneſſes; and were very ſorry it did not come on.

Mr. Yalden. I am of Counſel, my Lord, for Thompſon, who, I think, was unfortunately drawn into the Buſineſs; and that by Pain and Farwell, though they turn all upon him now. It was a great piece of Ingenuity for him to diſcover his Authors; and it had been very Miſchievous if they had not been diſcovered.

L. C. J. What ſay you to the two Proteſtant Intelligences?

Mr. Yalden. They are as much the Author of them, as of the other. Thompſon ſays, the Authors would be able to prove it by undeniable Witneſſes:

Witneſſes: Thompſon's Intelligence is open to any Man that will put any thing into it, and he is paid for his Pains.

Mr. Osborne. I am of Counſel for Farwell, my Lord, It was a Fooliſh thing to do as we have done: But that is no Satisfaction, my Client ſays he hath ſeveral Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Call them, they ſhall be heard.

Mr. Farwell. I begin with Hazard, my Lord, he and I went to the Place.

Then Hazard was ſworn.

Mr. Hazard. I went along with Mr. Farwell. He was at the Rainbow-Coffee-Houſe, it was in the Morning, and he deſired me to go to the Place where Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was found.

L. C. J. What Day was it?

Mr. Hazard. I can't tell, I went along with him, and ſtay'd as long as he did. I ſaw Sir Edmondbury Godfrey lying upon the Table, his Shoes were clean as if he had been on an Haymow, and his Eyes were cloſed.

L. C. J. Where was he?

Mr. Hazard. Upon a Table in the White-Houſe. There were Gobbets of Blood (that I will aver, my Lord) by the Ditch-ſide, and likewiſe at a Place where there were two or three things to go over, there was more Blood; I can't tell how he was carried, or how he came there, but I ſaw him at the White-houſe.

Mr. Williams. Who went along with you, beſides Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Hazard. No body.

Mr. Williams. Did he bring you to the Place where the Body lay?

Mr. Hazard Yes.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. What did Farwell tell you when he deſired you to go with him?

Mr. Hazard. Why, Word was brought by one Hancock a Wood-Monger, to the Coffee-houſe, ſome would not believe him, but ſent a Porter to Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Houſe, and then when the Porter came, and ſaid the Body was found, and carried to a White-houſe on Primroſe-hill, he ſpake to me to go and ſee the Body, and I fetched my Coat, and was there quickly.

Mr. Williams. When you came near the Ditch, did Farwell ſhew you the Place?

Mr. Hazard. He and others that were there.

Mr. Williams. I ask you this, Did any body ſhew you the Place where the Body lay, beſides Farwell?

Mr. Hazard. No.

Mr. Osborne. Did he go to the Place directly, or about over Ditches?

Mr. Hazard. Truly, I know the way to Primroſe-hill as well as he. We went as direct a Way as we could.

L. C. J. The ſtraighteſt way to the Place?

Mr. Hazard. Yes: We went over ſeveral Ditches.

Sir Fr. Winn. As you were going over ſeveral Ditches, there was no body with you, but Farwell, was there?

Mr. Hazard. No.

Mr. Williams. Did you enquire of any body as you went along?

Mr. Hazard. I can't remember ſuch a ſmall Circumſtance.

Then William Batſon was ſworn.

Mr. Osborne. What do you know about the Blood that was in the Ditch where Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was found?

Mr. Batſon. The Morning after the Murder was diſcovered, and that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was found in the Fields, I went with two or three Neighbours, and went to the White-houſe, and I ſaw him lye upon the Table in the White-houſe, and coming back again, they ſhew'd me in a Ditch where they ſaid he lay, ſome Blood, I cannot ſay it was his Blood; and going a little farther, I ſaw ſome more whitiſh Blood, and this is all I can ſwear.

L. C. J. Was it frofty Weather?

Mr. Batſon. My Lord, I can't tell whether it was, but I'll aſſure you the Blood looked to me more like Blood that was laid there, than any thing elſe.

One Fiſher was ſworn.

Mr. Farwell. Was you there when Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was ſtripped?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, I ſtripped him of his Cloaths, pulled off his Hoſe and Shoes, I was Carpenter to my Lord Wooton, and I was ſent for in October, a Day or two before, and I came to get the Houſe covered up, and to take Order with my Partner: And as I went, there was a Report that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was found and laid up in the White-houſe, and when I came, the Coroner and the Jury were there, and I got into the Room where Sir Edmondbury Godfrey lay upon the Table and took his Hat off; and I ſaw two Wounds within an Inch and a half one of another, one went no further than his Bone, and the other went through his Back. And, my Lord, immediately there was an Order come down from the Coroner, to get him ſtripp'd. They ask'd me if I would give an Hand, I told them yes. I pull'd off his Shoes, and they were clean, and I pulled off three pair of Stockings and a pair of Socks, his black Breeches and his Drawers, and they came off very well; there was a Man in the Company that deſired to help, ſo I got upon the Table, and ſet him upright with his Breech upon the Table, and his Feet hanging down; we unbutton'd his Coat, and pull'd it off, I came to his Flannel-Shirt, and when I came to his Back, there was Blood. But I did not ſee any Blood till I came to his Back-part. About his Throat there was ſomething that had girt him.

L. C. J. He looked as if he were ſtrangled, did he?

Mr. Fiſher. Yes, and his Neck was ſo weak that you might turn it any where.

L. C. J. To the Defendant Farwell.

How do you pretend he murdered himſelf? That he ran himſelf through?

Mr. Farwell. I make no Inference, my Lord. But I would only prove that what I write is true, I writ only the firſt Letter; and there are three Heads I am charged with, upon that Letter, and that about the Blood is one. My Lord, I was concerned they ſhould pretend there was no Blood at all, when I came there, there was near my Hat full of Blood.

L. C. J. Can you tell who laid it there?

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, If you will hear two Witneſſes more, I will ſatisfy your Lordſhip who laid it there. My Lord, this Man was one of them that helped to remove the Body out of the Ditch.

Another Witneſs, John Rawſon, called by Mr. Farwell, and ſworn.

Rawſon. My Lord, I was there taking him up, we fetched the Conſtable, and pulled him out of the Ditch, and when we had done, we pulled the Sword out, and removed him to the Houſe, and and there was Blood upon ſome Poſts (explaining himſelf to me, on a couple of Stumps to go over upon) and going into the Door, his Back did ſweep a little againſt the ſide, and there was ſome Water and Blood lighted there, and likewiſe lay upon the Table where he lay, and upon the Floor.

Mr. Farwell. Did the Blood of his Body fall upon the Floor, and go through the Floor into the Cellar?

Mr. Rawſon. Some drops were there, I won't ſwear whether it were Blood or no, my Lord.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I deſire the ſame Queſtion may be put to Mrs. Rawſon.

Mrs. Rawſon ſworn.

Mrs. Rawſon. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I have not a word to ſay, but there was Blood and Water ran through the Table, that is all I can ſay.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, as to the difference between Mr. Prance's Evidence and Mr. Bedloe's, I deſire I may prove the Difference between them.

L. C. J. You ſhall make any Proof you will.

John Stanley, called by Mr Farwell, and ſworn.

Mr. Farwell. I call him to prove the Copies of the Journals of the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. What would you infer from the Journals.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, they charge me that I ſhould ſay there is a great deal of difference between the Evidence Mr. Bedloe gave in the Houſe of Lords, and the Evidence that Prance gave at the Tryal of Green, Berry and Hill.

L. C. J. Would you prove any Evidence given by Bedloe out of the Journals?

Mr. Farwell. I can prove he gave that Evidence before the Houſe of Lords.

But Mr. Farwell afterwards went off from that Proof, and called Mr. Hobbs, Mr. White, Mr. Chaſe the Father, and Mr. Chaſe the Son, and Mr. Lazinby, who were ſworn.

Mr. Farwell. I ask Mr. Chaſe, what he obſerv'd about Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

Mr. Chaſe the Son. My Lord, on Fryday Morning, the Day after the Body was found, I went to Primroſe-hill, in Company with my Father, to ſee the Body which they ſaid was found, I came into the Field where the Company in the Field ſaid the Body had been laid, the Body had been then carried into the Houſe, I looked into the Ditch where they ſaid the Body was laid, I could not ſee Blood in the Ditch, but four or five Yards aſide off the Ditch, there ſeem'd ſome Blood to me, which the Conſtable ſaid, followed the Sword when it was pulled out of the Body; I ſaw the Body in the Houſe, and ſaw the two Wounds; he had a great Contuſion on the left Ear, and his whole Face was very much bruiſed.

L. C. J. Do you believe there was any Violence offered to him?

Mr. Chaſe. My Lord, I believe he was ſtrangled, for I don't believe thoſe Injuries that were offered about him, could be after he was dead.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Hobbs?

Farwell. I deſire he may be asked, Whether he did not propoſe to Mr. Godfrey, that the Body might be opened, that any Doubt may be lay'd aſide, concerning his being Murdered in that Place?

Mr. Hobbs. My Lord?

L. C. J. Had you any doubt, whether he was Murdered or not?

Mr. Hobbs. Indeed, my Lord, I thought he was ſtrangled, that was my Opinion, I can't tell whether I was miſtaken. I ſaid to Dr. Goodall it would be very well if Mr. Godfrey would ſend for a Surgeon and a Phyſician from the Court, and others from the City, to ſatisfy all Perſons.

Mr. Farwell. What Colour was his Face?

Mr. Hobbs. My Lord, it was bloted.

L. C. J. Did it look as if Violence had been uſed to him?

Mr. Hobbs. Ay, my Lord; and the bloody Veſſels of his Eyes were ſo full, as if he had been troubled with ſore Eyes.

Mr. Farwell. Did you obſerve any Fly-blows in his Face?

Mr. Hobbs. No, my Lord, not that I know of.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Chaſe?

Mr. Chaſe. My Lord, on Fryday when I came to ſee the body at the White houſe I found a great Contuſion, and two wounds, one yielded towards the right; the other went into the body. I troubled my ſelf no more at that time, but the next day I was deſired by Dr. Lloyd that I would go to his Houſe and ſee the body again, and there I found a ſwelling upon the left Ear, as if a knot had been tyed, there I found him beaten from this place to this (pointing to the Neck and Stomach) I never ſaw any man beaten ſo in my life. Before this buſineſs was broached, Mr. Farwell did take me aſide at Man's Coffee-Houſe, and did tell me what proof he could make of this buſineſs, I told him, Mr. Farwell I love you well, don't meddle with the buſineſs, for I know it is impoſſible any thing can be ſaid againſt it that hath the face of truth. I did ſo a ſecond time (my Lord) when the book came out, I found one before I went to New-Market, and the other at New-Market; I was very much troubled to ſee them. The Night before Eaſter, the Eve of Eaſter-day, I met with Mr. Farwell at an Houſe where I had been with a good friend of his and mine, and Farwell came and asked for me, and he came up to the Room as they called for another Bottle of Wine, I told them it was needleſs, only ſince Mr. Farwell is come up, ſaid I, I will drink one glaſs with you. And he told me then, that 6 Months before I had given him good Counſel if he had taken it.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I deſire Mr. Smith to be called.

L. C. J. Let him. But he came not then.

Mr. Brown is called by Mr. Farwell, and ſworn.

Mr. Farwell. I deſire Mr. Brown may be asked whether his Eyes were not fly-blown?

L. C. J. 'Tis propos'd to you by Mr. Farwell, whether the Eyes of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey were not fly-blown?

Mr. Brown. No, my Lord, I did not ſee any Fly-blows.

Mr. Farwell. Whether there were any ſpecks, that one might call Fly-blows?

Mr. Brown. My Lord, I did not ſee any ſpecks that one might call Fly-blows.

Mr. Farwell. I deſire that I might call two Witneſſes to prove that he ſaid ſo.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What will you get by that, Mr. Farwell, to diſparage your Witneſs?

Mr. Brown. My Lord, Mr. Farwell would have had me ſaid ſo, but I never ſaid ſo.

Then Smith came.

L. C. J. What do you ask Smith?

Mr. Farwell. Only about the blood.

Mr. Brown. My Lord, he came to me another time, and told me I was wrong in my Affidavit, as if he knew what I could make Affidavit of better than my ſelf.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, I was not the party that told him ſo.

Mr. Brown. He was at my houſe twice, at Mary-bone, at the ſign of the Sun.

L. C. J. Was Pain with him there?

Mr. Brown. My Lord, there was a Man with Plate-buttons with him there. I don't know Pain.

Mr. Smith Sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you, Mr. Smith, it is required of you by Mr. Farwell, here to declare, whether you took up any of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's blood, and brought it home in your handkerchief?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, I know nothing of that.

Mr. Farwell. I deſire Rawſon and his Wife may be called again.

Rawſon appears.

L. C. J. What ſay you, 'tis required by Mr. Farwell, whether you ſaw any fly-blows in Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Eyes?

Mr. Rawſon. There was ſomething like fly-blows, but I can't ſay they were fly-blows.

L. C. J. Did you obſerve the flies were buſie at that time of the Year?

Mr. Rawſon. My Lord, I did not ſee them.

[Then the people laughed.

Mr. Farwell. I deſire Rawſon's wife may come.

Mr. Rawſon. I muſt fetch her then.

Rawſon's Wife appears.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Farwell requires of you to tell us whether there were any fly-blows in the Eyes of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey?

Mrs. Rawſon. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, there were a great many people ſaid there were fly-blows, I took no great notice of them.

L. C. J. He asks you what you ſay to his Mouth, and his Noſtrils, were there fly-blows?

Mrs. Rawſon. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I can't ſay nothing to it, for I did not much mind it, but they ſeemed fly-blows.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Farwell. I pray Mr. Lazingby (my Lord) may be asked whether men that kill themſelves look as Sir Edmondbury Godfrey did?

L. C. J. Mr. Lazingby, Mr. Farwell requires of you, whether you have ſeen men that have killed themſelves look in ſuch a manner about the Neck and Face?

Mr. Lazingby. My Lord, he appeared to me to be ſtrangled and that which ſtrangled him, was kept about his Neck till he was cold. My Lord, People that are hanged and let down while warm, the blood drains away by the Veſſels that are broken, and their Faces are rather leſs, and their Faces become very pale; but the thing wherewith he was ſtrangled remaining about his Neck, the blood could not drain away, but it made his Face look bloody. The two Mr. Chaſes, the King's Apothecary was there when I was there, and the blood that was ſome four Yards from the Ditch, I put my finger in it, and ſmelt to it, and it ſmelt like that which comes from a body, after a fortnights time dead, rather than a weeks; my Lord, it was blood and water. The water will ſeparate from the blood.

Sir Fr. Winn. But you believe he was ſtrangled?

Mr. Lazingby. Yes, his Neck from this place hither (pointing to the upper part of his Neck, and then to his Stomach and Breaſt) was very much diſcoloured and black, and his mouth was diſcoloured. Now when ever a man is bruiſed whilſt he is alive, or whilſt he is warm, that part after the perſon is dead will ſooneſt corrupt.

L. C. J. It ſtands to reaſon that the bruiſed part will firſt corrupt.

Mr. Lazingby. My Lord, after Mr. Chaſe the Apothecary and I had ſeen him at the Whitehouſe, I went up to drink a Glaſs of Beer, and Mr. Chaſe's Son unbuttoned Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's Collar, which was more than I ſaw, when I was come in, and unbuttoning the Collar, there were 2 great Creaſes both above and below, ſo they ſent for me down to come and ſee it, ſo I put the Collar together and I perceived the Collar made the mark like a ſtraight Ring upon a finger, the Neck being ſwelled above the Collar and below, by the ſtrangling with a Cord or Cloath.

Sir Fr. Winn. Do you think he killed himſelf now, Mr. Farwell?

Mr. Lazingby. There was ſomething in the Cover of his Eyes like matter, but I can't ſay it was fly-blows. His Eyes were open, my Lord, and his Eyes were Blood-ſhed, as Mr. Hobbs hath given you an account, as if he had an extraordinary great cold, or a man that had a blow upon the Temples or Forehead.

Mr. Farwell. Whether were his Eye-lids cloſed?

Mr. Lazingby. My Lord, his Eyes were open when I ſaw him.

Mr. Farwell. When I ſaw him about 6 a Clock in the morning, his Eyes were ſhut.

Mr. Lazingby. I felt upon his Cloaths. I admired that his Cloaths were not wet, there having been ſo great a ſtorm the afternoon before?

L. C. J. And his Cloaths were not wet?

Mr. Lazingby. His Cloaths were as dry as mine.

Mr. Farwell. My Lord, they made a great fire there, and dryed his Cloaths.

L. C. J. Come Mr. Farwell, there is no man ſo blind as he that won't ſee. Will you call any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Farwell. I will call no more Witneſſes; but I ſuppoſe they will Offer againſt me that I am a Papiſt.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. No, no.

L. C. J. Truly your Religion is not worth the enquiring into; Tis not much to the purpoſe what Religion you are of.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. Gentlemen, you hear he hath been able to make no defence for himſelf, but for the ſatisfaction of the World, my Lord hath taken great pains in hearing him. I ſhall ſpeak but very few words, and call a Witneſs or two of ſome new matter; that if it be poſſible to convince him, we will do it. We need not do it becauſe his own Witneſſes tell you of the ſeveral Bruiſes and Wounds he had, that there were no fly-blows, no putrified Matter. How can a man that ſtabbs himſelf, bruiſe and beat himſelf in the manner that you have heard? There is never a Witneſs that hath ſpoken on his ſide, but hath ſpoken againſt him, to prove himſelf as malicious a fellow as can be. What had he to do with this? Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was murdered, was found, inquiry made after it, and proſecution thereupon, now comes this fellow and permits ſeveral Arguments againſt it, every one of them from matter of fact that is falſe, and yet publiſhes it to the World, that he will prove it by 500 undeniable Witneſſes. We will now call ſome Witneſſes to prove him as wicked a Lyer as lives. I ſay what had he to do with it, only meer malice? He would have me ask him, what Religion he is of? I ſhall not ask him, for I don't think he is of any, none of any Religion can be ſo Wicked to own ſuch a thing. We ſhall deſire the favour to call a Witneſs or two, to prove ſomething more than hath yet been proved in this Murder, tho' there was Evidence enough upon the Tryal to prove it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, Mr. Farwell does pretend that he hath only told ſo many Lies, and hath left the World to make uſe of it. And hath brought Witneſſes to colour this matter over, and in hopes to make you believe the matter is true. But Mr. Farwell hath forgot himſelf, his Paper is quite otherwiſe, for he hath argued upon it, and made Inferences, that therefore Sir Edmondbury Godfrey murdered himſelf, therefore he is Guilty of the higheſt malice in the World. He tells a great many falſities, and from thoſe falſities hath inferred others. The Paper is full of Arguments.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I did give him leave to go into what Evidence he would in this Caſe, not that I thought it material, for if he could have proved never ſo much, yet his Malice had never been the leſs to have gone and aſperſed the Government. What had he to do to meddle with it? To what purpoſe ſhould he write Books concerning the matters of Government, to traduce the Juſtice of the Nation? The people had ſuffered as Malefactors, and what had he to do with it? If they had ſuffered Innocently, he ought to have done no ſuch thing as this is.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard. My Lord, but one Witneſs.

L. C. J. Pray call whom you will.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard. John Oakely. We will prove that he was way-layed that very day he was ſtrangled.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need to call any Witneſſes now, to overdo a thing. We may leave it here.

Jury-Man. Pray, my Lord, if they have any more Witneſſes, let us hear them.

L. C. J. Tis nothing to this purpoſe to call any for the King, nor hath Farwell's Evidence ſignified any thing to this. He did deſign and would (no doubt of it) have been very much ſatisfied if he could have made but ſome probable Evidence that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey killed himſelf, and I was deſirous to hear what they would ſay for themſelves. But you hear what a kind of Evidence it is, not a Witneſs he hath called, but is as much againſt him as can be, and does evince it plainly, that the man was killed, and that he was killed by ſtrangling, and ſo the Evidence was upon the Tryal of Green, Berry, and Hill. If he could have raiſed a doubt about it, yet his Offence had not been mitigated by it, for a private Perſon is not to arraign the Juſtice of the Nation; but I was willing to hear what could be ſaid in the Caſe, whether a doubt could be made in the World, that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was not murdered. And you ſee how his very Evidence hath in all things confirmed the Evidence Prance hath given, that he was killed, and that he was killed by ſtrangling. I muſt leave it with you, Gentlemen, they are all three in this Miſchief, 'tis a Combination of them, to affront the publick Juſtice of the Nation, and what is the end of it? The end of it is to make people believe there is no Popiſh Plot, but it is plain he was killed by the Popiſh party; as Prance, upon his Evidence againſt Green, and the others atteſted. But if they could have made it out that he killed himſelf, all of them would have cryed out the Popiſh Plot was a ſham, nothing but a thing raiſed by the Proteſtants againſt the Papiſts, and all the Plot muſt have gone for nothing. Gentlemen, I do leave it to you, whether upon this Evidence you do not believe them all to be Guilty of this Deſign, of Traducing the Juſtice of the Nation.

The Jury thereupon, without going from the Bar found them all three Guilty of the Information.

And the People gave a great Hum.

Monday, July 3. 1682.

Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain, and John Farwell, were brought up by Rule, to the Bar of the Court of the King's Bench to receive their Judgment: Mr. Thompſon the Counſellor moved for Judgment, and particularly pray'd they might have ſome corporal puniſhment, acquainting the Court that ſince their Tryal (tho' they had as much time and liberty given them by the Lord Chief Juſtice, to call their Witneſſes, and examine whom they would, as they could deſire,) the very next News-Book Thompſon put out, he took upon him to give an Account, as tho' Juſtice had not been done him; and further ſaid, if there was any doubt of the Fact with Mr. Thompſon, or Mr. Farwell, or Mr. Pain, there were Affidavits to ſatisfie the world about it.

Then Mr. Spence's Affidavit was read.

Richard Spence Citizen and Upholder of London, living in Arundel Street in the Strand in the Pariſh of St. Clement's Dane, in the County of Middleſex, having been twice ſubpæna'd to give Evidence for the King, upon an Information, exhibited in the Crown-office againſt Nathaniel Thompſon, William Pain and John Farwell, and not being called at their Tryal to give Evidence in in open Court, maketh Oath that upon Thurſday the tenth day of October 1678. it being the Thurſday before Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was miſſing from his own Houſe in Hartſhorne Lane in the Strand: As he this Deponent was coming from St. James's Market to go to his own Houſe, about ſeven of the clock at night, there were then at the Water-Gate of Somerſet-Houſe, five or ſix men ſtanding together, who laid hold on this Deponent as he was paſſing by them, and they taking hold of both this Deponent's Arms, dragg'd him down about a yard within the Water-Gate of Somerſet-Houſe, it being dark; but one of the ſaid Men, which this Deponent believes to have been Hill, (for that this Deponent knew Hill very well, as alſo his Maſter Doctor Godwyn,) cryed out and ſaid this is not he, upon which they immediately let this Deponent go.

Whereupon the Clerk of the Crown ſaid, that it was one Captain Spence, whom he knew very well, and that he was a Tall black Man, and like Sir Edmondbury Godfrey.

Then John Oakely's Affidavit was read.

John Oakely, of the Pariſh of St. Martins in the Fields in the County of Middleſex, Servant to Mr. Robert Breedon of Hartſhorne Lane in the ſaid Pariſh and County, Brewer, maketh Oath that on Saturday the 12*th* day of October, in the year of our Lord 1678, about eight or nine of the clock in the Evening, he was in the City of London, in the Company of his Father Robert Oakely of Biſſiter in the County of Oxon Maulſter, and his Father came with him ſo far as Ludgate, where they parted. And this Deponent going homewards to his Maſter Breedon's Houſe, coming by Somerſet-Houſe in the Strand, when he came near the Gate of that Houſe which leads down to the Water-ſide, commonly called the Water-Gate, which was about Nine of the clock at Night, he there ſaw Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, and paſt cloſe by him and put off his Hat to him, and Sir Edmondbury Godfrey put off his Hat again to him; and after that this Deponent had paſſed beyond Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, he this Deponent turned about and looked upon him again, and Sir Edmondbury Godfrey ſtood ſtill, and there was a Man or two near Sir Edmond. And this Deponent further ſaith that he knew Sir Edmondbury Godfrey very well, for that he ſaw him almoſt daily paſs by his Maſter Breedon's Houſe in Hartſhorne Lane, going or coming from his own dwelling Houſe, which was alſo in Hartſhorne Lane. And this Deponent further ſaith, that about two or three days after, when the Rumor was that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey was miſſing, he acquainted his fellow-Servant Elizabeth Dekin, that he ſaw Sir Edmondbury Godfrey near the Water-Gate at Somerſet-Houſe in the Strand, that very Saturday night that he was reported to have been miſſing from his Houſe in Hartſhorne Lane. And this Deponent further ſaith, that he told the ſame thing to his Uncle Ralph Oakely of the Pariſh of little Saint Bartholomew, about a week after the time that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's body was found, and alſo that he told the ſame thing to his Father the aforeſaid Robert Oakely, and to ſeveral others in a ſhort time after.

JOHN OAKELY.

Sworn to again the 1ſt of July, 1682. Before Judge Dolbin, and is left filed up in the Crown-office. Examinat.

Vide Green, Berry and Hill's Tryal, folio 16, as to the time of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's being at Somerſet-Houſe.

After which the Court conſulted together, and Mr. Juſtice Jones having firſt ſet out the Greatneſs of their Crime, gave the Judgment of the Court, which was, that Thompſon and Farwell ſhould ſtand upon the Pillory, in the Palace-yard, the laſt day of the Term, between the hours of Ten and One of the clock, for the ſpace of an hour, and each of them to pay an Hundred pound Fine, and to be Impriſoned till they had paid it. And as for Pain, he told him becauſe the Court did not conceive him altogether ſo guilty, they would inflict no corporal Puniſhment on him, but did adjudge him to pay an Hundred pound Fine, and to be Impriſoned till he pay'd it.

Afterwards the Court was moved to explain their Judgment, it being apprehended that it was pronounced upon the Pillory; and the Court did declare that their intention was (and ſo the expreſſion upon the Pillory was to be underſtood) that they ſhould ſtand in the Pillory.

Accordingly Wedneſday the 5*th* of July, 1682. Thompſon and Farwell ſtood in the Pillory in the Old Palace-yard at Weſtminſter, with this Writing over their Heads.

For Libelling the Juſtice of the Nation, by making the World believe that Sir Edmondbury Godfrey murdered himſelf.

Ford Lord Grey of Werk, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones.

Michaelmas-Term, Jovis 23. Nov. A. D. 1682. 34 Car. II. in B. R.

The KING againſt FORD Lord GREY of Werk, and OTHERS.

THERE having been an Information preferred againſt the the Right Honourable Ford Lord Grey of Werk, and others, by His Majeſty's Attorney General Sir Robert Sawyer, the firſt day of this Michaelmas-Term (a Copy of which Information follows) and the Lord Grey having then pleaded to it Not Guilty, and the other Defendants the like afterward, and the King's Attorney joyned Iſſue upon it; Tueſday the 21*ſt* of November, was appointed for Tryal of this Cauſe; but it was then adjourned to this day, becauſe one of the Witneſſes for the King was not ready; but this day it came on about nine in the Morning, at the King's-Bench-Bar, and held till two in the Afternoon, * all the Judges of the ſaid Court being preſent.

* Sir Francis Pemberton, C. J. Sir Thomas Jones, Sir William Dolben, and Sir Thomas Raymond.

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence, and then for Information, if any Perſon could give any, concerning the Miſdemeanor and Offence whereof the Defendants ſtood Impeached: Then the Defendants being called, and appearing, were bid to look to their Challenges, and the Jury being all Gentlemen of the County of Surrey, were Call'd, Challeng'd and Sworn in this Order.

Cl. of Crown.

1. Sir Marmaduke Greſham, Jur.
2. Sir Edward Bromfield, Jur.
3. Sir Robert Knightley, Jur.

Sir John Thompſon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We challenge him for the King.

Mr. Holt. Then we challenge toutz per availe, unleſs the King ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge; for by the Statute of 24 Ed. 1. the King cannot challenge without Cauſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But by the Courſe of Practice, all the Pannel muſt be called over before the King ſhew his Cauſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. Before the Party can have his Challenges allowed, he muſt ſhew his Cauſe; but they muſt go on with the Pannel, in the King's Caſe, to ſee if the Jury be full without the Perſons challenged, and that is ſufficient.

Sir Francis Pemberton.

L. C. J. If they challenge any Perſon for the King, they muſt ſhew Cauſe in due time. For I take the Courſe to be, that the King cannot challenge without Cauſe, but he is not bound to ſhew his Cauſe preſently; it is otherwiſe in the Caſe of another Perſon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That hath always been the regular Courſe.

Mr. Holt. Our challenging toutz per availe, doth ſet all the reſt aſide till Cauſe be ſhewn.

L. C. J. The Statute is, the King ſhall ſhew Cauſe; but when it comes in a Caſe between the King and another Party, that they both challenge, the other Party ſhall ſhew Cauſe firſt.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, we challenge toutz per availe.

L. C. J. You muſt ſhew a reaſon for it then.

Mr. At. Gen. The King ſhall not be drawn to ſhew his Cauſe, if there be enough in the Pannel beſides.

Mr. Williams. That is to ſay then, that the King may chuſe whom he pleaſeth againſt the Statute.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, Sir, we deſire none but honeſt and indifferent Gentlemen to try this Cauſe.

L. C. J. The old Challenge is taken away, by that Statute, from the King, quia non ſunt boni pro Domino Rege, and therefore if the King challenge any, he muſt ſhew Cauſe, but it muſt be in his time, and not before you ſhew yours. Let him ſtand by a while.

Cl. of Cr.

Cl. of Cr. John Sandys, Esq;
Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We challenge him for the King.
Mr. Holt. For what Cause, Sir?
Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We will tell you in good time.

Mr. Weston. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.
Mr. Holt. He challenges himself.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you of the Jury that are Sworn, hearken to your Charge.

Surrey, ss. Sir Robert Sawyer, Kt. His Majesty's Attorney-General, has exhibited an Information in this Court, against the Right Honourable Ford Lord Grey of Werk; Robert Charnock, late of the Parish of St. Botolph Aldgate, London, Gent. Anne Charnock, Wife of the said Robert Charnock; David Jones, of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Milliner; Frances Jones, Wife of the said David; and Rebecca Jones of the same, Widow; for that they (with divers other Evil-disposed Persons, to the said Attorney General yet unknown) the 20th day of August, in the 34*th* Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of Epsom in the County of Surrey, falsly, unlawfully, unjustly and wickedly, by unlawful and impure ways and means, conspiring, contriving, practising and intending the final Ruin and Destruction of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then a Virgin Unmarried, within the Age of 18 Years, and one of the Daughters of the Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley (the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then and there being under the Custody, Government and Education of the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley her Father) they the said Ford Lord Grey, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, and divers other Persons unknown, then and there, falsly, unlawfully and devilishly, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, their most wicked, impious and devilish intentions aforesaid; the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, to desert the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, Father of the aforesaid Lady Henrietta; and to commit Whoredom, Fornication and Adultery, and in Whoredom, Fornication and Adultery to live with the aforesaid Ford Lord Grey (the said Ford Lord Grey, then and long before, and yet, being the Husband of the Lady Mary, another Daughter of the said Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, and Sister of the said Lady Henrietta) against all Laws, as well Divine as Human, impiously, wickedly, impurely and scandalously, to live and cohabit, did tempt, invite and solicite, and every of them, then and there, did tempt, invite and solicite. And that the aforesaid Ford Lord Grey, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, and other Persons unknown, with Force and Arms, &c. unlawfully, unjustly, and without the Leave, and against the Will of the aforesaid Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, in prosecution of their most wicked Conspiracies aforesaid; the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, then and there, about the Hour of Twelve in the Night time, of the said 20*th* day of August, in the Year aforesaid, at the aforesaid Parish of Epsom in the County of Surrey aforesaid, out of the Dwelling-house of the said Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley there situate and being, and out of the Custody and Government of the said Earl of Berkeley, did take, carry and lead away. And the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, from the said 20*th* day of August in the Year aforesaid, and continually afterwards, unto the day of the Exhibition of this Information, at the Parish of Epsom aforesaid, in the County of Surrey aforesaid, and in divers secret places there with the said Ford Lord Grey, unlawfully, wickedly, and scandalously to live, cohabit and remain, did procure and cause, and every of them did procure and cause, to the great displeasure of Almighty God, to the Ruin and Destruction of the said Lady Henrietta Berkeley, to the Grief and Sorrow of all her Friends, and to the evil and most pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending; and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Information, the Defendant, the Lord Grey, and the other Defendants, have severally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal, have put themselves upon the Country, and the King's Attorney likewise, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are Guilty of the Offence and Misdemeanor whereof they stand Impeached by this Information, or not Guilty: If you find them or any of them Guilty, you are to say so; if you find them, or any of them not Guilty, you are to say so and no more, and hear your Evidence.

For which Evidence to come in, Proclamation was made, and then Edward Smith, Esq; a Bencher of the Middle-Temple, open'd the Information.

Mr. Smith. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen, you of the Jury; Mr. Attorney General hath exhibited an Information in this Court, against Ford Lord Grey of Werk, Robert Charnock, Anne Charnock, David Jones, Frances Jones, and Rebecca Jones, wherein is set forth, That the Defendants, the 20*th* of August, in the 34*th* Year of this King, at Epsom in your County, did conspire the Ruin and utter Destruction of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, Daughter of the Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley; and for the bringing about this Conspiracy, they have seduced her to desert her Father's House, tho' she be under the Age of 18 Years, and under the Custody and Government of her Father; and solicited her to commit Whoredom and Adultery with my Lord Grey, who was before married to the Lady Mary, another Daughter of the Earl of Berkeley, and Sister to the Lady Henrietta. That after they had thus inveigled her, they did upon the same 20*th* day of August, carry her away out of the House, without the Earl's Licence, and against his Will, to the Intent she might live an ungodly and dishonourable Life with my Lord Grey. And after they had thus carried her away, they obscured her in secret places, places, and ſhifted about from place to place, and continued this Courſe of Life ever ſince. And this the Information ſays, is to the Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, the utter Ruin of the young Lady, the Grief and Affliction of her Friends, the evil Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the King's Peace, his Crown and Dignity. To this all theſe Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty; if we ſhall prove them or any of them Guilty of any of the Matters charged in this Information, you ſhall do well to find them Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, The Courſe of our Evidence will be this; That this unhappy Gentleman, my Lord Grey, has for four Years together, proſecuted an Amour with this young Lady; and when it came to be detected (ſome little Accident diſcovering ſomewhat of it) my Lady Berkeley did find there was ſome Buſineſs of an extraordinary nature between them, and thereupon forbid my Lord Grey her Houſe. My Lord Grey he made many pretences to my Lady, that he might come to the Houſe to give them a Viſit before he departed, being to go into the Country; and he takes that opportunity to ſettle this matter of conveying the young Lady away in a very ſhort time. And early on the Sunday Morning, ſhe was, by Charnock, another of the Defendants, conveyed from the Houſe of my Lord Berkeley at Epſom, and brought here to London. We ſhall in the Courſe of our Evidence ſhew how ſhe was ſhifted from place to place, and the ſeveral purſuits that were made in ſearch after her. We ſhall diſcover to you, how ſhe was hurried from one Lodging to another, for fear of Diſcovery. Nay, we ſhall prove, that my Lord Grey has owned and confeſſed that he had her, that ſhe was in his Care and Cuſtody, and that he owned the ſeveral Inſtances of his Amours. But I had rather the Evidence ſhould ſpeak it, than I open ſo much as the Nature of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall call our Witneſſes, who will very fully make out this Evidence that Mr. Attorney has opened to you. That my Lord Grey did a long time make Love to this young Lady, tho' he were before married to her Siſter. This Treaty was diſcover'd by my Lady Berkeley, laſt Summer, upon an Accident of ſurprizing the young Lady in writing a Letter to my Lord, and thereupon my Lady Berkeley chargeth my Lord Grey with theſe Applications to her Daughter that did ſo much misbecome him. My Lord Grey was then ſo ſenſible of his Fault, that he ſeem'd very full of Penitence, and aſſured my Lady, he would never do the like again, and earneſtly deſired her by all means, to conceal it from my Lord Berkeley; for if this ſhould once come to be known to him, he and the young Lady would not only be ruined, but it would occaſion an irreparable Breach between their two Families, and of all Friendſhip between my Lord Berkeley and him. And therefore he deſired my Lady Berkeley (who had juſtly forbid him her Houſe for this great Crime) leſt the World ſhould inquire into the Cauſes of it, and ſo it ſhould come to be known, that his Baniſhment from her Houſe, might not be ſo ſoon or ſudden: But he begged of her Ladyſhip, that he might be permitted to make one Viſit more, and with all the Proteſtations in the World aſſured her, it was not with any purpoſe of Diſhonour, that he deſired to come and ſee her, but that his Departure might be by degrees, and ſo the leſs taken notice of. When my Lady had thus charged my Lord with his unworthy Carriage to her Family, and he had ſeem'd thus penitent for it; ſhe charges her Daughter alſo, with her giving any allowance to theſe undecent Practices of my Lord's; ſhe thereupon falls down on her Knees to her Mother, to ask her Pardon for her great Offence, and with Tears in her Eyes, confeſs'd ſhe had done very much amiſs, and did humbly hope ſhe might obtain her Forgiveneſs for it, being young, and ſeduc'd by my Lord Grey, and promiſed ſhe would ſee him no more, nor have any thing more to do with him. My Lord Grey he is permitted to come once more to the Houſe, upon thoſe Aſſeverations and Promiſes of his, that it ſhould be with no diſhonourable purpoſes in the World. It was, it ſeems, in his way to his own Houſe at Suſſex, but coming thither, he takes an occaſion to continue there, and ſtay a little too long for a Viſit; whereupon my Lady Berkeley began to ſuſpect it was not a tranſient Viſit he came to make at her Houſe, but that he had ſome ill deſign in proſecution of the ſame Fault that he had been ſo long guilty of. And that Suſpicion of her's was but too well grounded, as appear'd afterwards. Our Witneſſes will tell you, that my Lord Grey, juſt before his Departure, was obſerved to be very ſollicitous and earneſt with his Man Charnock (whom we ſhall prove by undeniable Evidence to be the Man that convey'd her away) giving him ſome Directions with great earneſtneſs, what to do was indeed not heard, but the Event will plainly ſhew it. For my Lord Grey himſelf, he went on his Journey into Suſſex, and lay at Guilford that Night ſhe was carried away, and the next Morning ſhe was miſſing. Thereupon my Lady ſends after my Lord Grey, juſtly ſuſpecting him to be guilty of this Violence and Outrage offered to her Daughter and Family, and they overtook him at Guilford before he was got any further on his Journey, and there acquaint him the Lady was carried away, and that my Lady ſuſpected (as well ſhe might) he knew whither. Then immediately he makes haſte up to Town, and writes my Lady a Letter, that truly he would take care to reſtore Peace to the Family that by his Folly had been ſo much diſturbed: And there were ſome hopes of retrieving the matter, that this Scandal upon ſo noble a Family might not be made publick; for certainly an Offence of this nature was not fit ſhould be ſo, nor indeed was ever heard of in any Chriſtian Society; I am ſure, I never read of any ſuch Cauſe in the Courts of Law. And it was impoſſible any way to have prevented the Scandal, but that which my Lady took, to paſs over all, by deſiring to have her Child reſtored again to her, before ſuch time as it was gone ſo far, as there is too great Reaſon to ſuſpect it now is. But after that, my Lord Grey was ſo far from performing what he had ſo ſolemnly promiſed, and making the matter up, that he ſtood upon Terms; he was Maſter of the Lady, and he would diſpoſe of her as he thought fit: Third Perſons and Places muſt be appointed where ſhe muſt be diſpoſed of; with Capitulations, that he ſhould ſee her as often as he thought fit; which was (if poſſible) a worſe Indignity than all that he had done before.

We

We ſhall prove to your Lordſhip, that he did, a long time before this Violence was offered, make applications to this young Lady, and that muſt (as any Man will believe) be upon no good Account. We ſhall ſhew all the baſe Tranſactions in carrying away the Lady, after that Confidence which my Lady repoſed in his Proteſtations to do nothing diſhonourably, ſo as to admit him to make a Viſit; which certainly was the greateſt Breach of the very Laws of human Society, againſt all the Laws of Hoſpitality, beſides the great Tranſgreſſion of the Laws of God and Men. Yet even then, he ſeduced the Lady away. For we ſhall plainly prove ſhe was carried away by his Coach-man that once was, afterwards his Gentleman, and how ſhe was from time to time conveyed to and fro.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This Story is indeed too melancholy to be often repeated, the Evidence had better tell it: Only this one Aggravation I would take notice of, which will be made out in the proof to you of this matter charged; and that is this, That my Lord Grey, after ſuch time as it was known ſhe was in his Power, gave one Reaſon for his not delivering her up (and I am ſorry to ſee his Lordſhip ſhould think it a Reaſon) he had inquired how far the Law would extend in ſuch a caſe, and that he knew, and could give a Precedent for it (which the Witneſs will tell you of) that the Law could not reach him; and that as long as he had run ſuch a Courſe for obtaining that which was his greateſt Pleaſure, he would not now part with her, but upon ſuch Terms, that he might have acceſs to her when he pleaſed. To ſuch a height of Confidence was this Gentleman arrived, in this barbarous and infamous Wickedneſs. But as I ſaid, it is a Story too black to be aggravated by any thing but by it ſelf; we ſhall therefore call our Witneſſes, and prove our Fact.

About this time the Lady Henrietta came into the Court, and was ſet by the Table at the Judges Feet.

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord, my Daughter is here in Court, I deſire ſhe may be reſtored to me.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, my Lord Berkeley, give us leave to go on, it will be time enough to move that anon. Swear my Lady Berkeley —— (which was done, but ſhe ſeem'd not able to ſpeak.) ——

Mr. Sol. Gen. I perceive my Lady is much moved at the ſight of her Daughter. Swear my Lady Arabella her Daughter. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Madam, will you acquaint my Lords the Judges, and Jury, what you know concerning the Letter you diſcovered, and how you came by that diſcovery?

Lady Arabella. My Mother coming to my Lady Harriett's Chamber, and ſeeing there a Pen wet with Ink, examined her where ſhe had been writing. She, in a great Confuſion, told her ſhe had been writing her Accounts. My Mother not being ſatisfied with her Anſwer, commanded me to ſearch the Room. Her Maid being then in the Room, I thought it not ſo much for her Honour to do it then. I followed my Mother down to Prayers; after Prayers were done, my Mother commanded my Lady Harriett to give me the Keys of her Cloſet and her Cabinet. When ſhe gave me the Key, ſhe put into my Hands a Letter, which was written to my Lord Grey, which was to this effect. —— My Siſter Bell did not ſuſpect our being together laſt Night, for ſhe did not hear the Noiſe. Pray come agen Sunday or Monday, if the laſt, I ſhall be very impatient. —— I ſuppoſe my Lady Harriett gave my Lord Grey Intelligence that this was found out; for my Lord Grey ſent his Servant to me, to acquaint me he deſired to ſpeak with me. When he came in firſt, ſhe (I mean my Lady Harriett) fell down upon the Ground like a Dead Creature. My Lord Grey took her up, and afterwards told me, ſaid he, You ſee how far it is gone between us; and he declared to me, he had no Love, no Conſideration for any thing upon Earth but for her; I mean dear Lady Hen, ſaid he to me; for I ſay it juſt as he ſaid it. And after this, he told me, he would be revenged of all the Family, if they did expoſe her. I told him it would do us no Injury, and I did not value what he did ſay; for my own particular, I defied him and the Devil, and would never keep Counſel in this Affair. And afterwards, when he told me he had no Love, no Conſideration for any thing upon Earth but her, I told my Lady Harriett, I am very much troubled and amazed, that you can ſit by and hear my Lord Grey ſay and declare, he has no Love for any but you, no Conſideration for any one upon Earth but you, when it ſo much concerns my Siſter; for my part, it ſtabs me to the Heart, to hear him make this Declaration againſt my poor Siſter Grey. ——

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray go on, Madam.

Lady Arabella. After this ſhe ſaid nothing; I told her I ſuſpected my Woman had an Hand in it, and therefore I would turn her away. This Woman, when my Lady Harriett ran away, being charged with it, ſwore ſhe had never carried any Letters between them; but after my Mother's coming to London, both the Porter at St. John's, and one Thomas Plomer accuſed her that ſhe had ſent Letters to Charnock, who was my Lord Grey's Coach-man, now his Gentleman. I told her then, I did much wonder, ſhe being my Servant, ſhould convey Letters between them without my knowing: She then confeſs'd it to me, but withal ſhe told me, How could I think there was any ill between a Brother in Law and a Siſter? And upon this ſhe confeſs'd to me ſhe had ſent Letters to Charnock, tho' before ſhe had forſworn it.

Mr. At. Gen. Madam, have you any thing further to teſtify in this Cauſe? Have you any Matters that you remember more?

Lady Arabella. There is more of it to the ſame effect; but all of it is only to this effect.

L. C. J. My Lady Arabella, pray let me ask you, have you any more to ſay to this Matter?

Lady Arabella. It is all to this purpoſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then if you pleaſe, Madam, to turn now your Face this way towards the Gentlemen of the Jury, who have not heard what you ſaid, and give them the ſame relation that you gave to the Court; and pray be pleaſed to lean over the Seat, and expoſe your ſelf a little, and let them have the ſame Story you told before, and pray tell the time when it was.

[Then ſhe turned her Face towards the Bar.

Lady Arabella. It was in July, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Madam, tell what happen'd then.

Lady

Lady Arabella. In July laſt, ſome time then, my Mother came into my Lady Harriett's Chamber, and ſeeing a Pen wet with Ink, ſhe examined her who ſhe had been writing to. She, in great Confuſion told her, ſhe had been writing her Accounts, but my Mother was not ſatisfied with that Anſwer.——The ſight of my Lord Grey doth put me quite of Countenance and Patience.——

[Here ſhe ſtop'd again.]

[My Lord Grey then was by the Clerks under the Bar, and ſtood looking very ſtedfaſtly upon her.]

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord Grey, ſit down (which he did) It is not a very extraordinary thing, for a Witneſs, in ſuch a Cauſe, to be daſhed out of Countenance.

E. of Berkeley. He would not, if he were not a very impudent barbarous Man, look ſo confidently and impudently upon her.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I would be very loth to deal otherwiſe than becomes me, with a Perſon of your Quality, but indeed this is not ſo handſome, and we muſt deſire you to ſit down. Pray go on, Madam.

Lady Arabella. After this, my Mother commanded me to ſearch my Lady Harriett's Room; Her Maid being then in the Room, I thought it not ſo much for her Honour to do it then. I followed my Mother down to Prayers. After Prayers were done, my Mother commanded my Lady Harriett to give me the Keys of her Cabinet and of her Cloſet, and when ſhe gave me the Keys, ſhe put a Note into my Hand, which was to my Lord Grey; and that was to this Effect——My Siſter Bell did not ſuſpect our being together laſt Night, for ſhe did not hear any Noiſe: Pray come again Sunday or Monday, if the laſt, I ſhall be very impatient. —— I ſuppoſe my Lady Harriett gave my Lord Grey intelligence of this, for he ſent a Servant to tell me he deſired to ſpeak with me. Upon his firſt coming in, my Lady Harriett fell upon the Ground like a Dead Creature, and my Lord Grey took her up, and ſaid, Now you ſee how far it is gone between us: I love nothing upon Earth but her, I mean dear Lady Hen, ſaid he to me, and if you do expoſe her, I will be revenged upon you and all the Family, for I have no Conſideration for any thing but her. After that I told him, We defied him, he could do us no Injury; and for my own particular, I defied him, and the Devil and all his Works, and would not have any thing to do with ſuch a Correſpondence. After this, I told my Lady Harriett, I was much troubled and amazed, that ſhe ſhould ſit by and hear my Lord Grey, her Brother in Law, ſay he had no Conſideration for any thing on Earth but her. For my part, ſaid I, Madam, it ſtabs me to the Heart, to hear this ſaid againſt my poor Siſter Grey. I told her I ſuſpected my Woman had an Hand in this Affair, and therefore I would put her away. Afterwards, the ſame Day my Lady Harriett run away, this Woman came to me; and I then told her, You have ruined her, and asked her, Why would you ſend Letters between my Lord Grey and my Lady Harriett? She denied it, and ſwore ſhe never did it, but when we came to London, the Porter of St. John's came and accuſed her of conveying Letters to Charnock, my Lord Grey's Gentleman, formerly his Coach-man. I then asked her again about it; ſhe then acknowledged to me ſhe had done it, But Madam, ſaid ſhe, how could I think there could be any prejudice or ill between a Brother in Law and a Siſter in Law? Said I, Were not you my Servant? Why did you not tell me? Beſides, you know we have all reaſon to hate Charnock for a great many things. This is all I have to ſay that is material, all elſe is to the ſame effect.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now this Matter being thus diſcovered to the Counteſs of Berkeley, this unfortunate Young Lady's Mother; ſhe ſent for my Lord Grey, and we ſhall tell you what happen'd to be diſcourſed between them two, and between the Lady and her Mother, and what Promiſes of Amendment he made. My Lady Berkeley, pray will you tell what you know.

[She ſeem'd unable to do it.]

—— She is very much diſcompoſed, the ſight of her Daughter doth put her out of Order.

Lady Arabella. I have ſomething more to ſay, that is, I told my Lady Harriett, after my Lord Grey had made his declaration of his Love to my Siſter, to me, That if ever he had the Impudence to name her Name to me, I would immediately go to my Father, and tell him all.

[Then the Counteſs lean'd forward, with her Hood much over her Face.]

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lady Berkeley, compoſe your ſelf, and ſpeak as loud as you can.

Lady Berkeley. When I firſt diſcovered this unhappy Buſineſs, how my Son in Law, my Lord Grey, was in love with his Siſter, I ſent to ſpeak with him, and I told him he had done barbarouſly and baſely, and falſely with me, in having an Intrigue with his Siſter in Law. That I looked upon him next my own Son, as one that was engaged to ſtand up for the Honour of my Family, and inſtead of that, he had endeavour'd the Ruin of my Daughter, and had done worſe than if he had murdered her, to hold an Intrigue with her of Criminal Love. He ſaid, he did confeſs he had been falſe, and baſe, and unworthy to me, but he deſired me to conſider (and then he ſhed a great many Tears) what it was that made him guilty, and that made him do it. I bid him ſpeak. He ſaid, he was aſham'd to tell me, but I might eaſily gueſs. I then ſaid, What? Are you indeed in Love with your Siſter in Law? He fell a weeping, and ſaid, he was unfortunate; but if I made this Buſineſs Publick, and let it to take Air (he did not ſay this to threaten me, he would not have me to miſtake him) but if I told my Lord her Father, and his Wife of it, it might make him deſperate, and it might put ſuch Thoughts into his Wife's head, that might be an occaſion of parting them; and that he being deſperate, he did not know what he might do, he might neither conſider Family, nor Relation. I told him this would make him very Black in Story, tho' it were her Ruin. He ſaid that was true, but he cou'd not help it; he was miſerable, and if I knew how miſerable, I would pity him: He had the Confidence to tell me that. And then he deſired, tho' he ſaid I had no reaſon to hear him, or take any Counſel he gave me (and all this with a great many Tears) as if he were my Son Durſley, that I would keep his Secret. For my Lord, if he heard it, would be in a great Paſſion, and poſſibly, he might not be able to contain himſelf, but let it break out into the World. He may call me Rogue and Raſcal perhaps in his Paſſion, ſaid he, and I ſhould be ſorry for it, but that would be all I could do, and what the evil Conſequence might be, he knew knew not, and therefore it were beſt to conceal it. And after many words to pacify me, tho' nothing, indeed, could be ſufficient for the Injury he had done me; he gave it me as his Advice, that I would let my Daughter Harriett go abroad into Publick Places with my ſelf, and he promiſed, if I did, he would always avoid them. For a Young Lady to ſit always at Home, he ſaid, it would not eaſily get her out of ſuch a thing as this. And upon this, he ſaid again, he was to go out of Town with the D. of M. in a few Days, and being he had been frequently in the Family before, it would be looked upon as a very ſtrange thing, that he went away, and did not appear there to take his Leave. He promiſed me, that if for the World's ſake, and for his Wife's ſake (that no one might take notice of it) I would let him come there, and ſup before he went into the Country, he would not offer any thing, by way of Letter, or otherwiſe, that might give me any Offence. Upon which I did let him come, and he came in at Nine a Clock at Night, and ſaid, I might very well look ill upon him, as my Daughter alſo did (his Siſter Bell) for none elſe in all the Family knew any thing of this Matter but ſhe and I. After Supper he went away, and the next Night he ſent his Page (I think it was) with a Letter to me, he gave it to my Woman and ſhe brought it to me; where he ſays that he would not go out of Town.——If your Lordſhip pleaſe I will give you the Letter——But he ſaid, he fear'd my apprehenſions of him would continue.—— There is the Letter.

L. C. J. Show it my Lord Grey, let us ſee if he owns or denies it.

Lord Grey. Yes, pray do, I deny nothing that I have done.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. Be pleaſed, Madam, to put it into the Court.

Mr. At. Gen. It is only about his keeping away.

L. C. J. Shew it my Lord Grey.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, it is fully proved without that.

L. C. J. Then let the Clerk read it, Brother.

Cl. of the Crown. There is no Direction, that I ſee upon it, it is Subſcribed Grey.

[Reads.]

MADAM,

AFTER I had waited on your Ladyſhip laſt Night, Sir Thomas Armſtrong came from the D. of M. to acquaint me that he could not poſſibly go into Suſſex; ſo that Journey is at an end. But your Ladyſhip's apprehenſions of me I fear will continue: therefore I ſend this to aſſure you, that my ſhort ſtay in Town ſhall no way diſturb your Ladyſhip; if I can contribute to your Quiet, by avoiding all places where I may poſſibly ſee the Lady. I hope your Ladyſhip will remember the promiſe you made to divert her, and pardon me for minding you of it, ſince it is to no other end that I do ſo, but that ſhe may not ſuffer upon my Account: I am ſure, if ſhe doth not in your Opinion, ſhe never ſhall any other way. I wiſh your Ladyſhip all the Eaſe that you can deſire, and more quiet Thoughts than ever I expect to have. I am, with great Devotion,

Your Ladyſhip's,
Moſt Humble, and Obedient Servant,
Grey.

Mr. At. Gen. Madam, will you pleaſe to go on with your Evidence.

Lady Arabella. I have one thing more to ſay: After this, three or four Days after this ugly Buſineſs was found out, I told my Lady Harriett, ſhe was to go to my Siſter Durſley's. She was in a great Anger and Paſſion about it, which made my Mother ſo exaſperated againſt her, that I was a great while before I got my Mother to go near her again.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lady Berkeley, will you pleaſe to go on.

Lady Berkeley. When I came to my Daughter (my wretched unkind Daughter, I having been ſo kind a Mother to her, and would have died rather (upon the Oath I have taken) than have done this, if there had been any other way to reclaim her,) and would have done any thing to have hid her Faults, and died ten times over, rather than this Diſhonour ſhould have come upon my Family. This Child of mine, when I came up to her, fell into a great many Tears, and begged my Pardon for what ſhe had done, and ſaid, ſhe would never continue any Converſation with her Brother in Law any more, if I would forgive her; and ſhe ſaid all the things that would make a tender Mother believe her. I told her, I did not think it was ſafe for her to continue at my Houſe, for fear the World ſhould diſcover it, by my Lord Grey's not coming to our Houſe as he uſed to do; and therefore I would ſend her to my Son's Wife, her Siſter Durſley, for my Lord Grey did ſeldom or never viſit there, and the World would not take notice of it. And I thought it better and ſafer for her to be there with her Siſter, than at home with me. Upon which this ungracious Child wept ſo bitterly, and begg'd ſo heartily of me that I would not ſend her away to her Siſter's, and told me, it would not be ſafe for her to be out of the Houſe from me. She told me, ſhe would obey me in any thing; and ſaid, ſhe would now confeſs to me, tho' ſhe had denied it before, that ſhe had writ my Lord Grey word that they were diſcovered, which was the reaſon he did not come to me upon the firſt Letter that I ſent to him to come and ſpeak with me. And ſhe ſaid ſo many tender things, that I believed her Penitent, and forgave her, and had Compaſſion upon her, and told her (tho' ſhe had not deſerved ſo much from me) ſhe might be quiet (ſeeing her ſo much concerned) I would not tell her Siſter Durſley her Faults, nor ſend her thither, till I had ſpoken with her again. Upon which, ſhe, as I thought, continuing Penitent, I kiſſed her in the Bed when ſhe was Sick, and hoped that all this ugly Buſineſs was over, and I ſhould have no more Affliction with her, eſpecially if my Lord removed his Family to Durdants, which he did. When we came there, ſhe came into my Chamber one Sunday Morning before I was awake, and threw her ſelf upon her Knees, and kiſſed my Hand, and cried out. Oh Madam! I have offended you, I have done Ill, I will be a good Child, and will never do ſo again; I will break off all Correſpondence with him, I will do what you pleaſe, any thing that you do deſire. Then, ſaid I, I hope you will be happy, and I forgive you. Oh! do not tell my Father (ſhe ſaid) let not him know my Faults. No, ſaid I, I will not tell him; but if you will make a Friend of me, I deſire you will have no Correſpondence with your Brother in Law; and tho' you have done all this to offend me, I will treat you as a Sister more than as a Daughter, if you will but use this Wicked Brother in Law as he deserves. I tell you that Youth and Vertue and Honour, is too much to sacrifice for a base Brother in Law. When she had done this, she came another day into my Closet and there wept very much, and cry'd out, Oh Madam! 'tis he, he is the Villain that has undone me, that has ruined me. Why? said I, What has he done? Oh! said she, he hath seduced me to this. Oh! said I, fear nothing, you have done nothing I hope that is ill, but only hearkning to his Love. Then I took her about the Neck and kissed her, and endeavoured to comfort her. Oh Madam! said she, I have not deserved this kindness from you; but 'tis he, he is the Villain that hath undone me: But I will do any thing that you will command me to do; if ever he send me any Letter, I will bring it to you unopened; but pray do not tell my Father of my Faults. I promised her I would not, so she would but break off all Correspondence with him.——

[Here she swooned, and soon after recovered and went on]

——Then my Lord Grey's Wife, my Daughter Grey, coming down to Durdants, he was to go to his own House at Up-Park in Sussex, and he writ down to his Wife to come up to London.—— It is possible I may omit some Particular things that were done just at such or such a time, but I speak all I can remember in general. My Lord Grey, when I spoke to him of it, told me, he would obey me in any thing, if I would banish him the House he would never come near it; but then he pretended to advise me like my own Son, that the World would take notice of it, that therefore it would be better for me to take her abroad with me, he would avoid all places where she came, but he thought it best for her not to be kept too much at Home, nor he absolutely forbid the House, but he would by degrees come seldomer, once in six Weeks or two Months. But to go on to my Daughter Grey's coming down to Durdants; he writing to his Wife to come up to London, that he might speak to her before he went to his own House at Up-Park, my Daughter Grey desired he might come thither, and it being in his way to Sussex, I writ him word, that believing he was not able to go to Up-Park in one Day from London, he might call at my Lord's House at Durdants, and dine there by the way, as calling in, intending to lie at Guilford, for it is just the half way to Guilford. He, instead of coming to Dinner, came in at Nine a Clock at Night (I am sure it was so much) for it was so dark, we could hardly see the Colour of his Horses, from my Lord's great Gate, to the place where we were in the House: And coming at that time of Night, I thought if I turned him out of the House, my Lord would wonder at it, and so would all the Family. Therefore I was forced, as I then thought in point of discretion, to let him lie there that Night, which he did, and he told me, Madam, I had not come here, but upon your Ladyship's Letter, nothing else should have brought me: Because I was to give him leave to come, knowing the Faults he had committed against the Honour of our Family. Upon which I told him, My Lord, I hope you have so much Honour and Generosity in you, after the Promises you have made me, and the Confidence and Indulgence I have shewn you, that you will give my Daughter no Letters, and I will look to her otherwise, that you shall have no Conversation with her. He desired me to walk up with him into the Gallery, and there he told me he had brought no Letters, and would have had me looked in his Pocket. I told him that would be to no purpose, for his Man Charnock (whom we knew he did not prefer from being his Coach-man to be his Gentleman, but for some extraordinary Service he did him, or he thought he would do him) might have Letters enough, and we be never the wiser: But I trusted to his Honour and his Christianity; and I told him, that his going on in any such way would be her utter Ruin. He told me he would not stay there any longer than the next Day; nay, he would be gone immediately if I pleased, and he sent his Coach to London, and had nothing but Horses left. But his Wife desiring her Husband to stay, I had a very hard Task to go through, being earnestly prest, both by her and my own Lord's importunities for his stay. But my Lord Grey, whilst he was there, did entertain me with his Passion, he had the Confidence to do it, and he wished himself the verieſt Rake-hell in the World, so he had never seen her Face since he was married. And, said he, Madam, you will always think me a Villain, and never have a good Opinion of me, I shall be always unfortunate, both in my self, and your bad Opinion of me. Seeing this, I thought it was time to do something more; and I told him that Night he should stay no longer, he should be gone; and his Wife seemed to be much concerned, and would fain have him stay. For by this time she began to find out that there was some disorder in her Mother and the Family, tho' she knew not what it was; and she sent her Sister Lucy to beg he might stay: I told her I would not suffer it: However, she proposed an Expedient how her Sister Harriett should take Physick, and keep her Chamber while he was there. That I was in a sort compelled to do, and I told him, upon their importunity for his stay, that his Sister Harriett should be seen no more by him, but take Physick while he stayed there: To which he replied, Madam, indeed it is rude for me to say it to you, but I must say it, give me my Choice, either to be drown'd or hanged. Upon this I was extremely disturbed, and the next Morning, I told him, I was not satisfied he should stay in England; he had ordered his Wife to go into France, and she was to go within a Month after, I would have him go with her; he told me, he had Law-Suits and he could not: I told him, he had told me before, they were of no great consequence, and therefore they could not hinder him; and I prest him very much, and I fell into a great Passion at last; and told him, if he would not go, I would tell her Father, and he should take care of her, to send her where she should be safe enough from him. For I was sensible the World would take notice if he came not thither; and said I, I am not able to bear you should. Upon this, he promised me with all the Oaths, Imprecations and Promises in the World, that he would go and follow his Wife into France at Christmass, and stay there 8 Months; and by that time, I did hope this unfortunate miserable Business might be over: For I had a great kindness for my Child, and would have done any thing to save her, her, if it had been in my Power, or would yet do any thing: I would give my Life that the World did not know so much of it as now it must this Day. The World knows I had always the greatest Kindness and Tenderness for her, which was such, that some that are now here have said since, that it was my Indulgence to her, and not making it known to my Lord, that encouraged this last ill Business. And thereupon my Lord Grey was ordered by me to go away, and he promised me so to do, which was upon Saturday. I then went up to her Chamber and saw her very melancholly, and did what I could to comfort her. Said I, I warrant you, by the Grace of God, do but do what you ought, and I will bring you off of this Business, be chearful, and be not so much cast down (for I thought she was troubled at my Carriage to her) and tho' I said some severe things to you at Dinner (as I did talk of her going away, and being sent abroad) be not troubled, for I only meant it out of Kindness to you; for all I design, is only to seek an Occasion of getting him away; and therefore, as long as he stays, I will seem to whisper with you, and look frowningly upon you, that if he hath any Tenderness for you, he may see I am angry with you, and do the more to leave you at quiet: But take no notice of it, for I now smile to you, tho' I frowned before him, be not affrighted. In the Afternoon I told her the same thing again. But then, said she, he will shew my Letters to him, and that will ruin my Reputation for ever, and that troubles me, but yet it need not, for I never writ to any Man but him, and if he doth shew them, he will expose himself for a base unworthy Man, and I can but deny it, and he can never prove it. This is true, said I, and very well said, and therefore be not afraid of him, but trust to the Friendship of your Mother, and do as you ought to do, and I am confident we shall bring you clear off from this ugly Business. And then said she, But oh Madam! my Sister, my Sister Grey, will she forgive me this? I told her, her Sister Grey was good-natured and religious, and I made no doubt she would forgive her the Folly of her Youth, and if she would take up yet, she was young, and her Sister would impute it to that, and, said I, I am sure she will forgive you; and I told her, I would do all that lay in my power to assist her; and I bid her be chearful and trust in God and in my Friendship. She was to blame, indeed, she acknowledged, but she was young, and he was cunning, and had made it his Business to delude and intice her. I told her it was true, and therefore now she must consider with her self, what was to be done to bring her off; which I doubted not, if she would do but as she ought; she promised me so to do; and yet that very Night when I was in my Sleep she ran away.——

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What time went my Lord Grey away, Madam, that day?

Lady Berkeley. He went away about four a Clock in the Afternoon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And the ensuing Night the Lady was gone?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, that Night she went away too.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I crave leave to acquaint you with one Circumstance that has been already hinted, that is about Charnock, a Person that is taken notice of by both the Ladies that have given Evidence, and one of the Defendants in this Information. This Man, as they seem to intimate, for some extraordinary Service he had done my Lord Grey, or was designed for the doing of, was removed from the Degree of his Coach man, to the waiting upon him in his Chamber. He at this time came with my Lord Grey to Durdants, a House of my Lord Berkeley's near Epsom, and which was in the way to my Lord Grey's House in Sussex, that is called Up-Park. And they being there, notwithstanding all those Protestations and Promises made by my Lord Grey to his Lady Mother, as you have heard, to meddle no more in this matter, yet we shall give you an account, how that the Day before the Night that the young Lady went away, my Lord Grey was very importunately busy with his Man Charnock; what Discourses they had, or what Directions he gave him perhaps may not be known; but his earnestness in talking with him, and his impatience and restlessness we shall prove; and then give you a very full Proof that Charnock was the Person that took her away; and then let the Jury and the Court make the Conclusion.

Mr. At. Gen. It may be, my Lord, we shall not be able to prove the actual Taking away from thence, but only by undeniable Circumstantial Proof. Such Impieties use not to be acted openly.

L. C. J. Truly, as far as I can see, here has been more done barefaced, than one would think should be done in any Christian Nation.

Then a Clergyman that stood by was sworn, but his Name not told.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know.

Mr. —— My Lord, I was at Durdants, my Lord Berkeley's House near Epsom in Surrey, at the time of this ill Accident, and some time after. And upon the Saturday in the Afternoon I (immediately after Dinner was over at my Lord's own Table) walked into the great pav'd Hall; and stood in the Door that looked towards the Downs; and my Lord Grey came into the Hall alone, and walked three or four times very thoughtfully, and then leaned upon the Window, and often looked upon the Ground, and within a little while he steps into the Steward's Hall, where the Gentlemen were at Dinner, and he calls to Charnock, who came out to him. He takes him out of the Hall to the Foot of the Stair-case, and there they talked together a great while, and after some time my Lord Grey went away, and Charnock did so too, I think to his Dinner again, I cannot tell any thing to the contrary. The Reflection I made upon this Passage then was, That my Lord Grey was very punctual in giving his Servant Orders, which I thought he was to carry to London with him, but I suspected nothing of this matter, nor any thing else that was ill then. Mr. Charnock then passing by me, said I, Mr. Charnock, How long will it be before you are going? He made me no Answer, not one word. Thereupon I went into the Library, and between that and Mr. Charnock's Chamber there was but a very thin Wall, and presently after I came into the Library, my Lord Grey sent one (as the Messenger said) for Mr. Charnock, and he went down to him, as I suppose, and in a little time came up again. And after that, I do believe I did hear another Messenger come from him to Mr. Charnock again, I will not swear that, for I am not sure of it; because, being at that time busy in reading, I made no Reflection upon it till afterwards. But about a Fortnight or three Weeks after, there comes a Gentleman to see me at my Lodgings, and falling into discourse what News there was; our first Discourse was of the Lady's being missing; he said, it would be sad he feared when she was heard of. Why, said I, what do you mean? I suppose Mr. Forrester and she are together, for that was the talk of the Town. No, said he, it is no such thing; but if you will make it a Secret, unless it comes to be made a publick Business, I will tell you; I do not doubt my Lord Grey carried her away with a design to debauch her. That is hard to be believed, said I, I cannot believe it. Why, said he, you were there when he went away? Yes, said I, but how long was that before the Lady was missing? said he, It was that Afternoon. Then came into my mind his earnest discourse with Charnock, and that which I observed about it, and the sending so often for him; and I told that Person of it. Why Charnock, said he, was the Man that took her away.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who was it that said so to you, Sir? Name him.

Mr. ——— Mr. Rogers, my Lord Berkeley's Chaplain.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If your Lordship please to observe the particular times, when my Lord Grey was so earnest in giving Charnock Directions, that was on the Saturday at Noon, and it was that Night the young Lady went away.

L. C. J. When came my Lord Grey to my Lord Berkeley's?

Mr. At. Gen. The Tuesday or Wednesday before, I think, some Days it was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But upon the Saturday Night it was she went away; this unfortunate Lady that we have produced, her Mother, and so the Lady her Sister, spoke both of their Fears of Charnock. Now we shall prove, that this Charnock was on the Sunday Morning, at eight of the Clock in the Morning here in London, with a young Lady, in what Habit that young Lady was, our Witnesses will tell you; and others will give you an account what Habit this Lady went away in, and then it will be seen who she was. Call Eleanor Hilton.

Mr. At. Gen. But if you please, Mr. Serjeant, I think it will be proper first to examine my Lady Lucy, who upon the missing this young Lady followed my Lord Grey to Guilford, and overtaking him, acquainted him with it, and immediately he took Post and came to London. Pray swear my Lady Lucy.

[Which was done, she being in a Box by the Bar.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask that Lady?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We produce her, my Lord, to hear what pass'd between her and my Lord Grey at Guilford. Pray, Madam, will your Ladyship acquaint the Court what occasion you had to go to Guilford, and what you said to my Lord Grey, and what he said to you, and did afterwards.

Lady Lucy. My Lord, as soon as my Lady Harriett was missing, supposing my Lord Grey could best give an account where she was, I went after him to Guilford, and he was gone half an hour from thence before I came thither, but by sending Post after him, he was overtaken, and came back to me. I told him my Lady Harriett was gone away, and I conjured him by all that was sacred and dear to him, to prevent so great a Misfortune as this would be to the Family. He then pretended he did not know any thing of her going, but promised me, that if he could find her out, he would endeavour to perswade her to return Home, but he would not force her. After several Discourses, which it is impossible for me to remember particularly (saying that he had done nothing that was illegal, and if she did not any thing, we could do nothing against him;) He at last parted from me, to go to London, as I suppose. I begged of him that I might be permitted to go along with him, that I might speak to her, supposing I might retrieve this Business, and recover her, before it were gone too far, but he denied it me, and went away. After that I met him, a Day or two after, I think, I cannot tell justly the time, and he pretended, he did not know where she was, but only he knew where to send to her; and he would do all he could to get her to return Home. He was sensible of what a Misfortune this was to the Family. But soon after, he went to Up-Park again, as he said, to shew us that he was not with her. And he afterwards writ me a Letter, wherein he says, he could not perswade her to come Home, but the Conclusion of it was, "He would do all "he could to restore Peace and Quiet to the "Family, which by his Follies were so miserably disturbed.

Lady Arabella. My Lord, I desire to speak one thing. About six Weeks ago I met my Lord Grey at my Lord Chief Justice's Chamber, and he told me, he had my Lady Harriett Berkeley in his Power, or in his Protection, or to that effect, he said.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell, Madam, when that was?

Lady Arabella. About six Weeks ago, I cannot justly say the Day.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But if your Ladyship pleases, my Lady Lucy, it will very much satisfy the Jury, if you would shew the Letter you speak of.

Mr. Williams. Ay, pray Madam, shew the Letter.

Lady Lucy. It was a Letter before that which he writ to me at Durdants.

L. C. J. When was that Letter you speak of written?

Lady Lucy. About a Week after my Sister was gone, I cannot exactly remember the Day.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you produce that Letter?

Lady Lucy. No, I have it not here.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then swear Eleanor Hilton.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is your Name Eleanor Hilton?

Mrs. Hilton. Yes, it is, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray speak out, that my Lord and the Jury may hear you. Do you remember the 20*th* of August last? Did Charnock come to your House with a young Lady? Did you see her, and what time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Hilton. I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Day of the Week was it?

Hilton. It was on a Sunday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Month was it in?

Hilton. I cannot tell, truly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. About what time of the Year was it?

Hilton. About eight or nine Weeks ago, or something more.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Well, what did you see then?

Hilton. There was a young Lady that came to our House, she came of her self, Charnock he was not with her; he came before indeed, and asked me if I had any Room to spare, and I shewed him what we had; he went away, and I saw no more of him; afterwards, as I said, she came; but who she was, or what she was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you describe her Cloaths?

Hilton. She had a Coloured Night-gown on, of several Colours; I cannot say what particular Stuff it was: And she had a Petticoat on White and Red.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you see her Face?

Hilton. I cannot say I did fully.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you think you should know her again, if you should see her?

Hilton. I cannot say that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. (to the Lady Harriett) Pray, Madam, will you stand up a little, and turn up your Hood. [Which she did.

Hilton. Truly, I cannot say that is the Lady.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you believe it was she?

Hilton. I cannot say it, truly.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you seen her Picture since, and is this Lady like that Picture?

Hilton. Mr. Attorney. She says, she cannot say it is the same Lady.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mistress, to what purpose was she brought to your House?

Hilton. They did not tell me that.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it not to lodge there?

Hilton. She staid there but a while, and went away again.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did she go then?

Hilton. To one Patten's in Wild-street.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You went with her, Mistress, Did not you?

Hilton. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, was there any Letter or Note brought to your House for Charnock?

Hilton. Yes, I brought it to Mrs. Charnock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you hear any Reason given for her Removal from your House?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray did she go to Bed at your House?

Hilton. She did lie down.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What time of the Day was it?

Hilton. About nine or ten a Clock in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, did she say she had been at Church, or what did she say?

Hilton. She said somewhat to that purpose, she said she was weary.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What Company came to the Lady, while she was at your House?

Hilton. No body but Mrs. Charnock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you see Mrs. Charnock in her Company?

Hilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You saw her come in to her?

Hilton. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did she behave her self to her, as to a Lady of Quality?

Hilton. I cannot tell that, truly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Why, how did she carry it to her?

Hilton. Whether she was in Bed or no, I cannot tell; but when she came in, the young Lady said, How do you Mrs. Charnock? She said, Your Servant, Madam, or to that purpose, I cannot exactly tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You brought the Note to Mrs. Charnock, you say?

Hilton. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did she stay at Mrs. Patten's after that?

Hilton. I suppose she might.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray recollect your self a little, and tell us what Colour was her Manteau?

Hilton. Truly, it was all manner of Colours, Red, and Green, and Blue, and I cannot tell what Colours.

Mr. At. Gen. What coloured Petticoat?

Hilton. Red and White.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long after this, did you hear my Lord Berkeley's Daughter was missing?

Hilton. A while after.

Mr. At. Gen. How long? Was it that Week?

Hilton. I cannot tell, it was not long after.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the same Lady that came to your House in those Cloaths, that went to Patten's at Night?

L. C. J. Why, she says she went with her, do not examine her the same things over again.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you examined before Sir William Turner, about this Matter?

Hilton. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the Day of the Month you then said it was?

Hilton. I suppose it might; I cannot tell the Day of the Month.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the Month?

Hilton. It is like it was.

L. C. J. She has fix'd it now to be about eight or nine Weeks ago.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did she give any Reason why she was removed?

Hilton. None at all.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now, my Lord, we will bring it down to be this very Lady. My Lady Arabella, Pray, Madam, what Cloaths did my Lady Harriett go away in?

Lady Arabella. My Lady Harriett had such Cloaths as they speak of, I cannot say she went away in her Night-gown, but here is one that can: But there was a striped Night-gown, of many Colours, Green, and Blue, and Red.

L. C. J. She does remember she had such a one, but she cannot say she went away in it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was there not a Chequer'd Petticoat Red and White?

Lady Arabella. She had such a Petticoat, but I cannot say she went away in it; she had also a White Quilted Petticoat.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then swear Mrs. Doney (which was done.) My Lord, we call this Gentlewoman to gave an account what Habit she went away in; for she lay with her always.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you lie with my Lady Harriett Berkeley, when she stole away?

Mrs. Doney. Yes indeed, Sir, I did lie in the Chamber that Night, and she went away with her Morning Cloaths, which lay ready for her there, against she did rise in the Morning. It was a striped Night-gown of many Colours, and a Petticoat of White and Red, and a Quilted Petticoat.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Was ſhe ſo habited, that came to the Houſe, Mrs. Hilton?

L. C. J. She has ſaid ſo already.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now you are pleaſed to obſerve, that beſides the Circumſtance of the Cloaths, there is mention made of a Note; Mrs. Hilton ſays ſhe received a Letter and gave it to Mrs. Charnock; and that ſoon after they went to Patten's Houſe in Wild-ſtreet. We ſhall call the People of that Houſe, to give an account what Gentlewoman it was that came to their Houſe. Pray ſwear Mr. Patten.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether Mr. Charnock and his Wife came to your Houſe, and with whom, and about what?

Mr. Patten. My Lord, about the latter end of July, or the beginning of Auguſt, Mr. Charnock and his Wife came to my Houſe when we were juſt removed, to take ſome Lodgings for a Perſon of Quality; but they did not ſay who. Said I then, We have no Lodgings now ready; ſaid they, We ſhall not want them yet, till towards the middle of September. Says my Wife, I ſuppoſe by that time our Houſe will be ready; and if it will do you any kindneſs you may have it. About the 20*th* of Auguſt, being Sunday, Mrs. Hilton brings a Gentlewoman with Mrs. Charnock, to my Houſe; and when they were come, they called me up, and ſeeing them all three there, I told Mrs. Charnock, We have no Lodgings fit for any body of any Quality, at preſent. Says Mrs. Hilton, Let's ſee the Candle, and runs up ſtairs into a Room where there was a Bed, but no Hangings; when they came in, they locked themſelves into the Room. My Wife's Daughter being in the Houſe, I deſired her to ſend for my Wife, who was then abroad; which ſhe did. They deſired my Wife's Daughter to lodge with the Gentlewoman that they brought thither, and they were making the Bed ready. I ſent them up word, That I deſired they would walk into the Dining-room for the preſent; they ſent me word down again, They did not deſire to do that, for they were afraid the Light would be ſeen into the Street; and withal, if any body came to enquire for Mrs. Charnock or Mrs. Hilton, I ſhould ſay there was no body there. Preſently after, I think (or before, I cannot juſtly ſay which) a Letter was carried up ſtairs to them, upon which they came down ſtairs, and away they went up the Street, and when they were gone a little way on foot, Mrs. Charnock deſired them to turn back again, for ſhe hoped to get a Coach, and ſhe did ſo, and went away.

Mr. At. Gen. So they did not lodge there?

Mr. Patten. No, they did not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did they ſay any thing of care that was to be taken, how they paſs'd by my Lady Northumberland's?

Mr. Patten. My Lord, I do not well remember that: But the next day Mrs. Hilton comes again to our Houſe, and ſhe runs up Stairs into the ſame Room, and ſits her down upon the Bed-ſide. Said I to her, Mrs. Hilton, What Gentlewoman was that that was here laſt Night? Says ſhe, I cannot tell, but I believe ſhe is ſome Perſon of Quality, for Mrs. Charnock brought her to our Houſe at ſeven a Clock in the Morning. But whoever ſhe is, ſhe is much troubled, we could get her to eat nothing, but her Eyes were very Red with Crying, and we came away to your Houſe at Night; becauſe hearing ſome noiſe of People in the Street, ſhe was afraid ſome of her Father's Servants were come, but it was only ſome People that were gathered about to obſerve the Blazing Star. So we whip'd out of the Door, and ſo came to your Houſe, for we had never a Back-door out of our own.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an Account what Habit the Gentlewoman was in that came to your Houſe.

Mr. Patten. She had a Striped Flower'd Gown, very much ſullied, it was flung about her, juſt as if ſhe had newly come out of Bed. I did ſee her Face, But when I had juſt looked upon her, ſhe clapped her Hood together over it preſently.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you think you ſhould know her again if you ſee her?

Mr. Patten. I believe I might.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Madam, ſtand up again, and lift up your Hood.

[Which ſhe did.

Mr. Patten. This is the Lady. I ſaw her Face twice, once as I told you, and then when ſhe went away, I dop'd down and peep'd up, and looked her in the Face again, tho' ſhe hid it as much as ſhe could.

Mr. At. Gen. Thus we have proved it upon Charnock and his Wife.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He gives an Account of the 20*th* of Auguſt, which was the Day after ſhe went from her Father's Houſe. Pray call Mrs. Fletcher.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall now prove, that they went from thence to one Jones's; that my Lord Grey came there to take Lodgings, and after ſhe was brought came thither again, and tho' he changed his Hair into a Perriwig, yet he was known for all his Diſguiſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, you ſee that it is proved upon three of the Defendants, my Lord Grey, and Charnock, and his Wife; now we ſhall prove it upon the other two, the Jones's. Swear Mary Fletcher. [Which was done.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sweetheart, pray tell the Court, where you lived, and when my Lord Grey came to your Houſe; tell the time as near as you can, and the Day of the Week?

Fletcher. Sir, he came to David Jones's on the Tueſday after my Lady Berkeley was miſſing.

L. C. J. Where does David Jones live?

Fletcher. At Charing-Croſs juſt over-againſt the Statue. And living there, my Lord Grey came there in a Hackney-Coach, firſt on the Monday without a Perriwig, or any thing of that, and deſired Mr. Jones to come to the Coach-ſide, which he did, and after a little Diſcourſe with Mr. Jones, they came both into the Houſe, and went up two pair of ſtairs to look upon Lodgings. After that, I had order to make ready the Room for ſome Lodgers who were expected to come that Night, but did not till the next Day. About Tueſday at Nine of the Clock, my Lord Grey comes again in a Coach to the Door, and threw his Cloak over his Face, he was then without his Perriwig too, and deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Jones: I and my Fellow Servant ſtanding at the Door, he deſir'd to ſpeak with my Maſter. I went to him and told him, and he came up, and after he had been at the Coach-ſide, he bid us go down, and keep down in the Kitchen, and would not let us come up any more.

more. And afterwards, my Fellow-Servant and I were bid to go to Bed, and my Miſtreſs ſhut up the Shop-windows herſelf.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Well, go on, what happen'd after that?

Maid. Afterwards there was the Warming-pan, and the Candleſtick, and other things were carried up into the Chamber by my Miſtreſs's Siſter. Says my Fellow-Servant, There is ſome great Stranger ſure, come to lodge here, that we muſt not know of. Ay, ſaid I, this is ſome great Intrigue or other. After a while came in ſome Company that ſtayed all Night. I know not who they were, nor how they came.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Well, what was done the next Morning?

Maid. I was never admitted into the Room while they were there, but through the opening of the Door I did ſee one Lady in Bed, but I cannot ſay who ſhe was, nor what ſhe was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know her if you ſee her again? Look at that Lady; is that ſhe?

Maid. No, I do not know her; I cannot ſay that is ſhe: My Miſtreſs, and my Miſtreſs's Siſter ſtood both before me, when I juſt peep'd into the Room, and when ſhe perceiv'd that, I did ſee her pull the Cloaths over her Face.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did ſhe ſtay there?

Maid. Nine Nights.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you know my Lord Grey well?

Maid. Yes, I have ſeen him often.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And did you know him notwithſtanding his Diſguiſe?

Maid. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did Mrs. Jones ſay to you about my Lord Grey?

Maid. She ſaid to us, What Fools were we, to ſay this was my Lord Grey, it was a Country Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But you are ſure it was my Lord Grey?

Maid. Yes, I am ſure it was he.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any Body elſe lodge at your Houſe at that time.

Maid. Yes, Captain Fitz-Gerrard.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you with him about this Lady?

Mr. Williams. You, Woman, did my Lord Grey ſtay there?

Maid. I cannot ſay he did.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, if the Queſtion you ask, be to introduce another part of your Evidence from Captain Fitz-Gerrard himſelf, it may be ſomething; otherwiſe that can be no Evidence againſt the Defendants, what Diſcourſe was with another.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is ſo, my Lord, And therefore we ask you, Sweetheart, what paſt between you and the Captain?

Maid. Captain Fitz-Gerrard, the Monday Morning ſeven-night, after my Lord Grey firſt came, called me to his Bed-ſide, and asked me if I knew what Lady that was that lodged in the Houſe, and what Cloaths ſhe wore, and whether ſhe were Young or Old, and whether ſhe were married or no? I told him, I could not tell any thing, for I could never ſee her.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you know what Linnen ſhe brought with her? Did you waſh any for her?

Maid. Yes, one Shift.

Mr. At. Gen. What kind of Shift was it?

Maid. I ſaid, It could be no Perſon of Quality, by her Shift.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Why ſo?

Maid. Becauſe the Body was finer than the Sleeves, and Ladies uſe to make the Sleeves finer than the Body.

[At which there was ſome laughing.

Mr. Williams. A very pretty Evidence!

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray call Mrs. Doney again, becauſe you ſhall not make ſo ſlight a buſineſs of the Shift as you pretend, for ſuch Actions as theſe muſt be detected by Circumſtances.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Doney, pray did you ſhew this Woman another of my Lady Harriett Berkeley's Shifts?

Mrs. Doney. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was it the fellow of that ſhe went away with?

Mrs. Doney. Yes, it was.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Woman, do you believe, upon your Oath, that was the fellow of the Shift you ſaw?

Maid. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was the Body of that you ſaw from this Gentlewoman, finer than the Sleeves?

Maid. Yes, it was.

Mr. At. Gen. Then pray Swear Captain Fitz-Gerrard. [which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir, will you tell the Court and the Jury, what Paſſages fell out at your Lodgings?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. My Lord, It was my Fortune, ſix Months ago, to take a Lodging at Mr. Jones's, and while I kept my Lodgings there, I had occaſion ſometimes to go to Windſor, to wait upon His Majeſty; and one Night coming home to my Lodging, my Servant that waits upon me in my Chamber, told me, there was a Lodger lately come to the Houſe, who lay in the upper Rooms. I asked who it was, he told me, the Maid of the Houſe told him it was a Miſtreſs of my Lord Grey's. I asked how long ſhe had been there, he ſaid it was but two or three Days ſince ſhe came. I never thought of this for four or five Days after, nor thought my ſelf obliged to take notice of the Diſcourſe of the Servant in the Houſe; but being in Covent-Garden in Company, there was ſome Diſcourſe about my Lady Harriett Berkeley's being gone from her Father's, as it was the talk of the Town. I came home about Nine a Clock at Night, and having no Servant juſt then ready to wait upon me, Mr. Jones himſelf came very kindly to put me to Bed. I had ſome Fancy, upon the Diſcourſe of the Town, this might be my Lady Harriett. Upon which, I ſaid to Mr. Jones, You cannot but hear of the Report of my Lady Berkeley's being run away from her Father, and I know you have a Dependence upon my Lord Grey, and I have a Suſpicion you conceal her in your Houſe. If you do, ſaid I, you do a very diſhoneſt thing, a very ill thing, and occaſion a great deal of trouble and diſquiet to a Noble Family. And poſſibly my Lord and my Lady may not know ſhe is alive; therefore, I deſire you as a Friend, to make a diſcovery of the Lady, that they may know where ſhe is. He ſeemed very angry upon my ſaying of this, and told me, As long as I lodged in his Houſe quietly, I need not trouble my ſelf who lodged there beſides. Upon that I thought more earneſtly upon this thing; and I told him again, I am reſolved to go into the Room, and know who

this

this Lady is that lies here, for now I ſuppoſe there is ſomething more in it. Says he again, No Body ſhall offer ſuch a Rudeneſs in my Houſe. Said I, I aſſure you I will do it. He grew very angry, but I went from him to my Sword, and was going up. Says he, Pray, Mr. Fitz-Gerrard, do not offer ſuch a thing as this is; you would take it unkindly your ſelf, to have your Houſe ſearched at this time of Night. Well, ſaid I, upon Condition that I may ſee her to morrow Morning before ſhe goes away, who ſhe is, I will make no diſturbance in your Houſe to Night. Upon that he left the Room, promiſing me, I ſhould to morrow Morning ſee who the Lady was. I went out early the next Morning, upon ſome neceſſary Buſineſs, and coming home between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, ſaid I to him, Now is a very civil time to ſee this Lady, who ſhe is, for it is not fit you ſhould receive any Perſon into your Houſe, in ſuch Circumſtances, when there is ſuch Cauſe of a Suſpicion. Says he, She is now gone out of the Houſe. And this is all that I can ſay in this Matter. I never ſaw the Lady there then, nor did I ever ſee her in my Life, but once or twice at Epſom.

L. C. J. Did they lock the Door upon you, Captain?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. No, they did not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And you know nothing more?

Capt. Fitz-Gerrard. I neither knew when ſhe came, nor who ſhe was.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Smith here, who married one of my Lord Berkeley's Daughters.

[Which was done.

Mr. Smith. Before my Lord Berkeley made this Affair publick, he uſed all means poſſible to know where my Lady Harriett was; and after it was known to him what concern my Lord Grey had in it, there were all Means uſed to make it up: And diſcourſing with my Lady Berkeley about it, it was propoſed that ſhe ſhould be married, but that would coſt a great deal of Money; that my Lord did not ſtick at, nor my Lady, if any Divine of the Church of England did think it proper to treat with any Perſon about it, after ſuch a ſecret Correſpondence between her and my Lord Grey. And my Lord ſaid, If my Lord Grey would not proſecute her with any more Viſits, he would give a Sum of Money to marry her. Said I, Then, my Lord, will you give me leave to wait upon my Lord Grey in it? He anſwered, Yes. So I went to him, and offered him that my Lord Berkeley would give 6000 l. with her, if he would place her in a third Hand, where it might be convenient to treat with any one about it. He talked with me as if he knew where ſhe was, but would not diſcover it. Says he, You muſt always ſuppoſe, I will take your Propoſal in this manner, if ſhe is in my Power, which it may be ſhe is, it may be not. Said I, My Lord, you make that (if) only as a Subterfuge, for to be ſure, you know where ſhe is. Says he, She is beyond Seas, and if you will give me leave to viſit her ſometimes, I will promiſe ſhe ſhall come again; but that depends upon Time and Tide, it cannot be ſo very ſoon. Said I, My Lord, you may as well ſend Horſes to Dover, and ſo over to Calais, for I ſuppoſe ſhe may not be far. He ſaid, it would be a Work of Time, but he would write to her. I deſired he would write that Night. For, ſaid I, my Lord, if this Buſineſs be taken in time, ſhe may yet be ſaved, if you will contribute what you can to it. He promiſed me to write that Night to her, but it would be ſome time before ſhe got to Town. Then, diſcourſing further with my Lord about it. Says he, If I ſhould bring her to Town, I will not uſe any Force or Perſuaſion to her, if ſhe be obſtinately bent not to come home again, Betray her to be ſure I will not. I am ſure, my Lord, ſaid I, that your Perſuaſions would do very much with her, and a great deal of good may come of it, if the Matter be ſpeeded. But, ſays he, if I ſhould bring her to Town, then my Lord Berkeley would diſturb her with my Lord Chief Juſtice's Warrant. Said I, If you will bring her to Town, I will ask my Lord and my Lady, how long time they will allow for the making up of this Treaty; and in the mean time, ſhe ſhall be free from any diſturbance. Says my Lady Berkeley, when I ſpoke to her of it, Tho' my Lord Grey has been ſo barbarous to a Family, that has been ſo kind to him; yet, if I give him my word, I will keep it inviolably to him; and I do promiſe him, if he will bring her to any place where my Daughter Lucy may viſit her, I will engage there ſhall be no Search made after her. And if he can contribute to carry her into a Place where ſhe may be ſafe, and not viſit her himſelf, he ſhall have 2000 l. to do it. This Meſſage of my Lord's being barbarous, Madam, ſaid I, is not fit for me to carry to my Lord Grey, but you will promiſe not to take her away, if he bring her to Town, but from the moment you know where ſhe is, ſhe ſhall be ſafe. Thereupon my Lord Grey promiſed to write to her, whether he did or not, I cannot tell. Afterwards, he ſaid he had writ, but ſhe would not come.

Mr. At. Gen. What Expence has my Lord been at in looking after her?

Mr. Smith. A great Expence, I cannot tell particularly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, we have but one Witneſs more, and that is a Gentleman, who, by Order from my Lord and Lady Berkeley, kept my Lord Grey Company, and he will tell your Lordſhip what my Lord Grey confeſſed to him, what a Paſſion he had for the Lady, and what methods he uſed to get rid of it, but could not. Swear Mr. Craven. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you were ſent by my Lord Berkeley, to be with my Lord Grey at Up-Park, and what paſs'd there between you?

Mr. Craven. My Lord, the Wedneſday after my Lady Harriett Berkeley went away, my Lady Berkeley told me, my Lord Grey had proffered he would go down into the Country for ſix Months, to ſhew that he had no Deſigns upon her; and therefore, if ſhe would propoſe ſome Friend of hers to go along with him to keep him Company, he would be very well ſatisfied with it; and then my Lady Berkeley told me, ſhe would fix upon no body but me, if he would take me with him. Then I met my Lord Grey on Wedneſday Morning at Sir Thomas Armſtrong's, and afterwards, went down to his Houſe to him. When I came there, he met me on Horſeback, and came up civilly and kindly to me. I thought fit to give him a Caution, having received ſuch Orders from my Lady. My Lord, ſaid I, I am ſorry I am forc'd to come upon ſuch an account as this, to be a Guard over your Words and Actions, and I am very much troubled that this unfortunate thing has happen'd, and you are reputed to be the Occaſion of it. Says he, I do own, Craven, I have done a very ill thing; but that is paſt, I cannot help that now; but the thing that is to be thought on is, what is to be done for the future. My Lord, ſaid I, the beſt way, if I may give you my Advice, were to ſend her home again,

again before any Report be ſpread abroad of the Buſineſs. How can that be? Says he, I do not know where ſhe is, but I have had a Letter from her, as I told my Lady, I did believe I ſhould find a Letter here when I came down. I will ſhew you the Letter, which he did. My Lord, ſaid I, this Letter will be thought as of your own penning before you came out of Town. I cannot tell what they will think, ſaid he, but here it is. Said I, My Lord, I have a great Reſpect for your Lordſhip, and do very much deſire, for your own Reputation and Honour, as well as theirs, it may be made up in ſome way before it be too publick. We were diſcourſing of this. How ſhall that be done? ſays my Lord Grey. My Lord, ſaid I, if you would conſent to this, to ſend her over into France to Calais or Diep, we will there find ſome body that will help her into a Nunnery; and when ſhe is there, ſhe may write to her Mother, that ſhe found ſhe had an Intention to marry her to a Match ſhe could not by any means approve or like of, and therefore ſhe went away to prevent her being forced to it; and this would be as plauſible a thing as any in the World. And when that Letter ſhould come, my Lady Berkeley ſhould ſhew it about to her Friends; nay more, ſhe ſhould go over her ſelf to fetch her back again, that ſhe might receive her into her Houſe with Honour. He ſaid, That was a very plauſible thing, and he would do it, if he could tell where ſhe was; but her Letter to him was, that ſhe was gone from her Father, but ſhe did not think fit to let him know where ſhe was, for fear he ſhould deliver her up again. Then my Lord Grey asked me in what Condition they were all at my Lord Berkeley's about it. Said I, They are in ſuch a Confuſion and Trouble they are all Mad almoſt. Says he, How does my Lord bear it? Said I, He is ſo afflicted that it will go near to break his Heart. Says he, He is indeed one of the Men in the World that is to be pittied; ſhe pittieth him very much, but for her Mother ſhe doth not care. One Day when we went out a Shooting, as we did ſeveral Days together; Mr. Craven, ſays he, I will tell you the whole Intrigue between my Lady Harriett and I. I have had a great Affection for her ever ſince ſhe was a Child, and have always been taking great delight in her Company; and keeping her Company ſo often till ſhe grew up, my Paſſion grew to that height, that I could ſtifle it no longer, but I was forced to tell her of it, and then I could not ſpeak to her of it, but writ. But withal I begged her to take no notice of it to any Body, for if ſhe did, it would ruin us both. She was very angry to hear of it, and neither by writing nor ſpeaking could I perceive ſhe had any Affection for me again, till the Parliament ſat at Oxford; and then I did purſue my Love and my Amours, and at laſt, ſhe one Day told me, ſaid ſhe, I have now conſider'd of it, and if you do not leave writing or ſpeaking to me of this Matter, the very firſt time you write or ſpeak to me again I will tell my Father and Mother of it. That ſtruck him ſo, he ſaid, that he did not know almoſt what to ſay or what to do, and he walked up and down juſt like a Ghoſt; but he bid it as well as he could, that it ſhould not be perceived by others. But that Parliament being quickly diſſolved, he did intend to go down to Suſſex to his Houſe there, being he found ſhe was reſolved againſt admitting his Affection, and he would ſtay there ſeveral Years, till he had weaned himſelf of his Paſſion, and by that time ſhe would be diſpoſed of otherwiſe, and he might be at Eaſe. And he hiding his trouble as much as he could from my Lord Berkeley and my Lady, forbore to ſpeak to her, but only when he ſaw her he could not forbear looking earneſtly upon her and being troubled. My Lord Berkeley, not knowing any thing of it, asked him to go to London with us and not to Suſſex; he was very much perſuaded by my Lord and my Lady to it; and at laſt, my Lady Harriett Berkeley came to him, and told him, Said ſhe, You are very much perſuaded by my Father and Mother to go to London and not to Up-Park, why do not you go with them? Madam, ſays he, you have ſtopp'd my Journey to London, you have hindred my going with them, for I will rather ſuffer any thing than render you any diſturbance, and if I go to London with you, I ſhall not be able to contain my ſelf; but if I go to Suſſex, I alone ſhall have the trouble of it. But one day, when my Lord of Aylesbury was leading my Lady Berkeley, and my Lord Grey was leading my Lady Harriett, ſhe took my Lord Grey's Hand and ſqueez'd it againſt her Breaſt, and there was the firſt time he perceiv'd ſhe lov'd him again; and then ſhe told him he ſhould go to London with them; and he did go, and from that time, for a twelve-month before ſhe went away, he did ſee her frequently, almoſt every Night, perſuing his Amour in writing and ſpeaking to her as often as he could have Opportunity. And tho' my Lady Berkeley put a French-Woman to lie with her, yet ſhe did uſe to riſe from the French-Woman, and he did uſe to ſee her. And one Day, ſays he, do not you remember you came to the Chamber Door, and ſhe was angry at your coming, and that the Door was not bolted, and if you had come in, you had found me there?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember any ſuch thing?

Mr. Craven. I do not, unleſs it were at Durdants. And, ſays he, you cannot imagine what I have ſuffered to come to ſee her. I have been two Days locked up in her Cloſet without Meat or Drink, but only ſome Sweetmeats.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did he ſay of his making Addreſſes to other Ladies to take off his Paſſion?

Mr. Craven. He ſaid, He did all he could, for he would fain have avoided bringing ſuch an Infamy upon his own Family and his Lady's, and he did endeavour to cool his Paſſion, by making Love to two other Ladies, whom he courted, and enjoyed both of them, but yet all did ſignify nothing, he could not ſubdue it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell us what Terms he inſiſted upon, for his parting with her, and what he ſaid the Law was in the Caſe?

Mr. Craven. I told him, my Lord, beſides the Diſhonour you bring upon your ſelf and two Noble Families, you ſhould do all that in you lies, to avoid the Puniſhment that will come upon you for it by the Law. Oh, ſays he, you miſtake your ſelf in that, for you muſt think I have conſider'd of all that before; they cannot do any thing in Law againſt me for it; let them examine the Caſe of Mrs. Heneage and my Lord Cavendiſh.

Mr. At. Gen. What, did he ſay he would not part with her but upon Terms?

Mr. Craven. He ſaid, I cannot perſwade her, and I will not betray her. Truly, ſaid I, My Lord, you had better betray her, and when ſhe comes to be ſenſible of her own good, ſhe will thank you for it. Then he owned he had her in his Power, but would not part with her never to ſee her again.

Mr. At. Gen. What were the Terms he ſtood upon?

Mr. Craven. My Lady Berkeley ſent me to the Coffee houſe, and deſired me to ask him, If he would give her an Anſwer to what ſhe had met him at my Lord Chief Juſtice's about. My Lord told me,

He did not approve of ſending her to the place propoſed, but he would ſend her to his own Siſter, his Brother in Law Mr. Nevil's. I told my Lady of it, who ſaid, if he did ſtate the Caſe right to Mr. Nevil, ſhe was ſure he would not receive her, nor let him come to her if he did. After that, Mr. Petit's was propoſed, ſo he might viſit her. But he did ſay, If that be the Deſign, that they would have her from me, and I not to come at her when I pleaſe, they ſhall never ſee her while they live, nor will I ever deliver her.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We reſt here, to know what they on the other hand ſay to it, and we think this Foul Fact is fully proved.

Lord Cavendiſh. My Lord Chief Juſtice, I deſire to be heard one word in this Matter. This Gentleman, Mr. Craven, that was laſt examined, has been pleaſed to tell a very long improbable Story in it ſelf, and amongſt other things that he has ſaid, he has been pleaſed to make uſe of my Name impertinently enough; for he ſpeaks of a Caſe that that Noble Lord, he ſays, was pleas'd to mention to him. If he did mention that Caſe to him, and did name my Name, he alſo mentions the Caſe of two Ladies, he ſays, my Lord was concerned with. I deſire to know how he came to name my Name, and not name the two Ladies he ſpeaks of, that that Noble Lord made his Courtſhip to and enjoy'd?

L. C. J. My Lord Cavendiſh, I could have wiſhed he had not named your Lordſhip, becauſe it was not at all to the purpoſe.

Lord Cavendiſh. My Lord, I am not concerned at it at all, more than at the Impertinency of his uſing my Name.

L. C. J. I could have wiſhed indeed, the Gentleman had ſpared your Lordſhip's Name.

Lord Cavendiſh. I deſire to know why my Name was mentioned more than the two Ladies Names?

Mr. Craven. My Lord Grey did not mention the two Ladies Names to me.

Lord Grey. No, nor my Lord Cavendiſh's neither, it is all a Lie.

Lord Cavendiſh. I will believe my Lord Grey's Word, more than I will his Oath.

L. C. J. That your Lordſhip may do if you pleaſe. But we muſt not do ſo here. Come, what ſay you to it on the other ſide?

Mr. Williams. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for my Lord Grey and the other Defendants. And that we may come cloſely to the Queſtion; I deſire I may firſt ſtate the Queſtion before you upon this Information, and then you will the better judge how far the Evidence that has been given, is pertinent to the Iſſue that you Gentlemen are to try. The Parts of the Information are theſe: That my Lord Grey, and the reſt of theſe Defendants, ſhould Conſpire together to Ruin and Deſtroy this Young Lady, and in the Execution thereof, to bring this their Conſpiracy to effect, they did often ſollicite and intice her to commit Adultery with my Lord Grey; and in proſecution of theſe their ill Purpoſes and Deſigns, ſhe was by Force and Arms taken away from the Cuſtody and Tuition of the Earl of Berkeley her Father, and being ſo taken away, my Lord Grey and the reſt of them, did procure her to live ſcandalouſly with my Lord Grey, in Whoredom and Adultery. Theſe are the Parts of the Charge, and the Queſtion is, whether we are Guilty of it. For the Evidence, I dare preſume to ſay, that they have not made any direct Proof of the Matter charged. On the other ſide, they have, I do agree, offer'd ſomething conjectural, upon which a Man may imagine and think what he will; but how far you are to conclude the Defendants Guilty, out of thoſe Preſumptions, muſt be left to you, I know you will very well conſider of it. It is plain, we are in a very tender Caſe; it is a Caſe of Honour on all ſides, and I have often heard it, and always believ'd it, That Perſons of Honour and Quality in the World, would rather loſe their Lives than their Honour. And I believe it is the Opinion of my Client, my Lord Grey, as well as of the Proſecutors in this Information. And therefore, you Gentlemen, I doubt not, will expect to have a clear Evidence to convict him of this Crime. And it is not only his Honour is concerned, but that alſo of another great, illuſtrious and noble Family, to which he is by Marriage allied. So that the acquitting of my Lord Grey of this Matter, doth, in a great meaſure, acquit the other Family of ſo great a Scandal. For that will falſify the Information, and by your Verdict you will remove thoſe Stains, that elſe may ſtick on both ſides. We are equally between the two Families, and your Conſideration will be, whether you will lay a Stain upon both of them, or acquit them both. Now there has been no proof againſt my Lord Grey, of any one point in the Information.——

L. C. J. No? Sure you are much miſtaken, it is a direct proof againſt my Lord Grey, I muſt tell the Jury ſo, and therefore apply your Defence to it as you can.

Mr. Williams. Truly, My Lord, I hope it is not, and our Caſe is beſt ſtated, by laying open the Truth of the Fact, and then the Matter will plainly appear. I cannot go about to juſtify the Paſſion and the Folly, for I may well call it ſo, of my Lord Grey and this Young Lady in this Caſe. It is misfortunate enough, to be accuſed of a thing of that Nature, and it may be a great deal worſe to be convicted. I ſhall agree there have been thoſe Tranſactions between them, that it may be, we cannot juſtify in ſtrictneſs every thing that my Lord Grey has done. But yet, we ſay he is not guilty of this Information. We do agree, there has been an extraordinary Paſſion, nay, I muſt ſay, a very unjuſtifiable one, between this Lady and my Lord Grey: But to conclude out of that, that becauſe there was ſuch an unreaſonable, unjuſtifiable, extraordinary Affection between them, therefore we muſt inferr and conclude him Guilty of this Information, is a very forced and unreaſonable Conſtruction; for there are Degrees in Love, and we muſt not conclude the worſt thing a Man can be guilty of, becauſe he is guilty of ſome Degree. Then, to come home to the Caſe of my Lord Grey, we ſhall prove, and give your Lordſhip and the Jury undeniable Satisfaction, that my Lord Grey is ſo far from having inveigled away this Young Lady, or being any way inſtrumental to the conveying her away, that he uſed all means he could to have prevented any thing of that Nature before, by diſcovering to my Lady Berkeley her Mother, my Lady Arabella, and my Lady Lucy, her Siſters, all Perſons of great Honour, and her neareſt Relations, that ſhe did intend to go away, by warning them, and giving them full Notice, that there might be ſuch an Intention in

in the young Lady? We ſhall prove likewiſe, that no Man in the World could do more, when ſhe was gone, to retrieve her. We ſhall make it out by undeniable Circumſtances, proved even by their own Witneſſes. It happen'd that my Lord Berkeley and his Family withdrew to a Country-Houſe of his near Epſom, in your County, Gentlemen. My Lady had ſome Jealouſy, as ſhe has been pleaſed to teſtify, that there might be ſome extraordinary Paſſion between my Lord Grey and the young Lady; having diſcovered it by ſome Letters, as ſhe hath given Evidence. My Lord Grey acquainted her with his Suſpicion, that ſhe intended to go away, and was ſo juſt, that he did not conceal any one thing that he knew; yea, to acquit himſelf that he had no ill deſign himſelf, and if ſhe did get away it was none of his Fault, he produc'd a Copy of a Letter of Admonition, which my Lord Grey himſelf had written to her: And when my Lady had heard his Advice about it, and his Counſel he gave her, ſhe ſaid, her Father could not have given her better Counſel. This was ſo early as July, in the beginning of Auguſt, my Lord Berkeley going down to his Country-Houſe at Epſom, and the Family removing thither. Then my Lord Grey was ſick here in Town; and in this Sickneſs of his, there was a Letter ſent to my Lord Grey from his Lady, deſiring him to come down to my Lord Berkeley's; but it ſeems he had been under ſome Engagement to my Lady Berkeley, not to come without her Leave, and having Regard to his Word paſt to my Lady, he would not do it. My Lady Berkeley, in a few Days after, ſent for him her ſelf, and therein thanks him that he was ſo juſt to his Word and Honour, that he would not come down without her Invitation. Upon Tueſday before this unhappy Lady went away from her Father's Houſe, my Lord Grey came to my Lord Berkeley's. When he came down, he was very kindly receiv'd by my Lord and my Lady. On the Thurſday following my Lady Berkeley acquaints my Lord Grey, that this young Lady had a deſign to leave her Father and Mother's Family, and run away. My Lord Grey was ſo frank with her, as to tell her; Madam, I have long ſuſpected ſuch a thing, as I have told you; but, Madam, your Daughter Harriett is all Day in your Eye, you may lock her up at Night, and ſecure her if you pleaſe. This was a timely Caution given before ſhe made her Eſcape. On the Friday following, comes a Letter from an unknown Hand to my Lady Berkeley, that intimated, That except they had a great Care of their Daughter, and a ſtrict Eye over her, ſhe and her Father ſhould not long enjoy her Company. My Lady Berkeley ſhews this Letter to my Lord Grey, ſays he, Madam, this is no more than what I have often told you, I have given you ſome Intimations already, and my Thoughts and Advice about it; and whoever it be that writ this Letter, I am afraid her Apprehenſions of ſome ill Uſage may put her upon ſome ſuch Deſign. And he repeated it again, Madam, let me caution and adviſe you, have her always in your Eye, and lock her up ſafe at Night. This was repeated over and over, to my Lady Lucy and my Lady Arabella. Thus it continued till Saturday, my Lord Grey reſolved to go to his Country-Houſe at Up-Park, and took his Leave of my Lord Berkeley and his Family accordingly, and went that Night to Guilford, and there he lay, and roſe the next Morning to go onwards of his Journey, but was purſued, it ſeems, by my Lady Lucy. For ſhe tells you, When this young Lady had left her Father's Family, ſhe immediately on the Sunday Morning came to Guilford, and ſent after my Lord, who was newly gone on his Way, and was found in his Way to his Houſe in Suſſex. Having received my Lady Lucy's Commands, he returns to Guilford, and there he had the firſt Notice given him of my Lady Harriett's Eſcape; ſays he to my Lady Lucy, This is no more than I have fairly warned you of before; had you taken my Counſel. Was ſhe lock'd up? No, ſaid ſhe, ſhe is gone away, and your Lordſhip muſt needs know where ſhe is, and therefore pray get her to return home again. Says my Lord Grey, I aſſure you, I know nothing at all of it, and to give you all the ſatisfaction I can in the World, I did not only warn you of it before, but I ſhall be as induſtrious as any of you all, you ſhall find, to recover her again. For that purpoſe, I will ſee if ſhe have croſſed the River, or is gone any other Way; and if I can make any Diſcovery, by Letter or any other way, I will ſend you word immediately, and I am ſo ſincere with you, that if any Letter come to your Family for me, I give free Liberty to my Lord and all his Family to open them themſelves, and ſee what is in them; and if I do receive any from her any other way, a true Copy of it ſhall be ſent; and more than all this, if my Lord be not ſatisfy'd with what I have ſaid, let my Lord or my Lady ſend, and ſet what Spy upon me and my Actions they pleaſe. And it ſeems he was taken at his Word, and they made choice of a very proper Gentleman, and you heard what Diſcoveries he has made, and how he has worded the Matter. For firſt he makes my Lord Grey at one time a very ſubtle Lover, full of all Intrigues, and one that could conceal all within himſelf, and yet (when it would do him ſo much Injury) ſo open, as abſolutely to unboſom himſelf to one that was an abſolute Spy upon him and his Actions, and tell him ſuch things, as no Man in the World ſure is ſuch a Fool as to tell another in his Circumſtances. But that I leave to the Jury (as my Lord Cavendiſh has ſaid) to conſider of the Impertinency of his long Story. When he had parted from my Lady Lucy he comes to London, and uſeth all the Diligence he could to find her out. On Wedneſday again he leaves London, when he could not find her, and goeth to his own Houſe: Upon Thurſday this Gentleman Mr. Craven comes thither to him. There he finds a Letter from my Lady Harriett, and becauſe he would be exact to his Word, he keeps a Copy of the Letter, and ſends the Original of it to my Lord Berkeley's. Now no Man will imagine, if he had ſuch an Intrigue with this Lady, as they would make the World believe, that he would ever have ſent ſuch a Letter out of his Cuſtody, which would have been a colourable Excuſe for him. Nay, we do not reſt here, but by the way we produce this Letter to this Gentleman, who it ſeems was our Guardian, and told him moreover, Here is my Anſwer to this Letter, and ſends a Copy of his Anſwer with the Letter from her to my Lady Berkeley. Then there comes a ſecond Letter, and he, according to his Word, diſcovers that, and there is not one Circumſtance in all his Carriage that doth accuſe him. After this ſecond Letter was imparted to my Lord Berkeley's Family, he continued a while at Suſſex, and afterwards when he returned to London he uſed all the means imaginable, for a Perſon that was ſo near concerned, in point of Relation, and in regard of his own Reputation, to have found her out, but could not. These are the Circumstances of my Lord Grey's particular Interest in this Matter, and when we have made out these Circumstances, we hope the World will believe him not Guilty. It seems the young Lady is now in Court; she is so just, it seems, as to come to do my Lord Right, and that one thing will knock all their Conjectures on the head; for she best knows what has been done, and the Jury will consider, whether this be imaginable, that my Lord Grey should conceal her all this while, and produce her now, when if any Violence have been offered her, she may freely tell it. And as for the Man that could tell so very readily this was the very Lady that came to his House, when she had so hooded and muffled up her self, we must leave him and his Credit to the Jury. We shall therefore desire, when we come to the Close of our Evidence, that this young Lady may be here examined upon her Oath, and then I hope the Truth will come out.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, because your Lordship seems to be somewhat satisfied that there is a direct Proof of the Matter charged against my Lord Grey, therefore I suppose it will not be amiss to open the Fact, and in three words to state the Charge, and the nature of their Evidence to maintain it.——

L. C. J. Come, come, call your Witnesses and make out your Defence.

Mr. Just. Dolbin. If you can prove what Mr. Williams says, you do something, but do not think to make long Speeches, go on to the Evidence.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Thompson, do not you believe we want any of your Help to recollect the Evidence given, or to direct the Jury about it, do you disprove it if you can.

Mr. Thompson. My Lord, the Course of Practice I always took to be so, to open and observe upon the Evidence given, and then answer it. But I submit to your Lordship for that; you may do as you please.

Lord Grey. Then, my Lord, I desire I may speak something my self. Certainly, my Lord, no Man ever lay under a more infamous Accusation, than I now do; and therefore I hope your Lordship will pardon me, if I defend my self as well as I can from it; and undoubtedly, if in any Case a Man be allowed to speak for himself, it must be allowed to me in this. My Honour lies here at stake, and if my Life did so too, I am not, nor should be more concerned to save that, than I am to clear my Reputation, which is and ought to be very dear to me. My Lord, were I guilty of the Villanies that here are laid to my Charge, I certainly should need no other Punishment, I am sure, I could not have a worse, than the Reflections of my own Conscience for them, and I ought to be banish'd the Society of Mankind. My Lord, I must confess, I have been so unhappy (tho' it is more than they could else prove) as to have a very great Kindness for this unfortunate young Lady, my Lady Harriett Berkeley; but yet, not so criminal a one as the Witnesses that have been produc'd would have you to believe, nor as the Information would insinuate. I do here protest, I was no way assisting to her Escape, nor privy to it, nor have I ever at all since detained her from her Father, tho' I have suffer'd a Fortnight's close Confinement and Imprisonment for it; and all this I doubt not to make out to your Lordship's and the Jury's Satisfaction. I shall say no more of the Justice of my Cause, but endeavour to prove it; and, my Lord, this is that which I say to it. The Evidence that has been given, consists most of such and such Discourses that have been between the Witnesses and my self, and those I shall give what Answer is fit to be given to them. A Negative, as your Lordship very well knows, is not to be proved. Particular Discourses we have had, of the same nature as Mr. Williams has opened, about my cautioning them concerning her Attempts to go away; and I shall appeal to my Lady Berkeley her self, whether that be not so. If my Lady Berkeley own it to be true, I hope that is very good Proof. My Lord, about the time that they speak of, concerning the Letter, which I take to be in June or July, I was sent for by my Lady Berkeley into her Chamber; when I came there, my Lady told me there was a Letter, which she said, was design'd to go from her Daughter to me. I asked her, if she had read the Contents of the Letter, she said, No. I asked her, whether the Direction of the Letter were to me, she could not tell that. But my Lady had told me, her Daughter had given her the Account of what had pass'd between us, that she was satisfied there was a Correspondence of Love between us. To remove all Fears, I proffer'd to absent my self. I desire my Lady may answer whether this be not so.

L. C. J. That will be to intricate the Business, to go on thus. Pray, my Lord, if you will ask any Question of any body, tell them your Counsel, and let them ask them, but to make long Discourses all day is not to be permitted.

Lord Grey. My Lord, I will ask then my Questions all together by and by. My Lady Berkeley going down with my Lord to Durdants, desired that my Wife might go down with her, to which I readily consented. Soon after that, I fell sick and kept my Bed a while. When I was well again, and going into Sussex, I sent for my Wife to Town, and would not go fetch her, because I would keep my word with her Ladyship. My Lady Berkeley thereupon wrote me a Letter, wherein she thank'd me for not coming according to my Promise, and commended my Modesty in it; and said, There would be no apprehension of any ill from me, if I did come thither for a short time. And thereupon being invited by her Ladyship, to take her House in my way to Sussex, I did come down thither. And I urge this, to shew that there was no Conspiracy or Design of any such thing in me, for I had not gone to Durdants, if I had not been sent for, and so there was no Design in my going. When I came thither it was the Tuesday, and on the Thursday, my Lady Berkeley did acquaint me, she was under great Apprehensions and Fears; and I asked her the Reason of it. She told me, That she had been at some Ease, her Daughter having made a great Submission to her, and Promise of constant Obedience, and that she would do all as she would have her, if she would but give her Leave to go to Town with her; but yet, for all this, one Morning she puts on her Hoods and Scarfs, and was going away, and had done it, but that the French-Woman and another prevented it. I told my Lady Berkeley then, Madam, said I, I have good Reason to believe she may have some such Intention. I did not give my Reason ſon at that time, but I ſhall by and by. But, ſaid I, if ſhe do go away, I cannot imagine but that it is poſſible ſhe may ſend to me, and I will give your Ladyſhip notice as ſoon as ever I know; and tho' you ſeem to be ſatisfy'd, and to think your Daughter ſecure here, yet you do not think her ſo indeed, and you muſt needs uſe her ill, or ſhe would have no thoughts of going from you. For my part, if ſhe do go away and come to me, I will ſhun it as I would Death, and you have now fair warning, ſhe is all Day in your Eye, pray be ſure to lock her up ſafe at Night. Upon Friday following comes a Letter without a Name to it, and Mr. Williams has open'd to you the Contents of the Letter. She read the Letter when her Daughter was in the Room, who asked what the Letter was, and being denied to have any account of it, was in the greateſt Confuſion in the World, and leap'd and run down Stairs like a mad Thing, and my Lady her ſelf was very much diſturbed at it. When I ſaw the Letter, Madam, ſaid I, This Letter ought to confirm you in the Reſolution of taking my Advice; it can come from no Body, but ſome one that is to aſſiſt in the executing of this Deſign, but thinks it too dangerous to engage in, and gives you this warning to prevent it. You have ſufficient Caution given you to make you careful. Whereas, my Lord, If I had been in any ſort of Conſpiracy of that Nature, to take her away, my Lady Berkeley certainly ſhould have been the laſt Woman in the World that I would have communicated it to. My Lord, I went away from Durdants on the Saturday, and ſo to Guilford, where I lay that Night, and went on my Journey the next Morning, but was overtaken on the Road, by a Meſſenger from Lady Lucy, who was come to Guilford to ſpeak with me; when I came back to her, ſhe told me, my Lady Harriett was gone away that Night, and they did believe I knew where ſhe was. Said I, Madam, I have as great a Share in this Misfortune as any of you all, becauſe of your Suſpicion; but ſure you muſt have uſed her very ill and make her do this; and you are much to blame, when you had all that warning from me; why did you not ſecure her, and lock her up as I adviſ'd you? Said ſhe, She was lock'd up, but the Key was left in the Door. Upon this I went to London, and I had appointed my Lady Lucy to meet her on Monday Morning, to give an Account what I could learn; but I told her, that I had heard nothing of her, nor is there any Proof that I did ſee her at any time, till I own'd it before your Lordſhip at your Chamber. She ſeem'd not to believe me when I told her ſo. Madam, ſaid I, It is certainly true; and to convince you that I have no hand in this Matter, I will go immediately into Suſſex, and there I will ſtay as long as you will have me; and if you pleaſe to go your ſelf with me, or ſend any body elſe, to obſerve what I do. She thought it not fit for her ſelf to go with me: But my Lady Berkeley and ſhe afterwards pitch'd upon Mr. Craven, who had been a long time a Servant in the Family, and I agreed with my Lady in that, to have him, and receive him as a Spy upon me. Diſcourſing with my Lady Lucy, ſaid I, Madam, Now I will tell you the Reaſon, which I forbore to tell my Lady Berkeley, why I had good Ground to ſuſpect my Lady Harriett had a Deſign to go away, and it was this; My Lady Harriett came to me one Day, about ſix Weeks or more ago, in the Court-Yard at St. John's, and ſays ſhe to me, I am uſed like a Dog, I live the Life of a Slave here, I can endure it no longer; by the Eternal God that made me, I will not be alive long, unleſs I can ſet my ſelf at Liberty. This I ſaid to my Lady Lucy; and theſe, ſaid I, were Reaſons enough for me to warn you to look well after her. I did, according to Agreement, go into Suſſex immediately, and I then told my Lady Lucy, I believed I might have a Letter from my Lady Harriett, by the Wedneſday Night's Poſt, becauſe, ſaid I, ſhe cannot write ſooner than that, and if I have, I will ſend you word. When I was there, Mr. Craven came the next day to my Houſe; and as ſoon as he came; ſaid I, Here is a Letter I have received from my Lady Harriett, and if you will, you may take a Copy of it. I took a Copy of it my ſelf, and ſent the Original of it to my Lady Lucy, though they have not thought fit to produce the Letter now in Court, that your Lordſhip and the Jury might ſee it. But here is mine, which was the firſt Account what was become of her after ſhe went away, that I received, except what Account I had from my Lady Lucy at Guilford; and this will ſhew to all the World, that I was not ſo much privy to her going away, as they ſay I was. I had denied to aſſiſt her in it, when ſhe complained to me of her ill Uſage; and when ſhe attempted to go away before, I, upon my Lady's telling me of it, gave her ſufficient Caution. And for the truth of all this, I appeal to thoſe very Witneſſes that have been produc'd againſt me. When I had ſhewn this Letter to Mr. Craven, I ſent it away by a Servant of my own, to my Lord Berkeley's, and writ to my Lady Lucy, and deſired her to pen whatever Anſwer ſhe ſhould think fit to ſend. My Lady Lucy did write to me back again, and told me the Subſtance of what I was to write, but the penning of it ſhe did leave to me, for ſhe believed I would do it effectually. I did write an Anſwer to my Lady Harriett's Letter, and that Anſwer I ſhewed to Mr. Craven, and asked him if it were ſufficient, and he ſeem'd to approve of it. The Lady her ſelf is in Court, I know not whether ſhe can give an Account of the Letter, I ſuppoſe ſhe can tell you what an one it was. I had afterwards another Letter from her in Anſwer to mine, and that I have here, and it will appear by both of thoſe Letters, whether I had any Intereſt in her going away. Tho' perhaps that would not have been ſuch a Crime neither, and yet I think withal, that there is not a tittle of Proof that I had any hand in it, not one Proof of any Circumſtance like it. And if there be any Crime, it muſt be the taking her away, to ſuch an Intent and Purpoſe as is charged in the Information. Before I came to Town, I was ſent for about ſome other Buſineſs, yet I would not come till I had my Lady's Conſent; for I ſent her word, my Lady Harriett writ in her Letter, that ſhe was going beyond Sea, and if I went to London I might prevent it, but I would not go without my Lady's or Mr. Craven's Conſent and Approbation. When I came to Town, I was one Day at the Coffee-houſe in Covent-Garden, I was then ſent to by this Lady, who was in an Hackney-Coach at the Door, and when I came to the Coach-ſide to her, ſhe gave me a tedious Hiſtory of her ill uſage at home, which made her come away. And when your Lordſhip's Warrants were out to ſearch for her, I came up to your Lordſhip, and I dare appeal to your Lordſhip, whether I did not acquaint you, that ſhe only ſought for Protection, and was willing to return home, ſo ſhe ſhould be ſatisfied ſhe ſhould not be ill treated again. You then told me, I could not protect her againſt her Father. I then told your Lordſhip and my Lady Berkeley, She was not in my Houſe, nor in my Cuſtody. They replied, She was in my Power; but how could ſhe be in my Power? When ſhe was not in my Cuſtody, nor in my Lodging. But my Crime was, that I knew where ſhe was. And if I do deſerve Puniſhment for keeping my Word and Faith with her, which I gave her in a Letter, upon her Importunity not to betray her, I muſt ſubmit to it, I could not in Honour do otherwiſe. My Lord, I deſire this firſt Letter may be read, which was firſt ſent by my Lady Harriett to me.

ſhould

L. C. J. Surely, my Lord, for all your long Diſcourſe, you cannot but apprehend your ſelf miſtaken, when you ſay there is no Crime charged in the Information, but the taking her away to ſuch an Intent and Purpoſe. Surely there are other things beſides that. And what you ſpeak, if not proved, your Lordſhip knows, muſt paſs for nothing.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, your Lordſhip has made a right Diſtinction between Diſcourſes and Proofs. Therefore Diſcourſes between Strangers and third Perſons, are not to be ſtood upon, but the Proofs are; and all the Evidence together muſt be left to the Jury, to conſider what is material and pertinent, and what not. We ſhall therefore go on to our Evidence; and ſhall begin with my Lady Berkeley firſt, and ask her Ladyſhip ſome Queſtions. And we deſire to know whether ſhe hath ſeen this Letter?

L. C. J. But take notice, the Letter you propoſe, we cannot read it.

Mr. Williams. But, my Lord, it was agreed between my Lady Lucy and my Lord Grey, that if he received any Letters from my Lady Harriett, he ſhould communicate them to my Lady Berkeley, and this Letter coming to him, he firſt ſhews it to Craven, this Man that was thus ſet as a Spy upon him, and after ſent it to my Lady Lucy, and whatſoever Anſwer they would have ſent, was promiſed ſhould be, and accordingly was firſt ſhewn to Craven, and then ſent. If this were the Agreement, and theſe Letters were thus written, then ſure we may read them.

L. C. J. You may ask my Lady Berkeley any Queſtions, but muſt not read any ſuch Letters.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Mr. Williams, let us go according to the Courſe of Law, and give no Evidence, but what is fit to be given as Evidence.

Mr. Williams. Then thus, Madam, pray can you remember the Diſcourſe that paſt between my Lord Grey and your Ladyſhip in June, concerning your Daughter and him?

Lady Berkeley. Where?

Mr. Williams. At St. John's.

Lady Berkeley. I do not well know what Diſcourſe you mean; but any particular Diſcourſe that was there I will anſwer to.

Mr. Williams. That Diſcourſe that paſt between you the firſt time that you acquainted my Lord Grey that you ſuſpected there was too much Familiarity between him and your Daughter?

Lady Berkeley. The firſt time, do you ſay?

Mr. Williams. Yes, Madam, I think you were pleas'd to ſay, that upon your firſt Diſcovery, you ſent for him and talked with him.

Lady Berkeley. I did not ſay upon my firſt Diſcovery, but when I had diſcover'd it. For I would be very punctual to the Truth in my Evidence.

Mr. Williams. You ſay, your Ladyſhip had ſome Diſcourſe with him in June.

Lady Berkeley. I think it was in June.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you remember what my Lord Grey promiſed your Ladyſhip then?

Lady Berkeley. He told me then, he would obey me in any thing, even if I would baniſh him my Houſe.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Letter then produc'd by your Ladyſhip or my Lord Grey?

Lady Berkeley. Of what concern?

Mr. Williams. Any Letter that related to your Daughter?

Lady Berkeley. No, but I told him of a Letter that was found, that ſhe had writ to him.

Mr. Williams. Madam, pray, have you that Letter, or any Copy of it?

Lady Berkeley. No, it was torn to pieces, I can bring the pieces, I believe, if there were occaſion.

Mr. Thompſon. Your Ladyſhip read it, I ſuppoſe?

Lady Berkeley. No, my Daughter Bell read it, and tore it in pieces.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Diſcourſe between your Ladyſhip and my Lord Grey, about any other Letter?

Lady Berkeley. Not at that time.

Mr. Williams. Was there at any other time?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, at the Charter-Houſe at my Lord's Houſe, one day my Lord Grey deſired me to walk into the Gallery, for he had ſomething to communicate to me, and the Diſcourſe that paſt between us then was this, he ſhew'd me there a Letter of the Paſſionate Love he had for her, with ſome good Counſel in it.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyſhip approve of the Counſel he gave her?

Lady Berkeley. Never when there was ſo much Love and Paſſion in the Letter.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, recollect your ſelf, were you not pleas'd to like of that Letter?

Lady Berkeley. I could never like of the Paſſionate Expreſſions in it; there might be ſomething in it well ſaid enough, but with the greateſt Expreſſions of Paſſion and Love; in ſo much, that he himſelf ſaid of it, Madam, I'm aſham'd of that part, and would have had me overlook'd it.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyſhip ſay, Her Father could not give her better Advice?

Lady Berkeley. Not that I know of.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray, Madam, did you ever ſay ſo?

Lady Berkeley. Surely I did not: For I could not but think he could give her a great deal better Advice.

Mr. Williams. Does your Ladyſhip, pray Madam, remember any Diſcourſe between my Lord Grey and you, upon the Thurſday before your Daughter went away?

Lady Berkeley. I cannot tell for Thurſday.

Mr. Williams. Does your Ladyſhip remember the Letter you received from an unknown Hand?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, I do.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſhew that Letter, or read it to my Lord Grey?

Lady Berkeley. My Lord Grey came up to me, and and seem'd to be very careful of my Concerns, Madam, said he, Pray take care, for I saw a Letter directed to your Ladyship, without the Mark of the Post, or the Penny-Post upon it. And, said he, I give you this Caution about it before it comes to you, because my Lord was by: I arose up and went to the other side of the Room, and my Lord Grey followed me, and when I took up the Letter, I saw something that I thought to be very odd and unusual in his Carriage, as if he were in great disorder, as I was; and I went to my Chamber, thither my Lord Grey followed me, and that Letter he would see, because, he said, it had put me in some disorder, I told him he should not see it as then. I sent for my Daughter Lucy into my Closet, and shew'd it her, and she was in great disorder about it too.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you remember whether that Letter did caution you to look well to your Daughter, or else you were not like to have her Company long?

Lady Berkeley. The Letter did say some such thing, I must look after my Daughter, or I should lose her.

Mr. Thompson. And this was on the Friday before she left your Ladyship, Madam, was it not?

Lady Berkeley. Yes, it was so, I think.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, what did my Lord Grey say upon that?

Lady Berkeley. He was extreamly earnest to see the Letter, because, he said, it had so disordered me; and at last I was perswaded to let him see the Letter; he turned the Letter up-side down, and looked on the Subscription. Madam, says he, Is this all that disorders you so much, I am us'd to have many such Letters by the Penny post; this is nothing but to amuse you. It is a very silly Letter, and written by some Woman, as you may see by the Spelling.

Mr. Williams. Did he caution you to lock up your Daughter a Nights to secure her?

Lady Berkeley. Not one Word upon this Letter; but the next Morning again talking about this Letter, he said, It was a foolish Letter, and what should I trouble my self about it for?

Mr. Williams. But, Madam, had you any Caution given you by my Lord Grey about this time, to take care of your Daughter?

Lady Berkeley. Not that I remember, to lock her up.

Mr. Williams. What then did he say?

Lady Berkeley. I will tell you what he said to me once or twice. Madam, whatever you do, do not make her desperate. I asked him what he meant by that Word? Said he, It is not necessary to explain that Word to you, I meant nothing but do not use her ill. Now, my Lord, I was so far from that, that I used her with all the Tenderness of a Mother, like a Sister rather than a Daughter; nay, he himself has confess'd, she was better us'd than he imagin'd she was.

Mr. Williams. Did your Ladyship, at any time, intimate to my Lord Grey, that you had any Apprehensions of her intending to go away?

Lady Berkeley. I did tell him, That when I was at London, my Woman that lay with her, did rise about eight a Clock, and left my Daughter alone in the Room, and when she came up again, my Daughter had put on her Hood and Scarf, and her Petticoat was pin'd up, as ready to go out, and the Woman being affrighted at this, called up my other Daughter, and so prevented it; and after came and told me she had pin'd up her Petticoat thus about her, and she did not know what she meant to do. Upon this, I went to my Daughter, and, said I, What is the reason that you pin'd up your Petticoat, and put on your Hood and Scarf? Says she, I had not my Scarf on. But says my Woman to me, when I came into the Room, You thrust something into your Gown. It is true, I did so, Madam, said she, but it was upon this account, I had got a Sheet of Paper, upon which I intended to write, and seeing her come in, I put it in my Gown.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, did my Lord Grey at any time caution your Ladyship about your Daughter, to lock her up, or tell you his Opinion that he thought she would leave you?

Lady Berkeley. I cannot positively say that; but he us'd to say to me, Madam, do not make her desperate; I do not know that ever he advised me, as to the locking of her up.

Mr. Thompson. Did he desire you, Madam, to take care that she did not go away from you?

Lady Berkeley. I do not remember it.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, can you tell who brought that Letter from an unknown Hand to you at Durdants?

Lady Berkeley. It came down with other Letters to my Lord's Steward.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But your Ladyship says my Lord Grey was very sollicitous about that Letter.

Lady Berkeley, Yes, Sir, he came to me, and very earnestly cautioned me about it, For, said he, I see there is neither the General-Post nor the Penny Post Mark upon it. And knowing himself guilty of what he was guilty of, he might be afraid left my Lord should see it, and so his Business come out.

Mr. Williams. Pray, my Lady Lucy, do you remember that ever my Lord Grey advised the locking her up?

Lady Lucy. Upon discoursing of the Letter that came from an unknown Hand, my Mother said to my Lord Grey, Sure that is such a horrid thing that it can never be done; my Lord Grey might then reply and say, If you fear it, you may lock her up; but I do deny that ever I heard him say any thing to caution my Mother, that he thought she was going.

Mr. Williams. Madam, the Question I ask your Ladyship is, whether my Lord Grey did or no direct or advise to lock her up?

Lady Lucy. Upon my Mother's Discourse concerning the unknown Letter, and how sad a thing that would be, he might say, That if she fear'd that, she might lock her up; but he never did say that he did think she would go.

Mr. Thompson. Pray, when was this, Madam, how long before she left the Family?

Lady Lucy. The Day before.

Mr. Williams. Then, Madam, for the Discourse you had with him at Guilford, what said he, he would do?

Lady Lucy. It was at London, that he pass'd his Word to go down into the Country.

Mr. Williams. What did he promise you to do there, Madam?

Lady Lucy. He said he would not stir from Up-Park till he heard from my Father.

Mr. Williams. What did my Lord say to you, Madam, about the Letters he should receive?

Lady Lucy. He did say he would send us all the Letters that came to him from her, and if any came to our Hands we were to open them.

Mr. Wil-

Mr. Williams. Was my Lord Grey willing to receive a Spy, Madam, upon him?

Lady Lucy. Yes, he was.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Letter ſent to your Ladyſhip from my Lord Grey?

Lady Lucy. Yes, there was a Letter with one in it from my Lady Harriett.

Mr. Williams. Have you thoſe Letters by you, Madam?

Lady Lucy. No, I have neither of them here.

Mr. Williams. Can you tell the Contents of it?

Lady Lucy. I have told them already.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, will you pleaſe to recollect your ſelf a little, when you were at Guilford, and told my Lord Grey that my Lady Harriett was gone away, did not my Lord tell you, you had not obſerved the Directions and Advice he gave about her, to lock her up, and did not you then anſwer him, Yes, the Door was lock'd, but the Key was left in?

Lady Lucy. I did reply, the Woman had not lock'd it carefully enough after her.

Mr. Williams. Did you not ſay, that the Door was lock'd but the Key was left in?

Lady Lucy. I do not remember a Word of that.

Mr. Williams. Madam, will you pleaſe to caſt your Eye upon that Letter, and ſee if that Paper be a true Copy of the Letter you had?

L. C. J. What Paper is that you offer, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. It is a Letter from the Young Lady, to my Lord Grey.

L. C. J. You know no Uſe can be made of that Paper, why do you offer it? It is contended that my Lord had the Lady in his Power, and then would not ſhe write any thing?

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, there is the Young Lady her ſelf, we deſire ſhe may be examined.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But before we part with my Lady Lucy; if you have done, we deſire to ask her a Queſtion; It is here inſinuated, as if there had been ſome Hardſhip put upon this Young Lady, or ſome ill Uſage in her Father's Family; Now for the Honour of that Noble Family, I would have that Point clear'd, and therefore, pray Madam, did you ever obſerve any Unkindneſs, any Severity or harſh Uſage, that was uſed to this Lady, by my Lord or my Lady at any time?

Lady Lucy. So far from that, that all of us had a Jealouſy that ſhe was loved beſt.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray take notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Pray, Madam, let me ask you one Queſtion. After my Lady had diſcovered this Evil Affection between my Lord Grey and this Young Lady, did ſhe then put any indecent Severities upon her, or uſe her very hardly?

Lady Lucy. My Lord, I came out of France but two Days before ſhe went away. I ſaw no ſuch thing.

Mr. Williams. We ask her about my Lord Grey, and you ask her about a third Perſon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Oh good Mr. Williams, we know why we ask her that Queſtion. It is an extraordinary Caſe. Pray my Lady Arabella, will you anſwer the ſame Queſtion?

L. C. J. Ay Madam, pray let me ask you, after this ill buſineſs between my Lord and her was diſcovered, did my Lady Berkeley (I cannot ſay my Lord, for he knew nothing of the Matter till ſhe was gone away) uſe her ill or unkindly?

Lady Arabella. No, no, my Lord, no Mother in the World could be more indulgent and kind. She did indeed find it neceſſary to have a ſtricter Eye over her, and ſhe did put a Woman about her to look after her, and did not permit her to write any Letters. She had, or expreſſed a greater kindneſs for her, than any of us all beſides.

Lady Berkeley. Ay, and that my Lord Grey knows to be true.

L. C. J. No, no, when my Lord Grey was in his Paſſion, he might ſay ſo, but he has no Proof to ſhew of it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lady Lucy and my Lady Arabella, what Perſon did you fear ſhould take her away, pray?

Lady Arabella. We were not afraid of any Body but my Lord Grey.

Lady Lucy. There was no Reaſon for fear of any Body but him.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, there is the Young Lady, we deſire ſhe may be Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. We oppoſe it, Sir, and have very good Reaſon ſo to do, and we think it is time to do it now, if ever.

L. C. J. Why ſhould ſhe not be Sworn, Mr. Attorney?

Mr Juſt. Dolbin. If the Lady her ſelf have the Confidence to be Sworn, I ſee no Reaſon why ſhe ſhould not.

Mr. At. Gen. This Caſe, my Lord, is in the Nature of a Raviſhment of Ward, for it is for taking a Young Lady out of the Tuition and Cuſtody of her Father, who is her Guardian by Nature, and it is apparent in the Proofs, ſhe is highly Criminal in this very Matter her ſelf, in conſenting to go away in ſuch a Manner, and to ſuch an evil Purpoſe; and now ſhe comes to excuſe one, that is not only a Partaker in her Fault, but the firſt Seducer. Now, my Lord, when we have proved this Matter of Love upon her, that is laid in the Information, ſure ſhe cannot be a Witneſs for them, ſhe would be a Witneſs to excuſe her ſelf.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I do think truly, that notwithſtanding what you ſay, ſhe may be a Witneſs, being no Party to the Information. But withal, I think there is very little Credit to be given to what ſhe ſays.

Mr. Williams. Sure theſe Gentlemen forget themſelves much in offering to hinder or oppoſe one's being a Witneſs, that is no Party in the Cauſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Truly, my Lord, we would prevent Perjury if we could.

[Then ſhe was ſworn.

L. C. J. Brother Jefferies, we cannot oppoſe it, if they will preſs it, and ſhe conſent, but I tell you what I think of it.

Mr. Williams. If ſhe be Sworn, my Lord, we would ask her a Queſtion or two. Madam, we would deſire your Ladyſhip to anſwer whether my Lord Grey had any hand in your Eſcape?

Lady Henrietta. No, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. You are upon your Oath, Madam, have a care what you ſay, conſider with your ſelf.

Lady

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I know I am upon my Oath, and I do upon my Oath ſay it.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Grey adviſe you to it?

Lady Henrietta. No, I had no Advice from him, nor any Body about him, nor did he know any thing of it, it was all my own Deſign.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Madam, I would ask you this Queſtion, and pray conſider well before you anſwer it. Did you ſee my Lord Grey on the Sunday after you went away from your Father's?

Lady Henrietta. No, I did not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee him on Monday?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you on Tueſday?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you on Wedneſday?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Good God! Pray, Madam, how long afterwards was it that you ſaw him?

Lady Henrietta. Sir, it was a great while after.

Mr. Williams. How many Days or Weeks after was it?

Lady Henrietta. Sir, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. As near as you can, Madam, when was it?

Lady Henrietta. I can remember the firſt place that I ſaw him at after, but the time exactly I cannot.

Mr. Williams. Where was that, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. It was in a Hackney-Coach.

Mr. Williams. That was the time, I ſuppoſe, that you ſent for him out of the Coffee-Houſe in Covent-Garden?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Madam, did you write any Letter to my Lord Grey after your going away?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, I did by the next Poſt.

Mr. Williams. When did you write that Letter, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. I did write it upon the Tueſday after I came away. I hope that is no Offence.

L. C. J. No? Is it not? You ſhould have writ to ſomebody elſe ſure.

Lady Henrietta. I thought him the fitteſt Perſon for me to write to, and I did not imagine it would be any ways ſcandalous for him, he being the neareſt Relation I had in the World, except my own Brother, that could protect me.

Mr. Williams. Had you any Anſwer from my Lord Grey to that Matter, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, and a very harſh Letter it was.

Mr. Williams. Did you write him any other Letter.

Lady Henrietta. Yes, but I received no Anſwer of it at all.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray, Madam, did my Lord Grey, at any time, perſwade you to return to your Father's?

Lady Henrietta. Yes, he did ſo ſeveral times.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Madam, do you know Charnock, that was my Lord Grey's Gentleman?

Lady Henrietta. Yes I do.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Upon your Oath, did not he carry you away from Durdants?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nor did not his Wife aſſiſt you in it?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nor was ſhe not with you on the Sunday Morning?

Lady Henrietta. No, nor was not with me.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you not at Mrs. Hilton's then, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at Patten's?

Lady Henrietta. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nor at Jones's?

Lady Henrietta. No, nor at Jones's upon my Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who did come with you from Durdants?

Lady Henrietta. I ſhall not give any Account of that, for I will not betray any Body for their Kindneſs to me.

Mr. Wallop. If it be no Body in the Information, ſhe is not bound to tell who it was.

Lady Henrietta. If I have vowed to them before, not to diſcover, I will not break my Vow to them.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. If they ask you of any Body in the Information, you have heard their Names, you muſt tell if it were any of them, but you are not bound to tell if it were any one elſe.

Lady Henrietta. No, it was none of them. I went away upon another Account.

L. C. J. If you have no further Queſtions to ask her, pray, Madam, ſit down again.

Lady Henrietta. Will you not give me Leave to tell the Reaſon why I left my Father's Houſe?

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. If they will ask you it they may. You are their Witneſs.

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we do not think fit to ask her any ſuch Queſtion; ſhe acquits us, and that is enough.

Lady Henrietta. But I deſire to tell it my ſelf.

L. C. J. Truly, I ſee no Reaſon to permit it, except we ſaw you were a more indifferent Perſon to give Evidence than we find you.

Lady Henrietta. Will you not give me Leave to ſpeak for my ſelf?

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. My Lord, let her ſpeak what ſhe has a Mind to, the Jury are Gentlemen of Diſcretion enough, to regard it no more than they ought. But, Madam, for God's ſake conſider you are upon your Oath; and do not add wilful Perjury to your other Faults.

Lady Henrietta. I have been very much reflected upon here to Day, and my Reputation ſuffers much by the Cenſure of the World, and therefore——

L. C. J. You have injur'd your own Reputation, and proſtrated both your Body and your Honour, and are not to be believed.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. You are, Madam, to anſwer only ſuch Queſtions as are asked you pertinent to the Iſſue that the Jury are to try, and if the Counſel will ask you no Queſtions, you are not to tell any Story of your ſelf.

Mr. Ireton. My Lord, as to the Evidence of Patten, the Caſe is quite otherwiſe than they would repreſent it to be, about Charnock's coming thither for Lodgings, for Mrs. Patten is a Midwife, and uſed to lay Mrs. Charnock, and it was for her to Ly-in at Patten's Houſe, becauſe it would be inconvenient to Ly-in at my Lord Grey's.

L. C. J. What does that ſignify? But prove what you can.

Mr. Thompſon. Where is Mrs. Patten, they would not produce her, becauſe they knew it was againſt them. [She appearing was ſworn.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask of this Woman now?

Mr. Ireton. I would ask her, my Lord, whether were there any Lodgings beſpoke in your Houſe againſt September?

Mrs. Patten. I know nothing of that.

Mr. Ireton. Was there any body in June or July at your Houſe to beſpeak Lodgings?

Mrs. Patten. I cannot tell the Month nor the Day.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray Miſtreſs ſpeak what you do know.

Mrs. Patten. Mr. Charnock and his Wife did come to my Houſe laſt Summer.

Mr. Williams. What was their Buſineſs?

Mrs. Patten. For Lodgings.

Mr. Thompſon. Did they tell you who they were for? Did they talk about Lying-in?

Mrs. Patten. They were only for his Wife.

Mr. Ireton. Did he tell you what time he ſhould come?

Mrs. Patten. He did tell me they were not fit to come into yet, but they might at ſuch a time, but ſhe did not know her own Reckoning: But they were not taken.

Mr. Ireton. Are not you a Midwife?

Mrs. Patten. I was Mrs. Charnock's.

L. C. J. What is that to this purpoſe?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now you are ſweetly brought to Bed.

Mr. Ireton. Pray, Woman, will you tell what they ſaid to you.

Mrs. Patten. Mr. Charnock and his Wife came to our Houſe for Lodgings. I asked her who they were for, ſhe ſaid they were for a Gentlewoman. I asked her who ſhe was. Says ſhe, For my ſelf to Ly-in here. Said I, how comes that about? Says ſhe, about the time that I Reckon, my Lord's Family will be in Town, and I find it not convenient to Ly-in at our own Houſe; then my Father and Mother have ſent for me into the Country, to Ly-in there, but I cannot think of going thither, becauſe of changing my Midwife. Then, ſaid I, truly, Mrs. Charnock, any thing in my Houſe is at your Service. Said ſhe, I think it convenient rather to be here than to go into the Country; but I do not deſire that my Lord's Family ſhould know that I intend to Ly-in here, for I would not inconvenience my Lady's Houſe, and yet my Lady, it may be, will not permit me to go out.

L. C. J. But, Miſtreſs, there came one to your Houſe from Mrs. Hilton's, Who was that?

Mrs. Patten. I do not know, I was not at Home then.

L. C. J. Did you not come home before they went away?

Mrs. Patten. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was that Woman they brought to Ly-in, in your Houſe, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Patten. Who do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The other Gentlewoman that came with Mrs. Charnock and Mrs. Hilton. The Lady that ſpoke juſt now.

Mrs. Patten. I do not know, I never ſaw her Face in my Life, that I know of, what my Huſband ſaw I cannot tell, I ſaw her not, it may be ſhe, it may be not, for any thing I know.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen, have you done, will you call any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Williams. We have done, unleſs they call any more.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We ſhall only call a Noble Lord, my Lord of Aylesbury, to teſtify what he knows, being very much converſant in the Family, of the Treatment he has obſerved of this Lady.

L. C. J. That needs not, for there is no body that fixeth any thing of the Matter upon my Lord or my Lady.

Mr. Wallop. We do hope in your Lordſhip's Obſervations upon the Evidence to the Jury, you will pleaſe to take notice, that there is no Colour of Evidence of any Actual Force upon the Lady which is laid in the Information, that my Lord did vi & armis abducere, &c.

L. C. J. Oh, Mr. Wallop, fear not, I ſhall obſerve right to the Jury; but you have read the Book that is written concerning Juries lately, I perceive.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. He has ſtudied ſuch Books no doubt, and has learn'd very good Counſel from Whitaker.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information on the behalf of the King, againſt my Lord Grey, and the other Defendants; and it doth ſet forth, that my Lord Grey having married one of the Daughters of the Earl of Berkeley, and having opportunity thereby of coming to the Earl of Berkeley's Houſe, he did unlawfully ſolicite the Lady Henrietta, another Daughter of the Earl of Berkeley's, a young Lady, to unlawful Love; and that he did intice her from her Father's Houſe; and that he did cauſe her to be conveyed away from thence againſt her Father's Conſent; and that he did unlawfully uſe her Company afterwards in a very ill manner, an unjuſtifiable manner; and this, Gentlemen, is the Subſtance of the Information; in truth it is laid, that he did live in Fornication with her. Now, Gentlemen, to this my Lord Grey and the other Perſons, the Charnocks and the Jones's have all pleaded not Guilty to it. Now then, the Queſtion before you is, whether there was any ſuch unlawful Solicitation of this Lady's Love; and whether there was any Inveiglement of her to withdraw her ſelf and run away from her Father's Houſe without his Conſent; and whether my Lord Grey did at any time frequent her Company afterwards. Gentlemen, the Evidence that has been given, you have heard what it is, and it is very plain, (if you do believe theſe Witneſſes that ſpeak it from my Lord's own Mouth) that he hath a long time unlawfully ſolicited her to Luſt. For there is nothing elſe in it, Gentlemen (that is the plain Engliſh of it all) he has inticed her to unlawful Luſt. My Lady ſhe gives Evidence of it from his own Mouth, that there was an Intrigue of unlawful Love between them: She ſays my Lord Grey condemn'd himſelf for it ſeveral times, but yet proſecuted it; he own'd it was a moſt diſingenuous and diſhonourable thing in him, which indeed it was; he did therein in truth make a right Eſtimate of the thing. He did own he had betray'd the Family, and brought it into great Scandal, and had abus'd both Father and Mother by this unlawful Solicitation of their Daughter to this unworthy wicked Affection; but he excuſed it all with the greatneſs of his Paſſion, and that was all; he pray'd her to conſider, it was a great and paſſionate Love, a Love that he could not reſiſt; he loved her above all Women living, and many fair Promiſes of Amendment and deſiſting he made, but you ſee how he has perform'd them. You hear my Lady Arabella tells you there was a Letter written by my Lady Harriett, this Lady that appears now in Court as a Witneſs for my Lord Grey, which ſhe had out of her own Hand, and ſhe tells you the Effect of it; it was to invite my Lord another Night as he had been with her a former Night, and to ſhew the greatneſs of her longing for him, ſhe deſires it might be quickly, not to ſtay till Monday, for if he did ſhe ſhould be mighty impatient, if he delay'd ſo long; and withal ſhe told him, her Siſter Bell, which I take to be my Lady Arabella, had not diſcovered it, nor heard the Noiſe that was between them that Night they were together. My Lady Lucy, ſhe tells you he owned there was an unlawful Love between him and her Siſter, it muſt needs then be true if he owned it to her, and he ſaid that it put him upon mighty Inconveniences, and he owned he had done ſo much wrong to the Family, that he could never repair it. You hear my Lady tells you ſhe forbid him the Family; and you hear likewiſe, what little Deſigns he had, and what he pretended that he might continue to come to the Family, if you believe my Lady. For he pretended that this would be the way to make it publick, if he were forbid the Houſe altogether; but he would be under her Direction, he would do nothing but what ſhe ſhould approve of; that he would not apply himſelf to her Daughter to ſpeak to her, nor write to her. And you hear that for all this, he did before my Lady Arabella vent a great deal of Paſſion for her, that ſhe was the only Perſon in the World he had any Love for; that my Lady Arabella tells you ſhe heard him ſay, when he had ſeen her fall down like a dead Woman. When he had made my Lady a Promiſe that he would not come down without Leave, he ſends his own Wife thither firſt to beg that he might come down, and very earneſt and importunate ſhe was with her Mother, not knowing any thing of the Intrigue, but was made inſtrumental to get Leave to come down. And at length, Leave was given him to dine there, as he went to Suſſex, but he comes at nine a Clock at Night, and then Excuſes were made by him for it; and my Lord Berkeley deſiring him to ſtay, who was not acquainted with the unlawful Affection that was between his Daughter and him, and accordingly he did ſtay till Saturday. You hear, Gentlemen, what is ſaid to you now, as to her carrying away, for all that has been hitherto obſerved to you, has been only to the unlawful Solicitation of this Lady to unlawful Love. My Lady tells you, that that very Night that my Lord Grey went from her Houſe was her Daughter carried away. You ſee then, the Queſtion will be, whether my Lord had any hand in carrying her away, and for that you muſt weigh theſe Circumſtances. It is pretty manifeſt that this Coach-man, that is Charnock, did carry her away. Now the Chaplain tells you, that my Lord was earneſt in ſeveral Diſcourſes that day with Charnock, and under ſome great Trouble, he could diſcern that in his Countenance, and ſeveral times he was ſent for to him, as tho' there was ſome mighty earneſt Buſineſs impoſed upon Charnock to do. Charnock made as tho' he went away, it ſeems, with his Lord, who went away about four a Clock, and the Lady was carried away in the Morning between twelve and one which is the time ſpoken of. Now to prove that Charnock carried her away, you have theſe Circumſtances; She was brought to the Houſe of Hilton, there was a Lady brought in there that Morning about nine a Clock by Charnock; Charnock was the Afternoon before going to Up-Park with his Lord, but it is manifeſt that he was back that Morning at London, and ſo brought the Lady thither that Morning. If you believe Hilton the Witneſs, it is manifeſt ſhe had been a Journey, and was very weary, ſo that ſhe was fain to go to Bed at nine a Clock. This Lady that was there brought by Charnock and his Wife, was afterwards carried to Patten's Houſe, Mrs. Hilton ſwears it; and Mr. Patten ſwears they did come in there. There was a great deal of Policy uſed in the Caſe, and Care taken; and Mrs. Hilton tells you why, they ſaw ſome Men about the Door, which they were afraid might be Men that came to look after the Lady, and ſo they ſlid away thro' the Back-door, which proves ſomething in that ſhe was to be conceal'd. Then conſider the Circumſtances of the Cloaths that do ſo exactly agree. There was a Gown with red and green Flowers ſtriped, and there was a Petticoat ſtriped with Red, and a White Quilted Petticoat under that the Lady had on that came to Patten's; and the Lady's Woman who lay with her and look'd after her, deſcribes to you her Gown and Petticoat to be the ſame as thoſe were that the Lady had on, who was hurried away from Patten's Houſe at Night to another Lodging. We cannot indeed diſcover where that was. Now then, after this, my Lord Grey he undertakes to my Lady Berkeley, that he would go to Up-Park, and ſtay there till he had Leave to come to Town. Patten, who ſaw the Lady, ſwears this is the very Lady that ſits here, and who has been examined, but denies it. If ſhe was the Lady that was brought to Patten's, ſhe was the ſame that was brought to Hilton's, whither Charnock brought her, and ſo there is a full Evidence of the Guilt of Charnock and his Wife, who was the Solicitor about the Buſineſs, took Lodgings for her, help'd her away from Hilton's, and help'd her to Patten's, and from Patten's ſomewhere elſe. So that if you believe them, Charnock and his Wife are both Guilty. As to my Lord Grey, who went to Up-Park on the Wedneſday, ſoon after he came to Town again, and it is poſitively ſworn that he came to Jones's upon the Tueſday, and ſent for Jones out to come to him, who was in a Hack-Coach, where he diſcourſed with him a pretty while, and afterwards the Room is provided for the Lady up two pair of ſtairs in Jones's Houſe. She is brought thither, my Lord Grey came twice to the Houſe, and both times without his Perriwig, as the Maid ſwears ſhe knew him very well, and there he took Lodgings for a Lady, and that Lady came afterwards. Now if this falls out to be my Lord Berkeley's Daughter, then you have it puſh'd home upon my Lord Grey. That this was my Lord Berkeley's Daughter, you have this Evidence made up of Circumſtances. Firſt, The Policy uſed in the Caſe by my Lord, to have all ſo privately managed. Another Circumſtance there is, tho' at firſt it ſeems but ſlight, yet if it be well conſider'd will ſignify very much, and that is what the Maid does teſtify. She ſays her Linnen was brought down to be waſhed, and there was a Shift that was very remarkable, for it had the Body of one ſort of Cloth, and the Sleeves of another, and that ſhe took ſpecial notice of it, and thence would have concluded that the Lady was not a Perſon of Quality; and another of thoſe very Shifts that belonged to my Lady Harriett was brought to her afterwards, and ſhe ſwears it was of the ſame Faſhion and Make with that which the Lady had that lodged in their Houſe; and it was, as all do agree, juſt in the ſame manner as this was, with the Body of one Cloth and the Sleeves of another. Then, there is Colonel Fitz-Gerrard was in thoſe very Lodgings at that time; and he comes and tells you, that having heard of my Lord Berkeley's Daughter's Departure from her Father, and conſidering the Circumſtances that he had heard the Maid ſay that it was my Lord Grey's Miſtreſs that was brought in thither, and ſuch other Circumſtances concurring, he did conclude this to be the Lady, and he tells Jones his Suſpicions concerning it (whoſe Wife was by the way ſo very officious to conceal the Lady, that ſhe would not ſuffer her Maids to come up ſtairs, but would rather ſhut up the Shop-windows her ſelf, than the Maids ſhould come to ſee her.) Mr. Jones having Diſcourſe with the Colonel about this, and finding the Lady was ſmoak'd, was angry at the Colonel's Curioſity, which increaſed the Colonel's Suſpicion. He told Jones, This muſt needs be the Lady, and I will ſee her. Which he very much fearing, intreated him not to diſturb his Houſe at that time of Night, and upon Promiſe to let him ſee her the next Morning, he deſiſted; but told him, He knew not what he was doing, he did a very ill thing to conceal a young Lady from her Friends, her Father and Mother not knowing where ſhe was, might give her over for Dead. But in the Morning the Lady was convey'd away. This, to me, is a ſhrewd Circumſtance that Jones knew her to be the Lady, and to conceal all the Matter, got ſo much time to ſend her away. To what purpoſe elſe was ſhe carried away, when the Colonel was to ſee her, that he might be ſatisfied about his Suſpicion, and ſo acquaint her Father? But ſhe was conveyed away preſently. Gentlemen, it is manifeſt by all the Witneſſes, and by what the Defendants Counſel themſelves open'd, that under this Abſence of the Lady from her Father, he had an Intercourſe of Letters with her, which is a great Circumſtance to prove that ſhe was carried away by his Contrivance. He could tell the Lady Lucy, That ſhe ſhould never be brought back again, without he might have Leave to viſit her. So that it ſeems he had full Power over her. There is another Gentleman, who has told you he was ſet as a Spy over him; and if you believe him, my Lord Grey has made a Confeſſion to him as he would to his Ghoſtly Father, he has told you the Intrigue of all his unlawful Love, from the Beginning to the End; how long he was engaged in it before he had any Comfort from the Lady, when he had the firſt Demonſtration of Kindneſs from her, and the whole Matter all along. There is another Gentleman that was ſent to treat with my Lord (Mr. Smith) concerning this; he tells you, my Lord Grey and he being in a long Diſcourſe, he offered that he would deliver her to one Perſon, but not to another: She ſhould be firſt ſent to his Brother-in-law, Mr. Nevil's in Berkſhire, afterwards to another Place, Mr. Petit's, ſo as he might have Acceſs to her; but he tells you alſo, this was the Concluſion of all, He would never part with her, nor never deliver her, upon any other Terms than that he might have Acceſs to her whenever he would. Now lay all this together, and ſee what it amounts to. He that had ſo great a Paſſion for her, he that could not be without the Sight of her, but uſed ſuch ways to come to ſpeak to her, he that had Letters from her all along, he that had ſuch Power over her, that he could deliver her, as he ſaid, or not, and would keep her in ſpite of her Father, unleſs he might have Leave to viſit her as often as he pleaſed; and conſider then, I ſay, whether it is not more than probable, that he had a Hand in carrying her away. It is plain beyond all Contradiction, ſhe was carried away by his Man, who was in his Company that Night, he pretended to go to Up-Park, but was in London the next Morning by nine a Clock. My Lord came afterwards to take Lodgings for her, two Days one after another. Whether then he be not as Guilty as Charnock or any of the reſt, nay indeed, the main Mover of this ill Thing, you are to conſider upon the Evidence that has been given. But you muſt, withal, take into your Conſideration, what my Lord Grey ſays for himſelf. He has asked ſeveral Queſtions of the Ladies that were examined, but truly never a one worth the remembering, that I know of, or that made to his purpoſe. He does indeed pretend that the young Lady was hardly uſed at home, and that ſhe fled to him as to a Sanctuary for Protection; and you hear the ſeveral Witneſſes examined to that Point; and they all ſay ſhe was uſed, notwithſtanding the Diſcovery of this ill Buſineſs, with the greateſt Kindneſs and Reſpect that a Child could be uſed with by her Mother, and no Hardſhip put upon her, but only ſhe was forbid to write any Letters to my Lord Grey, and had a Maid put upon her, to keep her from running away, becauſe once before ſhe attempted it, as her Mother did believe. The Lady her ſelf is here, ſhe has been examined; ſhe indeed denies this all along; ſhe ſays that this Coach-man Charnock did not carry her away; ſhe ſays ſhe was not at Hilton's, nor at Patten's, nor at Jones's; that ſhe never ſaw my Lord Grey till a long time after ſhe went from her Father's. But this is all diſproved by the other Witneſſes, and ſo whether you will believe her ſingle Teſtimony, or theirs, I muſt leave it to you. You muſt conſider under what Circumſtances ſhe is, and truly ſhe doth not ſeem to be any way fit to be believed in this Matter. Jones and his Wife are as guilty as any of the reſt, for their Contrivance to keep her ſecret, eſpecially, after that he had promiſed Fitz-Gerrard to let him ſee her. Look you, as to the long Diſcourſe my Lord Grey made, I muſt tell you, it is not to be believed further than it is proved. Now my Lord Grey did tell us, that he from time to time had given Caution to my Lady, that ſhe ſhould look to her Daughter, and lock her up, for elſe ſhe would, as he believed, run away. My Lady denies it all, and ſo it goes all for nothing, and you are to take no notice of it. I muſt leave it to you, whether you do believe what theſe Witneſſes have ſworn, if you do believe the Evidence produced for the King, moſt certainly they are all five guilty of the Charge in the Information.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. There is no Evidence againſt Rebecca Jones.

L. C. J. No, there is not.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, we cannot inſiſt upon it that there is, you muſt find her not Guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Jones. I muſt remember you of one Thing,

Thing, Gentlemen, and that is, what drop'd from my Lord Grey's own Mouth, that when my Lord, as he ſays, gave his Advice that ſhe ſhould be looked after carefully, he would not give his Reaſon for it, but after he did, as he ſays, tell it my Lady Lucy, that ſhe complained to him at St. Jones's, that ſhe led the Life of a Dog or a Slave, and ſhe would not endure it any longer, and deſired him to aſſiſt her or ſhe would do herſelf a Miſchief. Why was not this told before?

L. C. J. Ay, but Brother, my Lady Berkeley denies it all too.

[Then the Jury began to withdraw.

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord Chief Juſtice, I deſire I may have my Daughter delivered to me again.

L. C. J. My Lord Berkeley muſt have his Daughter again.

Lady Henrietta. I will not go to my Father again.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. My Lord, ſhe being now in Court, and there being a Homine Replegiando againſt my Lord Grey, for her, upon which he was committed, we muſt now examine her. Are you under any Cuſtody or Reſtraint, Madam?

Lady Henrietta. No, my Lord, I am not.

L. C. J. Then we cannot deny my Lord Berkeley the Cuſtody of his own Daughter.

Lady Henrietta. My Lord, I am married.

L. C. J. To whom?

Lady Henrietta. To Mr. Turner.

L. C. J. What Turner? Where is he?

Lady Henrietta. He is here in Court.

[He being among the Croud, way was made for him to come in, and he ſtood by the Lady and the Judges.

L. C. J. Let's ſee him that has married you. Are you married to this Lady?

Mr. Turner. Yes, I am ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. What are you?

Mr. Turner. I am a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Turner. Sometimes in Town, ſometimes in the Country.

L. C. J. Where do you live when you are in the Country?

Mr. Turner. Sometimes in Somerſet-ſhire.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. He is, I believe, the Son of Sir William Turner that was the Advocate, he is a little like him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, we all know Mr. Turner well enough. And to ſatisfy you this is all a part of the ſame Deſign, and one of the foulеſt Practices that ever was uſed, we ſhall prove he was married to another Perſon before, that is now alive, and has Children by him.

Mr. Turner. Ay, do Sir George if you can, for there never was any ſuch thing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir, did not you live at Bromley with a Woman as Man and Wife, and had diverſe Children, and living ſo intimately were you not queſtion'd for it, and you and ſhe owned your ſelves to be Man and Wife?

Mr. Turner. My Lord, there is no ſuch thing, but this is my Wife I do acknowledge.

Mr. At. Gen. We pray, my Lord, that he may have his Oath.

Mr. Turner. My Lord, Here are the Witneſſes ready to prove it that were by.

Earl of Berkeley. Truly, as to that, to examine this Matter by Witneſſes, I conceive this Court, tho' it be a great Court, yet has not the Cogniſance of Marriages: And tho' here be a Pretence of a Marriage, yet I know you will not determine it, how ready ſoever he be to make it out by Witneſſes, but I deſire ſhe may be deliver'd up to me her Father, and let him take his Remedy.

L. C. J. I ſee no Reaſon but my Lord may take his Daughter.

Earl of Berkeley. I deſire the Court will deliver her to me.

Mr. Juſt. Dolben. My Lord, we cannot diſpoſe of any other Man's Wife, and they ſay they are Married. We have nothing to do in it.

L. C. J. My Lord Berkeley, your Daughter is free for you to take her; as for Mr. Turner, if he thinks he has any Right to the Lady, let him take his Courſe. Are you at Liberty and under no Reſtraint?

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Huſwife, you ſhall go with me home.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Huſwife, you ſhall go with me, I ſay.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Mr. Williams. Now the Lady is here, I ſuppoſe my Lord Grey muſt be diſcharged of his Impriſonment.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, my Lord, we pray he may be continued in Cuſtody.

L. C. J. How can we do that, Brother, the Commitment upon the Writ de Homine replegiando is but till the Body be produced, and here ſhe is, and ſays, ſhe is under no Reſtraint.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, if you pleaſe to take a little time to conſider of it, we hope we may ſatisfy you that he ought ſtill to be in Cuſtody.

L. C. J. That you can never do, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But your Lordſhip ſees upon the Proofs to Day, this is a Cauſe of an extraordinary foul Nature, and what Verdict the Jury may give upon it we do not know.

Mr. At. Gen. The Truth of it is, we would have my Lord Grey forth-coming, in caſe he ſhould be Convicted, to receive the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. You cannot have Judgment this Term, Mr. Attorney, that is to be ſure, for there are not four Days left. And my Lord Grey is to be found to be ſure, there never yet before this was any thing that reflected upon him, tho' this indeed, is too much and too black if he be guilty.

Mr. Juſt. Dolbin. Brother, you do ill to preſs us to what cannot be done; we, it may be, went further than ordinary in what we did, in committing him being a Peer, but we did it to get the Young Lady at Liberty; here ſhe now appears, and ſays ſhe is under no Reſtraint; What ſhall we do? She is properly the Plaintif in the Homine replegiando, and muſt declare, if ſhe pleaſe, but we cannot detain him in Cuſtody.

L. C. J. My Lord ſhall give Security to anſwer her Suit upon the Homine replegiando.

Mr. Williams. We will do it immediately.

L. C. J. We did, when it was moved the other Day by my Brother Maynard, who told us of Ancient Precedents, promiſe to look into them, and when we did ſo, we found them to be as much to the purpoſe, as if he had caſt his Cap into the Air, they ſignified nothing at all to his Point. But we did then (as we did at first tell my Lord, so) him if he did produce the Lady we would immediately Bail him. And she being now produced, we are bound by Law to Bail him. Take his Bail.

firſt

[And accordingly he was Bail'd at the Suit of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, by Mr. Forrester, and Mr. Thomas Wharton.]

Earl of Berkeley. My Lord, I desire I may have my Daughter again.

L. C. J. My Lord, We do not hinder you, you may take her.

Lady Henrietta. I will go with my Husband.

Earl of Berkeley. Then all that are my Friends seize her I charge you.

L. C. J. Nay, let us have no breaking of the Peace in the Court. But, my Lord Cavendish, the Court does perceive, you have apprehended your self to be affronted by that Gentleman Mr. Craven's Naming you in his Evidence; and taking notice of it, they think fit to let you know, that they expect you should not think of righting your self, as they have some Thoughts you may intend. And therefore you must lay aside any such Thoughts of any such satisfaction. You would do your self more Wrong by attempting to right your self in any such way.

Lord Cavendish. My Lord, I am satisfy'd that your Lordship does think it was impertinently spoken by him, and shall not concern my self any further, but only desire that the Court would give him some Reproof for it.

Then the Court broke up, and passing through the Hall there was a great Scuffle about the Lady, and Swords drawn on both sides, but my Lord Chief Justice coming by, ordered the Tipstaff that attended him (who had formerly a Warrant to search for her, and take her into Custody) to take Charge of her, and carry her over to the King's-Bench, and Mr. Turner asking if he should be committed too, the Chief Justice told him, he might go with her if he would, which he did, and, as it is reported, they lay together that Night in the Marshal's House, and she was released out of Prison, by Order of the Court, the last Day of the Term.

On the Morning after the Tryal, being Friday the 24*th* of November, the Jury that try'd the Cause, having (as is usual in all Causes not Capital try'd at the Barr, where the Court do not sit long enough to take the Verdict) given in a private Verdict the Evening before, at a Judge's Chamber, and being now called over, all appear'd, and being asked if they did abide by the Verdict that they gave the Night before, they answer'd, Yes; which was read by the Clerk of the Crown to be, That all the Defendants were Guilty of the Matters charged in the Information, except Rebecca Jones, who was Not Guilty; which Verdict being Recorded, was commended by the Court and the King's Counsel, and the Jury discharged.

But in the next Vacation, the Matter, as the Report went, was compromised, and so no Judgment was ever pray'd, or entred upon Record, but Mr. Attorney General was pleased before the next Hillary-Term, to enter a Nolle Prosequi as to all the Defendants.

The INFORMATION.

London ss. BE it remember'd that Robert Sawyer Knight, Attorney General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this behalf prosecuteth, cometh into Court in his Proper Person on Friday next after Fifteen Days of the Holy Trinity, in this same Term, and for our said Lord the King doth give the Court here to understand and be informed, that the Four and Twentieth Day of June in the Four and Thirtieth Year of his now Majesty's Reign at the Guild-hall of the City of London, a certain Court for Assembling the Citizens and Freemen of the City of London, called a Common-hall, being Summoned and Called by Sir John Moore Knight, then and yet Mayor of the City of London, was in a lawful manner held before the said Sir John Moore Knight, Mayor of the City aforesaid as well for the due Election of Sheriffs of the City aforesaid, for the Execution of the Office of Sheriff of the said City for one whole Year, next following after the Vigil of the Feast of St. Michael then and yet next coming, as for the Election of divers other Officers of the said City. And that then and there in the said Court it was begun to take the Poll of the Electors then and there present for the making known of the Election of the Persons to serve in the Office of Sheriffs of the said City, for the Year aforesaid. And that the said Sir J. Moore, Knight, Mayor

Mayor of the ſaid City, afterwards the ſaid 24th Day of June, in the 24th Year aforeſaid at Guild-Hall of the ſaid City of London (to wit) in the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, London, in a lawful manner did make and cauſe to be made Proclamation for the adjourning of the ſaid Court ſo as aforeſaid held, and then and there did adjourn the ſaid Court until Tueſday, then next following to be held at the Guild-hall of the ſaid City of London, and then and there after the ſaid Adjournment, ſo as aforeſaid made the ſaid Sir John Moore Knight, Mayor of the ſaid City of London, did make and cauſe to be made publick Proclamation for the Departure of all Perſons upon the ſaid occaſion there aſſembled: And further the ſaid Attorney General doth give the Court to underſtand and be informed, That Thomas Pilkington, late of London Eſq; and Samuel Shute, late of London Eſq; then Sheriffs of the ſaid City of London, and Henry Corniſh late of London, Eſq; Ford Lord Grey of Werk, &c. the ſaid Premiſſes ſufficiently knowing, but being ill diſpoſed Perſons, and deviſing and intending to diſquiet, moleſt and trouble the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King and the common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, they the ſaid Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute under colour of the Office of Sheriffs of the ſaid City of London, and the ſaid Henry Corniſh, Ford Lord Grey, and others afterwards, and after the Adjournment aforeſaid (to wit) the ſaid 24th day of June, in the 34th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, London aforeſaid in the ſaid Guild-hall, there with Force and Arms, Riotouſly, Routouſly, Unlawfully, and Seditiouſly, did aſſemble, congregate, and unite themſelves with very many other ill diſpoſed Perſons and Breakers of the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, to the Number of One Thouſand Perſons, to the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King, as yet unknown, to diſturb the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, and being ſo aſſembled, congregated, and united, then and there with Force and Arms, &c. Riotouſly, Routouſly, and Unlawfully, in and upon the ſaid Sir John Moore Knight, Mayor of the City aforeſaid, in the Peace of God and of our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being, did make an aſſault and affray, and him the ſaid Sir John Moore Knight then and there did beat, wound and evil intreat, ſo that of his Life it was greatly deſpaired, and after the Adjournment aforeſaid, and Proclamation ſo as aforeſaid, made by the ſaid Sir John Moore Knight, Mayor of the ſaid City, they the ſaid Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute, then and there by colour of their Office of Sheriffs of the ſaid City of London, and the ſaid Henry Corniſh, Ford Lord Grey, &c. with divers other Perſons to the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King as yet unknown, unlawfully and ſeditiouſly aiding and aſſiſting the ſaid Thomas Pilkington and Samuel Shute with Force and Arms, &c. Riotouſly, Routouſly, and Unlawfully, did there continue to take the Poll of the Perſons ſo then and there unlawfully Aſſembled, as if the ſaid Perſons had been lawfully Aſſembled for the Election of Sheriffs of the ſaid City; and that the ſaid Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Corniſh, &c. then and there Unlawfully, Tumultuouſly, and Seditiouſly, did affirm, and every one of them did affirm, ſay, and with a loud voice to the ſaid ill diſpoſed Perſons affirm that the ſaid Sir John Moore Knight, Mayor of the ſaid City of London, did unlawfully and unjuſtly aſſume upon himſelf the Liberty to Adjourn the ſaid Court, which did not belong to him; And that the ſaid Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Corniſh, &c. then and there, the ſaid unlawful and ill diſpoſed Perſons, ſo as aforeſaid aſſembled and congregated with Force and Arms, Riotouſly, Routouſly, Unlawfully and Seditiouſly, by the ſpace of three hours, to diſturb the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, and to commit the Riot aforeſaid, did ſtir up, move, perſwade, procure, and then and there by the whole time aforeſaid in Guild-hall London aforeſaid, in the Pariſh aforeſaid, great Rumors, Cries, Hollowings, and terrible and unwonted Noiſes, with Force and Arms, &c. Riotouſly, Routouſly, Unlawfully, Tumultuouſly and Seditiouſly, did make and cauſe to be made, and did ſtir up, in Contempt of our ſaid Lord the King, and the manifeſt Diſturbance and Violation of his Laws and his Peace, to the great Danger of ſtirring up and moving of a tumult, and the ſpilling of much Blood there, to the great Terror, Trouble and Fear of all His Majeſty's Leige People, Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, to the ill Example of all others in the like caſe offending; And againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the ſaid Attorney General of our ſaid Lord the King for our ſaid Lord the King prayeth the Advice of the Court in the Premiſſes, and due Proceſs of Law againſt the ſaid Thomas Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Corniſh, Ford Lord Grey, &c. in this behalf to be made to anſwer our ſaid Lord the King, of and in the Premiſſes, &c.

To which the Defendants Pleaded not Guilty.

On Tueſday the Eighth Day of May, at the Seſſions of Niſi Prius, at the Guild-Hall of the City of London, held there for the County of the ſaid City, before the Right Honourable Sir Edmond Saunders Knight, Chief Juſtice of His Majeſties Court of King's Bench; an Information was brought at the King's Suit, againſt Thomas Pilkington Sheriff, Samuel Shute Sheriff, Henry Corniſh Alderm. Ford Lord Grey of Werk, Sir Thomas Player Kt. Slingsby Bethel Eſq;

Esq; Francis Jenks, John Deagle, Richard Freeman, Richard Goodenough, Robert Key, John Wickham, Samuel Swinock, John Jekyll Senior, &c.

The Court being ſate, the Tryal proceeded.

CRYER,

YOU Good Men of Niſi Prius ſummoned to appear here this Day between our Soveraign Lord the King, and Thomas Pilkington, and others, Defendants: Anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Iſſues.

The Jury appeared.

Mr. Sommers. My Lord, I am to Challenge the Array.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I deſire this Challenge may be read.

The Challenge read in French.

Sir Edmond Saunders. L. C. J. Gentlemen, I am ſorry you ſhould have ſo bad an Opinion of me, as to be ſo little a Lawyer not to know this is but a Trifle, and nothing in't. Pray, Gentlemen don't put theſe things upon me.

Mr. Thompſon. I deſire it may be read, my Lord.

L. C. J. You would not have done this before another Judge: You would not have done it if Sir Matthew Hale had been here.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I believe if there had been nothing in it, it would not have been ſign'd.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Very few but Mr. Thompſon would urge it.

Mr. Thompſon. I don't know whether you think ſo, or not, Mr. Attorney; but I have a great deal to offer, if you pleaſe to Anſwer it. We offer our Challenge in Point of Law.

L. C J. There is no Law in it.

Mr. Thompſon. We deſire it may be read in Engliſh.

L. C J. Why? Do you think I don't underſtand it? This is only to tickle the People.

The Challenge read by the Clerk accordingly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Here's a Tale of a Tub indeed!

L. C. J. Ay, It is nothing elſe, and I wonder Lawyers would put ſuch a thing upon me.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, we deſire this Challenge may be allowed.

L. C. J. No, indeed won't I, there is no colour for it; and I am apt to think there are not many Lawyers in England would have put ſuch a thing upon me: Becauſe I am willing to hear any thing, and where there is any colour of Law, I am not willing to do amiſs: Therefore you think I am ſo very weak, without you think I was always ſo, and therefore may be ſo at this time. For, pray now conſider, if ſo be the King's Counſel ſhould come and plead this Challenge, what is the Conſequence of it? I thought you would have ſaid, that the Sheriffs had been a-kin to the King, but you have made it worſe. You do come with a long Tale here of the whole Merits of the Cauſe, and more than yet doth appear; and by this you would have the Challenge to be allowed: In ſuch a Caſe a man may come and tell a Tale of the Merits of the Cauſe, and then it muſt be tryed by the Challenge. If the Sheriffs do return an Inqueſt for the King, and the Sheriffs do hold of the King a Fee-farm, or have a Penſion or an Annuity from the King, the Book doth ſay, that in ſome Caſes it is a Challenge; for though they cannot be challenged as being favourable for the King, yet for thoſe reaſons they may be challenged. But what is here? Here you tell a long Proceſs concerning a Difference between the Mayor and the Sheriffs, and all this matter is wrap'd up altogether; and if all this were true, it is no Challenge at all.

Mr. Thompſon. We ſhall ſpeak with all ſubmiſſion to your Judgment, my Lord.—— Good Mr. Attorney, give me leave.

Mr. At. Gen. I move for you.

Mr. Thompſon. If you pleaſe you may move for your ſelf, I don't need you to move for me. My Lord, with ſubmiſſion, the Information is not good: My Lord, it is an Information that doth ſet forth that my Lord Mayor had right of Adjourning the Poll, when an Election is to be for Sheriffs. My Lord, if he had not that Right, it can be no Riot according to this Information. My Lord, upon his Adjourning Mr. Sheriff North was Choſen: My Lord, if that Adjournment was not according to Law, Mr. Sheriff North never was Sheriff of London; Then, my Lord, here is the Caſe in this Queſtion of Title, for Mr. North doth come in Queſtion, whether he be a legal Sheriff of London.

L. C. J. Prove to me now that of Sheriff North; Pray what Annuity, Penſion, or Fee-farm hath he as Sheriff of London, whereby he is concerned?

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, there are other Reaſons which I ſhall ſhew to you; and the firſt Reaſon, my Lord, in this Caſe, is this; it will appear the Election of Mr. North is intereſted in this matter; and if Sir John Moore had not an Authority to Adjourn the Poll, Mr. North was not choſen duly Sheriff; now if there is a Sheriff choſen in Point of Right, it is a good Challenge.

L. C. J. In point of Profit, and not all neither; for he that holds Land in Capite of the King, cannot be challenged for all that.

Mr. Thompſon. I think, my Lord, this is a common Caſe in our Books, That if in caſe a Sheriff be concerned in point of Title, this is a principal Challenge, becauſe that he is intereſted in that Title, he is no perſon by Law to return a Jury. I don't doubt but your Lordſhip will do that which is right, and according to Law. My Lord, I ſay, where a Sheriff is intereſted in point of Title, he is no Perſon by Law to return a Jury, and this Queſtion will appear plainly upon this Information; for if in caſe caſe this was not a lawful Adjournment by Sir John Moore, this is not a lawful Return—— Gentlemen, my Lord, I know, will hear me, if you have but patience; I always ſpeak and ſtand up for my Clients as I ought to do. If you pleaſe to let me have Liberty, I have my Lord's. If a Sheriff be concerned in point of Title, it is a principal Challenge, and the Sheriff ought not to return the Jury, but the Coroner: And my Lord, much more in this Caſe, for that the very Title to the Office of Sheriff is here in Queſtion, and therefore he is no Perſon fit to return this Jury, my Lord. We deſire your Lordſhip's Opinion.

L. C. J. Mr. Thompſon, Methinks you have found out an Invention, That the King ſhould never have Power to try it even ſo long as the World ſtands. Say you Sheriff North is not a right Sheriff, Who ſhould have been? Why ſay you Dubois and Papillon, or one, or both of them. Now the King he hath brought his Suit for a Riot.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And an Aſſault and Battery upon Sir John Moore.

Mr. Thompſon. That is a Fiction.

L. C. J. The King hath brought his Suit, and brought it to an Iſſue. Why now if ſo be this Challenge ſhould have any thing in it, then the King muſt have challenged North, and what muſt he have done then? Why, for Papillon and Dubois, they are not Sheriffs in actu, then ſay you the Coroner. Pray Mr. Thompſon, If ſo be the King had made the Venire either to Papillon or Dubois, or to the Coroner: Whether or no had not the Cauſe been found againſt the King, before one Word had been ſaid actually for him? You ſay the Queſtion is, Whether he be a Sheriff or not? If the King had challenged him, and made the Venire to the Coroner, for God's ſake, Had not that made an end of the Queſtion?

Mr. Thompſon. No, my Lord, not at all.

L. C. J. No? Then I underſtand nothing.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, If the Sheriff appear to be concern'd, it doth not determine the Cauſe.

L. C. J. But it does by your own Opening now. You ſay the Queſtion is, for which you do now challenge the Array, becauſe it is returned by Sir Dudley North, ſuppoſed to be one of the Sheriffs, and tell the whole Proceſs, how that in truth it is a Queſtion whether he be a Sheriff or not, and therefore ſay you, or you ſay nothing, that the Venire ſhould not go to North.

Mr. Thompſon. No, my Lord, I pray, good my Lord——

L. C. J. Should it not have gone to Dudley North, and then have been challenged for him?

Mr. Thompſon. No, I beſeech your Lordſhip, we do not ſay ſo. My Lord, we ſay, That whereas they do charge in the Information, that there was an Aſſembly for the Election of Sheriffs, and that Sir John Moore being then Mayor, did lawfully, according to Law adjourn this Aſſembly; and that afterwards the Defendants, Pilkington and Shute, did continue this Aſſembly, and took a Poll, and ſo they would make this a Riot in the continuance of it. My Lord, we do ſay this, That the Election of Mr. North upon this Point doth come in queſtion; and, my Lord, we do ſay, That if that be not a legal Adjournment, then Mr. North is not legally Choſen.

L. C. J. Right, now you have told it in more Words.

Mr. Thompſon. We ſay, If the Election be intereſted, they are all Parties by Law.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who would you have the Proceſs go to?

Mr. Thompſon. To the Coroner.

L. C. J. Very well upon my word. If he were Sheriff, it cannot go to the Coroner you know, and therefore if he were challenged, to go to the Coroner——

Mr. Thompſon. Sub judice lis eſt, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We deſire for the King, that the Challenge may be over-ruled.

L. C. J. Ay, ay.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I deſire the Jury may be ſworn.

Mr. Williams. Certainly if they be impannelled by Perſons that are not Sheriffs, that is a good Challenge, that is admitted by every body; now we have made a Challenge, and that is a good cauſe of Challenge certainly if that were the Cauſe. But now, my Lord, I muſt confeſs what your Lordſhip ſays, it is a difficult matter to challenge any Array, becauſe they are arrayed by a Perſon that hath an Intereſt, or ſome ſuch thing that is a Challenge of the Array, but that is not the Matter in this Caſe. It cannot be denied, If theſe Perſons were not Sheriffs of London, that that is a good Cauſe. I take the Reſult of the Challenge to be this: Say we, the principal Queſtion of this Information, the Riot, will depend upon this Queſtion, Whether there were a regular Adjournment or not? There, ſay we, begins the Queſtion of the Riot. If ſo be that my Lord Mayor of London that was, had Power to adjourn the Court, and it be admitted a regular Adjournment, certainly the Riot would follow, and what follows then? Then comes on a Queſtion, and it is immediately conſequent upon it, That theſe Gentlemen be actual Sheriffs of London, they being actually choſen upon this Adjournment, they are actually Sheriffs: But if really my Lord Mayor had no Power to adjourn, and that Power was in the Sheriffs, that they were actually taking the Poll, and the Poll was for Mr. Dubois and Mr. Papillon: Then the Queſtion is, If ſo be the Adjournment by my Lord Mayor were not a good Adjournment, then the Poll was a regular Poll taken by the Sheriffs, then conſequently thoſe that were elected upon that were truly choſen, and then it is a right Challenge. Theſe Gentlemen, I muſt confeſs, they are Sheriffs de facto, but we know very well there may be Sheriffs de facto, and there may be other Sheriffs de jure, theſe things are very conſiſtent. If ſo be that Mr. Papillon and Dubois be duly elected, they are Sheriffs de jure, but they want the Formality, for they are not ſworn, and cannot return a Jury. On the other ſide, the Sheriffs are Sheriffs de facto, but not legally choſen, and the Riot will depend upon that Queſtion, of the other Perſons that are Sheriffs de facto, and not de jure. This we ſuggeſt in this, Whether your Lordſhip will receive this Challenge, or whether your Lordſhip will proceed firſt to the tryal of the Cauſe, and let this follow. My Lord, might not there have been ſomething in this caſe upon the Roll at Weſtminſter, might there not, not have been a ſurmiſe to this purpoſe, becauſe there is ſuch a Queſtion upon the Roll? For it appears that the Common Hall was for the Election of Sheriffs, and that it was adjourn'd by the Mayor: And what follow'd? Might there not be ſuch a ſurmiſe, that the Venire facias ſhould not go to the Sheriffs, but to the Coroner? Might there not have been ſuch a thing?

L. C. J. My Speech is but bad, let me know what Objection is made, and if I can but retain it in my Memory, I don't queſtion but to give you Satisfaction. If the King had brought an Information againſt Mr. Sheriff North, and charged him with a Crime, there is no manner of Queſtion that the King ſhould have challenged as he was a Sheriff, and ſent the Venire to the Coroner, or other Officer; here he is not accuſed, nor to be acquitted of any Crime. Gentlemen, I put you upon this, if ſo be that the Sheriff of London ſhould get a great deal of Money (but I never underſtood that he got by it) if you prove that he hath got any conſiderable matter by the Office, it would be ſomething in the Caſe, that he ſhould be greedy of the Office. But look ye, on the other ſide, if there be nothing in it one way or another, that there is profit accruing to him by the Office, what can the Law ſay? But here was the Queſtion between, indeed and in truth as you do open it, between the Mayor, Sir John Moore, I think, and the Sheriffs that then were, that was the Queſtion between them. Now what is this in Point of Law, that the Sheriffs muſt be challenged? They muſt be challenged, becauſe it is return'd by theſe Sheriffs: You can't ſay the Sheriffs do favour—— the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We trouble your Lordſhip about a Queſtion very unneceſſary: The Sheriff is not concerned in this Queſtion, neither can the Conſequences affect the Sheriff any way.

Sir Fr. Win. My Lord, If I don't ſhew that he is concern'd, notwithſtanding what Mr. Solicitor ſays, it is another matter. If this had been upon a common Riot, and not related to the Election of Sheriffs, it would have been harder againſt us. I only offer a Word or two, and ſubmit to your Lordſhip. This Information doth take notice of the Election of Sheriffs, and of an irregularity in diſturbing the late Lord Mayor about adjourning the Poll; I do believe, my Lord, it will not be deny'd, but that in this Cauſe a Riot or no Riot will depend upon the Poll, or the Mayor's adjourning. If that be ſo, that which your Lordſhip is pleaſed to urge, That the Sheriff gets nothing, yet that he hath aſſumed the Office de facto, appears by the Return, that is very plain, my Lord, he hath aſſumed it, and did exerciſe it. If it appear to be legal or illegal upon the Adjournment by the Mayor, then it muſt have one of theſe two Conſequences, my Lord, I humbly conceive, till the Shrivalty had been agreed, it would have done very well for Mr. Attorney to let this Riot alone, unleſs he would have made it a common Riot; if he would have been pleaſed to ſtay till the Law had determin'd who had been the right Sheriffs, then Proceſs would have gone for the King. And, my Lord, there is another thing under favour, if Mr. Attorney had been pleaſed to proſecute for the King; then ſurely, my Lord, there was a way to lay it ſo that the Proceſs ſhould be return'd by Perſons unintereſted, and not by the Sheriff whoſe Election is in Controverſy: I don't argue out of the Record, but by the Record it ſelf. If in caſe it doth appear ſtill to be under Conſideration; if that be ſo, I do humbly conceive, becauſe that Right of Election of Sheriffs is undetermined, that therefore he might have made the Proceſs to the Coroner, if he would have made it before, but it ſhould not be heard before the Election of the Sheriffs, becauſe it will be a Riot, or not a Riot upon that.

L. C. J. Good now, Sir Francis, you miſtake, it could not be to the Coroner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, It is but wearying your Lordſhip to no purpoſe.

Mr. Wallop. If he be not Sheriff, that Title of his depending upon my Lord Mayor's Adjournment, which is reaſonably ſet forth, it is concerned in the Conſequence of the Cauſe.

Mr. Attorn. Gen. If you pleaſe, my Lord, I will anſwer what hath been ſaid. Mr. Thompſon did firſt urge according to the Rules of Law, if the Matter that appears upon the Record to be the Thing in queſtion; that if the Sheriff be intereſted in that Matter, that that is a good Cauſe of Challenge, that is a good Rule, and the Law is ſo; but that is nothing to this purpoſe, my Lord, here upon the Record there is nothing in queſtion but a Fine for the King, nothing to be recovered: Where Lands are in queſtion, as in an Ejectment, if the Sheriff be Intereſted in that Land, in that caſe that is a good Challenge; but here appears nothing by the Record, here is nothing in queſtion but a Fine for the King; ſo that certainly that Caſe in Point of Law, is nothing to the purpoſe. Then they ſay it appears in the Record by Recital, and in the Information, for that is the Subſtance of all they ſay: It doth appear there, as it is ſaid, That the Mayor did adjourn the Court, and ſo the Queſtion of the Riot will very much ſtand upon the Validity of that Adjournment. But it doth not wholly ſtand upon that, for there are many outragious Actions, Aſſaults of the Mayor, throwing off his Hat, great Clamours; thruſting and preſſing many of the Aldermen; nay, bruiſing them, ſo that this Riot, notwithſtanding the Adjournment, be that as it will, will appear in the upſhot of the Cauſe, to be a Riot notwithſtanding that Queſtion. But in the ſecond Place, the Queſtion of Mr. North's being a Sheriff or not a Sheriff, no ways depends upon this Adjournment, no Pretence of the Title depends upon that, ſo my Lord, they have ſuggeſted a Thing that is foreign to the Record; it depends purely that upon a Cuſtom of the City for my Lord Mayor to elect, not upon the Power of my Lord Mayor's Adjournment; for after that they proceeded on with the former choice of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois; ſo that whether that Adjournment be a good Adjournment, or no good Adjournment, his Title will depend upon that, whether at the ſecond meeting or no Mr. Papillon and the other Gentleman be well choſen, and Mr. North not well choſen, ſo that his Title doth not depend upon this Queſtion one way or other. But, my Lord, that which makes this as frivolous a Thing as ever was urged in a Court of Law, my Lord, that it ſhould have been upon Rule before any Direction to the Sheriff or Coroner, if they would have had Proceſs; they have ſuggeſted matter of Fact wholly out of the Record, matters have been ſuggeſted that it might have been tryed before it came to Direction; now there appears nothing in the Record to bring a Challenge to try the Matter; nay, as they themſelves ſay, it is to try the Merits of the whole Information, that the Information depends upon that Queſtion, Whether the Mayor may Adjourn. It is a great Uſurpation upon the Government of this City, as they have done in other things to the King. My Lord Mayor is the Supreme Magiſtrate here, and the Sheriffs have nothing to do in this Point, and therefore I pray it may be over-ruled, and that the Jury may be ſworn.

Mr. Thompſon. We would have, my Lord, the Benefit of a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Swear the Jury, ſwear the Jury.

Mr. Thompſon. I have another Challenge.

L. C. J. I tell you plainly, I ſee nothing in it for a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Thompſon. We deſire we may have the Benefit of a Bill of Exceptions. My Lord, if this be the Caſe of trying a Riot, we muſt take what Advantage we can in point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We come to counſel the King, as we ought to do by Law.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I challenge, on the behalf of my Lord Grey, this Jury.

[Challenge read.

Seignior Grey.

Mr. At. Gen. They call that a Newgate Challenge.

Mr. Wallop. That was a Challenge taken at the Old-Baily.

Mr. Thompſon. And over-ruled.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And I pray it may be ſo here.

L. C. J. I think your Challenge is, that they are not Sheriffs?

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, is the Fact true or falſe? I deſire of theſe Gentlemen, if it be inſufficient in point of Law, let them demur.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray tell me Robinhood upon Greendale ſtood; and therefore you muſt not demur to it.

Mr. Thompſon. If the Challenge be not good, there muſt be a defect in it either in point of Law, or in point of Fact. I deſire, on the behalf of my Lord Grey, this Challenge may be allowed.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And I pray for the King, that it may be over-ruled.

L. C. J. I think you have owned them to be Sheriffs already.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord Grey did own it in his Challenge, becauſe there were no Knights.

L. C. J. We try a great many Niſi prius here ſometimes, two or three days after the Term, every Defendant that thinks it goes hard with him, we muſt have a Tryal ſtill, whether the Sheriffs be Sheriffs, or no? This that you have done now, may be done in every Cauſe that we may be trying. Upon your Evidence if you can prove them none, you go a great way.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, We deſire the Challenge may be allowed, or otherwiſe a Bill of Exceptions. My Lord, we pray a Bill of Exceptions.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This Diſcourſe is only for Diſcourſe ſake; I pray the Jury may be ſworn.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, ſwear the Jury.

Sir Benjamin Newland, &c. ſworn.

Mr. Thompſon. We challenge Mr. Fenſil, he hath given Evidence in this Cauſe at the Council-Table.

L. C. J. What then?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, They ſhall have all fair.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney ſays he wont ſtand upon it.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, we pray a Bill of Exceptions.

L. C. J. I think many would not have offer'd it beſides you. Shall I go and ſign a Bill of Exceptions, to let all the World know this is ſo, and ſo all the World muſt try whether they be Sheriffs of London.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, don't ſay ſo, for I think all the Counſel in the Court would.

L. C. J. If it doth fall out that in truth they don't happen to be Sheriffs, ſurely you ſhall have all the Advantage that can be for you; but pray don't think that I will put off a Tryal upon every ſuggeſtion that the Sheriffs are not Sheriffs. You ſhall have all that is Law by the Grace of God, and I am not afraid that you or any Man ſhould ſay, I don't do juſtice: I am not bound to gratify every Man's Humour, I am to do according to my Conſcience, and the beſt of my Knowledge, and according to my Oath, and I will do that, and gratify no Man.

O yes, O yes, O yes, If any Man can inform my Lord the King's Juſtice, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, or this Inqueſt now to be taken, &c.

Mr. Dolbin. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Information brought by the King againſt Thomas Pilkington, &c.

Gentlemen, the Information ſets forth, That upon the 24th of June laſt in Guild-hall, there was a Common Hall ſummon'd by Sir John Moore Knight, and thereupon held for the Election of Sheriffs for the Year then enſuing the Feaſt of St. Michael: And that on the ſame 24th of June, Sir John Moore then Mayor adjourn'd the Court till the Tueſday following by Proclamation. That after the ſaid Adjournment, my Lord Mayor made Proclamation for all Perſons to depart; and that the Defendants intending to diſturb the Peace of the King after the Adjournment aforeſaid, did Unlawfully, with many Perſons unknown, meet together, and Riotouſly aſſault the Lord Mayor. And after the Adjournment by Proclamation, two of the Defendants, Pilkington and Shute, by colour of their Office as Sheriffs of this City, and the reſt of the Defendants, did continue the Poll, and Unlawfully affirm to the People, That Sir John Moore had no Power to adjourn them. And that they continued this great Tumult three hours, to the Terror of the King's Subjects, and the evil Example of others, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King. To this the Deſendants have pleaded Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. At. Gen. This Information, my Lord, is brought for ſettling the Peace in this City, and to ſhew before you all who is the Supreme Magiſtrate under the King in this City; for that, Gentlemen, you ſee, is grown a great Queſtion, Whether my Lord Mayor is not only in the Hall, but in his Chair, the Supreme Magiſtrate?

Gentlemen, I muſt acquaint you, That my Lord Mayor in all times, even before the City had the Election of him, was the King's Lieutenant, and the Supreme Magiſtrate in the City, and no publick Aſſemblies could ever meet together without his Summons, he was the great and chief Director, and this I believe in all your Obſervations that are of the Jury. I can make it evident, that this hath been the conſtant Frame of this Government in the City: For the Sheriffs, Gentlemen, they are no Corporation Officers, they are County Officers, as in all the Counties of England, and they are the King's Officers for the Execution of the King's Writs, and the Preſervation of the King's Peace; but the Government of the Corporation is in the Mayor, and not in the Sheriffs. Gentlemen, The Queſtion now ariſing here's about the Election of Sheriffs it's true there were very diſorderly tumultuous Proceedings, my Lord Mayor he comes and doth appoint another day for them, and diſcharges them at that time. We will make appear to you, that it was always his Right in all times both to ſummon a Common Hall, and diſſipate it, and appoint them another day, or to diſſolve them, as the Mayor did ſee Cauſe. The Mayor having according to the ancient manner adjourned this Court, the Sheriffs they proceed, do not only refuſe to obey, but they proceed, and make Proclamation, that it is not in the Power of the Mayor, taking upon them that which never any Sheriffs did in any time, they make Proclamation contrary to what the Mayor had done, and continue the Poll, and proceed and proclaim the Mayor had uſurped that Power which was theirs, tho' afterwards they transfer'd the Supreme Power to the Livery Men; but I think no Age will ſuffer that the Supreme Power ſhould be in the Liverymen, that are expreſsly appointed to act by a Common Council, which is indeed the Repreſentative of the whole City. But this, Gentlemen, being done by the Sheriffs having uſurped the Power of the Mayor, they did proceed in a riotous manner, when the Mayor attempted to go out of the Hall they ſtruck him, ſtruck his Hat off, and preſſed ſeveral of the Aldermen, the Evidence will make out in what an outragious manner it was carried on. If the others had made oppoſition, how ſoon had all been in Confuſion upon this Uſurpation, that the Sheriffs had ſet up for themſelves, that they are the Delegates of the People, and muſt appear to be the Supreme Magiſtrates of the City of London, I think the Citizens themſelves will never endure, that thoſe that are but County Officers, ſhould ever invade the Government of the Corporation. Gentlemen, We will ſhew you the Particulars of this, and you have nothing to inquire after, but whether they are Guilty of the Riot or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We will call our Witneſſes, and prove our Caſe by theſe ſteps. For the Queſtion that whether or no the Defendants in the Information were Guilty of a Riot, in continuing the Aſſembly after my Lord Mayor had adjourn'd them, we will prove it by theſe ſteps, that it is in the Power of the Lord Mayor to call a Common Hall, and adjourn the Common Hall; That, my Lord, when the Common Hall was aſſembled for the purpoſe of electing Sheriffs, that he did adjourn the Common Hall, and that contrary to his Adjournment the Sheriffs continued it, declaring my Lord Mayor had no Right ſo to do. And that afterwards my Lord Mayor commanded them to depart, and they continued their Aſſembly there in a very riotous manner, and as my Lord Mayor came down they offer'd Inſolencies to his Perſon, and they continued the Aſſembly there in a riotous manner, and commended the Sheriffs that did aſſert their Right, following them in a riotous manner into Cheapſide, crying out in a factious manner, God bleſs the Proteſtant Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, We would begin with our Witneſſes; but for the Gentlemen of the Jury, which I think are Men that belong to the City, and that the thing may be very intelligible, I beg leave to acquaint your Lordſhip with the methods that have always been proceeded in, in Choices of this nature. My Lord, We will make it appear, and I think it will not be doubted by any Man that knows the City of London, that Common Halls are always ſummon'd to appear by the intimation of the Mayor, of the Mayor himſelf at any time when he finds an occaſion, either for the aſſembling of a Common-Council, or the aſſembling a Common Hall, &c. Precepts are iſſued, they are Words that you, Gentlemen, do underſtand very well, to ſummon a Common Hall from time to time. It is very true, tho' they do uſually make Summons for Midſummer-day, yet Midſummer-day being a publick and notorious day for the Choice of ſome particular Perſons, they are not ſo continually exact in Summons, for they do preſume that every body takes notice of the day. But I am to give your Lordſhip an account, whereas in the Record there is only notice taken concerning the Sheriffs on Midſummer-day, it is notoriouſly known to all Gentlemen that are Inhabitants in London, there is a Choice of Chamberlain, and Auditors of the Bridge-Houſe and Chamber-Accounts down to Ale-conners, and that the Sheriffs of London, quâ Sheriffs of London, are no more in the Caſe than any private Man is. I do take notice of this, to give you an account that as ſoon as theſe Officers are diſpatched, I my ſelf had the Honour to ſerve the City ſome time, and know it very well, therefore I take the Liberty to explain it to ſome of theſe Gentlemen that are Foreigners. My Lord, as ſoon as ever this is done, (as it was frequent before People were ſo ambitious to come into the Office of Sheriffs, as they have been within two or three Years; for it was not known, till of late, that People were fond of the Office, there is a term they uſe, To go a Birding, as they call it, they did not ſeek for the Office as they have done of late) when there was any perſon came off from ſerving, that is, paid a Fine of 400 l. for coming off, then the uſual method was to call another Common Hall; for they never made application to Mr. Sheriff, Good Mr. Sheriff let us have a Common Hall: But the common way was in time of Vacation (for in Auguſt there are no ſuch things as Courts of Aldermen held, Courts are not then held, except the Sheriffs Court) then to go to my Lord Mayor's houſe, and he appoints them to come to a Common Hall, a meeting for to chuſe ſuch and ſuch: He orders the Sword-bearer, or other Officer that is attendant upon his perſon in his houſe, to ſend forth Summons in order to ſuch a thing as the aſſembling a Common Hall, and there may be ſometimes but one Sheriff there; nay, I have known it ſometimes when there hath been never a Sheriff, and yet they have not thought they have wanted a Judge of that Aſſembly; but, my Lord, when all the matter is over, and perſons are declared to be choſen into this or that, or the other Office in the Common Hall, then an Officer of the City; not an Officer of the Sheriffs, but an Officer which is called by the name of the Common Cryer; he makes Proclamation upon the Huſtings, where my Lord Mayor is Judge, for all Gentlemen to depart for that time, and to give their attendance there at another Summons. And now, my Lord, to make the thing a little more intelligible, there is a difference between the Choice of the County Officers and the Corporation Officers; For at the Election of City Officers, the Common Serjeant, the Common Cryer, and Town Clerk, are the Officers that attend and manage the Common Hall, where my Lord Mayor is looked upon to be the Superintendent; but at the Election of Parliament Men, the Writ is directed to the Sheriffs, and they interpoſe in all the management, and then the Common Serjeant and Common Cryer have nothing to do, but at ſuch times the Secondaries of the Compter, which are Deputies to the Sheriffs, they come and manage the whole Affair. This I tell you, becauſe I have been pretty well acquainted with the Methods of the City. I do very well remember I had the Honour to ſerve the City of London at that time Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor, and there was a great occaſion to try a Perſon about the Aſſaſſination of Mr. Arnold, and the Queſtion was, whether they ſhould proceed to a Poll or not, becauſe they were to go to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Baily, in order to the trying of that Perſon. That worthy Gentleman being then in the Chair, I had the Honour to ſit by him; ordered the Court to be adjourned for a day or two, becauſe they were to go to the Seſſions. There was no asking the Sheriff's Opinion when Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor, nor there was no ſuch thing then; but now the Caſe was altered, for Sir John Moore was Lord Mayor. Now, my Lord, Sir John Moore, like a good Magiſtrate, endeavouring to preſerve the Priviledges of the Chair, there happened a Controverſie amongſt the Members of the Common Hall, whereby the publick Peace of the Kingdom might have been very much injured, as well as the Peace of the City much diſturbed. To prevent which, Sir John Moore, with the advice of his worthy Brethren the Aldermen, came upon the Huſtings, and found they were all in an uproar, and not cool enough for any Debate; for they were wound up to that height of Fury or Madneſs, that they had not a good word to beſtow upon their Magiſtrates, nor upon him whom their chief Magiſtrate did repreſent. For we muſt tell you, when they cried Pray God bleſs the King, as is uſual for the Officer upon ſuch Occaſions; many cryed, No, God bleſs the Sheriffs, the Proteſtant Sheriffs. Whereupon my Lord Mayor for preſervation of the Peace adjourned the Common Hall, and required the Members to depart and come down off the Huſtings; the Rabble, for by the way a great many of theſe perſons in this Information, as Mr. Goodenough, and the reſt of them, were not Livery-Men, nor concerned in the Election one way or other, but came there on purpoſe to foment and to raiſe up the Spirits and Malignant Diſpoſitions of a ſort of People that are Enemies to the Government; they came to foment Quarrels, and not maintain Peace. My Lord, when my Lord Mayor came off the Huſtings, they came upon him, had him down upon his Knees, and his Hat off, and if ſome Gentlemen had not come in, they had trod him under feet; ſuch an Indignity was then done to the Lord Mayor of London, who, I think I may ſay, deſerved as well from the Government of this City, as any Gentleman that ever preſided in that Office, that before had not been heard. My Lord, We will call our Witneſſes, to prove the manner of the Elections to be as I have opened it, and to prove the matter in the Information.——

Call the Common Serjeant and Mr. Lightfoot, the Common Cryer and the Sword-bearer.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Lightfoot, Pray give an account to the Jury and the Court of the manner of Election and chuſing of a Common Hall, and the manner of it.

Mr. Lightfoot. My Lord, I have been almoſt 25 Years an Attorney, I always took it that the Serjeant of the Chamber had order to go down to the Clerks or Beadles of the Companies, to ſummon a Common Hall by ſuch a day.

Mr. At. Gen. By whoſe Command?

Mr. Lightfoot. By my Lord Mayor's.

Mr. At. Gen. In all your time did the Sheriffs ever ſummon any?

Mr. Lightfoot. O no.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray Mr. Lightfoot, thus? When they were met, what was the uſual Method?

Mr. Lightfoot. Before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were ſet, the People walked up and down the Hall till the Lord Mayor did come, but as ſoon as my Lord Mayor came, the Common Cryer made Proclamation, O yes, you good Men of the Livery ſummoned ſuch a day for Election, and ſo draw near, and give your Attendance.

Mr. At. Gen. Whoſe Officer was the Common Cryer?

Mr. Lightfoot. My Lord Mayor's Officer.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. A Corporation Officer.

Mr. At. Gen. Now for the diſſolving them.

Mr. Lightfoot. When they have done the buſineſs, Mr. Town Clerk, as I take it, takes his direction from the Lord Mayor, and he bids the Officer make Proclamation, You good Men of the Livery, depart hence for this time, and appear at a new Summons.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the Sheriffs ever diſſolve them?

Mr.

Mr. Lightfoot. Never.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the Common Hall do it?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, there was no ſuch thing.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Lightfoot, After my Lord Mayor had diſmiſs'd the Hall, did you ever hear the Sheriffs keep them together?

Mr. Lightfoot. All the People went away, till within this three or four Years.

Mr. Jones. Since when?

Mr. Lightfoot. Since Mr. Bethel, about that time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, in Bethel and Corniſh's time, then began the Buſtle.

Mr. Williams. You ſay you have been an Attorney 25 Years, I would ask you, in all that time, Mr. Lightfoot, in all that time did you ever know the Lord Mayor adjourn the Common Hall to a certain day?

Mr. Lightfoot. There was never any occaſion.

Mr. Thompſon. Anſwer my Queſtion.

Mr. Lightfoot. I never did.

Sir Fr. Winn. I would ask you another Queſtion, Mr. Lightfoot, Did you ever know before the Election was over, when the Electors were chuſing Sheriffs, or polling or debating it, did you ever know in the middle of it, the Mayor againſt the will of the Sheriffs adjourn it?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did ever the Sheriffs undertake to keep them together before theſe late times?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, never.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray, Sir, this, Though it is uſual, after the Sheriffs have taken the Poll, to acquaint my Lord Mayor; Did you ever know that the Sheriffs have adjourn'd the Common Hall, without acquainting my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Lightfoot. No.

Mr. Thompſon I ask you one Queſtion more, Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Thomas Stamp and another?

Mr. Lightfoot. No, I do not charge my Memory with it.

Mr. Thompſon. Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Robert Clayton and Mr. Kyffen?

Mr. Lightfoot. I was about the Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember when there was a Poll between Sir Simon Lewis and Mr. Jenks? Who did manage that Poll?

Mr. Com. Serj. I did.

Mr. Williams. Are you upon your Oath?

Com. Serj. Yes, I am.

Mr. Lightfoot. When they were gone to the Poll, I went out of the Hall.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever look upon it that the Sheriffs had any thing more to do than others?

Mr. Lightfoot. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were induced to take the Poll? Was it by the Sheriffs, or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Lightfoot. I have been appointed by my Lord Mayor. I do know that the Sheriffs have taken upon them to appoint a Poll, and then my Lord appointed his Clerks in the Houſe to be aſſiſtant to the Common Serjeant, and the Town-Clerk; I never was but in two Polls, one for Mr. Box, and another for my Lord Mayor. One went on with the Poll in one place, and the other in another.

Mr. At. Gen. But before that time, Sir.

Mr. Lightfoot. I know nothing of that, Sir, I was never concerned before.

Mr. Holt. Pray, Sir, Who uſed to manage the Poll before this time?

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, I would ask you a Queſtion, Who managed the Poll before?

Mr. Lightfoot. I have been in a Common Hall when they have been chooſing Sheriffs, when ſeveral have fined. And it hath been upon the queſtion when the Hall hath divided, and they have Polled in the Hall.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who Polled them?

Mr. Lightfoot. The Sheriffs and the Officers ſtood and ſaw them go out, and this is within theſe few Years.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, I ask you thus, now in all your Obſervations, when there was any Conteſt, who was Sheriff upon the Election and the Diviſions during the time of Election, and before it were at an end, who did manage it, the Sheriffs, or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Lightfoot. When the Court had been proclaimed, and the Recorder had ſpoken to them, my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen withdrew from the Huſtings, and the Sheriffs and other Officers ſtood there with them; then the Commons propoſed who they would have put in nomination, and they were put up; then the Sheriffs have turned back to the Gentlemen upon the Huſtings to ask their Opinions, how are your Opinions concerning the Hands? We do think it goes ſo; then it hath been declared.

Sir Fr. Winn. By whom?

Mr. Lightfoot. The Common Cryer, or the Common Serjeant.

Sir Fr. Winn. You ſay, as ſoon as my Lord Mayor withdrew, during the time of Election, the two Sheriffs managed the Hall.

Mr. Lightfoot. In that manner with others.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Lightfoot, Do you remember who Adjourned the Hall, when Mr. Bethel and Mr. Corniſh were Choſe?

Mr. Lightfoot. I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Com. Serj. Are you ſworn?

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you have obſerved in particular, becauſe I mentioned it in the time o Sir Robert Clayton; mention how that was.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, when the Common Cryer hath made Proclamation, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen being ſet upon the Huſtings, Mr. Recorder makes a Speech; as ſoon as that is done, my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen retire into this Court, leaving the Sheriffs and me, and the reſt of the Officers upon the Huſtings, and I there manage the Election, and when the Election is made, I go up to the Court of Aldermen, and make Report of what hath been done in the Hall. I declare the Election, and I manage the Election, and do it as the Duty of my Place.

Mr. Williams. Who manages the Election?

Mr. Com. Serj. I manage the Election; I declare what is my opinion of the Election in the Hall; and I come and make Report to my Lord Mayor in this Court; then my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen, and the Recorder come down again. I remember particularly when Sir Robert Clayton was Lord Mayor, it was about the Choice of Mr. Bethel and Alderman Corniſh, and there was a great diſturbance in the Hall; then I came into the Court, and after I had made my Report, I offer'd to give the Paper to the Recorder corder that then was: Sir George Jefferies, He told me that the People would not hear him, and therefore he wou'd not take the Paper. Upon that Sir Robert Clayton ſaid to me, Prithee, do thou ſpeak to them, they will hear thee if they will hear any body; for the Hall was in a great Uproar, and they call'd to throw me off the Huſtings, and then I made Anſwer to Sir Robert Clayton; Sir, It is not the duty of my Office, and when I do any thing that is not my Office, I ſhall expect particular Directions. Then, ſaith he, you muſt tell them, I muſt Adjourn them till Monday, becauſe I go to the Old Baily to try the Aſſaſſinates of Arnold. Thereupon the Hall was Adjourned, and Proclamation made to depart; and my Lord Mayor attempting to go, was beat back twice or thrice, but at laſt they let him and the Aldermen go, and kept the Sheriffs and me till Evening. At laſt Mr. Papillon came up to me, Mr. Papillon, ſays I, I am glad to ſee you, you will hear Reaſon, ſays he, why do not you go on with the Poll? I told him, my Lord Mayor had Adjourned the Hall: Says he, I did not hear it before; but now you tell me ſo, I will go out of the Hall: Says I, Sir, you will do very well to tell the Hall ſo; which he did, and ſome went away; and further Adjournments were made by the Direction of my Lord Mayor.

Mr. At. Gen. I would ask you a Queſtion or two: Who do you look upon to be the Chief Magiſtrate of the City?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord Mayor, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, in all your time till this, was there no Uproar? Did ever any Sheriff undertake to controul the Mayor in the buſineſs of putting Queſtions, or taking Votes?

Mr. Com. Serj. Sir, there was never any Diſpute till Mr. Sheriff Bethel was upon the Huſtings, and then there was.

Mr. At. Gen. As whoſe Officer did you do it?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord Mayor's, and the City of London's; I have nothing to do with the Sheriffs, for when there is a Writ comes for the Choice of Parliament-men, directed to the Sheriffs, I never do it, but Mr. Secondary.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſpeak of later Diſturbances.

Mr. Com. Serj. The firſt Diſpute about Sheriffs, ſince I was Common Serjeant, was about Mr. Jenks, and that Poll was taken by the direction of the Lord Mayor, by the Town Clerk and my ſelf; and our Books ſay, If there be a Diſpute in the Common Hall, it muſt be decided as in the Common Council. It is in Liber albus.

Mr. At. Gen. Liber niger.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, Liber albus.

Mr. At. Gen. Liber albus? It is Liber niger, they turn the white Book into a black Book now.

Sir Fr. Winn. At that time, Sir, when my Lord Mayor was willing to go to the Old Baily, Did the Sheriffs do any thing farther?

Mr. Com. Serj. The Sheriffs did not meddle in the matter.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. King, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account of what you know of this matter.

Mr. Peter King. I have been at a Court of Common Hall 28 Years, my Lord, and have been concerned, I never looked upon the Sheriffs to have any concern there. And I do very well remember, Sir George Jefferies, I do remember and know; they did always in ancient times take advice of the Officers by, and they never did eſteem themſelves in thoſe days, to be any more concerned than as the beſt Officers to be preferred before the reſt: When my Lord ſays, Come up, they come in order, the Maſters and Wardens of the Companies.

Mr. At. Gen. Who did do the buſineſs upon the Huſtings?

Mr. King. All of them, Sir, altogether.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there never any difference about the Votes?

Mr. King. Sometimes they have ſtood upon it.

Mr. At. Gen. When there was a Queſtion made to know who had the moſt, who decided it?

Mr. King. They generally asked one another, What do you think, and what do you think? I ſpeak for 20 Years together ſince the King came in.

Mr. At. Gen. I hope in God there hath been a King in England for 20 Years, tho' perhaps ſome of the Sheriffs that were then in Debate, would have had none.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. King, I only deſire to know this of you, becauſe I know you know Queſtions; I deſire, my Lord, to know whether he ſpeaks it to be a matter of Right, or his Opinion; for we know Mr. King's Opinion will go a great way in this matter. Do you ſpeak it as a thing of Right, or as your Conceptions?

Mr. King. Sir, It would be a thing very confident in me to determine of the Right, but only as I always eſteem'd it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. King, I would ask you this Queſtion; Pray do you tell your Belief upon the Obſervation that you have made from time to time of the Practice there?

Mr. King. An hundred and a hundred Common Halls I believe I have been at.

Mr. Thompſon. That's good ſtore.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That may be when there are many Fines; when I was Common Serjeant there were 5000 Pounds Fines one Year.

Sir Fr. Winn. I deſire you to give your Opinion, you ſay they are all equal that are there.

Mr. King. Every Officer in his degree; for if 20 Men go together, he that is beſt ſpeaks firſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Were the Sheriffs allowed to be there, or no?

Mr. King. The Sheriffs are always bound to attend my Lord Mayor by their Oaths, unleſs they have lawful Excuſe.

Mr. Jones. Mr. King, Did the Sheriffs ever continue the Aſſembly after it was diſſolved?

Mr. King. No, Sir.

Mr. Jones. Or could they do it?

Mr. King. I can't ſay that.

Mr. Thompſon. Did you ever know my Lord Mayor Adjourn the Court till the Hall had done?

Mr. King. I can't tell.

Mr. Thompſon. I tell you, Sir, Sir Samuel Starling did.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But the Sheriffs could not do it.

Mr. Thompſon. Nor he neither, for he paid for it.

Mr. Holt. Mr. King, I ask this Queſtion; Who declares the Poll in the Hall?

Mr. King. The Common Serjeant.

Mr. Holt. Who directs him uſually?

Mr. King. His Office directs it ſelf.

Mr. Holt. I ask if the Sheriffs don't agree, who who is elected before the Common Serjeant make Proclamation?

Mr. King. They always agree, unleſs it be very clear; I have known the Common Serjeant do it ſeveral times without diſputing.

Mr. Com. Serj. When Perſons are put in Nomination, and the Hands are held up; I generally ask the People about me, Who have moſt, and particularly the Sheriffs, and ſo make Declaration.

L. C. J. The Officers ask one another, who they think has moſt? That doth not give them the Juriſdiction, that they chuſe Officers without the Lord Mayor or Sheriffs: But, for ought that I ſee, theſe Officers have had more to do about the Choice than the Sheriffs have. Theſe Officers conſult one with another commonly, and conclude which Side have moſt; and then report it to my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Firſt of all, when they put any Queſtion for any Officer in the Common Hall, the uſual way of putting the Queſtion is, As many of you as would have ſuch a Man to be ſuch an Officer, hold up your Hands: And if the Election be clear, Proclamation is made preſently: If not, the Common Serjeant asks, Who they think hath the Majority? Which being declared, they acquieſce. But ſince Mr. Bethel came in, there have been very hot Diſputes in the World; but before his Time there were Attempts made to keep Sheriffs off, but never before to get Sheriffs on. And after the Election is declared below, immediately they go to my Lord Mayor, and report it to him: And then comes down the Mayor and Aldermen to the Huſtings, and the Recorder ſays, We are informed that ſuch and ſuch Perſons have been put in Nomination, and the Election paſſed upon ſuch and ſuch. And then the Lord Mayor commands the Aſſembly to be diſſolv'd.

Mr. Wells. When the common Hall is firſt met together, are not the Lord Mayor and Aldermen generally preſent?

Mr. Com. Cryer. At the firſt meeting.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. When they are there ſet, give an Account what Proclamation is there made.

Mr. At. Gen. How long have you known it?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I have been in this Place almoſt ſeventeen Years; I always come with my Lord Mayor; I do make Proclamation by Order of my Lord Mayor, dictated by the Town-Clerk; and I take the Words from the Town-Clerk, and his Words I ſay; You good Men of the Livery, ſummoned to appear here this Day, for the Confirmation of ſuch a one choſen by my Lord Mayor, and another fit and able Perſon to be Sheriffs of the City of London, and County of Middleſex for the Year enſuing, draw near, and give your Attendance. I never adjourned the Court in my Life, but by Order from my Lord Mayor; nor never diſſolved the Court, but by Order from my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Common Cryer, I would fain know this; When my Lord Mayor is gone, and the Aldermen, during the Election, do you ever diſmiſs the Court before my Lord comes down again; and do not you take the very Words of Diſſolution from the Town-Clerk?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I do ſo.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And what is uſual in your Time when Sheriffs have fined off, who gives Directions for a Common Hall?

Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Who is it puts the Queſtion, the Common Serjeant or the Cryer?

Mr. Com. Cryer. The Common Serjeant dictates the Words to me, and I never take them from any other; I have taken the Paper into my own Hands, but never but one Year neither, when they were in a Confuſion; the Time when Mr. Bethel was choſen there was ſome Difference, I did read the Names that Time, and never but that one Time. I always take the Words from the Common Serjeant; I never put any Vote, but what I have from the Common Serjeant.

Mr. At. Gen. Do the Sheriffs put any Vote?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Never, Sir.

L. C. J. I do not underſtand him; I think he did mean, when Bethel was choſen he put the Queſtion by ſome body elſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, no, he took the Paper in his Hand. Before he uſed to take Dictates from the Common Serjeant; but there was a Confuſion when Bethel was choſen, and then he took the Paper from the Common Serjeant, and read it.

Mr. Com. Cryer. He gave the Paper into my Hand.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, they made ſuch a noiſe that he could not hear me.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Wells, how long have you been Common Cryer?

Mr. Com. Cryer. About ſeventeen Years.

Mr. Williams. In all that time did you ever hear the Lord Mayor adjourn the Court to a certain Day?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Yes.

Mr. Williams. To a certain Day?

Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor adjourn'd this Common Hall to a certain Day.

Mr. Williams. I ask you upon your Oath again, Did you ever know the Lord Mayor adjourn a Common Hall to a Day certain?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember that of Sir Robert Clayton's?

L. C. J. If ſo be they be adjourned, to meet upon a new Summons, if there be occaſion, no queſtion but he may to a certain Day.

Mr. Williams. Now we are upon matter of Fact.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Did you ever know my Lord Mayor adjourn them before the Election of Sheriffs was over? Here is my Queſtion, obſerve it. When after once my Lord Mayor is gone out of the Hall, when the Election begins, did you ever know my Lord come and diſturb the Election, or adjourn it before it was done?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I never knew any thing of it before now.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Wells, do you remember that Inſtance in Sir Robert Clayton's time?

Mr. Com. Cryer. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Have not you known my Lord Mayor diſſolve the Court before the Buſineſs hath been done; take up his Sword and be gone?

Mr. Com. Cryer. When he hath a mind to adjourn the Court, and declare it, I adjourn it by his Order.

Mr. At. Gen. But have you not known him take up his Sword, and be gone before the Election is over?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Sir Robert Clayton did do that before the Buſineſs was done.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Wells, Do not you remember,

in

in Sir Samuel Starling's Case, that he did adjourn the Hall?

Mr. Com. Cryer. He dissolved the Hall.

Mr. Thompson. Very well.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He did dissolve the Hall, and so hath every Lord Mayor since. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I perceive this Gentleman makes a Question, Whether ever there was an Adjournment of a Common Hall before such a time as the Election of Sheriffs was over. I will give you an Answer to that Question, and a very fair one, and a plain one: I say, till the time of Bethel, in Sir Robert Clayton's Mayoralty, there was never such a thing as a Poll for Sheriffs.

L. C. J. Silence, that we may hear.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we only ask a Question; we ask a Question, and take our Answer.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Will you give us leave to go on, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Sir William Hooker, Pray how long is it since you were Sheriff of London?

Sir William Hooker. About 16 or 17 Years ago.

Mr. At. Gen. You have been Sheriff and Lord Mayor of London, I would only know, whether you looked upon it as your Right when you were Sheriff?

Sir William Hooker. No, nor ever durst presume to think it: In those days it was not thought upon.

Mr. At. Gen. When you were Lord Mayor, did you order Summons for Common Halls?

Sir William Hooker. Always.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ever use to consult with your Sheriffs when to call a Common Hall?

Sir William Hooker. Never, and I think no such thing was ever heard of under the Sun, till of late.

Mr. Thompson. Sir William Hooker, did you ever adjourn the Court before the Business was done?

Sir William Hooker. I never saw any such Occasion, Rebellion was not ripe then.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir William, Pray thus; Have you ever in a common Council, or Common Hall, known my Lord Mayor rise before the Business was done, and take his Sword?

Sir William Hooker. I confess I must own it, That when Things grew to a greater height, I was forced once in this Place to cause the Sword to be taken up and go out, and the Court was dissolved, and durst not go on after I was gone.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship please, I desire to call the Sword-bearer.

Mr. Williams. Sir William Hooker, If I may, without Offence ask you, How old are you?

Sir William Hooker. Seventy Years of age, Sir.

Mr. Williams. You say, you never knew Rebellion ripe?

Sir William Hooker. Good Sir, I perceive you are very apt to mistake, I lived in 41 and 42.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir William, Can you remember the Meeting in 48?

Sir William Hooker, Ay, very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Then they usurped the very same Power, and an Act of Parliament to confirm it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I desire Mr. Sword-Bearer may be Sworn.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Pray, Sir, in all the time that you have been acquainted with the Customs of London, did you ever know when there was an Election for Sheriffs, that the Lord Mayor did interpose or meddle till the Election was over?

Sir William Hooker. Sir, of late Years I have not appeared, because of an Infirmity, I cannot be long in London; but in all that time I used to appear, I never did observe any such thing.

Sir Fr. Winnington. That the Mayor ever meddled?

Sir William Hooker. Nay, Sir, that the Sheriffs ever meddled: When I was Sheriff of London, I durst not presume to meddle, but left the whole to my Lord Mayor.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Did you ever know, when the Election of Sheriffs was in a Common Hall, that the Lord Mayor offered to disturb them till the Election was over?

Sir William Hooker. Truly I do not remember any such thing. Sir Fr. Winnington, I would give you a full Answer, I do tell you, as it hath been declared; My Lord Mayor and the Aldermen come into the Court, and a Report is made; when this is done, they leave the management of the Affair to others, we come and sit down till it is done.

Sir Fr. Winnington. To whom do you leave the Concernment?

Sir W. Hooker. To the Officers that it belongs to.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Who are those Officers?

Sir W. Hooker. I never heard it disputed till just now.

Mr. Jones. Sir W. Hooker, You have been an ancient Citizen, Do you remember that ever the Sheriffs presumed to hold this Court?

Sir W. Hooker. No, never in my life. —You may confound any Man at this rate.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, in your time was there a Poll for Sheriffs in London?

Sir W. Hooker. Truly not as I remember.

Mr. Williams. Do you remember any Poll in your time? If you don't remember a Poll, you can't remember who took it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir William Hooker, do you ever remember the Sheriffs appointed the Common Serjeant to take the Poll?

Sir W. Hooker. Never in my life.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Sword Bearer, I won't ask you how old you are; I desire to know how long you have been an Officer in this City?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. Three and twenty Years.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I desire to know in all your time, who ordered Common Halls? Who gave Direction for the summoning Common Halls?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. My Lord Mayor always.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did my Lord Mayor use to send for the Sheriffs, to know of them when they would be pleased to have a Common Hall?

Mr. Sword Bearer. I never knew that the Sheriffs did interpose in calling a Common Hall in my Life.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Sword-Bearer, at such time as the Business was done, when the Common Cryer had Directions for dissolving the Common Hall, pray who used to give these Directions all along?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. It was done by the Town-Clerk and my Lord Mayor's Officers.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did ever the Sheriffs continue the Hall after my Lord Mayor had adjourned it?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. Truly I know no such thing.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Sword-Bearer, I would ask you one Queſtion; If in caſe the Common Serjeant, or the Common Cryer, or any other Officers do put a Queſtion that the Commons would not have put, who orders them to put the right Queſtion?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. I can't ſay any thing to that.

Mr. At. Gen. After the Common Serjeant comes up and reports what is done, then what doth my Lord Mayor do?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. My Lord Mayor and the Aldermen go down to the Huſtings, and it is declared by the Recorder, or the Common Serjeant, by the order of my Lord Mayor.——I think my Lord Mayor went once down to give them ſome ſatisfaction upon a diſpute.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Man, during the Election did you ever hear them adjourn'd before it was over?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. No, Sir, nor never heard any occaſion for it.

Mr. Williams. The Common Serjeant affirms himſelf to be a Servant to the Commons, and not to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; have you known a Common Serjeant ſay, he was a Servant to the Commons, and not to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. I never was in a Common Hall upon any ſuch diſpute, I am with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I have known a Recorder reprehended by a very learned Lawyer, for ſaying, My Maſters the Aldermen.

Sir Fr. Winn. I ask you who hath the management of the Common Hall in the abſence of the Mayor?

Mr. Sword-Bearer. I am always here waiting upon my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will reſt here as to point of Right: Now, my Lord, in the next place we will come to that which is a more immediate Queſtion before you, and we will prove the manner of it, and the perſons that are guilty; for that is the next ſtep we are to go,——Mr. Bancroft.

Mr. Williams My Lord, they have laid in the Information, That the Sheriffs are duly Elected for one year next following, from the Eve of St. Michael; now prove your Election to be for that year you have laid in your Information.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, they have certainly in Fact miſtaken their Information. My Lord, They do declare that the Common Hall was held, according to Cuſtom, for the Election of Sheriffs, to hold that Office from the Eve of St. Michael, for the year next enſuing: Now, my Lord, that is not ſo in Fact, nor never was, for the Election is for a year to commence on Michaelmas Day. They take on the Eve the Office upon them, but they do abſolutely exerciſe the Office for a Year from that time, from the Eve. Now, my Lord, we ſay, that Day is excluded; we are ſure it is a Common Caſe, it is known very well; as in a Leaſe, the Habendum from any Date, the Day of the Date is no part of that Leaſe, it is excluſive and no part of the Term, and therefore, my Lord, if they do not prove it as they have laid it, we hope they will be non-ſuited.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is another piece of Law.

Mr. Holt. The Eve of Michaelmas Day, we make this Objection, and put you to prove it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Give us leave to go on: Gentlemen, let us prove what we think fit, and if we have not made it out, then make your Exceptions.

Mr. Holt. Mr. Serjeant, I think it is proper to put it now, for if there be no ſuch Election, there can be no ſuch Riot; for they have made it a Riot in a ſpecial manner.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Holt, under your favour, it is not a time now.

Mr. At. Gen. This is the oddeſt way theſe Gentlemen take upon them ſo: I will not prove it; and pray be quiet till I come to my time.

Sir Fr. Winn. Pray, Mr. Attorney, if we have an Objection to make, if the Court pleaſes we may be heard.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Certainly it was never known, that when Mr. Attorney exhibited an Information, to tell us how to prove it. Surely, Gentlemen, you will give us leave to go on with our Proof, won't ye?

Mr. Molloy. Mr. Bancroft, How long have you been a Servant of the City? By whoſe Order was the Hall ſummoned?

Mr. Bancroft. By my Lord Mayor's.

Mr. Who hath diſſolved them?

Mr. Bancroft. My Lord Mayor.

Mr. Did you ever know the Sheriffs give any Order for the diſſolving of it?

Mr. Bancroft. No.

Mr. Thompſon. Did you ever know it diſſolved before the buſineſs was done for which they were call'd? Did my Lord Mayor in your time either diſſolve them, or ſend them going, till the Election was over?

Mr. Bancroft. I can ſay nothing to that.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Bancroft, I would ask you this, Sir, Did the Sheriffs ever continue the Hall after my Lord Mayor had diſſolved it?

Mr. Bancroft. No, I never knew that in my life.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Bancroft, I would ask you a Queſtion, I don't ask you who calls them, or bids them go home, during the time of the Election did my Lord Mayor ever meddle?

Mr. Bancroft. My Lord Mayor withdraws.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who are thoſe among the Commons that manage the buſineſs when my Lord Mayor withdraws?

Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs, and the Common Serjeant, and the Common Cryer.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who manages the Election? Who declares the Election? Who declares who is choſen?

Mr. Bancroft. When the Election is made below, then the Sheriffs come up, and the Common Serjeant, and the Common Cryer along with them, and acquaint my Lord Mayor, and he goes down, and there doth confirm the Election, and withal, when the work is done he diſſolves the Court.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever know a Poll for Sheriffs?

Mr. Thompſon. Do you take the Common Serjeant to be an Officer of the Commons of London, or an Officer of my Lord Mayor's?

Mr. Bancroft. I cannot be certain what he is.

Mr. Thompſon. If in caſe the Common Serjeant differ from them in declaring the Poll, is it not uſual for the Common Hall to order him to put it up again?

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who does make a Judgment of the Election, the Common Serjeant, or the Sheriffs?

Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Does not the Common Serjeant make Obſervation as well as the Sheriffs?

Mr. Bancroft. The Sheriffs give their Opinions in it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, if they had done, we would deſire to go on to our Fact, for otherwiſe for ought I perceive, we ſhall be in here till this time to morrow, and they ſay, we muſt not adjourn till the Cauſe is over.——Mr. Common Cryer; heark you, Mr. Common Cryer, were you preſent at Midſummer Day when this buſineſs happened? Give my Lord and the Jury an account of the carriage then.

Mr. Com. Cryer. I was there at the beginning of the Election, I did make Proclamation, and afterwards there was a Poll demanded, and the Poll was begun, and I went home with my Lord Mayor, afterwards my Lord Mayor came back again, and there was a Hubbub; but about 5 or 6 a Clock, my Lord Mayor came down upon the Huſtings, and I adjourn'd the Court till another day; I did adjourn it by his order, according as I uſed to do, and then I went away with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. At. Gen. But what uſage had you in going out?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I went before my Lord Mayor, I was not with him.

Mr. Williams. Where was the Adjournment?

Mr. Com. Cryer. Upon the Huſtings.

Mr. Williams. Were the Sheriffs Polling the People then?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I don't know that, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Were the Sheriffs near the Huſtings?

Mr. Com. Cryer. I don't know, I ſaw them not.

Sir Fr. Winn. Upon the Election of them, when my Lord Mayor came to adjourn the Court, were the Sheriffs acquainted with it? Where were the Sheriffs?

Mr. Com. Cryer. My Lord Mayor ſent to them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Weſton, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what Directions you had from my Lord Mayor, and how he was uſed when he came out of the Hall?

Mr. Weſton. My Lord Mayor ſent me, my Lord, to the Sheriffs under the Lumbard-Houſe twice to come up to the Council-Chamber, and they told me: One told me he was upon the King's Buſineſs; and the other ſaid he could not come; and about half an hour after, my Lord, Sheriff Pilkington came up to my Lord Mayor into the Council-Chamber, and then immediately came down to the Court of Huſtings, and Mr. Common Cryer by my Lord Mayor's Order, did adjourn the Court from Saturday till Tueſday following, and as we were coming out of the Hall, when Mr. Common Cryer had adjourn'd the Court, and ſaid, God ſave the King, a great part of the Hall hiſs'd; and, but that there were ſo many honeſt Gentlemen about my Lord, I was afraid my Lord would have come to ſome miſchief; but coming to go into the Porch-yard, I ſaw his Hat off, and I went to catch his Hat, and caught one of his Officers by the Head, that was knocked down, or fell down, that held up his Train. My Lord, the Sword was at that diſtance, farther than it is between your Honour, and where I ſtand, and crouded far away; and when my Lord came out into the Yard; Gentlemen, ſays he, I deſire you would go home to your Lodgings, and commanded them in the King's Name to depart: and ſays he to me, Pray go you back, and let the Sheriffs know, and tell them I have adjourn'd the Court to Tueſday. Upon my Lord's Command, I went back to let the Sheriffs know, that my Lord had adjourned the Court till Tueſday.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Both of them, both Shute and Pilkington?

Mr. Weſton. No, Shute, t'other was by.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was in his hearing, was it not?

Mr. Weſton. It was in his hearing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee my Lord Mayor down, and his Hat off?

Mr. Weſton. I ſaw his Hat off, Sir George, but I can't tell how it came off.

Mr. Williams. You ſay, you ſaw my Lord's Hat off, can you tell whether my Lord was ſo courteous to take his Hat off or no?

Mr. Weſton. I dare ſay, my Lord did not.

Mr. Williams. Did he, or no? I ask you upon your Oath?

Mr. Weſton. I can't tell that, Sir.

L. C. J. I can't think that thoſe Gentlemen were ſo extraordinary civil to my Lord Mayor, that when the Common Cryer made Proclamation, God ſave the King, that there ſhould be hiſſing; thoſe that hiſſed were not extraordinary civil to my Lord Mayor, and I believe you don't think ſo neither.

Mr. Williams. I ask you a Queſtion, my Lord Mayor's Hat was off——

L. C. J. Ay, and it muſt be ſuppoſed it was to Complement thoſe fine men that hiſs'd at God ſave the King.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I would deſire to know what account any of them can give of the opinion they had of the King, to be ſure they had a great opinion of his Repreſentative: But my Lord Mayor I find was ſo extraordinary civil, that to this Rabble he muſt not only pull off his Hat, but fling his Hat on the ground to them.

Mr. Thompſon. I ask you whether you know that any of the Defendants in this Information did throw my Lord Mayor's Hat off, or no?

Mr. Weſton. I can't ſay that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is not a farthing matter.

Sir Fr. Winn. Here is a mighty Riot upon the Hat.

Mr. Weſton. Now I deſired them to keep back; my Lord Mayor's Friends did preſs back as much as they could, to preſerve my Lord Mayor; they preſt more forward, as the other kept back, and I deſired them to forbear; nay, commanded them in the King's Name, and upon their Peril, and took my Cane to ſtrike at ſome of them.

Mr. Williams. Did you?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He ſerved them well enough.

L. C. J. He did ſo. Do you think a Magiſtrate is to be crouded and preſt upon?

Mr. Weſton. I ſtruck at them, and ſaid, Gentlemen, keep back, and entreated them and commanded them, and all would not do.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I would only ſay this, Mr. Com Serjeant; What did you hear when Proclamation was made to depart?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I was not in the Hall when Proclamation was made, but I heard them cry out, No God bleſs the King; and I heard them cry out, Down with the Sword; No Lord Mayor, no King.

Mr. Williams. Can you name any Perſon that ſaid this?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I laid hold on one Man that cryed, No God ſave the King; No Lord Mayor, and the Rabble got him from me, one that I heard ſay ſo.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Common Serjeant, you ſay, you heard this; can you name any Perſon?

Mr. Com. Serj. I tell you I caught hold of him, and the Rabble got him from me.

Mr. Williams. Can you name any one?

Mr. Com. Serj I tell you I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I hope that will not much prevail in this Place, but I hope it doth juſtify my Lord Mayor, for endeavouring to diſperſe the Rabble that came together to that height when the King was prayed for, to cry out, No King, No Lord Mayor. And we don't give this in Evidence againſt any one Perſon, for it was done in a tumultuous manner; but they were ſo fond of this Man, as that they reſcued him from him; and to fix it upon them, we will prove they were every one of them concerned in the Riot. ——Mr. Craddock, What account can you give of this matter?

Mr. Craddock. I was ſtanding at the Place where they Poll'd, and my Lord Mayor was coming towards it to proteſt againſt their manner of proceeding; and Sheriff Bethel came to me, and ſaid, Reſiſt him, (I think) he hath nothing to do here.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That was Bethel, Slingsby Bethel.

Mr. Craddock. It was either oppoſe, or reſiſt him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He ſays, he thinks he ſaid, Reſiſt him; but he is ſure it was either Oppoſe, or Reſiſt him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee Mr. Jenks there?

Mr. Craddock. I can't ſay I did: I ſaw Mr. Jenks juſt as my Lord Mayor came down, not after.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee Mr. John Deagle there?

Mr. Craddock. I did not ſee Mr. Deagle.

Mr. At. Gen. How did they uſe my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Craddock. I was not very near my Lord; my Lord, I ſtood at the Place where the Poll was taking.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Craddock, We deſire to ask you this Queſtion, that you ſpeak particularly to Mr. Bethel, Was it before my Lord Mayor had adjourn'd the Poll, or after?

Mr. Craddock. It was juſt as my Lord Mayor came to proteſt againſt the manner of Polling.

Mr. Thompſon. Was the Poll adjourn'd before or after?

Mr. Craddock. It was after.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Bethel, you ſay, he ſaid, Oppoſe, or Reſiſt; did he ſay it before the Poll was adjourn'd?

Mr. Craddock. Yes, Sir, it was before.

Mr. Williams. Can you ſay what the Words were?

Mr. Craddock. It was either Oppoſe, or Reſiſt, he hath no Authority here.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Which is George Reeves? Mr. Reeves, Pray will you tell us what you did obſerve done at this time by Mr. Pilkington, or Mr. Shute, or any Perſon elſe?

Mr. Reeves. I came about 4 or 5 a Clock to the Polling-place where the Coaches uſe to ſtand, and I ſaw the Sword up, I ſuppoſe my Lord Mayor was there, and came to ſtop their Proceedings in Polling; and there was a great Conteſt among them; ſome ſaying, He had nothing to do there: He hath no more to do than I, ſays one; another cryed, Stop the Sword, ſtop the Sword, and I laid hold of him, and got him a little way, and made account to have carried him to the Sheriffs, and the Lord Mayor, but ſome body got him away.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did you obſerve Shute and Pilkington do?

Mr. Reeves. They encouraged the People to Poll.

Mr. Jones. After my Lord Mayor was gone?

Mr. Reeves. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Pray you, Sir, did you obſerve either Mr. Shute, or Mr. Pilkington encourage the People to Hollow or Shout, or thoſe things?

Mr. Reeves. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Hark you Friend Reeves, heark you; How do you know that Pilkington or Shute were Polling? Are you ſure they were Polling after my Lord was gone?

Mr. Reeves. They were at the Polling-places, and they did not go away a great while after that.

L. C. J. From the People that were about them?

Mr. Reeves. No.

Sir Fr. Winn. We agree it, in Fact it was ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Richard Fletcher, Pray will you give the Court an account of what they did.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies John Hill, What did you obſerve there?

Mr. Hill. About 5 a Clock, my Lord Mayor came to the Hall, there was with him then Sir James Edwards, and Sir William Prichard, now Lord Mayor, to the beſt of my memory; and he told them he diſliked their Polling any more; and there came a tall black Man; ſays he, Mr. Sheriff, Go on, it is your Buſineſs, we will ſtand by you; about a quarter of an Hour after my Lord came out of the Hall to the great Croud, ſome of the People Hiſſing, and ſome making a noiſe; and one came to the Sheriffs, and, ſays he, Gentlemen, Why do not you make Proclamation with O Yes? And they continued there till towards 8 a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you hear no Officer adjourn the Court?

Mr. Hill. My Lord Mayor went home, I ſaw him within Doors, and I came back again.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there no Proclamation made afterwards?

Mr. Hill. By ſome of the Officers, but I did not take particular notice.

Mr. At. Gen. Who did you ſee here after you went home with my Lord Mayor, and came back again?

Mr. Hill. I ſaw here Mr. Robert Key for one, and I ſaw Mr. Goodenough come in between 8 and 9 here in the Hall, and my Lord Grey came in, and ſeveral other Gentlemen.

L. C. J. What did they do when they came?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Hark you, Hill, Was my Lord

Lord Grey and Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Key, were they among the People?

Mr. Hill. After the Sheriffs came up, they went into the Orphan's Court, Mr. Goodenough came in and out, and my Lord Grey went in to them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did they appear among the People up and down in the Hall?

Mr. Hill. They went thro' the Hall to and fro.

Sir Fr. Winn. What was the Christian Name of that Goodenough?

Mr. Hill. I know him, he that was Under-Sheriff last Year: I know him well enough, and he knows me, yes, that is Mr. Goodenough.

Lord Grey. I desire to ask this Witness a Question, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let your Counsel ask, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I desire to know another Question; Did you see Mr. Cornish?

Mr. Hill. I saw Mr. Alderman Cornish walk in the Hall, but I can't tell whether he went into the Room, or no. After my Lord was gone, he did come up into the Mayor's Court, and came thorough among the People.

Mr. Thompson. Hill, you speak of my Lord Grey; upon your Oath did you see my Lord Grey walk to and fro in the Hall, or only came thorough?

Mr. Hill. My Lord Grey came in at that Gate, and went thorough the Hall, and went in to the Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. I would ask you this upon your Oath, Did you see him do any Thing more?

Mr. Hill. No, I was there to discharge my Office.

Lord Grey. My Lord, I own my being there; but only desire to ask a Question that will clear this matter.

Mr. Hill. I saw my Lord Grey come up those Stairs, and he went into the Orphan's Court.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How long might that be after the Poll?

Mr. Hill. After the Sheriffs came up, I believe it might be half an Hour, or a quarter of an Hour, near an Hour.

Mr. Williams. Did you see my Lord Grey do any thing more than walk?

Mr. Hill. I saw him come to the Orphan's Court, and they would not open the Door at first; but they said, it is my Lord Grey, and then they let him in.

L. C. J. Your own Counsel is asking, my Lord; I am willing you should ask a Question if your own Counsel will let you. Gentlemen, my Lord would ask a Question himself, and you won't let him.

Lord Grey. My Lord, Though I do not know this Gentleman at all, yet I will venture to ask him a Question: Pray Sir, did you see me speak to any one Man?

Mr. Hill. I have answered that already, I say not.

Lord Grey. Were the Books brought from the Polling-place by the Sheriffs before I came, before that I went in there? ——My Lord, I was there, and shall give you an account of it.

L. C. J. It had been better, my Lord, if you had kept away.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Fletcher, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you observed that Day here after my Lord Mayor was gone and had adjourned the Court?

Mr. Fletcher. On the 24th of June I was here by order of Sheriff Shute, after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court, and it was to call all Men that were to Poll to come forward, for the Books were to be shut up, and I went away immediately, I was very hot and went away to the Three-Tun Tavern.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you see Mr. Shute there?

Mr. Fletcher. Mr. Pilkington was there and Mr. Shute too.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you name any body else?

Mr. Fletcher No, I can name no body else.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. What did Mr. Shute say?

Mr. Fletcher. He ordered me to make Proclamation for all Men, them that had a Right to Poll, to come and Poll, for the Books were to be shut up.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Captain Clark, Pray will you give an account of what you observed?

Capt. Clark. I came down into the Hall, and I did hear a whispering, whereupon I went to guard my Lord Mayor, my Lord Mayor came down upon the Hustings, and Proclamation was made for the Adjournment of the Court; whereupon when Proclamation, God save the King, was made, an hundred, &c. I believe more, hist at that, I laid hold of one of them, No King's-man, no Sword's-man, cry'd they; Sirrah, you are a Rascal and a Traytor in your Heart, said I, and laid fast hold on him; but there was a very great crowd, and says one or two, For God's sake Captain Clark, do you guard my Lord; There was Mr. Weston and Major Kelsey; My Lord, said they, is in danger; said I, Gentlemen, keep by him, or go before, I will be in your Rear-Guard. My Lord Mayor was down upon his Knee, I can't tell how he came down, Press on, Press on, this was the Cry, and God save the Sheriffs. After coming down the Steps, I pressed as near as I could to my Lord Mayor, to keep them off; Now, said I, this is the time to keep the Rabble off, now face about; I had my Sword in my hand, and with the pommel of my Sword kept them off; Before God, said I, I will keep you off; and so I waited on my Lord home, and went and drank a glass of Sack. About an hour or two hours afterwards I came down to the Hall and found the People shouting, God save the Sheriffs, God save the Sheriffs: What nothing, said I, of my Lord Mayor? But, said I, this is not a place to quarrel in, let us not quarrel together. I saw the Sheriffs Pilkington and Shute were concerned in carrying on the Poll, and this they continued to do for some time, at last, I am weary of the Hall, said I, I will go home; and this was between 8 and 9 a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you remember any body else besides the Sheriffs?

Capt. Clark. No, Sir, I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you remember Sir Thomas Player?

Capt. Clark. No, I can't.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Captain Clark, Did you know never a one of them that cryed out so?

Capt. Clark. No, my Lord, I was before Sir Robert Clayton.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Major Kelsey, Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you saw on Midsummer day?

Major Kelsey. My Lord, when my Lord came out of the Court I went after, and some cryed,

Stop

Stop him, ſtop him; but I got between them, and ſome of my Lord's Friends kept them off; but when we came juſt to the going out, they gave a ſhout, and I ſaw my Lord Mayor's Hat upon his Back, and I can't tell whether he touched the Ground with his Hand, but I was e'en almoſt down; ſaid I, Gentlemen, do you intend to murder my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who did you ſee there?

Major Kelſey. Indeed, Sir, I was almoſt down, and did not ſee their Faces.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Trice Hammon, I would only ask you, Who did you ſee, who did you obſerve to be there?

Mr. Hammon. About 9 a Clock at Night, or ſomething before, I ſtood at the Door that leads to the * Common-Pleas, and there came in Alderman Corniſh and Goodenough, and Old Key, an old white-hair'd Man, and by and by my Maſter Sheriff Shute came out and told me, I ſhall give you all Sasisfaction by and by; God bleſs you, Mr. Sheriff, ſaid I; and he went again, and there I ſtaid till they came out, and then he went upon the Huſtings, and I went along with him when he came out.

* The ſame place which before was called the Orphan's Court.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who went with him out to go to the Huſtings?

Mr. Hammon. Sir William Gulſton, and ſeveral other Men, there is never a Name in the Indictment more.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. None of them that are in the Indictment? Name them.

Mr. Hammon. I have named them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Prithee name them.

Mr. Hammon. Mr. Alderman Corniſh, both the Sheriffs, my Lord Grey, Mr. Goodenough, and old Mr. Key.

Mr. Thompſon. Which Goodenough?

Mr. Hammon. That Mr. Goodenough that ſtands there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There is ſuch a noiſe that I did not very well hear that Word.

Mr. Hammon. Goodenough, not that Goodenough that looks upon me, but he that ſtands behind.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He falls behind now, but he ran up and down then, and Alderman Corniſh was there too.

Mr. Jones. You Witneſs, you have named all theſe men, what did Shute do, or what did he ſay?

Mr. Hammon. When he came upon the Huſtings, he made Proclamation himſelf, becauſe one or two refuſed it, he did it himſelf; and after a while he adjourned the Court upon the Huſtings; this was on Midſummer day.

Mr. Jones. What did he ſay?

Mr. Hammon. As the Common Cryer uſually ſays at ſuch times.

Mr. Thompſon. You ſay you ſaw Mr. Goodenough, and you ſaw my Lord Grey, upon your Oath, can you ſay they did any thing, or was any thing done in abuſe to my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Hammon. They did not tell me, my Lord, what they did.

Mr. Thompſon. I ask you what did they do?

L. C. J. Mighty buſie they were.

Mr. Thompſon. How long was it after my Lord Mayor adjourned the Court?

Mr. Hammon. About two Hours.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. So much the worſe.

L. C. J. You muſt underſtand it was ſome time before Mr. Sheriff had made his Adjournment, they were buſie till that time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſes, I do agree with Mr. Thompſon, that the Jury ſhould remember that this was two Hours after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court.

Lord Grey. I deſire, my Lord, I may ask him ſome Queſtions. You ſay you ſaw me go to the Council-Chamber, at what time, and who went with me?

Mr. Hammon. A little before Candle-light.

Lord Grey. You ſay all the Company went out with the Sheriffs, and went away.

Mr. Hammon. My Lord, I did not ſay you came out.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord was of the Upper Houſe.

Mr. Thompſon. Yes, and may be there again.

Lord Grey. I hope I ſhall be there, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. It had better you had been ſo then, my Lord.

Lord Grey. It will be the worſe for you, I ſhan't lie Perdue for you.

Mr. At. Gen. If you threaten me, my Lord, I ſhall take notice of it. My Lord, I have done you a Kindneſs, but if you come under my Hands again, I ſhall not do it.

L. C. J. They would not have it ſaid, God ſave the King, and my Lord you were with ſome of thoſe that abuſed him.

Lord Grey. After it was over, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. You were not within your Duty here.

Lord Grey. My Lord, it was after the Poll was cloſed.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I deſire if you pleaſe, what is uſual in all Cauſes, that we might go on without any interruption. Let us go on for the King, and then make all the defence you can. Don't think either to hiſs or threaten us out of our Cauſe. Mr. Higgins, give my Lord and the Jury an account of what you ſaw or heard.

Mr. Higgins. My Lord, I attended with ſeveral of our Company by my Lord Mayor's Coach to Guild-hall, and was in the Council-Chamber, and he ſent for the Sheriff, after that he went away; and when God ſave the King was ſaid, ſaid they, God ſave the Proteſtant Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I deſire to know, Mr. Higgins, this, what they ſaid?

Mr. Higgins. They cryed, Down with the Sword.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Attorney is making a Speech to us, I don't know what he hath ſaid.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I don't think Mr. Attorney thinks you worth a Speech. Mr. Higgins, I deſire to ask you a Queſtion, I ask you this Queſtion upon your Oath, after the Adjournment of the Court, and after this very inſolent behaviour of ſome of the Rabble that were there, for I can call them no better, who did you ſee there?

Mr. Higgins. After I went home, I went to ſee my Lord ſafe home, and came back again, I ſaw one Freeman that they call the Proteſtant Cheeſemonger, calling, To poll, to poll.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray who elſe did you ſee?

Mr. Higgins. I ſaw Mr. Alderman Corniſh come up towards the Sheriffs, Gentlemen, ſaid he, You are doing right.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you hear Mr. Alderman Corniſh ſay ſo? What this Gentleman? Do you know him?

Mr. Hig-

Mr. Higgins. Says he to Sheriff Shute, You ſhall have all right done to you.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who elſe did you ſee there?

Mr. Higgins. I ſaw Mr. Swinock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee Mr. Key, did you ſee Mr. Pilkington?

Mr. Higgins. I did not ſee Mr. Pilkington, I ſaw Shute.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee Mr. Jekyl?

Mr. Higgins. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Which of them do you mean?

Mr. Higgins. The Elder man

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There is John Jekyl the Elder, Gentlemen, and John Jekyl the Younger.

Mr. Higgins. I was diſputing with a Fellow that his Toes came out of his Shooes, and had a green Apron, ſaid I, Are you a Livery man? Yes, I am, ſaid he. Surely, ſaid I, they don't uſe to make ſuch as you are Livery Men. Says Mr. Jekyl, He may be as good a man as you for ought I know. That was about half an hour after my Lord Mayor went home.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What time was the Adjournment?

Mr. Higgins. About 5 or 6. I was ſpeaking ſomething, You are all in a Riot. This is no Riot, ſays Mr. Swinnock to me; I can never meet you but you are railing againſt the King's Evidence.

L. C. J. The King's Evidence, what was that?

Mr. Williams. What was done by Mr. Jekyl?

Mr. Higgins. He was talking among the People.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He did encourage among the reſt.

Mr. Williams. You are in a Paſſion now.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No Sir, I am not.

Mr. Higgins. He ſeconded Mr. Corniſh when he ſaid, Inſiſt upon your Rights.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who did ſo?

Mr. Higgins. Freeman, my Lord, that they call the Proteſtant Cheeſemonger.

Mr. Williams. A very pretty word indeed.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Ay, ſo it is, he is ſo called, you will give us leave to hear what the Witneſſes ſpeak.

Mr. Williams. Another Epithet would do a great deal better.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. William Bell, what was done upon the Spot? Was there any hurt?

Mr. Williams. Do you ſay upon your Oath, that Gentleman was there?

Mr. Higgins. I have ſeen him in the Balcony.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He ſays, he uſes to be there upon publick days in the Coffee-houſe.—— Bell, I would deſire to know of you, whether you are able to give an account after my Lord Mayor's Adjournment, who was there; name as many perſons as you can?

Mr. Bell. Mr. Bethel, and I ſaw Mr. Corniſh go through the little Gate into the Yard.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who elſe?

Mr. Bell. That is all, Sir Sheriff Pilkington delivered two Poll-Books into my hand.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Vavaſor, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you ſaw?

Mr. Vavaſor. It happen'd thus, Mr. Hammon had taken a man upon execution, who was Bail for a Client of mine who had paid the moneys long before; upon that I came to know who imployed him, and coming here, I found Mr. Hammon in that place, and the crowd was ſo great, Don't go back again, ſaid he, for you will go near to be abuſed. Whilſt I ſtaid there, I asked him what was the meaning; Says he, In this Room are the Sheriffs and ſome others caſting up the Poll; and whilſt I ſtaid, there came in Mr. Good-enough to and fro from them, and before they would admit any, they would know their names; there was Mr. Key, my Lord Grey, and Sir William Gulſton.

Mr. At. Gen. What afterwards?

Mr. Vavaſor. Yes, Mr. Corniſh was there, he and Sheriff Shute came out together, and they went upon thoſe Stairs under the Clock.

Mr. At. Gen. Who came out with Sheriff Shute?

Mr. Vavaſor. Corniſh.

Mr. Williams. What Corniſh?

Mr. Vavaſor. Alderman Corniſh.

Mr. Williams. Very mannerly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. His name was Corniſh before he was an Alderman.

Mr. Vavaſor. And Sheriff Shute told the People, If they would ſtay a little time, he would give them Satisfaction. Upon that, Mr. Corniſh went through the Company, and when they came to the Huſtings, Mr. Shute ordered Proclamation to be made, and told them, Whereas my Lord Mayor had taken upon him to adjourn at 9 a Clock, We the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, being the proper Officers, do adjourn it to Tueſday at 9 of the Clock. Upon that an Antient Gentleman deſired they might proclaim the Election. Then ſays Shute, that I can't do it now, for we have taken very good Counſel for what we do. Had it not been for Mr. Hammon, I had been, I believe, trod under foot ſufficiently.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Denham, who did you ſee?

Mr. Denham. I ſaw Sir Thomas Player, and Mr. Jenks.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where did you ſee them pray?

Mr. Denham. In the Yard. I went home with my Lord Mayor, and then I ſaw them. I had a kind of a glance, but I can't ſwear poſitively to Mr. Jekyl.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Thomas Player and Mr. Jenks, what did you ſee them do?

Sir Fr. Winn. Heark you, Friend, where was it you ſaw them?

Mr. Denham. In the Yard.

Sir Fr. Winn. What did you ſee them do?

Mr. Denham. Nothing at all.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How many People might be there then? Two or three hundred?

Mr. Denham. Above a Thouſand.

Mr. Williams. What did you hear Sir Thomas Player ſay?

Mr. Denham. Nothing.

Mr. Williams. How far was he from his own Door?

Mr. Denham. On t'other ſide the Hall.

Mr. Williams. A mighty way indeed, a mighty thing. What ſaid Mr. Jenks?

Mr. Denham. I can't ſay, Sir, that I heard him ſpeak a word, only in the Tumult.

Sir. Fr. Winn. Friend, I ask you this, I think I heard you ſay, you ſaw Sir Thomas Player and Mr. Jenks in the Yard; but you did not ſee them do any thing at all?

Mr.

Mr. Denham. No.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Mr. Farrington, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you ſaw after my Lord Mayor had adjourned the Court?

Mr. Farrington. I ſaw there Sheriff Pilkington, Shute, Sir Thomas Player, Mr. Wickham the Scrivener in Loathbury, Mr. Jenks, Babington, one Jennings an Upholſterer.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Player you ſay in the firſt place?

Mr. Farrington. Yes, and Wickham, my Lord, a Scrivener in Loathbury.

L. C. J. Who then?

Mr. Farrington. Sheriff Pilkington and Shute, and Mr. Corniſh, Alderman Corniſh.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you ſee one Deagle there?

Mr. Farrington. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Wickham you ſaw there?

Mr. Farrington. Ay, Sir, I know him very well.

Mr. Thompſon. What is Wickham's Chriſtian Name?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. John Wickham, he goes by that Name, it may be he was not Chriſten'd. Was Jenks there, do you know him?

Mr. Farrington. The Linnen-draper?

Mr. Serj Jefferies. Ay, very well, he goes by the Name of Francis Jenks. Did you ſee Jekyl there?

Mr. Farrington. I don't know the Name, I ſaw a great many I knew by ſight, but not their Names.

Mr. Holt. What did theſe Gentlemen do?

Mr. Farrington. I'll tell you, Sir, there was Sheriff Pilkington and Sheriff Shute, I went in where they were taking the Poll; ſaid I, Gentlemen, my Lord Mayor hath adjourned the Court, what do you do here? I ſuppoſe it lies in my Lord Mayor's Power; if it lies in him to call, certainly he muſt diſſolve.

Mr. Williams. You argued thus?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray give us leave to go on.

Mr. Farrington. There was Mr. Wickham, and ſays he, My Lord Mayor hath nothing to do here, neither will we be ruled by any of your Tory Lord Mayors. This is not the firſt Aſperſion, ſaid I, that you have caſt upon a Gentleman that loves the Church and the Government eſtabliſhed by Law; and they fell about me, and had it not been for Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Hill, I believe they had done me a miſchief; for they trod upon my Toes; who did it I can't tell.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. But you ſay Sir Thomas Player and Pilkington and Alderman Corniſh were amongſt them?

Mr. Farrington. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That's enough —— Pray Mr. Cartwright, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you obſerved there, and who was there.

Mr. Cartwright. I know the Names of no Perſons that were there, all that I can ſay was this. As ſoon as my Lord Mayor adjourned the Court upon the Huſtings, he came down, and going out of the Hall, he had like to have been thrown down, had it not been for Mr. Shaw; and going to ſave my Lord Mayor, I wrenched my Back, and I ſpit Blood for ſeven Days after.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Tell that, Mr. Cartwright, over again.

Mr. Cartwright. My Back was wrenched in ſaving my Lord Mayor, and I ſpit Blood ſeven Days after.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Endeavouring to ſave my Lord Mayor his Back was ſo wrenched that he ſpit Blood ſix or ſeven Days after. Hark you, Mr. Cartwright, ever ſince that time have you found any Indiſpoſition?

Mr. Cartwright. I have not been my own man ſince.

Mr. Williams. He took a Surfeit.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He took a Surfeit of ill Company I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Shaw, give my Lord and the Jury an account of what you know.

Mr. Shaw. My Lord, my Lord Mayor ſent to the Sheriffs, and ordered them to forbear Polling and come up to the Chamber, and ſent two or three times; but they denied coming to him, and went on and ordered the Common Cryer to make Proclamation for them to depart; and if they ſtaid, that he would look upon them as Rioters; and there was hiſſing and a great deal of crowd, and there was Sir James Edwards in the Court, they hunched him with their Elbows, and as his Lordſhip came down, going down the Steps there was ſuch a crowd, that if I had not catched his Lordſhip in my Arms he had fallen upon his Forehead, and his Hat was off.

L. C. J. Who did you ſee ſo misbehave themſelves?

Mr. Shaw. My Lord, I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I think we have now proved it againſt every body we deſign, ſave only againſt Mr. Deagle, for we do not now proceed againſt Dorman Newman and Benjamin Alſop. Now, my Lord, we will only prove againſt John Deagle, and then we ſhall have done. Mr. Kemp, will you tell my Lord and the Jury who you ſaw here. Did you obſerve any Particulars after the Court was adjourned?

Mr. Kemp. I don't remember I obſerved any one Man.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You don't? Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Deagle at any time?

Mr. Kemp. Yes, I had.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did he tell you?

Mr. Kemp. He did confeſs he was there about 7 a Clock at Night.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He did own he was amongſt them?

Mr. Kemp. Yes, with Alderman Corniſh.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What ſay you, Mr. Rigby?

Mr. Rigby. I ſaw him about 7 a Clock.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was he in the Crowd?

Mr. Rigby. Yes, amongſt the People.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. Here is all now, Gentlemen, but Dorman Newman, and Benjamin Alſop, and we don't go againſt them now. After they had done this, and hiſs'd at the King, and cried, No King, no Lord Mayor, what Acclamations went theſe People off with?

Mr. Hammon. When the Court was broke up by the Sheriffs, they cryed, God ſave our true Proteſtant Sheriffs, and in that manner they followed us.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What ſay you?

Mr. Hammon. They hollowed us home, Sir, as far as Fiſhmongers-Hall.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. They began with a Hiſs, and ended with a Hollow.

Mr. Wil-

Mr. Williams. Gentlemen, I am Counsel for the Defendants, and, my Lord, the question is under favour, Whether these Persons taken for Defendants, whether they be guilty of this Riot, as it is laid in the Information, We are now upon a special Case, and the question is, Whether Guilty, or not Guilty. My Lord, In the first place for the Cries, what the Cry was, hath been too often mentioned; for those Cries, there is nothing at all fix'd upon any Person that is Defendant; all that is charged upon us, is, That we were in the Hall it seems, and because there was this Noise heard, therefore we must be guilty. In this Crowd where we are, I hear hissing, especially at t'other and of the Hall, which of us are concerned in it, is a hard matter to judge; it is a hard matter, and it were very well, and it had been very happy, if some of those Persons had been apprehended for their hissing. I won't say, Gentlemen, that either one Party or t'other in the Contest made the Noise of hissing, but there is nothing of it fix'd upon any of us. Our Case is this, my Lord, with favour, When we have stated our Case and proved it, we are very innocent, and not guilty of the Riot. In some measure it hath been stated on the other side. They say in the Information, that the Lord Mayor called a Common Hall; we don't dispute that matter, we agree it, that the Lord Mayor of London is the King's Lieutenant; but to make such an Inference. That because the Lord Mayor is the King's Lieutenant in the City London, that he must execute all the Offices in the City, is of no credit in the World; so that they are mistaken in that. Men are bounded in their Offices. The Lord Mayor does not execute all the Offices in the City tho' he be Lord Mayor. The question between us is this, Whether the Sheriffs, in this Case, did more than their Office as Sheriffs of the City of London. There is a Superiority due to the Lord Mayor. Another thing we agree with them, we agree it is in the Lord Mayor only to call these Common Halls, and as Mr. Serjeant Jefferies, that hath been in a good Office in the City, he agrees it himself, and it is apparent, there are some fix'd Days for Election; but yet tho' there be fix'd Days for Election, yet there must be that Formality of a Summons from the Lord Mayor to the City to meet in order to the Election of Sheriffs for the City of London and other Officers, that we do agree that my Lord Mayor hath the Power of calling Common Halls, and he is the proper Officer. We agree also, Gentlemen, that when the Business is done, for there is nothing in vain in Nature, and there is nothing in Government that should be in vain, when the Business is done, my Lord Mayor is to bid the Company Fare them well, which you may call discharging the Common Hall; we agree that to be commonly and usually done by my Lord Mayor. But herein we differ, which we are to try, the Right of the Office of Sheriffs being the Question, it is a Question of Right, and I don't see the Government is concerned one way or other.

L. C. J. Upon my word I do see it, and surely you must be blind, or else you would see it too, when a Company is got together, No God save the King, no King, no Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I thought I had opened it plainly, I speak before a great many People, I desire, my Lord, this may be very well heard. I thought I had said very well, from all these Noises and Cries we are all innocent, we justify nothing of it, only we would have been glad if they had apprehended any Man that made that Noise; it had been a very happy thing if one of them, or all of them had been Defendants to be tryed. My Clients are Defendants, they are innocent and unconcern'd, it is a Crime committed by some where these Gentlemen were by, but they are innocent; we hear hissing at t'other end of the Room, it was an ill thing, and of a Treasonable Complexion; but for these Gentlemen they are unconcern'd. The Question between the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs of the City, is a Question of Right between the Mayor and Sheriffs, Whether it be the Prerogative of the Mayor, or the Right of the Sheriffs? And I say, under correction again, this Question, Whether the Lord Mayor of London may adjourn the Common Hall to a certain Day, is a Question of Right, Whether he can do it or the Sheriffs; And I don't see what Consequence it can have upon the Government. The Lord Mayor is the King's Deputy, the Sheriffs they are the King's Officers, and the Question is, Whether it be in the Lord Mayor or the Sheriffs of London to adjourn it? They are very good Subjects, I am sure this very Year they are so; therefore I wonder at these Gentlemen of the King's Counsel, that will meddle with the Government, and say the Government is concerned in this; I appeal to any Man if there be any more Concern in this; I say this, here was a Common Hall call'd, grounded upon Custom in the City of London, and here is a single Question, Whether these Sheriffs did any more than their Duty, whether they were guilty of a Riot in continuing this Poll: Gentlemen, this is the method we shall take. First of all, it is not proved, that ever the Lord Mayor before this time did ever attempt to adjourn a Common Hall to any certain time; all the Witnesses that were call'd, that pretend to be knowing in the Customs of London, the Common Serjeant himself, he does not pretend that it was adjourn'd to a Day.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You mistake. Sir Robert Clayton did from Saturday to Monday.

L. C. J. What need if there had been no President; if so be an Assembly of People are met about Business, and they can't make an end of it in a reasonable time, must they be kept all Night till they have? What Argument will you make of it? If a Man may call and dissolve, do you think if there be occasion, but, by the Law it self, that he may adjourn to a convenient Hour?

Mr. Williams. That will be a Question between us. My Lord, what I say certainly of Fact carries something in it.

L. C. J. Not at all.

Mr. Williams. Then, my Lord, I have done.

L. C. J. Give us leave to understand something, Sir.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, by your Lordship's favour——

L. C. J. I spake to Mr. Williams, and he takes it so heinously at my hand that Facts signify nothing; I do again say it, The Fact signifies nothing. For I tell you again as Law, it is not denied the Lord Mayor may call, he may diſſolve; then I ſay by Law without Fact, by Cuſtom, he that can both call and diſſolve, may adjourn to a convenient time. Do not Judges of Aſſize in all the Counties of England do it, when a Cauſe is appointed to be tryed in ſuch a County ſuch a Day, and it may be it is tryed three Days after; and yet I pray find me the Statute or Commiſſion, or find me one thing or another beſides the very Law it ſelf, that doth give them leave to adjourn from time to time.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, there is a mighty difference, but I am only upon Fact, theſe Gentlemen will agree it was never practiſed before Sir Robert Clayton's time, what the Conſequence in Law will be, that is in your Lordſhip's Breaſt, I am now ſpeaking upon the Evidence that this hath not been practiſed. What the Law is, for that we are to have your Judgment, which I humbly crave, I will be judged by Gentlemen that are my Seniors and better read in this matter; but, my Lord, a Man may have a Power of calling and diſſolving, and not of adjourning, it may be ſo. But, my Lord, admitting it to be ſo for this time, yet, my Lord, whether we are guilty of a Riot, take the Circumſtances of our Caſe. Whether the Right of adjourning be in the Sheriffs, yea, or nay, it is a Queſtion of Right, and I had rather apply my ſelf to your Lordſhip, than to the Jury. If there were a Queſtion of Right between the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs, it may be admitted by our Counſel that it was his Right to adjourn the Court, and probably the Sheriffs might be in the wrong, and the Lord Mayor in the right. The Lord Mayor adjourns the Court, and they continue it, they go on with the Poll, and go on with the Execution of their Office as they apprehended, if they were ſtill for their Right, I hope your Lordſhip will not make this a Riot. My Lord, for the Circumſtances that followed, the Noiſe that was made, which I don't love to mention, if, I ſay, they were guilty of this, I am ſilent; but if they did no more, as I hear no more proved upon them, than continuing the Poll, then, I ſay, it will be very hard to make them guilty of the Riot. And another thing is this, my Lord, we all know, if there were a thouſand Electors, any Man knows, that when there is a Queſtion upon an Election, it is impoſſible ſuch a thing ſhall be carried on but there will be reviling, ill Language, and the like; and to turn all theſe things to a Riot, a thing ſo common from the beginning of Elections to this time, if there be Diviſion and Polling, there will be ſomething you may turn to a Riot. But I ſay this, they have not inſtanced in any one Defendant, that he was guilty of any one particular Act that amounted to a Riot in it ſelf, they have not inſtanced in one. They ſay of Alderman Corniſh, That he was of the ſame Opinion with the Sheriffs, that they did inſiſt upon the Rights of the City, he took it to be the Right of the Sheriffs; And, ſays one of them, I will ſtand upon it, Bethel that had been Sheriff. Now we will call our Witneſſes, we will prove what hath been the conſtant Practice in the City, we will prove the Methods of Adjournment; and, my Lord, this is to be ſaid which your Lordſhip will obſerve, That the Sheriffs adjourned the Court to the very ſame time with my Lord Mayor; ſo that it was no more than to bring the matter to an Iſſue in this Caſe.

Sir Fr. Winn. Spare me a word in this Caſe, my Lord. There is no Evidence produced againſt Trenchard, nor againſt Jekyl the Younger, nor againſt Biſield, nor Of theſe there is no queſtion but they are as if they were out of the Information, I muſt beg leave for a word or two as to thoſe Defendants, that they have offered ſome Evidence againſt. The queſtion is now before your Lordſhip, Whether they are guilty of a Riot or no? My Lord, for ought I ſee, it will ſtand upon a nicety of Judgment; yet if there be not matter enough, Gentlemen, to make the Defendants guilty of a Riot, then it will clear the Defendants. My Lord, as to thoſe Words, that really were Words that ought to be inquired into, who they were that ſpoke them in relation to His Majeſty; I think it was a very ill thing of thoſe Men that ſaw them, that they would not neglect all manner of Buſineſs to ſeize them, I think it was a Duty to fix upon them; but, my Lord, there is no Evidence to put it upon any of the Defendants. My Lord, that being pared off, now the Queſtion is, That the meeting together was lawful, that is agreed; then when they came together, my Lord, I do think that if we do rely upon the Evidence, it will be a mighty hard thing to make this a Riot, ſetting aſide thoſe villainous Words that were ſpoken, which cannot relate to the Defendants. Suppoſe, my Lord, that among the Electors, the whole Common Hall of the City, there doth a Diſpute ariſe before the Election is over concerning the Adjournment of the Sheriffs or the Lord Mayor, ſome Men are of one Opinion, ſome are of another; and their Evidence, Mr. Peter King and another, Attorneys, I asked the Queſtion ſeveral times, Did the Lord Mayor of London, ever interpoſe or concern himſelf in adjourning the Hall, till the Election was quite finiſhed? and they ſaid No: Then, my Lord, I muſt ſay it as to theſe particular Defendants, in ſuch a concourſe of People as was met there, it is as ſlender a Proof of a Riot as ever was, and intimates that the Citizens of London, they that happen not to be the greater number, they that loſe the Election, may be found guilty of a Riot in chooſing other Officers as well as in the Buſineſs of Sheriffs; which being ſo tender a Point, I think it will be a very ſevere Expoſition, my Lord, to make this a Riot. But now for the Matter, we will call to your Lordſhip ſeveral Witneſſes, Men that have been Magiſtrates in the City, that it was always looked upon, that my Lord Mayor, as he is the Principal Magiſtrate, he gives notice for Common Halls; and when the ſeveral Electors are met, and the Buſineſs is over, he directs them to go home, and diſſolves them; but my Lord Mayor meddles not in every little Adminiſtration of the Election of Officers, but leaves them to inferior Officers, the Sheriffs and others, that is their Duty, my Lord, with ſubmiſſion, they Poll them and ſend them home during the Election, therefore by Law they do this; for, my Lord, the Cuſtom of a City, and the Cuſtom of a Place, is the Law of the Place; and if the Cuſtom of the Place hath been, that the Sheriffs have been the Perſons that have managed it, it is their Right; but the Common Serjeant he ſays he hath the ſole Management of it;

Then

Then if it be as Mr. Common Serjeant ſays, if that muſt go, upon my Word, Gentlemen, your Privileges are reduced to a little compaſs.

L. C. J. They did confer one with another who they took to have the moſt Voices, and ſo reported it, not that he did claim any thing in his own right, but as an Officer of the City. Now it is plain, and I think there is no inconveniency falls upon it, if an Officer acquaints my Lord Mayor, according to the beſt of our Judgment, we think ſuch a man hath the moſt Voices, that does not give him a Right for him to make an Officer, not at all.

Sir Fr. Winnington. I ſay what he ſaid in his Evidence, but one of the Attorneys ſwears that they have all equal Power, I wonder then who ſhould make an end of the Buſineſs. My Lord, we will call to your Lordſhip Ancient Citizens, that have been frequent at Elections, to give you an Account that the Sheriffs always had the management, that my Lord Mayor never concerned himſelf, till he had notice it was determined; and if that be ſo, and the Practice hath been ſo, then I don't ſee, under favour, my Lord, how they will make this a Riot; that is the Caſe.

Mr. Thompſon. Sir Robert Clayton, will you pleaſe to tell my Lord and the Jury in what manner the Election of Sheriffs hath been, and how the Mayors have uſually left it to the Sheriffs in that caſe.

Sir Robert Clayton. My Lord, I have never heard this Matter hath been in queſtion till of late, ſo I cannot declare much upon my own Knowledge, how the Truth of Fact is or ſhould be, I can only ſay this, what the Practice hath been. When I came to the Chair I did endeavour to know my Duty and to do it. The firſt time I had occaſion to take notice of this matter was in the Year of my Mayoralty, I did then, according to Cuſtom, ſummon a Common-Hall, when I had ſummon'd it, there was a Perſon preſented to the Hall I had drank to; the Hall did refuſe him, and there was a great noiſe and hubbub upon it, and we found a way to accommodate that matter, and left them to chuſe two Sheriffs for themſelves. I retired into this Court together with my Brethren and Mr. Recorder that was then: We ſent for the Sheriffs up to examine the matter, they told us that they could not agree the thing, there were 4 Perſons in Nomination, but they had granted a Poll. After this we went down into the Hall, of that Mr. Common Serjeant hath given ſome Account, and Mr. Serjeant Jefferies, I ſhall to the beſt of my Memory give the beſt Account I can of it, I ſhall only tell you what I did underſtand to be my Duty, I do not determine what the Practice was, but what I underſtood to be my Duty. When we came down into the Common-Hall to declare how the Matter ſtood, and that a Poll was agreed upon and granted, we would have adjourned the Court to a longer time, but the People cryed out to go to the Poll preſently. I was, as you have been told by Mr. Common Serjeant, to go to the Tryal of one Giles upon the Aſſaſſination of Arnold, to the Old Baily. I did twice or thrice attempt to get down out of the Hall through the crowd, and was repuls'd, the croud was ſo great I could not get through, but was fain to retire back again to the Huſtings as I remember two or three times. There might be ſome ſuch Diſcourſe as Mr. Common Serjeant hath ſaid, but thus far I can remember, that I did both my ſelf and the Common Serjeant ſignify to them the Buſineſs I was about, and ſo many Aldermen as made up a Bench together with Mr. Recorder, to manage that Buſineſs, muſt go, and that I would leave the Sheriffs to manage the Poll, which I thought was their Duty.

Mr. Thompſon. Did you take it to be their Right?

Sir Robert Clayton. I did not apprehend it to be my Right then.

Mr. Thompſon. And therefore you left it to the Sheriffs as their Right?

Sir Robert Clayton. I left it to the Sheriffs to manage the ſame.

Mr. Williams. Sir Robert Clayton, I ſuppoſe when you were Lord Mayor you were as much for the honour of the Chair as any man, you would not have quitted the right of the Chair?

Sir R. Clayton. I did not, there was a Tryal of me in that caſe.

Mr. Williams. Now Sir, for adjourning the Poll, did you know any ſuch Queſtion whether a Poll was to be adjourn'd upon the Election of any Sheriffs?

Sir R. Clayton. There hath been a great noiſe about Adjournments of late. That Poll was the moſt litigious of any that I know we have had before or ſince, that was adjourn'd for ſeveral days.

Mr. Williams. Who adjourn'd that Poll?

Sir R. Clayton. The Sheriffs did adjourn it, I think, Gentlemen, I do think the Sheriffs did adjourn it, I was not preſent.

Mr At. Gen. Sir Robert, Don't ſerve the Court thus.

Mr. Williams. Don't brow-beat our Witneſſes, Gentlemen. I know, Mr. Attorney, you are an Example of fair practice: We are examining our Witneſſes.

Sir R. Clayton. Pray, my Lord, let me explain my ſelf, I ſhall let Mr. Attorney General underſtand me. I did never appear at Guild hall, unleſs upon the account of a Court of Aldermen, I did never appear at Guild-hall, but the firſt day we had Conſultations here in this Court about the Adjournment, and upon the Huſtings about going about the Buſineſs we intended, and the Hall was very intent upon the Poll; I twice attempted to go out, and could not get out, whereupon we were fain to acquaint the Hall as well as we could for the noiſe, of the Buſineſs we were to go about, and they let me go. I left behind the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant; how long they ſtayed I can't tell, I can upon my own Knowledge give no account of them. I was not conſulted to the beſt of my Knowledge afterwards, nor did give any particular Directions for Adjournment. I did not do it, for this Reaſon, I did not look upon it to be in my Power: If I had ſuch a Power, I did not underſtand it.

Mr. Williams. Sir Robert, how many days do you think that Poll continued?

Sir R. Clayton. About ſix days.

Mr. Williams. Of thoſe ſix how many days were you preſent?

Sir. R. Clayton. I did not underſtand it to be my Duty, and ſo did not look after it.

Mr. Thompſon. Sir Robert Clayton, I deſire to ask you a Queſtion, as to this matter you have given in evidence; do you give it to the beſt of your remembrance, or poſitively?

Sir R. Clayton. I tell you I ſpeak to the beſt of my remembrance every thing that I ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Robert Clayton, I beg your favour, to the beſt of your remembrance is no evidence, it is ſo lately, if you pleaſe, Sir Robert, you are to give evidence of a thing about three Years ago. I ask you upon your Oath who were your Sheriffs?

Sir R. Clayton. Sir Jonathan Raymond, and Sir Simon Lewis.

Mr. At. Gen. I would ask you then a plain Queſtion, Sir Robert, becauſe you come in with your remembrance; did you give expreſs direction to the Common Serjeant or the Sheriffs to adjourn, upon your Oath?

Sir R. Clayton. I muſt, Mr. Attorney General, by your favour, take in my remembrance.

Mr. At. Gen. Then you are no Evidence. Sir Robert, did you give Directions or not, upon your Oath?

Sir R. Clayton. I can't ſay it was given.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you, or did you not?

Sir. R. Clayton. My Lord, I hope I have ſpoke Engliſh in the caſe, we did diſcourſe of the Adjournment in this Court, I believe it was diſcours'd below; but as I ſaid, I was engaged to go to the Old Bailey, and I would leave that matter to the Sheriffs, whoſe proper Buſineſs I underſtood it to be.

Mr. At. Gen. I asked you, Sir Robert, one of the plaineſt queſtions that ever was asked; I ask you whether you gave the Sheriffs or the Common Serjeant expreſs Order to adjourn?

Sir R. Clayton. I believe I did not.

Mr. At Gen. Did the Sheriffs tell you they had a Right then?

Sir R. Clayton. There was no diſpute who had the Right.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. Sir R. Clayton, if you pleaſe, I would ask you a Queſtion or two. Do you remember that the Court was adjourn'd while you were there or not? Do you underſtand the Queſtion, Sir Robert? Do you remember the Common Hall was adjourned while you were there?

Sir R. Clayton. Yes, Sir, if you give me leave to explain my ſelf, I think the Common-Hall was adjourn'd; it was declared, but there was ſuch a noiſe in the Hall that the People could not hear it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But there was a ſort of Declaration made by your ſelf, you did make an Adjournment; but the noiſe was ſuch that the People did not hear: And if you remember, there was a Perſon affronted one of the Sheriffs, and I committed him to Cuſtody upon it.

Sir R. Clayton. We deſired to adjourn for an hour or two, that we might go and refreſh our ſelves.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then you remember there was an Adjournment: I ask you whether it was appointed to be made by you or the Sheriffs?

Sir. R. Clayton. Truly I believe it was appointed by me.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Robert, by asking a Queſtion or two, Sir Robert, I know I ſhall bring ſome things to your remembrance.

Sir R. Clayton. My Lord, I don't know I have given any great occaſion of Laughter to my Brethren; theſe Adjournments have been very common with us, and I might agree to it or order it, or direct it, but one of them I believe I did, or two of them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Robert, I would only have a Queſtion or two asked, and I know by asking a queſtion or two I ſhall bring things to your Memory, which I am ſure you cannot eaſily forget: Were there Directions given for Proclamation to be made for all Parties to depart in the King's Name?

Sir R. Clayton. I believe there might.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The next queſtion is, Whether the Sheriffs ordered that Proclamation to be made for all Parties to depart?

Sir R. Clayton. If it were done while I was preſent, I make no doubt in the Caſe, but I did direct it, I make no queſtion of that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Very well now, Sir Robert Clayton, we are got to an Adjournment to a time by your direction, and Proclamation by your direction. Now I will ask another queſtion upon your Oath; Was not you in the Common-Hall, and gave Order for an Adjournment till Monday following, for I remember that day to be Saturday?

Sir R. Clayton. Truly I do not remember that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You do not? Sir Robert, you know very well, that the Sheriffs of London, when the Lord Mayor and Aldermen come back to the Huſtings, the Sheriffs ſit remote, one on the right hand, and the other on the left, furtheſt from Lord the Mayor, ſo that all the Aldermen ſit nearer to the Lord Mayor than the Sheriffs do; did you mind that the Sheriffs came to you to ſpeak to you any thing of an Adjournment?

Sir R. Clayton. I never ſaw it.

Mr. Jones. I would ask you a Queſtion or two, You know this Gentleman, don't you? [Pointing to the Common Serjeant.

Sir R. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Did he attend the Court at that time?

Sir R. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Sir Robert, I ask you a fair Queſtion, did you lay any command on him to adjourn the Hall at that time from Saturday till Monday.

Sir R. Clayton. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to anſwer Mr. Jones in my own way.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I'm in your Judgment, it is a fair queſtion within his own Recognizance lately done, he ought to anſwer poſitively, Yes or No.

Sir R. Clayton. Am not I upon my Oath, can you tell me what I can ſay?

Mr. Jones. Ay or No. Any honeſt man would do it.

Sir Fr. Winnington. All Witneſſes anſwer their own way, don't they?

Mr. Jones. Let him anſwer then his own way.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you know there is a Rule in Chancery, if it be a matter within ſeven years, if it be not anſwered poſitively, it is no anſwer; if one asks a Witneſs a queſtion that lies within a little while, if he will not anſwer either affirmatively or negatively, he is no Witneſs.

L. C. J. I can't tell, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Jones. Will you anſwer or no, Sir Robert Clayton, whether you commanded the Common-Serjeant to go and adjourn the Hall or no?

Sir R. Clayton. I don't remember that I did.

Mr. Jones. Then I only ask you this further queſtion, Whether Mr. Common Serjeant did not tell you you that it was not his proper buſineſs to do it, and that unleſs you would lay expreſs Commands upon him, and put the very Words in his Mouth, he did deſire to be excuſed, and did he not ſtand there?

[Pointing to the Bar.

Sir R. Clayton. I have heard, Sir, what Mr. Common Serjeant did ſay, and I cannot charge my memory with it, but I have that charity for Mr. Common Serjeant to believe there might be diſcourſe to that purpoſe.

Sir Fr. Winnington. Mr. Love, in all your Experience what do you remember?

Mr. Williams. How long have you known Guild-Hall and Elections?

Mr. Love. I ſuppoſe, my Lord, theſe Gentlemen don't expect I ſhould ſay any thing that was done that day; but, my Lord, all that I ſuppoſe you expect from me is what I did obſerve to be the Practice of the City; to the beſt of my remembrance I ſhall give you an account. My Lord, about 22 years ago, I did obſerve the Practice to be this, when I was call'd into this Office of Sheriff, I took it as a thing for granted, that it was the Sheriff's Office to manage the Common Hall, that I did, as my Lord Mayor's was to have a Sword born before him; I have received it by tradition from all before me, and my own experience. My Lord, I remember when we came to chuſe Sheriffs upon Midſummer day, after the Lord Mayor and Aldermen had been there, my Lord Mayor ſaid to me and my Brother Sheriff: Gentlemen, look to your Office, we accordingly went to it and choſe two Sheriffs, one Gentleman that had been drank to by my Lord Mayor, I think it was Alderman but notwithſtanding that drinking to him, we took no notice of that as a Ceremony, he was put in nomination among others, and being a ſenior ſitting Alderman, we returned him; otherwiſe, my Lord, I aſſure you I would not have returned him notwithſtanding the drinking. After once that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen withdrew to go to the Council-Chamber, they ſaid to us, Now Gentlemen, look to your Office.

Mr. Thompſon. What was your Office?

Mr. Love. To chuſe Sheriffs.

Mr. Thompſon. Did my Lord Mayor meddle with the election, or left it to the Sheriffs?

Mr. Love. Left it to the Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. What was your opinion, Sir, was it in the Lord Mayor to take the Poll, or the Sheriffs?

Mr. Love. Truly Sir, I am not a competent Judge of whoſe right it was, but if my Lord Mayor had gone about to meddle in it, I ſhould have prayed my Lord Mayor to meddle in his own Office, and let me alone with mine.

Mr. Attorney. Yes, Mr. Love, you were then the Tribunes of the People.

Sir Fr. Winn. Here are ſome ſay the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer have a power, nay, the whole power of ordering the Hall during the Election. What is the Office of the Common Serjeant there?

Mr. Love. Truly, Sir, I look upon the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer as Perſons left to aſſiſt us, becauſe they could not put us to the trouble of crying O Yes our ſelves; and if any Common Serjeant or Common Cryer had durſt to put a queſtion without my direction, I would have known whether he could or no.

Sir Fr. Winn. Mr. Love, Was it ever diſcours'd to you when you were Sheriff, or before or ſince, that ever my Lord Mayor did interpoſe before the Election was over?

Mr. Love. Since I was diſcharged of being a Magiſtrate, I never was at a Common Hall ſince. I have ſpent my Money for the City's ſervice, but never got a penny by them; I never heard that ever the Lord Mayor till theſe late times interpoſed, but that the Sheriffs managed the whole buſineſs of chuſing Sheriffs.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Love, I deſire to have a word with you, you ſpeak of the time of your reign, I would ask you a plain queſtion, was it before the King came in?

Mr. Love. It was that year the King came in.

Mr. At. Gen. Was you choſen before?

Mr. Love. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember an Act of Parliament in 48, then in force, of ſhutting out my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I would ask him a queſtion or two. Hark you, Mr. Love, Let me ask you a queſtion or two.

Mr. Love. Sir George, I would give Mr. Attorney an anſwer.

L. C. J. What would you make of it? If you ask him of an Act of Parliament it is ſomething.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſpeak of a time when my Lord Mayor had no more to do with it than I had. There was an Ordinance of Parliament, did you never ſee that?

Mr. Love. To the beſt of my remembrance I never ſaw it in my life.

Mr. At. Gen. Nor heard of ſuch a thing?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Hark you, Mr. Love, I perceive you would have diſputed with my Lord Mayor, who was the Lord Mayor that you talk of?

Mr. Love. Sir Thomas Allen.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now I would deſire to know whether you remember the City before the King came in?

Mr. Love. For a little while.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember any thing of that cuſtom of the Lord Mayor's drinking to Sheriffs, was not that uſed before the King came in?

Mr. Love. A long time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It is well enough; a long time.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have ſeven or eight more to the ſame purpoſe, but we are ſatisfied with theſe Gentlemen: We will prove if there was any thing like a Riot, we will prove my Lord Mayor and thoſe that were with him were the Authors of it.

L. C. J. When multitudes of People are gather'd together upon a lawful occaſion, ſuppoſing that they had a Right to be there, I do ſay that in that caſe it would be much a mitigation of the fine, ſo for this ſame Riot; but on the other ſide you muſt know, that theſe men that do it, it doth not excuſe them, for ignorantia juris is not an excuſe. It is true, if they had had a lawful occaſion to continue to do it, but in truth they had not, that will excuſe them à tanto, but non à toto.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, I beg to put in this caſe, there is a great deal of difference where a Perſon does claim a right to himſelf, and does an extravagant action. Now my Lord theſe Perſons did did claim a Right to themſelves to continue the Common Hall, and that it was not in my Lord Mayor's Power to adjourn it without them: Now, my Lord, they claimed this Right, if they uſed no Violence, that is excuſable. If I ſhould claim a Right to another Man's Eſtate, tho' I have no Title, and ſay I have a Right, and give it out in Speeches, no Action lies againſt me; but if I do an extravagant Action, and ſay another Man hath a Title, there lies an Action againſt me.

L. C. J. Now go to your Fact.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord put a Point to us, and we need not call more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. I don't ſpeak to hinder you from calling your Witneſſes.

Sir Fr. Winn. I put this caſe, we undertake to prove that it was always looked upon, that it was the Right of the Sheriffs: Suppoſe, my Lord, upon the Diſpute it ſhould be found that the Opinion of the Jury ſhould be otherwiſe, will this turn to an illegal Act?

L. C. J. Call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Wallop. I beſeech your Lordſhip I may put one caſe in this Point, in a Point of Right if they have a probable Cauſe to inſiſt upon it. Suppoſe I ſend 40 Men to a Wood, and take a Carr or a Team, if they be a competent number to cut down Wood, if we are miſtaken in the Title, that is no Riot. Lambert puts the Caſe.

L. C. J. But what if I had ſent a great many Men to cut down the whole Wood?

Mr. Williams. We will call ſome Witneſſes that will take us off from the Riot thus, if ſo be we can excuſe our ſelves of the Diſorder, and put it upon my Lord Mayor, then we are innocent.

L. C. J. Very well if you do that.

Mr. Mr. Sibley, Are you acquainted with the manner of the Election of Sheriffs, how long have you known it?

Mr. Sibley. I have been of the Livery ever ſince 39, in all my time, I ſpeak, Gentlemen, to the beſt of my remembrance, it hath been the Cuſtom in all my time, except here of late, that the Sheriffs of London have had the management of the Election.

Mr. Did my Lord Mayor ever interpoſe till the Election was over?

Mr. Sibley. I never knew my Lord Mayor interpoſe till lately.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did you ever hear my Lord Mayor pretend to it till of late?

Mr. Sibley. No, my Lord.

Sir Fr. Winn. Did the Mayor uſe to be preſent at any Election during the Election?

Mr. Sibley. I have been moſt commonly there.

Sir Fr. Winn. But the Mayor, would the Mayor be there?

Mr. Sibley. The Mayor and Aldermen went off the Bench.

Sir Fr. Winn. Who managed the Elections?

Mr. Sibley. The Sheriffs.

Sir Fr. Winn. Were the Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer there?

Mr. Sibley. The Common Serjeant and the Common Cryer are always there.

L. C. J. I pray thus, you have known the City it ſeems a great while, I would ask you this, pray who did call the Aſſembly that was to chuſe the Sheriffs, did the Sheriffs or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Sibley. We commonly received the Tickets by the Officers of the Companies.

L. C. J. Did the Officers of the Companies ſummon the Aſſembly? Hark you, pray Sir, recollect your ſelf, Do you take it that the Officers, the Beadles it may be of the ſeveral Companies, did they ſummon the Livery-men, and ſo a Common Hall was call'd together, was it ſo in your time?

Mr. Sibley. It hath been commonly ſo, we have received Tickets from the Beadle of the Company.

L. C. J. And my Lord Mayor had nothing to do with it then?

Mr. Sibley. What Order the Maſters and Wardens had from my Lord Mayor, I never inquired into that.

L. C. J. When the Hall was diſſolved, who ordered Proclamation to be made, the Sheriffs or the Lord Mayor?

Mr. Sibley. My Lord Mayor hath not uſed to be there.

Mr. Thompſon. When they had done, they went away. He won't trouble your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Pray, had my Lord any hand in ſummoning, did he direct the ſummoning of them?

Mr. Sibley. It is more than I know.

L. C. J. You bring a Witneſs that knows nothing of the matter.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Deputy Sibley. Give me leave to ask Mr. Sibley a Queſtion or two, I ſhall ſet him to rights preſently. Mr. Sibley, If I be not miſtaken you are one of the Company of Tallow-Chandlers, and you have been Maſter of the Company, and you have been Warden of the Company. You very well know what Directions are given to the Beadle are generally by the Maſter or Wardens: Pray, upon your Oath, when you were Maſter or Warden, was there ever any Precept ſent to you to ſummon a Common Hall?

Mr. Sibley. Indeed I don't remember that, Sir.

Mr. Thompſon. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we have done with our Evidence, I would beg your Lordſhip's Opinion in it.

Sir Fr. Winn. We do admit, my Lord Mayor ſummons the Court.

L. C. J. But you bring a Witneſs that knows nothing in the world of it, but yet you would have it taken for Goſpel, that the Sheriffs had all the Management before that time forty Years together, till now very lately. But when he comes to be asked how is this Aſſembly or Common Hall call'd together, alas! he knows no more of that than one in Utopia.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, we have ſeveral other Witneſſes, but we will call no more.

Mr. At. Gen. If you have no more, we will call two or three more.

Mr. Thompſon. We have ſome to prove that my Lord Grey came to ſpeak with Sir William Gulſton, and went away again, and we deſire to call Sir Thomas Armſtrong.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, thus, there will be it ſeems ſome particular Defences made. Your Lordſhip hath heard their Evidence, and what we have ſaid; we deſire to call two or three Witneſſes to another Head. Your Lordſhip hath heard there was ſome Rudeneſs by ſome of the People, but who they were it doth not appear. We will call two or three Witneſſes of the Behaviour of thoſe Men and

and Company that came with my Lord Mayor, that whatſoever diſturbance was made, they were the chief men that made the diſturbance, and my Lord Mayor could not help it, nor we neither.

L. C. J. Sir Francis, I believe thoſe men that would not have God ſave the King, my Lord Mayor could not hinder them, but will you undertake to prove that thoſe that came with my Lord Mayor, that they were the men.

Sir Fr. Winn. They were with them, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. They were with them that cryed God bleſs the Proteſtant Sheriffs.

Mr. Sibley. My Lord, I deſire to explain my ſelf to what I ſaid; It is ſeveral years ago ſince I was Maſter of the Company, I do not remember, but I believe the Summons was directed from my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Freak. Mr. Winſtanley, what account can you give to my Lord and the Jury?

Mr. Winſtanley. I have lived near the Hall, and I often came in, but I was not a Livery-man upon that Poll, that was between Mr. Kiffen and Sir Robert Clayton; the Sheriffs managed it.

Mr. Freak. Who managed it?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Who declared?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Did the Mayor come down to declare the Election?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Mayor came down after the Poll, but the Sheriffs took the Poll.

Mr. Freak. Who was then Mayor?

Mr. Winſtanley. Sir James Edmards was Sheriff, and Sir John Smith.

Mr. Freak. Who was Mayor?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. It was Sir Samuel Starling.

Mr. Freak. Who put the Queſtion upon the Huſtings?

Mr. Winſtanley. I can't tell.

Mr. Freak. What did you hear the Sheriffs ſay, or ſee them do?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs preſently granted a Poll, and parted one to one door, and the other to t'other.

Mr. Freak. And who took the Poll?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs took it.

Mr. Freak. Who declared the Election?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs.

Mr. Freak. Who were Sheriffs then?

Mr. Winſtanley. Sir James Edwards and Sir John Smith.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winſtanley, I would ask you this queſtion, do you take it upon your Oath that the Sheriffs declared the Election?

Mr. Winſtanley. I declare upon my Oath that the Sheriffs took the Poll.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winſtanley, You may gueſs pretty well what I mean by this. Firſt of all, I ask you, Did the Sheriffs put the Queſtion?

Mr. Winſtanley. The Sheriffs took the Poll, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nay anſwer my Queſtion, did the Sheriffs put the Queſtion, or did any body elſe?

Mr. Winſtanley. Truly, Sir, I have forgot, you were there.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I know I was, Sir: I know very well; I ask you upon your Oath, who was it that declared the Election afterwards? Upon your Oath.

Mr. Winſtanley. Truly, Sir George, I don't remember.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Winſtanley, one went out at one door you ſay, and t'other went out at t'other, you ſay; now I ſay who took notice, and told the names of thoſe that went out at one door and t'other?

Mr. Winſtanley. The two Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who elſe?

Mr. Winſtanley. I can't tell.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember me there at the great Door, when they poll'd and went out, do you remember who told them?

Mr. Winſtanley. No truly.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, do you remember when one Mr. Broom a Wax-chandler was choſen Ale conner?

Mr. Winſtanley. I was in the Hall, but I do not charge my Memory with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hark you, Mr. Winſtanley, who is it grants the Poll when it is demanded?

Mr. Winſtanley. I do remember very well Sir George Jefferies was in the Hall, they demanded a Poll, and ſo went out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who granted it?

Mr. Winſtanley. The two Sheriffs.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I will put you a Caſe nearer home, Mr. Winſtanley: You remember when Sir Thomas Player was choſen Chamberlain, when the Queſtion was put, Who ſhould be Chamberlain, between him and a Gentleman I ſee not far from me, who do you remember managed the Poll then?

Mr. Winſtanley. There was no need Sir George.

L. C. J. What do you mean to do with theſe little Witneſſes? You call Witneſſes that know nothing of the matter, or nothing to the purpoſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, Let me ask him but one Queſtion more, I know he hath been a very great Evidence in this Caſe, I remember when that Gentleman was in for Bridge-Maſter, Who was the Poll demanded of at that time?

Mr. Winſtanley. Truly, Sir, I think it was demanded of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Of the Court?

Mr. Winſtanley. Uſually upon other Days my Lord Mayor and the Court come down, but upon Midſummer-day they go up.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But I ask you of whom the Poll was demanded at that time?

Mr. Winſtanley. I don't remember it I'le aſſure you.

L. C. J. You told us that point would be granted, and you would not ſtand upon it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Where there are ſo many men, there may be many Minds, I would have your Lordſhip and the Jury hear them.

Mr. Jones. The Government is concerned, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This is not a matter of Mirth I'll aſſure you, it reaches the Government.

Mr. Williams. My Lord Mayor hath the power of adjourning the Hall, but not till the Buſineſs is done.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I would put you a Caſe *——Sure, Mr. Jones I ought to be heard. If my Lord Mayor hath power to call a Common Hall, he hath not to adjourn it before the Buſineſs is done.

* Here Mr. Jones offered to interrupt him.

L. C. J. If a Writ come to the Sheriffs to chooſe chuſe Parliament-men, then the Sheriffs have it, but this is my Lord Mayor's Office, he hath Power to diſſolve and adjourn.

Mr. Thompſon. I ſpeak to this Caſe, my Lord, I will ſhew your Lordſhip an Inſtance where it cannot be done. My Lord Mayor hath Power to call here, and he hath Power to diſſolve, ſay they: My Lord, it cannot be, with ſubmiſſion, in all Caſes. He hath Power to call an Aſſembly when there is a Mayor to be choſen, and the Citizens have a Privilege to move their Mayor or continue him, now if it were in the Power of the Mayor, and there ſhould happen a queſtion who they were? For, in a great number of Electors, if it were in his power to adjourn from time to time, he muſt continue Mayor.

L. C. J. It is plain he may do it for all your Objection. You know it was agreed by all ſides that Sir Samuel Starling the Lord Mayor, had well diſſolved the Aſſembly, that is, in point of Law, and they could not ſay the Aſſembly was in being, yet afterwards there was an Action brought againſt him, and there they laid how that maliciouſly, and to the intent that he who was choſen into the Place of Bridge-Maſter to which he was duly Elected, ſhould be ſet aſide, he goes and diſſolves the Aſſembly, and denied to grant him a Poll, which they ought to have had, yet for all that the Aſſembly was well diſſolved.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Conclude, Gentlemen, conclude.

Mr. Thompſon. That which I have to ſay is a Point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Sir Fr. Winnington, If you deſign to conclude, I tell you beforehand, I would not interrupt you, we will call a Witneſs or two.

Sir Fr. Winnington. My Lord, becauſe we would make an end, I will call two of thoſe men that came with my Lord Mayor, to ſhew that if there was any rudeneſs, thoſe very People that came with my Lord Mayor, were the Cauſe of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That they that came with my Lord Mayor, cauſed them to ſtay after my Lord was gone.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Jackſon, Pray can you remember whether any of the Defendants here were concerned in any Affront to my Lord Mayor, or who it was that my Lord Mayor received an Affront from?

Mr. Jackſon. I did obſerve my Lord as he went out of the Hall, I took my Back and ſet it againſt the Crowd, and had my Face towards my Lord Mayor, and I was crowded ſo that I could ſcarce ſee my ſelf one way or other, but got off the ſteps at laſt, and went home with my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Thompſon. Can you ſay who ſtruck off the Hat?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live, pray?

Mr. Jackſon. I live at Charing-croſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With whom?

Mr. Jackſon. With my ſelf, Sir.

Sir Fr. Winnington. What is your Name?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Don't you know the Sword-bearer of Briſtol, Sir Francis?

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Roe, were you here when my Lord Mayor was crowded? Who offered any affront?

Mr. Williams. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of what you heard, and where the diſorder began.

Mr. Roe. My Lord, I was in Cheapſide, and I heard a great noiſe of huzzaing, and a terrible noiſe indeed, and I met with a Fellow running, my Lord, and I ſtopt the Fellow, What is the matter? Nothing ſaid he, but an old Fellow riding Skimmington and Skeleton, and in the Street I ſaw a matter of an Hundred with their Hats upon Sticks, crying, Damn the Whigs; ſaid I, Gentlemen, What's the matter? ſaid they, The Work is done to ſtop the Poll, and that is all.

L. C. J. Hark you, were you in Guild-Hall?

Mr. Roe. I followed them a little way down the Street.

L. C. J. Hark you, did you ſee my Lord Mayor's Hat down upon the ground, and was he like to be thrown down, did you ſee that?

Mr. Roe. No, I ſaw nothing of that, I heard ſuch a noiſe I was glad I had got rid of them.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we have no more to ſay in the general, all that I have to ſay now is for my Lord Grey. The Evidence againſt my Lord Grey was that he was here, now, my Lord, we have Witneſſes more particularly to defend my Lord Grey.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall call a Witneſs or two to clear what that Gentleman ſaid when Sir Robert Clayton was Mayor.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Gentlemen, let us have a little Patience. Pray, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe——Here is ſuch a horrid noiſe—Upon all the matter I don't perceive but Sir Robert Clayton does himſelf believe Proclamation was made by him, he does believe the Adjournment was made by him, but as to the Adjournment to Monday, he is not certain of that. But if your Lordſhip pleaſes, we have here both the Sheriffs, Sir Jonathan Raymond and Sir Simon Lewis, that will ſhew the Court whether there was any ſuch thing.

Mr. At. Gen. Before Bethel came out of the North, no Sheriff ever pretended to it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir Simon Lewis, I deſire you would ſatisfy my Lord and the Jury concerning the Adjournment when you went to the Seſſions-Houſe in the Old Baily: Did you order the Adjournment of the Poll, or my Lord Mayor?

Sir Simon Lewis. We came and waited upon my Lord Mayor here, and told him they demanded a Poll without, we took his Directions, and my Lord Mayor did adjourn the Court, by reaſon that the Aſſaſſinators of Arnold were to be Try'd, and by reaſon of that it was adjourn'd till Monday, and my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen went thither, but indeed we were left as Priſoners, and I received a blow on my Breaſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Jonathan Raymond, Did you pretend to have the Power then of adjourning the Court?

Sir Jon. Raymond. My Lord did adjourn the Court becauſe of that Tryal, and then afterwards we went upon our Poll, we were ſeveral days upon it, we only appointed from Day to Day till we had made an end, and when we had made an end we declared it to my Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen, and my Lord Mayor and the Court of Aldermen came upon the Huſtings, and declared who it fell upon.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir James Smith, When you were Sheriff did you pretend to have any such power?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Upon your Oath, Did you pretend to have a power of adjourning Common Halls?

Sir J. Smith. No, Sir, we were Sheriffs immediately after Sir Robert Clayton, I never heard it queſtioned but my Lord Mayor had the right of it.

Sir F. Winn. Sir Jonathan Raymond, I think you ſay the Sheriffs did adjourn from day to day at that time?

Sir J. Raymond. We could not make an end of Polling, and we did appoint from day to day till we had made an end of Polling.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lord, I will give your Lordſhip an account of that whole Day's proceedings; we came to the Hall, and after Mr. Recorder, Sir George Jefferies had attempted to ſpeak to the Hall, for they were in ſuch a tumult they would not ſuffer him to ſpeak, my Lord Mayor withdrew, there was a very great clamour and noiſe, but at laſt the Queſtion was put, and I came up with the Sheriffs hither and acquainted my Lord, that Mr. Bethel and Alderman Corniſh had the moſt hands, and that there was a Poll demanded between Mr. Box and Mr. Nicholſon, and Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Corniſh, then the diſpute lay as between Box and Nicholſon and Alderman Corniſh and Mr. Bethel, I acquainted my Lord Mayor that was, Sir Robert Clayton, that Mr. Recorder ſaid he would not go down to make Declaration, they would not hear him; upon that Sir Robert Clayton took a Paper and gave it me, with theſe very words, (it is the greateſt tumult I was ever in, in all my life, and I have ſome reaſon to remember it) Prithee, ſays he, do you make Declaration to them, for if they will hear any body they will hear thee: Sir, ſays I, becauſe it is not the Duty of my Office I deſire your particular direction; then, ſays he, tell them I muſt adjourn it till Monday, becauſe I muſt go to the Old Baily, to try the Aſſaſſinates of Arnold, whereupon the Hall was adjourn'd, and in a great tumult, and my Lord Mayor attempting to go out, he was beat back twice or three times, he ſpake ſomething to them, and they went away, leaving me and the Sheriffs upon the Huſtings, and there they kept us Priſoners till ſix or ſeven a Clock at night. On Monday when we came to Poll again by his direction, I went to his Houſe, and he gave me direction to go with the Sheriffs to adjourn it, afterwards there was a Court of Aldermen purpoſely call'd, and upon their direction I took the Poll and kept it, and every Adjournment was made by his particular direction to me.

Sir Robert Clayton. Gentlemen, I do deſire I may explain my ſelf, becauſe I was imperfectly heard, ſome part of the ſtory that Mr. Common Serjeant does ſay, I do remember, and will tell you what I do remember of it. I remember the coming up, and I remember that Mr. Recorder was not willing to go down there was ſuch a hubbub, I remember that very well. The particular words I ſaid to him I cannot charge my memory with; we had diſcours'd. I remember the Adjournment, and we diſcours'd of the Adjournment below, we made Proclamation, but the Noiſe was ſo great they could not hear, and upon my attempting to go out, I was beaten back twice or thrice, and then we were fain to let them know the buſineſs we went about as well as we could, and then they let me go, and I left the Sheriffs with them to agree of the manner and methods of Polling. There were ſeveral Adjournments made afterwards, I can't charge my ſelf with it, I might be particularly conſulted, but for the particular times of Adjournment, I did not think my ſelf concerned in point of reputation, if I thought I had been blameable I ſhould have concerned my ſelf to have given more particular directions.

Mr. Thompſon. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I have but this, admitting the Right to be in the Lord-Mayor——

L. C. J. Do you make a doubt of it now?

Mr. Thompſon. Admitting it, thoſe Gentlemen that came to continue the Poll, it is a Queſtion whether they can be guilty of the Riot or not.

Mr. W.——There are ſome three or four of the Defendants that have a particular caſe, that ſtands by themſelves, and it reſts upon this point, whether my Lord Mayor hath this power or not. For ſo much of the evidence as concerns any noiſe or hiſſing, or any thing of that, that relates to the time of Adjournment, for it was done at the time of the Adjournment. As for Mr. Corniſh, Mr. Goodenough, my Lord Grey and one or two more, they did not come till within ſome three hours after that, ſo that they cannot be engaged in the noiſe or that.

L. C. J. It is no matter, they came time enough.

Mr. Williams. We have done my Lord, with the general evidence, we have ſomething to ſay in defence of my Lord Grey, all the evidence againſt my Lord Grey is this, that he was here about ſeven a Clock at night. For that, Gentlemen, we ſay this, that my Lord Grey had ſome buſineſs here, and my Lord's buſineſs was this, my Lord Grey was here about the ſale of a Mannor in Eſſex with Sir William Gulſton, my Lord, they had appointed this very Day for that buſineſs, it was my Lord's intereſt mightily to purſue it, and Sir William happened to be at Sir Thomas Player's, and knowing this to be an Election Day, my Lord dined that Day at an eating Houſe in the Hay-Market, and afterwards came to Peter's Coffee-Houſe in Covent Garden, and ſtaid there till between four and five a Clock in the Afternoon, when he thought the heat would be over, and then he came to make enquiry after Sir William, and took up in Bruen's Coffee-Houſe about five or ſix a Clock, there he continued quiet in the Houſe till all the noiſe was over, then he ſent to enquire for Sir Will. Gulſton, and hearing he was at Sir Thomas Player's, he and Sir William went to a Tavern, and there they treated and finiſhed the affair. My Lord we will prove it; Call Mr. Ireton.

Mr. Ireton. My Lord, I know that at this very time my Lord Grey was treating with Sir Will. Gulſton about the Mannor of Corſfield in Eſſex, and my Lord Grey and Sir Will. Gulſton had appointed to meet that night at t'other end of the Town, if the Poll were ended. In the evening I met my Lord Grey who told me he had been with Sir Will. Gulſton in London, and had diſpatched the buſineſs.

L. C. J. Did my Lord tell you ſo?

Lord Grey. He treated for me, my Lord, with him.

L. C. J. Pray for God's ſake, you muſt lay your Matter a little cloſer together, if he was to treat about the Purchaſe of a Mannor, Was there no convenient place for Company to treat about it but while they were caſting up the Poll-Books with the Sheriffs and Goodenough? Was that place fit?

Mr. Holt. My Lord had appointed to ſpeak with Sir William Gulſton that day in Covent-garden if the Poll had been over, but not finding him there, came into the City.

Lord Grey. That Gentleman went between Sir William Gulſton and I.

L. C. J. Where were you to meet?

Lord Grey. At the Roſe Tavern in Covent-garden.

L. C. J. What made you here then?

Lord Grey. Not finding him there I came hither, and ſpake with Sir William Gulſton in that very Room. The Poll was over and the Company gone.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Ireton, Do you know there was any Treaty between my Lord Grey and Sir William Gulſton about the Sale of any Land?

Mr. Ireton. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Williams. When was that Treaty?

Mr. Ireton. About a Twelve-month ſince.

Mr. Williams. Do you know they had any Diſcourſe about it?

Mr. Ireton. Sir, they had, I think it was Mid-ſummer-day, the Day the Election of Sheriffs was.

Mr. Williams. Were they about that Treaty that Day?

Mr. Ireton. That Day, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. Where was the Treaty?

Mr. Ireton. In Sir Thomas Player's Houſe.

Mr. Williams. What time of the Day?

Mr. Ireton. About Twelve a Clock.

Mr. Williams. Where went my Lord afterwards?

Mr. Ireton. My Lord went to Dinner, as he told me in the Hay-market.

Mr. Williams. Did you know of any Appointment to meet again?

Mr. Ireton. I was informed ſo, but cannot poſitively tell.

Mr. Williams. Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Pray, Sir, will you give an account where my Lord was that Day?

Sir Tho. Armſtrong. I came up this way about ſix a Clock, and was in a Coffee-houſe by Guild-hall.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing about that Treaty?

Sir Tho. Armſtrong. I ſaw them together that Night. I ſaw them together at Sir Thomas Player's about Twelve a Clock, and again at Eight.

Mr. Williams. Do you know any thing of treating about this Land in Eſſex?

Sir Tho. Armſtrong. No, I do not.

Mr. At. Gen. You did not ſee them in the Chamber?

Sir Tho. Armſtrong. Does any body ſay I did.

Lord Grey. My Lord, I will give you an account of it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, Mr. Ireton tells you this, my Lord Grey and Sir William Gulſton were in Treaty about buying theſe Lands that very Morning together, ſays Sir Thomas Armſtrong about Noon, afterwards my Lord went to the Hay-market and ſtaid there till Evening, and my Lord and Sir William were together again at Night. My Lord, this Caſe will depend upon your Lordſhip's Directions. It is very plain that my Lord Mayor of London hath the ſummoning the Common Hall, and when the Buſineſs is done he hath the diſcharging them. My Lord, if it be true what Mr. Love and others ſay, they tell you that in all their time, their Opinion is ſo, that it belonged to the Sheriffs and not to the Lord Mayor, what may be the Conſequence, lies in your Lordſhip's Opinion. Now for the Conſequence of it, if it were no more than a Matter of Opinion and Right, and the Sheriffs inſiſt upon it: Are theſe Defendants and the Sheriffs guilty of theſe Outrages? For there is nothing proved upon them. This don't make them guilty of any thing more than a bare continuing the Poll. Therefore, my Lord, I muſt ſubmit to your Direction how far the Jury will find us or any of us guilty of a Riot in this Caſe.

Sir Fr. Winn. My Lord, we agree they did continue the Poll, and the Defendants did apprehend it was lawful for them ſo to do, if the Jury ſhould think they did miſapprehend what was the ancient Uſage of the City, if your Lordſhip ſhould be of Opinion that by Law the Lord Mayor ought to do it; yet I do ſay, it being ſo probable a Caſe, their inſiſting upon it will not make it a Riot: Your Lordſhip will be pleaſed, I hope, to take notice of it, if they find the Mayor hath Power to adjourn it.

Mr. Wallop. I humbly conceive, that the Information does in truth deſtroy it ſelf, for it is agreed on all hands as the Information ſets forth, that they came together upon very lawful Occaſions, and the Information ſets forth, that by colour of their Office they did as if they were lawfully aſſembled. Now, my Lord, they have overthrown the Definition of a Riot, for a Riot is when three or more are come together to do an unlawful Act, and they do it. So that it is a very hard matter to make this a Riot.

L. C. J. Does not this Matter appear upon Record?

Mr. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it don't.

Mr. Wallop. If Men do lawfully meet together, if by chance they fall together by the Ears, and commit many Miſdemeanors, this can never be a Riot. But, ſay they, here was an Adjournment, a Command by my Lord Mayor to adjourn the Court, and they continue after Adjournment: Now, my Lord, the Queſtion is, Whether he had Power to adjourn it or no, the Citizens did inſiſt upon it that he had no Power. Now, Gentlemen of the Jury, if you find in your Conſcience that the Citizens had a probable Cauſe, and they inſiſt upon it, this can never be a Riot.

Mr. Holt. It doth appear that they were lawfully aſſembled together. And for the throwing off my Lord Mayor's Hat, ſuppoſe that my Lord Mayor hath a Power for to adjourn the Court, yet, my Lord, it muſt be agreed, that thoſe that come thither muſt have a convenient time to depart, for my Lord Mayor, as ſoon as ever he had adjourn'd the Court, he went away, and all the Hall could not go of a ſudden, but muſt have a convenient time to go, ſome followed him immediately, and the other Gentlemen that ſtaid behind, not at all conſenting ſenting to that rude Action about my Lord Mayor, cannot be guilty, for there is no Proof of any Miſcarriage committed by any of theſe Defendants, it may be there was ſome Diſcourſe concerning the Power of my Lord Mayor. I only mind your Lordſhip of Sir Robert Atkins Caſe, a late Caſe in the King's-Bench, there can be no Aſſembly to chooſe an Alderman, as in that Caſe, unleſs the Mayor was there, the Aſſembly was held, and yet, Gentlemen, becauſe it was not done in a tumultuous manner, but with a good Intent, it was held that Sir Robert Atkins was not guilty of a Riot. There muſt be an evil Intention to do ſome miſchief.

Mr. —— Turner brought his Action againſt Sir Samuel Starling for diſſolving the Hall: And, my Lord, that being in the Caſe of the Election of a Bridgemaſter, ſurely there is a parallel Reaſon for the Sheriffs.

L. C. J. That Caſe is againſt them.

Mr. —— No, my Lord.

L. C. J. There the Lord Mayor had a Power by Law to diſſolve the Aſſembly, tho' in truth he ſhould not have done it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Action was brought for denying a Poll, my Lord.

Mr. Thompſon. It is laid in that Declaration, that it is the Cuſtom of the City, that my Lord Mayor cannot diſſolve.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have now heard all the Evidence*——

* The Counſel clamour'd.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you ſhall not over-rule me ſo, becauſe I am willing to hear every body, therefore you impoſe upon me. You ſhall have Law by the Grace of God as far as I am able.

Mr. At. Gen. We have now done with the Evidence on both ſides and you do now ſee the Right of the Lord Mayor, notwithſtanding all the vulgar and popular Diſcourſes, is aſſerted; it appears now upon full Evidence, they themſelves do not contradict it, that my Lord Mayor is the Supreme Magiſtrate of this City, both for calling all your Aſſemblies and for diſſolving them, they wont pretend againſt this, but indeed they make a Queſtion whether my Lord Mayor can adjourn or no. Neceſſity of Affairs requires it ſometimes, if there be ſuch a Tumult, ſuch an Interruption, that they cannot proceed orderly, or if the Matter be ſo long that they can't determine it in one Day, there is a Neceſſity that there muſt be an Adjournment to another time, and they give you no Inſtances, Gentlemen, that ever the Sheriffs in any Age did attempt it, never any Sheriff made an Adjournment of his own accord. Mr. Love he gives no Inſtance of an Adjournment, he only tells you of his Supremacy at that time when my Lord Mayor had nothing to do with it, and, Gentlemen, at that time you muſt remember when he was Elected, the Law was otherwiſe when Mr. Love was Elected, then the Sheriffs were the Tribunes of the People, and they had ſhut my Lord Mayor quite out of their Common Hall, and declared that he had no Power to diſſolve or adjourn them. The next Inſtance is that of Sir Robert Clayton's, and how do they make that out? Sir Robert Clayton ſwears only upon his Memory, and what is that? He remembers juſt nothing. He does think the Common Serjeant does ſpeak Truth in ſome things, but he can't remember other things. But we prove not only an Adjournment from Saturday to Monday, but other Adjournments by ſpecial Direction from Sir Robert Clayton. So that whatever Mr. Love did fanſy of the Authority of Sheriffs, to tell my Lord Mayor he had nothing to do therewith, yet that my Lord Mayor is certainly the Chief Magiſtrate, we have proved all along to this preſent time, till within theſe two or three Years, and when ever there was an Adjournment we have proved it to you that it was by my Lord Mayor. So that it is nothing like the Caſe, put by the Gentlemen on the other ſide, there was never any ſhadow of pretence for Right. Whoever knows London, muſt know the Sheriffs of London are not Officers of this Corporation as Sheriffs, but they are the King's Officers of the County granted to be choſen by the Citizens: They are in their particular Caſes Judges, for chooſing Parliament-men, but in no Corporation-Act whatſoever: So that, Gentlemen, you ſee there is no Pretence for that: But admit there were, what is it like the Caſe when a Man lays Claim to a Wood, and he ſends three or four Perſons, or half a dozen Perſons to cut it down? Yet, Mr. Wallop, notwithſtanding your Authority, tho' that be not a Riot, it is a Rout, where you will ſend ſuch a number to raiſe Terror in the King's People, and they will continue together after they are commanded to depart by a Magiſtrate. But it is a different thing where Men will concern themſelves in a Matter of publick Government, as if any Man ſhould pretend he hath the King's Commiſſion to take your Lordſhip off the Bench.

So that here is quite a different thing, this relates immediately to the Government, here the publick Peace of the City is in danger, and if my Lord Mayor had been a Perſon of great Spirit, and had preſently raiſed others to have ſuppreſs'd this Riot, then the City had been in a fine Condition, by theſe People that would have No God bleſs the King, but God bleſs the Sheriffs. There is no Pretence of Right can juſtify ſuch a thing. Now, my Lord, for a Riot, this muſt be acknowledged to be, for many to meet together to do an unlawful thing, is a Riot.

Mr. Wallop. And do it.

Mr. At. Gen. And do it, I put in that too, Sir. The Meeting here is lawful, and it is as certain that my Lord Mayor hath Power to adjourn, that is a Conſequence of Law, if the Adjournment be neceſſary, and he is the only Judge of Adjournment, and when he hath adjourn'd, I do ſay the continuing Perſons together to do that, which if they had ſummon'd them to do, had been unlawful, is as much an unlawful thing and a Riot as that. I would fain know if the Sheriffs had ſummon'd all the Citizens together to meet to chooſe Sheriffs, or any others, would any Man queſtion but this is an unlawful Act, a Subverſion of the Ancient Government of the City, the Uſurping an Authority in the City contrary to the King's Grant and the Charter. And after they are adjourn'd, if they will make Proclamation and order the People to ſtay and go on with the Poll, is not that the ſame thing in Point of Law? Surely no Man almoſt of common Senſe but will ſay it is the ſame thing. In the Caſe that Mr. Wallop puts, if there be any Diſorders committed precedent to the Magiſtrate's diſſolving the Society; that will not amount to a Riot, but if the Magiſtrate comes and makes Proclamation for them to depart, and they ſtay after, it makes a Riot, if they continue ſtill together, it is a Rout and an unlawful Aſſembly. But they ſay there is no Proof that theſe Gentlemen that are in the Information, are guilty of the Riot; they are all Parties to the Riot, the very being there and giving countenance to it, is an unlawful thing. Pray Gentlemen, If Ten men ſhould go to rob a Houſe, and one ſtands off at a diſtance, is not the Tenth man guilty of the Burglary? If there be a many perſons together, and Three only do an unlawful Act, and the others give protection, for number is always a protection, are not all theſe Gentlemen guilty? And therefore, Gentlemen, it is hoped you will ſettle the City by deſtroying this pretence, which hath been fluttering in the Air, but hath no ground for it.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information againſt ſeveral for a Riot, and it ſets forth that there was a Common Hall that was call'd by the Lord Mayor for chooſing ſeveral Officers, and that afterwards the Lord Mayor did diſſolve that Aſſembly, and yet notwithſtanding the Defendants, (ſo many as by and by I ſhall name to you that they have given evidence againſt,) they kept together and committed a Riot, it is ſaid ſo particularly in the Information. For the matter in fact that hath been altercated between them, the Queſtion is, whether the Lord Mayor for the time being hath power in himſelf to call an Aſſembly and to diſſolve it, and truly as to this point, even the Counſel for the Defendants did one while grant it, but another while did bring Witneſs that did know nothing of the matter, I muſt needs ſays. But for ought I ſee, even until this very time, the Lord Mayor did call the Aſſembly, and he did diſſolve it, and that they did ſeem to grant even at the beginning of the Cauſe: But then they make a diſtinction, but he could not adjourn it to a certain time. That was a very weak thing, to ſay, that if the Lord Mayor may call and diſſolve the Hall, that he cannot adjourn it to a convenient hour. Suppoſe now the buſineſs to be done was not diſpatched ſooner than this time a Night, ſo that upon the matter they muſt be either adjourn'd till to Morrow, or kept in the Hall all Night; does any man think that that Magiſtrate that hath power to call and diſſolve, hath not power to adjourn? There is no Man doubts of it in Fact or Law, and that it was ſo, Sir Robert Clayton did that very thing; if there had been no Precedent, it had been all one. But they make a great deal of buſineſs of it, how that the Sheriffs were the men, and that the Lord Mayor was no body, and that ſhews it was ſomewhat of the Common-wealth's Seed that was like to grow up among the good Corn.—— Pray Gentlemen, that is a very undecent thing, you put an Indignity upon the King, for you ought not to do it if you knew your Duty: Pray Gentlemen, forbear it, it does not become a Court of Juſtice.

Here the People hum'd and interrupted my Lord.

I will tell you, when things were topſie-turvie I can't tell what was done, and I would be loth to have it raked up now. They might as well (as I perceive they have at another time ſaid) have ſaid, that the power of diſſolving and adjourning might have been in the Livery-men, all People, every body, and ſo then if they had been together by the Ears, I don't know who muſt have parted them, that is the truth of it. But I think their own Counſel are very well ſatisfied both in Fact and Law, that the Lord Mayor for the time being, hath this power of calling diſſolving and adjourning the Aſſembly. Then there is another thing that is to be conſidered, and that is this, the Defendants they ſay, We did miſtake the Law, it was only a miſtake of the Law and nothing elſe, and we did do all to a good intent, and therefore it muſt not be a Riot. To give you ſome ſatisfaction in that: Firſt, I muſt tell you that a man muſt not excuſe himſelf of a Crime, by ſaying he was Ignorant of the Law, for if ſo be that turn to an Excuſe, it is impoſſible to convict any man, if ſo be he muſt be excuſed becauſe he did not know the Law, then no man will be found guilty. But if it appear that the Defendants did verily believe that the Law was for them, that may be conſidered in another place, if ſo be that they were really Ignorant, the Fine, it may be, may be the leſs, but it won't excuſe them from all. But truly, in the next place, you muſt conſider, whether or no theſe Gentlemen were Ignorant, or whether or no they did not in a tumultuary way make a Riot to ſet up a Magiſtracy by the Power of the People. For I muſt tell you, I have not heard by the Defendants, and I will appeal to your memory, I have not heard before this time that ever the Sheriffs did quarrel with the Mayor, or continue a Common Hall after the Mayor had adjourn'd it. As for theſe Gentlemen they could not be Ignorant of it, becauſe the daily Practice before their Eyes was for the Mayor to do it. But this was a new notion got into their heads, tho' it was otherwiſe before, it muſt be ſo now, and one ſaid they would have no Tory Mayor to be Mayor, thus the King ſhould have ſomething to do to ſupport the Mayor by his power for ought I know. Now Gentlemen, for the Parties that are accuſed to be in it, there is T. Pilkington, Samuel Shute, Henry Corniſh, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Player, Slingsby Bethel, Francis Jenks, John Deagle, Richard Freeman, Richard Goodenough, Robert Key, John Wickham, Samuel Swinock, and John Jekyl the Elder, ſome Witneſſes are to ſome, and others to others, but ſome of them have ſeven or eight Witneſſes. There is Pilkington and Shute and Corniſh, theſe had a great many Witneſſes againſt them, others have two. Firſt, for the Sheriffs, and Mr. Corniſh that had been Sheriff but two years before, they kept them together after my Lord Mayor was gone, and to ſee what People they were, No, not God bleſs the King, no, no, but the Proteſtant Sheriffs; ſo that in truth the King muſt be put out of his Throne, to put theſe two Sheriffs in it. It is not proved that either of theſe did ſay ſo, nor the others neither, but they were thoſe that clung to them, and they would help them, and they would ſet them to rights, and I know not what; and there is no other way to know in this caſe what they were, but by theſe they kept Company with, and it may be, I would be loth to ſay ill, it may be it was in order to dethrone the King as far as they could; for my Lord Mayor, when truly he had adjourn'd the Hall and was going home, he had like to be trod under foot himſelf, his Hat was down, and that was the great reſpect they gave to his Majeſties

Lieu-

Lieutenant in the City. It is true it cannot be ſaid who it was, but thoſe were the People that would have No God ſave the King, and thoſe the Mayor had nothing to do with. The Sheriffs they would go on to Poll, and caſt up their Books, and would make a Diſquiſition who had moſt Hands and the like, 3 Hours after my Lord Mayor was gone, there were ſo many that did countenance and foment this ſort of Proceedings. There is a ſhrewd Act that was made ſince His Majeſty came in, that the Villany of ſome Men might be ſtopt, thirteenth, fourteenth of the King, that for Words in ſome Caſes makes High Treaſons, it is well His Majeſty does not take any ſevere Proſecution, but I can tell you, I would not have Men preſume upon it. It can't be ſaid you or you ſaid ſo, yet they kept them together, they were they that kept all this Rabble three Hours together; the Lord Mayor does adjourn the Court, and they muſt have ſome time to be gone, and thereupon would perſwade us they could not get away in three Hours, they ask for a Poll, and caſt up the Scrutiny, and I know not what. There are ſome, and that is my Lord Grey and Mr. Goodenough, how theſe two ſhould come there I know not, they had nothing to do here, and therefore I doubt it will be worſe upon them than upon the reſt, for they had nothing to do here, they muſt come to ſet the Citizens together by the ears. My Lord Grey, he ſays, and hath called ſome Witneſſes, that he had buſineſs with Sir William Gulſton, about the Sale of Corſfield in Eſſex, but I do not ſee any of his Witneſſes that do ſay he came to ſpeak with Sir William Gulſton here, he came here to ſee how the Poll went. But, look you, Gentlemen, he hath given ſome ſort of Evidence, and the Counſel did open it very fairly, but the Evidence did not come fully. If you think he did only come upon real Occaſions to Sir William Gulſton, only to ſpeak to him about that buſineſs, and concern'd himſelf no otherwiſe, then you will do well to find him Not Guilty, if you do not, you muſt find him likewiſe as well as the reſt, for Goodenough he was here to promote the Matter. There is one, and truly he ſaid, that for his part, as the reſt would have No God bleſs the King, ſo truly he would have No Tory Mayor. And all this Flame, I muſt tell you, took Fire from this Spark, that the Sheriffs might do what they thought fit about chooſing Officers. Gentlemen, it hath been a long Tryal, and it may be I have not taken it well, my Memory is bad and I am but weak, I don't queſtion but your Memories are better than mine, conſider your Verdict, and find ſo many as you ſhall think fit.

The Jury withdrew, and in ſome time returned.

Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Who ſhall ſpeak for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Do you find the Defendants guilty of the Treſpaſs and Riot? &c.

Foreman. We find them All guilty in that Paper.

This is your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

T. Pilkington, S. Shute, H. Corniſh, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Player, S. Bethel, F. Jenks, J. Deagle, R. Freeman, R. Goodenough, R. Key, J. Wickham, S. Swinock, and John Jekyl the Elder are guilty.

You ſay they are all guilty? &c.

Jury. Yes.

Who were Fined at the King's-Bench Court at Weſtminſter on the 26th of this Inſtant June, 1683. for a Riot and Battery committed by them upon the Perſon of the late Lord Mayor, &c. in Guild-hall, at the Election of Sheriffs, containing what remarkably occurred in the Debates admitted upon paſſing Judgment of Fine. As alſo the Fining of one Mr. Turne, for making a Riot upon the Mayor of Rye in the County of Suſſex.

ON the 8th Day of May laſt, the Parties above mention'd were Tryed at the Guild-Hall of the City of London, upon an Information in the Crown for riotouſly, routouſly and unlawfully oppoſing the Proceedings in Guild-hall on Midſummer-day laſt, upon the Election of Sheriffs to ſerve for the City of London and County of Middleſex, and aſſaulting Sir John Moore, then Lord Mayor, &c. which being by divers Witneſſes made apparent, and they by the Jury after ſome ſhort Conſideration found Guilty, Mr. Attorney General, on the 15th of June, Anno 1683. moved in the Court of King's-Bench at Weſtminſter, that Judgment might be awarded againſt them upon their former Conviction, in order to their being Fined for the Riot, &c. But the Lord Chief Juſtice Saunders, and Mr. Juſtice Raymond, by reaſon of their Indiſpoſitions, being neither of them on the Bench, Mr. Juſtice Jones, with the Conſent of Mr. Attorney General, referred it to the 19th Inſtant, when Mr. Attorney again moved for Judgment, alledging the Heinouſneſs of the Crime, viz. That it was an open Affront to Juſtice and Magiſtracy, and might prove an evil Precedent if it ſhould eſcape unpuniſh'd, which he prayed it might not do, but that ſince they had been fairly Convicted, the Court, in purſuance thereof, would award ſuch Fines as might deter others from the like Attempts, &c. Upon this Motion Mr. Williams, of Counſel for the Defendants, moved, That ſeeing there had firſt a Venire been directed to Mr. Pilkington and Mr. Shute, late Sheriffs of London, and afterward an Alias Venire to the preſent Sheriffs, and yet that in the Information all the Defendants were joined, tho', as he ſuggeſted, that at the time of the firſt Venire ſome of them were not made known, and that ſince Mr. Pilkington, Mr. Shute, &c. had appeared upon the firſt, and many of the the others not till the ſecond; he humbly prayed that an Error might be thereon aſſigned.

To which the King's Counſel reply'd, That if any Prejudice was ſuſtained in the methods and manner of Proceeding to the Tryal of the Perſons convicted of the Riot and Battery, it was ſuſtained on the Part of the King; and ſeeing he was willing to diſpenſe with it, that not in the leaſt affected the Defendants, unleſs in redounding to their Advantage, for that they had a Legal Tryal, all of them pleading Not Guilty, and putting themſelves upon their Country, to try the Iſſue between the King and them, which Country had found them guilty of the Offences before mentioned, and that now nothing remained but the Judgment of the Court in awarding their Fines, &c.

To this it was alledged, That ſeeing they were aſſembled in Guild-hall upon a Lawful Occaſion, they could not be guilty of a Riot, or the like Miſdemeanor, the Legality of their firſt Aſſembling not admitting thereof: But this Allegation was over-ruled by many Demonſtrations, plainly making it appear, that altho' an Aſſembly be never ſo Legally Convened, yet if they tumult or break the Peace, the Legality of the Aſſembly cannot bear them out: And moreover, that when the Lord Mayor had adjourned the Poll, the Aſſembly was no longer a Lawful Aſſembly, but ought immediately to have departed to their reſpective Habitations, which the Defendants not only delayed to do, but in Contempt of Authority, continued the Poll, and in a riotous manner Aſſaulted the Perſon of the Mayor. And that for Inference, If a Congregation be aſſembled at a Church to hear Divine Service, which in it ſelf is lawful; yet if Blows happen, or a riotous or diſorderly Tumult is made, the Legality of the Meeting ſhall in no wiſe excuſe the Authors of ſuch Diſorders from the Penalties of the Law, &c. of which Opinion were not only the Counſel for the King, but the Judges likewiſe.

Theſe, and ſuch like, being the Arguments of this Day, Mr. Juſtice Jones being indiſpoſed, and Mr. Juſtice Raymond not coming upon the Bench, the paſſing Sentence was deferred till Friday the 22d Inſtant, and from thence till Monday the 25th Inſtant, at what time Mr. Juſtice Jones being indiſpoſed, it was put off till this preſent Tueſday, being the 26th of June; when as Mr. Attorney moved for Judgment, requiring that the Parties found Guilty upon the Information, might be Fined, and was ſeconded by Mr. Serj. Jefferies, both of them praying that they might have good Fines ſet on them, as an Example to deter others from the like Attempts; as alſo did Mr. Jones, of Counſel for the King, when on the other ſide Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Wallop, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Thompſon, and Mr. Holt, of Counſel for the Defendants, urged many Arguments for the Extenuation of the Fines, ſeeing they were at the Mercy of the Court, alledging, that the Defendants did that of which they were convicted rather out of Ignorance than Malice, or any Deſign they had to injure or affront the Government, as not being then capable to determine, whether the Right to adjourn the Common Hall lay in the Lord Mayor or Sheriffs. But after the Arguments on both ſides had been heard, Mr. Juſtice Jones proceeded to declare the Heinouſneſs of the Fact, and what an evil Precedent it might prove if it ſhould paſs unpuniſhed; and after ſome Conference with Mr. Juſtice Withens, he proceeded to award their Fines as followeth.

On Thomas Pilkington, Eſq; by reaſon of his being a Priſoner, only 500 l. S. Shute, Eſq; 1000 Marks, Ford Lord Grey of Werk 1000 Marks, Sir Tho. Player, Kt. 500 Marks, Slingsby Bethel, Eſq; 1000 Marks, H. Corniſh 1000 Marks, Francis Jenks 300 Marks, R. Freeman 300 Marks, R. Goodenough 500 Marks, John Deagle 400 Marks, Robert Key 100 Marks, John Wickham 100 Marks, S. Swinock 500 Marks, and on John Jekyl Senior 200 Marks; all of them appearing in Court except the Lord Grey, Mr. Key, and Mr. Goodenough, and according as they appeared to be of Ability, ſo were their Fines regulated.

In the Court of King's-Bench this Day likewiſe one Mr. Turne of Rye, in the County of Suſſex, was Fined 200 Marks, for making a Riot upon the Mayor of the ſaid Town, and two of the Town Officers Fined 20 Marks apiece, for aſſiſting him therein, and ſtrictly commanded to deliver the Inſigns of the Mayoralty, which he had ſeized into his Hands, under pretence that himſelf had been Elected Mayor of the ſaid Corporation.

THAT your Petitioners and the ſaid deceaſed Perſons were in the Year 1682, and 1683, by the Contrivance and Confederacy of Sir John Moore, Kt. Sir Dudley North, Kt. Sir Peter Rich, Kt. Sir Edmond Saunders, Kt. late Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, and ſome others, proſecuted and convicted for a Riot; the Fact objected againſt them being no other in truth, than the peaceable doing their Duties as Citizens of London and Engliſhmen, in Election of Sheriffs for the ſaid City and County of Middleſex.

That in the Proceedings upon the ſaid pretended Riot, many notorious Violations of the Law were committed, and your Petitioners denied Common Juſtice by the Combination and Confederacy of the Perſons laſt abovenamed, and others; inſomuch that your Petitioners, and the ſaid deceaſed Defendants were, by Judgment of the Court of King's-Bench in Trinity Term 1683, Unreaſonably Fined 4100 l. and were, by Impriſonment and otherwiſe, forced to pay the ſame; which Sum of 4100 l. was long ſince paid into the Exchequer.

That at your Petitioners Proſecution, the ſaid Judgment was Reverſed the laſt Parliament ment as Erroneous, whereby your Majesty stands by Law liable to make Restitution of the said Sum of 4100 l. as your Petitioners are advised.

Now forasmuch as your Majesty's Generous Undertaking in coming into this Kingdom, tended only for the Vindicating and Establishing our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and for Relieving the Oppressed; and for that it is agreeable to Equity, that such as did the Wrong should make the Restitution; And your Petitioners hoping the Parliament now Assembled will take the whole Matter into their Consideration, and pass a Bill for Relief of your Petitioners out of the Confederates Estates, and not leave them to be satisfied by your Majesty.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly beseech your Majesty, That the said Confederates, the Prosecutors of your Petitioners, and the Judges, and Others concerned therein, may be Excepted in the Act of Grace, intended by your Majesty, as to All they did in relation to the Prosecution and Judgment upon the pretended Riot above specified.

And your Petitioners shall always pray, &c.

The Tryal of Captain Thomas Walcot.

THurſday July 12. 1683. at the Sessions-House in the Old Bailey, London: The Court being met, and Proclamation made for Attendance, the Proceedings were as follows.

Thomas Walcot being set to the Bar, and after having held up his Hand, the Indictment was read as follows.

London. The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths Present, That Thomas Walcot, late of London Gentleman, as a false Traitor against the most Illustrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart; nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our said Lord the King, do bear, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move and stir up, and the Government of our said Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to subvert, and our said Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive, and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and put, the second Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, King of England, &c. the Five and Thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, in the Ward of Bassishaw, London, aforesaid, Maliciously and Traiterously with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, did Conspire, Compass, Imagine and Intend our said Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down, but also our said Lord the King to kill and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to subvert, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Subjects of our said Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England to cause and procure, and Insurrection and Rebellion against our said Lord the King to move, and stir up within this Kingdom of England; And to fulfil and perfect the said most horrible Treasons, and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, Maliciously, Traiterously and Advisedly did assemble, meet together and consult with the aforesaid other Traitors, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown, and with them did treat of and for the executing and perfecting their Treasons, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and that the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, Maliciously, Traiterously and Advisedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, did take upon himself, and to the aforesaid other Traitors did promise to be aiding and assisting in the execution of the Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and in providing Armour and Armed Men to fulfil and perfect the said Treasons and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid. And the said most wicked Treasons, and traiterous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil and bring to pass, he the said Thomas Walcot as a false Traitor, Maliciously, Traiterously and Advisedly, then and there did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbusses, Carbines and Pistols, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided, &c.

Cl. of Cr. What say'st thou, Thomas Walcot, Art thou Guilty of this High Treason, whereof thou standest Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Capt. Walcot. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tryed?

Capt. Walcot By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Then were William Hone, John Rouse and William Blague arraign'd, who pleaded Not Guilty to their Indictments, and the Court adjourn'd till the Afternoon. When Thomas Walcot Walcot being again brought to the Bar, after ſome exceptions, the following Jury was impannel'd.

Nicholas Charlton, Chriſtopher Pitts, Robert Beddingfield, John Pelling, William Windbury, Thomas Seaton, Jur'. William Rutland, Thomas Short, Theophilus Man, John Genew, John Short, Thomas Nicholas.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, &c.

Sir Edmond Saunders. L. C. J. Mr. Sheriffs, This is an extraordinary Caſe, it is reaſonable the Evidence ſhould be well heard: I require you both to keep the Court quiet.——Mr. Tanner, ſwear the King's Evidence one at a time.

Clerk. Thomas Walcot, Hold up thy hand. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge: He ſtands Indicted by the name of Thomas Walcot, Gent. prout in the Indictment before mutatis mutandis. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal put himſelf upon his Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, &c.

Mr. North. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you that are ſworn, the Priſoner ſtands charged, That he being a falſe Traytor to the King, and intending to raiſe War and Rebellion againſt the King, and to bring his Majeſty to an untimely death, did on the ſecond of March in the five and thirtieth year of the King, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, meet with other Traytors like himſelf, and there conſpired to bring theſe Treaſons to effect; and accordingly promiſed to be aiding and aſſiſting to provide Arms for it; and did actually provide ſeveral Arms, as Carbines, Blunderbuſſes and Piſtols for the perpetrating this Treaſon. This is the Charge, to which he ſays he is Not Guilty. We will call our Witneſſes and prove it, and then you are to find it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar is accuſed of the higheſt of Crimes, High Treaſon againſt his Sovereign Lord, in compaſſing the Murder of the King, in raiſing Rebellion within this Kingdom, to the overthrowing of the beſt conſtituted, and the moſt excellent Government in the World. Gentlemen, he does not ſtand alone; and therefore he is charged in the Indictment with a Conſpiracy with many others; I am heartily ſorry to ſay there are many; indeed there is hardly any Kingdom or Nation, wherein there are not diſcontented perſons, whoſe narrow Fortunes or malevolent Spirits render them uneaſie in that condition God Almighty hath put them; but to find Men that pretend to be Chriſtians, or to have any thing of Virtue, and under the beſt of Governments, that indeed is a matter of wonder; and indeed it caſts ſo great a Stain and Reproach upon the Proteſtant Name, that it is not to be wiped off, but by the ſevereſt Juſtice of the Kingdom. Gentlemen, this deſign was for a general Riſing, and at the ſame time to aſſaſſinate the King and the Duke of York: This is the deſign which the whole courſe of our Evidence will open to you, and lies ſo naked, that I hope no Engliſhman that lives, but will ſee through theſe men, that have made ſuch a Noiſe and Tumult in theſe latter days. This deſign to aſſaſſinate the King, and the Riſing, was deſigned to be in October laſt, upon the King's Return from New-Market; and at that time there was a Noble Lord, that is gone now to his own place, as will appear by the Evidence, that furniſhed them with conſiderable ſums of Money, for the providing Men and Arms for the aſſaſſinating the King at that time, but the Aſſaſſinates were not then ready, as God appointed they ſhould not be ready; and ſo at that time they were diſappointed. Then the general Riſing was put off till Queen Elizabeth's day, which will open your eyes, to ſee upon what grounds the Tumultuous Meetings were encouraged in the City, to the terror of all honeſt Men: But that Riſing was alſo diſappointed, becauſe ſome of the Conſpirators were not ready with their Men in the Countrey: And then, Gentlemen, though it was preſs'd on by the Perſon I mentioned, he then thought it high time to leave theſe Confederates to themſelves. Gentlemen, after this we ſhall trace them in their ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations; for there was a time, that they ſtruggled with themſelves, which ſhould be effected firſt, whether they ſhould firſt kill the King and the Duke; or whether they ſhould firſt riſe, and proſecute him in an open Rebellion, and deſtroy him that way. And the courſe of our evidence will ſhew, how ingenious theſe Men were, for it appears, there were men of great Ingenuity and Courage, as appears by the Priſoner at the Bar; and they would diſcourſe of theſe Matters in Phraſes, that Common Perſons ſhould not underſtand them.—

Capt. Walcot. I do not underſtand you.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſpeak as loud as I can. At their meetings, for cutting off the King, that was the executing of a Bargain and Sale; and a ſhort Conveyance, to come to their End. The raiſing of a War, that was under the Notion, and ſo to be diſcours'd of, of executing a Leaſe and Releaſe, to work both upon the Poſſeſſion and upon the Reverſion: And under theſe myſtical terms they diſcours'd of all theſe Subjects, when they were in publick Places.

Capt. Walcot. I do not hear.

Mr. At. Gen. You will hear the Witneſſes, and that will concern you more. Then Gentlemen, in theſe ſeveral meetings they contrived to allot every man his part, ſome were to provide Arms, others were to provide Men to do the Execution, which was laſt reſolved upon to be at the Rye, upon the King's laſt return from New-Market. Gentlemen, in all theſe Parts, which I hope to prove, the Priſoner will appear to have a principal Part in them all: In all the Conſultations and Adviſings for the raiſing Men, wherein he was to be a Principal Commander, according to the Skill he hath; but for the Aſſaſſination at the Rye, Rumbold was to conduct the Men hired for that Purpoſe. Gentlemen, accordingly the time was appointed for his Majeſty to come, and the Aſſaſſinates to meet him there: But it pleaſed God, that that was diſappointed by a miraculous Fire, for ſo all Engliſhmen may call it; and whereas they were to go down on Fryday to Rumbold's Houſe, and the King to come up on Saturday, the Fire brought him to Town on Tueſday: But notwithſtanding this great Providence to divert them, Rumbold and others of the Confederates, reſolved to go on

on with it ſtill; and ſeveral places were appointed, and ſeveral Officers appointed to view thoſe places, either between Hampton-Court and Windſor, or elſe to do it at the Play-houſe, or upon the King's Paſſage from the Play-houſe by Bedford-wall at Covent-garden; but if theſe ſhould fail, they were reſolved to do it at the Bull-feaſt. Gentlemen, they went further; they provided Arms; which very Arms opportunely fell into our Hands: We ſeiſed thoſe very Arms that were bought for that purpoſe to kill the King and the Duke. We ſhall go through with it; I will name you the material Places of their Meetings, that ſo you may underſtand the Witneſſes; the Green-Dragon Tavern on Snow hill, the Salutation Tavern in Lombard-ſtreet, the Angel Tavern near the Exchange, and Mr. Weſt's Chamber in the Middle-Temple; theſe were ſome of the principal Places, tho' they had ſeveral other Places, wherein all theſe Matters were conſulted and tranſacted. They had prepared a new Model of Government, and they were for overturning all, as all theſe Politicians do; tho' they had a moſt excellent Government, yet they had a better in their own Brains; or, at leaſt, their Share would be greater in it, as all Rebels have a Proſpect of. Gentlemen, for the other Parts, we ſhall have leſs occaſion to give Evidence of now, for every one had their particular Part; ſome for the great Deſign of the Riſing, ſome for the killing of the King, whereof that Gentleman, the Priſoner, was one; and there were other Parts aſſign'd to others, for taking and ſurprizing the Tower. We will call our Witneſſes, and prove all that we have opened, and make it as clear to you as the Sun ſhines: Such a prodigious Villany nothing but a Firebrand from Hell could kindle in Men's Minds, to kill the beſt of Kings, and to deſtroy the beſt Frame of Government. Gentlemen, I do not queſtion your Juſtice, but that this Man ſhall pay what is due to the Juſtice of the Kingdom.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I only deſire to give an account of the Method of our Evidence.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I deſire I may have the favour of Pen and Ink.

L. C. J. That you ſhall have.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Attorney hath already given you an account of the Deſign that was to be put in execution by a parcel of evil Men, whereof the Priſoner at the Bar we charge to be one. We ſhall not detain you longer with opening the Matter, but beg the favour of the Court, that we may acquaint you a little with the Method we intend to follow in calling our Evidence for the King againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. In the firſt place, my Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, to give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction, That there was a Deſign in general, and that that Deſign was firſt intended to be a general Riſing over all the Kingdom; in which Deſign the Priſoner at the Bar had a very conſiderable Share; and was looked upon to be a very proper and fit Perſon for the Managery of that Part of the Deſign: For other Meetings, and at what Places, Mr. Attorney hath already opened to you. We will then come to more particular Agreements that were between them, in order to the carrying on this admirable good Work, as it hath been truly ſtated, for the Deſtruction of the beſt and moſt merciful of Kings, and for the Deſtruction of the beſt of Religions, the Religion of the Church of England. I take notice of it, becauſe all Men may know, The moſt of theſe Perſons, nay, All of them, concerned in this helliſh Conſpiracy, were Diſſenters from the Church of England.

And the better to effect this horrid Villany (I am ſure I want Words, and ſo does any Man elſe, to expreſs the Baſeneſs of theſe Crimes) the better to effect this thing, the way it was to be done, was by taking off the King, and by taking off his Brother too. At length, after ſeveral Debates and ſome Propoſals made between theſe Perſons, they came to a Determination and an actual Reſolution to take off the King and his Royal Brother. My Lord, we will prove generally, that this was the Intent of the Deſign or the Plot in general. My Lord, we will then give you an account, That they enter'd into ſeveral Conſultations for a new Model and Frame of Government; for they intended to ſet up the People, and they had even fix'd a certain Superiority, and reſolved as all People of their Principles have a mind, according to their ſeveral Inclinations to fix the Power in the People; Gentlemen, an old Tenet that brought the King's Father to that untimely and horrid End, by fixing the Power in the People. Theſe Gentlemen had a mind to inſinuate and engage the People, by fixing the Power in them, and ſaying, that publick Proclamations were to be made. And after this horrid and barbarous Murder, intended upon the King and the Duke, there were Declarations to be made in the Names of ſuch and ſuch Lords, and the Aſſociating Members of the laſt Houſe of Commons, theſe were the Perſons thought fit in whoſe Hands the Power of the whole Kingdom ſhould be lodged. Gentlemen, after we have given you an account of the ſeveral Meetings, then we will come to the Priſoner at the Bar, and prove againſt him, That he had not only an Hand in the firſt Part of the Plot, about the Riſing, but he was alſo to be one of thoſe Villains that were to murder the King: I cannot expreſs my ſelf in more moderate Terms, and I am ſure no Man can blame me that hears the Proof. Gentlemen, when we have thus given you this Evidence, I hope we ſhall ſatisfy the Court, and all Mankind, That Perſons that have been thus guilty, under pretence of Religion, or under any other pretence whatſoever, are fit Objects of the Severity of human Laws. If we prove againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, That he had an Hand in this horrid Conſpiracy, I make no doubt but you will ſhew your ſelves to be Engliſhmen, loyal Men, and overtake all Men that thirſt after the King's Blood.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, we will call our Witneſſes, and as no Man can doubt, but the Murder of the King, that vile Deſign, would have been ſeconded by a Power to back that horrid Villany; ſo we ſhall ſhew you, That this Gentleman was concerned in both Parts, in the immediate Aſſaſſination of the King, and the Raiſing of Arms. We need not go about to give you an Hiſtory of the thing any other way than in applying it to this Perſon, for there is no Part of this Conſpiracy he can clear himſelf from, and all the Evidence that ſpeak of this Deſign, ſpeak of this Man as a chief Actor in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Col. Rumſey.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Col. Rumſey, Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account what you know of the Priſoner at the Bar, whether he were concerned, either in relation to the Murder of the King, or the raiſing Arms?

L. C. J. Mr. Rumſey, raiſe your Voice ſo audibly that you may be heard.

Col. Rumſey. The firſt Meeting I had with this Gentleman, was at Mr. Weſt's Chamber.

Mr. At. Gen. Before you begin to tell of your Meeting, give an account of any Riſing that you heard of.

Col. Rumſey. Sir, about the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November, I was with my Lord Shaftsbury late at Night, and he told me, That the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, my Lord Grey and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, were at one Mr. Shepherd's Houſe near Lumbard-ſtreet. He deſired me to go to know what they had done about the raiſing Arms at Taunton. I did go, and Mr. Shepherd carried me up to them, and they told me, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them about the Men, and they could proceed no further at that time.

L. C. J. What Shepherd was this?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Shepherd the Merchant near Lumbard-ſtreet, one Mr. Thomas Shepherd. And ſo I came to my Lord the next Day and told him of it; and then he made his Preparation to be gone for Holland.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with my Lord Shaftsbury thereupon? What did he ſay? What made you believe he made Preparation to be gone?

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, he ſaid there was no Dependance upon thoſe Gentlemen that met, and he would leave England. After that, a Fortnight or three Weeks, there was a Meeting one Day at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, and there was Mr. Weſt, and Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Wade, and ſome body elſe there was, but I cannot remember his Name, Captain Walcot was in Holland then. There it was propoſed, nothing was to be done by a general Riſing; but there was no ſurer way than to take off the King and the Duke; and that to that intent and purpoſe, they could not carry it on without Mr. Ferguſon; and ſo he was writ for into Holland; and he came out of Holland upon that Letter, and Captain Walcot with him. After Mr. Ferguſon's coming back from Holland, there was very ſuddenly a Meeting again, and then it was concluded, that nothing was to be effected without taking off the King and the Duke, or to that purpoſe. Mr. Ferguſon was not at that Meeting. There were two or three Meetings before Captain Walcot was there, to find out Men, and they could not find out a number of Men, without which Mr. Rumbold would not undertake it. So about three or four Meetings after Captain Walcot came, and he was reſolved at laſt to join in the matter; but he would not have an hand in attacking the Coach, but he would command a Party that ſhould charge the Guards.

L. C. J. What did he ſay?

Col. Rumſey. He would not meddle with the King in the Coach, but he would command a Party that ſhould charge the Guards that came along with him.

Mr. At. Gen. After what manner was it ſettled that it ſhould be done?

Col. Rumſey. There were ſeveral Parties; one ſmall Party was to have killed the Poſtillion, another to kill the Horſes, and Mr. Rumbold with a certain Number to ſeiſe the Coach, and Capt. Walcot the Guards.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it to be done?

Col. Rumſey. At Mr. Rumbold's Houſe.

L. C. J. Where is that?

Col. Rumſey. Near Hodſdon.

L. C. J. For what purpoſe was Mr. Rumbold and thoſe other Men to attack the Coach?

Col. Rumſey. To murder the King and the Duke.

L. C. J. How was it deſign'd to be done, by Piſtol, or how?

Col. Rumſey. By Blunderbuſſes, and if they miſs'd, then Swords.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they give any Directions about preparing Arms?

Col. Rumſey. When that time fail'd, after the Fire fell out at New-Market.

L. C. J. When was this to be done?

Col. Rumſey. When the King returned from New-Market.

L. C. J. About what time?

Col. Rumſey. The Saturday before Eaſter.

L. C. J. I don't ask you the Day; but was it when the King was laſt at New-Market, or before?

Col. Rumſey. Laſt at New-Market.

L. C. J. When he was laſt at New-Market, in his Return from thence?

Col. Rumſey. In his Return from thence.

L. C. J. Whereabouts?

Col. Rumſey. At Rumbold's Houſe which is near Hodſdon.

L. C. J. In Hertfordſhire?

Col. Rumſey. In Hertfordſhire.

L. C J. And you ſay, thoſe Methods were chalked out by them, that Rumbold and ſome others were to attack the Coach, others to kill the Poſtillion, others to kill the Horſes; and this Gentleman with a commanded Party was to fall upon the Guards? You ſay this?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, my Lord.

Capt. Walcot. I would beg leave, my Lord——

L. C. J. Stay, Captain Walcot, You ſhall have leave to ask him any thing by and by; but you muſt firſt let the King's Counſel have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. I would ask you what you know of a Deſign at any other time?

Col. Rumſey. I do know nothing, I heard by Mr. Weſt, but I knew nothing before.

L. C. J. Mr. Rumſey, About what time was this Reſolution taken up, as near as you can? I ask neither the Day nor the Week, but about what Month?

Col. Rumſey. The beginning of it was in February.

L. C. J. Laſt February?

Col. Rumſey. Laſt February. Mr. Ferguſon and Capt. Walcot came to this Town upon Aſh-Wedneſday.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What other Meetings were you at, Sir?

Col. Rumſey. This was the firſt, when the Priſoner at the Bar came in. The firſt time was at

at Mr. West's Chamber, where he came: There it was considered and debated.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Very well, you say that was the first time Capt. Walcot came in.

Col. Rumsey. It was at Mr. West's Chamber: This was before the King came from New-Market, that they were to do this, and the Number of Men could not be got ready; so there were several Meetings afterward at Mr. West's Chamber, to consult whether they could raise the Number they resolved upon; and there were Notes brought by Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Rumbold of many Names, I cannot say who else brought Notes of the Mens Names, to see that they might not be deceived in the Number; and at that time Capt. Walcot was there, and did undertake to go to Mr. Rumbold's House, and I think did go down to the very place.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Was there any Number of Men insisted upon for doing this Villany?

Col. Rumsey. Capt. Rumbold did insist upon 50 Men.

L. C. J. But Capt. Walcot, How many was he to have?

Col. Rumsey. It was not divided to a perfect Number.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What other Meetings were you at with Captain Walcot?

Col. Rumsey. I was at the Salutation with him, and the Green-Dragon with him.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Where is that?

Col. Rumsey. The Green-Dragon is upon Snow-Hill.

Mr Serj. Jefferies. Where is the Salutation?

Col. Rumsey. In Lombard-street.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now tell what Discourses you had there.

Col. Rumsey. That was about dividing the City into 20 Parts, to see how many Men could be raised out of every Part, and they were to be divided into Fifteenths, and every Man to lead a Fifteenth, that they might not be at a Loss.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was intrusted with this to do it?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough, Mr. West, and Mr. Wade.

Mr. At. Gen. What account did they give of what they had done?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough gave an account of 7 Parts of the 20, and said out of them would be raised 2900 Men, and made an Estimate that the other 13 would not raise above as many more, for those were the most considerable Parts, as Wapping and Southwark.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Rumsey, Pray what Consultation had you afterward, and what was done after?

L. C J. Pray let us go on a little gradatim, What was the reason that this was not effected when the King returned from New-Market?

Col. Rumsey. The Fire happened, and brought the King sooner from New-Market than the Men could be got ready.

L. C. J. Was there a Day appointed for the doing this? Had you a Prospect when the King would return?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, it was commonly talked that it would be the Saturday before Easter, but he came on the Tuesday before.

L. C. J. Then give us an account how that Design was disappointed at that time.

Col. Rumsey. The Fire happened in New-Market, and they were all in Confusion, and could not get their Men ready by Tuesday; the News came upon Friday to Town.

L. C. J. Of the Fire?

Col. Rumsey. Of the Fire, and there was a Meeting. Mr. Ferguson lodged then in Covent-Garden, and sent to several to come to him, to see if Men could be got together against Tuesday, when the King was to come in, and it could not be done, and it was laid aside for that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Upon that, what Resolution was taken?

Col. Rumsey. Then they had a Meeting, and Ferguson was not there, there was Capt. Walcot, Mr. West, and Mr. Goodenough; this was immediately after this Disappointment: I am not certain whether it was in Mr. West's Chamber; and that there might no Accident happen afterwards to hinder it, it was resolv'd that Money should be rais'd for the buying of Arms, and Mr. Ferguson undertook to raise Money to buy Arms, and Mr. West did undertake to provide them.

Mr. At. Gen. Who undertook to provide Men?

Col. Rumsey. Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rumbold.

L. C. J. Look you, Colonel Rumsey, after this Disappointment, when this next Meeting was, had you any further Design upon the King then?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Give us some account of that.

Col. Rumsey. It was to be done a coming from Windsor to London, or from Windsor to Hampton-Court, or the Play-house, and therefore that Arms should be ready against any Opportunity that should happen, let it be what it would; and Mr. West did undertake to provide Arms, and he told me he bought them, and did not get his Money in six or seven Weeks after; a Day or two after going to Ferguson, he told him now he might have his Money, if he would send a Note to Major Wildman; but after he was told, that Major Wildman would not pay it by Note, but he must send Mr. Rumbold to him for it, for he would trust no body else but him. And so Mr. West did send Mr. Rumbold, and he was there at his House by six a Clock in the Morning, but he was gone out of Town an Hour before, so Mr. West went to Mr. Ferguson, and he then told him that he should have Money in two or three Days, if he would come to him, and Mr. West did go to him, and he paid him an hundred Pound.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Provision made for a Rising now again?

Col. Rumsey. Yes, this general Rising, by this Division of the City, was intended to be ready against the first opportunity that happened.

Mr. At. Gen. Before this Discovery, did you keep up these Meetings?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was your last time?

Col. Rumsey. My Lord, I think it was the very Thursday before the Discovery; but then on Friday or Saturday we had inklings that this was discovered, and did meet at the George upon Ludgate-Hill.

L. C. J. Who met then?

Col. Rumsey. I think it was the very Thursday before; I am not very certain, we met at the Salutation in Lombard-street, and there was Captain Walcot, Mr. Weſt, Mr. Wade, the two Goodenoughs, and Mr. Neltbrop, and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. What did it come to, pray what was your Diſcourſe then and Reſolution?

Col. Rumſey. The Reſolution was ſtill to carry it on. We went thither to know of Mr. Goodenough, what was done about the other thirteen parts, he told us he had no account, but he ſaid, he thought he ſhould have a meeting on Saturday in the Afternoon at Ludgate-Hill, at the George, to have his Anſwer, but the Diſcovery coming, there did only meet Mr. Norton, Mr. Bourn; there was another, I don't know who the other was, there was a fourth.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, Pray after the Diſcovery, What did you reſolve upon? What meetings had you upon your flight?

Col. Rumſey. We met at Capt. Tracy's.

Mr. At. Gen. What day was that?

Col. Rumſey. That was upon the Monday after the Diſcovery.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who was there?

Col. Rumſey. There was Capt. Walcot, Mr. Weſt, Mr. Wade, Mr. Neltbrop, the two Goodenoughs, and Mr. Ferguſon.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you diſcourſe of there?

Col. Rumſey. There was exclaiming againſt Mr. Keeling, and taking reſolutions to be gone.

L. C. J. Mr. Keeling! What was Keeling?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Keeling was he that made the Diſcovery.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Have you ever been in Keeling's Company?

Col. Rumſey. I was that time we met at the Salutation, he came in there for a quarter of an hour.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Do you know Capt. Walcot? Are you ſure it is that Gentleman at the Bar?

Col. Rumſey, Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Hath he owned always the Name of Walcot?

Col. Rumſey, Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What did he ſay to Mr. Keeling, when he came to the Salutation?

Col. Rumſey. There was in that very day's Gazette, a Report of a Riſing at Cologne, and one Gulick that headed them, and ſaid Mr. Weſt to Keeling, he ſhould be our Gulick.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray how did he interpret it at that time?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Weſt ſaid that Gulick was Keeling, Gu was Keel, and lick was ing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. A Quirk upon his Name.

Mr. At. Gen. When you reſolved to flie, had you any diſcourſe of making a Stand, and fighting the Government then?

Col. Rumſey. Not that I know of, I was not all the time with them.

L. C. J. Look you, Colonel Rumſey, let me ask you this, What was Keeling to do? Was there any Poſt aſſigned to Keeling in this?

Col. Rumſey. I never ſaw him before.

L. C. J. How long was it before the Diſcovery that you did ſee him?

Col. Rumſey. The Thurſday before.

L. C. J. At the Salutation-Tavern?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, He was there call'd Gulick.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If Capt. Walcot will ask him any Queſtions, he may.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Walcot, Now you may ask Col. Rumſey; tell me what Queſtions you would have asked, and I will ask him.

Capt. Walcot. I deſire Colonel Rumſey may be asked, Whether I ever met at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, till after his Majeſty's return from New-Market?

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you hear the Queſtion; it is, Whether ever Mr. Walcot met with Mr. Weſt, till after the King's Return from New-Market?

Col. Rumſey. Till after?

L. C. J. Till after the King's Return.

Col. Rumſey. Yes, Sir.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have ſufficient Evidence againſt that.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I think that he was to undertake the Guards, that was before the King came from New-Market.

L. C. J. He hath given this Evidence, He was there, and he would not attack the Coach; he would not meddle with the King, but he would fall upon the Guards.

Capt. Walcot. Shall I ſpeak a word, my Lord?

L. C. J. Look you, I will tell you, you ſhall have your Anſwers to theſe things, you have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Capt. Walcot. But I have a bad memory, and I am afraid I ſhall forget this very thing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I hope the Jury will not forget it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Walcot, we muſt not admit you to break in upon the King's Evidence, when that is heard, you ſhall have your liberty to make your Anſwer to any thing, and call any Witneſs.

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, I will give one Inſtance more: There was one meeting at the Five Bells in the Strand, where there was only Ferguſon, Captain Rumbold, Mr. Weſt, Goodenough, and my ſelf; And Mr. Ferguſon told us that Night, that Captain Walcot would come the next meeting we had at Mr. Weſt's Chamber.

L. C. J. Then Captain Walcot was not with you at the Five Bells?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Ferguſon told us he would come in the next time at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, and there he did come.

L. C. J. And that was before the King went to New-Market. Pray, Sir, anſwer this, Was this before the King went to New-Market, or not?

Col. Rumſey. No, my Lord, this was when he was at New-Market; for the King was at New-Market when he and Mr. Ferguſon came from Holland, the King was then at New-Market.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now we will call Mr. Keeling. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, what you know of theſe Conſpiracies, and touching this Man.

Mr. Keeling. Some time, my Lord, before the King went to New-Market, I was at the Sun-Tavern, and in company with Richard Rumbold. Richard Goodenough, and ſome others; Goodenough calls me forth of the Room, and asked me what Men I could procure? I asked him, For what purpoſe? He ſaid, To go down towards New-Market. I asked, For what end? He ſaid, To kill the King, and the Duke of York. I told him, I thought none. Before the King came from New-Market, he renewed his Queſtion to me again ſeveral times: I had in the interim ſome diſcourſe with Burton and Thompſon; Burton told me, That Barber would be concern'd; and he alſo told me, Thompſon would. The Saturday after the Fire happened at New-Market, Rumbold came down to my Houſe, or the Friday, the day that the the News was of the Fire, the day that he commonly came to Town, he came to my Houſe; it was on the Friday, to ſee thoſe Men I could procure, and he deſired to ſee them on the morrow, which was the Saturday before the King returned; the Saturday after the Fire, I went into London, and met Mr. Rumbold that day at the Exchange, and he then put me in mind of the matter again. I did go to Burton, and Thompſon, and Barber, the place appointed on Saturday was the Mitre-Tavern at the corner of Duke's-place within Aldgate. He did meet there, where there was ſome Diſcourſe happened tending to that Matter by Rumbold; the Subſtance of which was, Whether they were willing to go down? I think he call'd the Place by the Name of, The Rye, that is his Houſe; there being, ſays he, no greater Conveniency than in that, I believe ſcarce in England, for the executing ſuch a Deſign, being an Houſe very intire to it ſelf, and very remote from Neighbours, beſides the Advantage that belongs to it of a Court or Wall. And, among other Diſcourſe, this was an Argument to prevail with thoſe perſons: For ſaith he, it will be a keeping one of the Commandments, to kill the King, and the Duke of York, for, ſays he, if that be not done, there will be otherwiſe a great deal of Bloodſhed committed. He alſo told us the way that he deſign'd to effect this at his Houſe; That he had a conveniency for our Horſes; and that there would be ſo many appointed to ſhoot at the Poſtilion and the Horſes; and that there would be ſo many appointed at the Coach, and ſo many Men to attack the Guards: And if there was a Failure in ſhooting the Coach-Horſes, that then there ſhould be Men in the habit of Country-men, with a Cart in the Lane, and they ſhould run this Cart athwart the Lane, and ſo ſtop the Coach. I believe there might be ſome other Particulars, which, at preſent, I do not remember. From thence we went to the Exchange, and there we met in the Afternoon at the Dolphin-Tavern in Bartholomew-Lane, there was Rumbold, Weſt, Goodenough, and Hone the Joyner. And after we had been there a little, Weſt asked Rumbold, Whether he heard the King would come home that Night? He ſaid, Yes, he heard ſo; but ſaid Weſt, I believe he won't come till Monday, and I hope he won't come till Saturday, for that was the day appointed to go down to the Rye, to meet the King, and the Duke of York. Said, Rumbold, I hope they will not come till then: But, ſaid Weſt, if they do come, How many Swan-quills muſt you have? How many Gooſe-quills? And how many Crow-quills with Sand and Ink, muſt you have? Said they, Six Swan quills, Twenty Gooſe-quills, and Twenty or thirty Crow-quills.

L. C. J. Explain that.

Mr. Keeling. I am coming to it. I asked Weſt or Rumbold, or both of them, what they intended by it? They told me Swan-quills were Blunderbuſſes, Gooſe-quills, Muſquets, and Crow-quills were Piſtols, Sand and Ink, Powder and Bullet. This is all my Lord as I remember in general as to the Deſign.

L. C. J. What can you ſay concerning the Priſoner at the Bar?

Mr. Keeling. I was at the Salutation-Tavern and Captain Walcot was there, and when I came in, there was ſome perſon called me Culing, and I a little ſtranged at it, not knowing the meaning; ſays I, Gentlemen, What do you deſign by it? Says one, here's a good health to our Engliſh Culing; ſays Weſt, Culing in Dutch is Keeling in Engliſh, and ſays Mr. Weſt, I hope to ſee Mr. Keeling at the head of as good an Army in Wapping, as Culing is at Collen. I ſuppoſe Captain Walcot remembers it very well. I can ſay no more, Sir, to the Priſoner at the Bar; I remember not to have ſeen him any other time upon this Deſign.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Would the Priſoner at the Bar ask him any queſtions?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I don't remember any ſuch thing. If you pleaſe my Lord, to ask him, whether I call'd him Culing, or ſaid any thing more or leſs to him.

Mr. Keeling. I don't ſay you did, but you were by, that I ſay.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I think, Mr. Keeling, you were the Perſon that made the diſcovery; give an account of it for the Satisfaction of the World.

L. C. J. Upon what occaſion did you reveal this?

Mr. Keeling. If your Lordſhip pleaſe I will give you an account. There was ſomething happened before that time. Some time before this thing was diſcovered, Goodenough came down to my houſe, and I went with him to drink a diſh of Coffee, and there was in company with him Richard Rumbold, and his Brother William, that I believe Mr. Walcot knows; and when we were by our ſelves, he pulls out ſome Papers out of his Pocket, and gave me one; I asked him what he meant, he told me he had divided the City and Suburbs into twenty parts, and there were three diviſions; and ſays he, you know the perſons better than I, and who you can truſt with it; one is for your ſelf, and I would have you take to your aſſiſtance nine or ten men, more or leſs, that you may communicate it ſafely to, and they were to go to ſeveral Perſons, and ask them, ſuppoſing that the Papiſts ſhould riſe, or that there ſhould be a general Inſurrection, or a French Invaſion, Are you in a poſture of defence? This was all we were to communicate of the matter to them, and this was to feel them, and ſee how many men they could raiſe. And he told me there was a deſign to kill the King and the Duke, which was deſigned to be done at the Bull-feaſt, for Mr. Weſt had told me it was to be done between Windſor and Hampton-Court. I asked him if that Deſign went on, and he ſaid, no; for the Duke of York ſeldom came with the King from Windſor to Hampton-Court, but it was to be at the Bull-Feaſt. And ſays he, theſe men are to be in a readineſs, and it's deſigned that the thing ſhould be laid upon the Papiſts, as a Branch of the Popiſh Plot. He alſo told me, there was one drawing a Declaration, which would relieve poor people of that which ſeemed moſt burthenſome to them, which was the Chimney-money, and then the Common People would fall in with them more readily.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to diſcover it?

Mr. Keeling. I will tell you, Sir, I was troubled in my mind about it, and do declare that was the only Reaſon; I thought I did very ill in not diſcovering it, and I had no peace nor ſatisfaction, nor content, nor did I mind my buſineſs, nor could I take that reſt that at other times I did, and that was the moving Cauſe, and no other: I thought if it were a ſin in David to cut off the hem of Saul's Garment, it was a ſin in me much more to kill my King.

L. C. J. Was there any Poſt in this Caſe aſſign'd to you? Was it requir'd of you to do any thing your ſelf, more than to raiſe thoſe Men, and know whether they were in a readineſs? Were you deſign'd to go down to Rumbold's Houſe? Tell what part you were to act.

Mr. Keeling. In the firſt place, I was to raiſe ſome men, but I thought they looked upon me for one to go down my ſelf with thoſe men I raiſed; but I remember not that I was asked the Queſtion.

L. C. J. Were any of thoſe Men to go down?

Mr. Keeling. Thoſe three I named were to go down, Burton, Thompſon, and Barber.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Bourn.

L. C. J. Tell us the manner of your revealing and diſcovering this, who you diſcovered it to?

Mr. Keeling. I revealed it to one Mr. Peckham.

L. C. J. Who did he bring you to?

Mr. Keeling. To my Lord Dartmouth.

L. C. J. And ſo you did diſcover the whole buſineſs to him?

Mr. Keeling. I had offered to diſcover it to another Man before, but I thought he was careleſs, ſo I did not tell him poſitively what I thought to tell him, becauſe I ſaw he ſlighted the matter; He was a Miniſter of the Church of England. Then I went to Mr. Peckham, knowing he was intimate at Court, and from thence to my Lord Dartmouth, and then I was carried to Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there no deſign to take off the Mayor or the Sheriffs in particular?

Mr. Keeling. I will tell you, Goodenough did tell me, That the Deſign was to ſecure the Lord Mayor, and the Sheriffs, and he told me, they had a deſign to ſecure the Tower.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you employed to arreſt my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Keeling. I did arreſt my Lord Mayor.

L. C. J. What are you? How came you to arreſt my Lord Mayor? What are you by Profeſſion?

Mr. Keeling. A White Salter, or Oyl-man.

L. C. J. How came you to arreſt my Lord Mayor?

Mr. Keeling. I was put upon it by Goodenough, and thoſe men.

L. C. J. As a ſpecial Bailiff?

Mr. At. Gen. He was as a ſpecial Bailiff.

Mr. Keeling. Under the Coroner.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. A ſpecial Bailiff under a ſpecial Coroner.

Mr. Bar. Street. Was this Coroner at any time at any of your meetings?

Mr. Keeling. No, my Lord.

Mr. Bar. Street. I am glad he was not.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Capt. Walcot?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Zachary Bourn.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you recollect your ſelf, and tell what knowledge you have of the Priſoner, what meetings you had, and what was agreed.

L. C. J. Raiſe your voice a little.

Mr. Bourn. The occaſion of my knowing Capt. Walcot was Mr. Ferguſon's lodging at my houſe, Capt. Walcot uſed to come thither, but it was ſome time before I changed any words with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Speak aloud, Mr. Bourn.

Mr. Bourn. Mr. Wade came preſently after I came to Town from the Wells, and ſaid, I muſt needs meet in ſuch a place, it was at the Dragon upon Snow-Hill, where we met ſeveral others beſides Capt. Walcot; the buſineſs was a deſign to raiſe men, and divide the City into twenty Diviſions, in order to the ſecuring of his Majeſty and the Duke of York, and ſetting up the Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. Was it ſecuring, or killing?

Mr. Bourn. It was not killing, I think, we never expreſſed it killing at thoſe meetings. I think every time I met them Captain Walcot was there. Once I was at the Salutation in Lumbard-ſtreet.

L. C. J. What was the reſult of your meetings?

Mr. Bourn. To make all expedition imaginable.

L. C. J. Was it diſcours'd how, or in what manner thoſe Perſons were to be raiſed? Don't refer your ſelf to the Evidence that went before, but tell it your ſelf.

Mr. Bourn. The City was to be divided into twenty Diviſions, and to raiſe as many men as they could out of them, but they were not to tell the direct buſineſs, but if there ſhould be occaſion, or the Papiſts ſhould riſe, they might know their ſtrength, and what they were able to do.

Mr. At. Gen. This was their Pretence, becauſe it ſhould not be told thoſe Men.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Goodenough bring any account of it?

Mr. Bourn. Mr. Goodenough brought an account of about four thouſand; three I think it was, or very near, out of thoſe Diviſions he had an account of.

L. C. J. Was Captain Walcot there at that time?

Mr. Bourn. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. When the Diſcourſe was about ſecuring the King and the Duke, was Captain Walcot there?

Mr Bourn. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you hear what Parties were deſign'd to be in this Act?

Mr. Bourn. They were not come to that.

L. C. J. Did you break off from them before that?

Mr. Bourn No, the Diſcovery prevented it?

L. C. J. When was your firſt meeting? About what time?

Mr. Bourn. About ten days before the Diſcovery was made.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Weſt at any of your Conſults?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, at ſome of them, and Captain Walcot was as three of them, if not at all, I think.

L. C. J. What was to be done?

Mr. Bourn. They were to have ſeized my Lord Mayor and the two Sheriffs, and ſome of the Aldermen, and the chief Miniſters of State about Town.

Mr. Bar. Street. Was there any body deſigned for that particular buſineſs?

Mr. Bourn. No, not then, it was not come to that.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any thing about my Lord Keeper?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, Mr Weſt did ſay to me, it ſhould be my buſineſs to ſecure my Lord Keeper; I told him, I did not care to meddle with any

any of my Neighbours. He ſaid he would call him to account with all his heart, he would put him in mind of Colledge.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray were you imployed to ſpeak with any of the Nonconformiſt Miniſters about it?

Mr. Bourn. I would have ſpoke to two of them, and Mr. Weſt was unwilling, for he ſaid, the Miniſters had deſtroyed all deſigns ever ſince Conſtantine's time, and he would have nothing to do with them now.

Mr. At. Gen. When was your laſt meeting, before the Diſcovery, that you were at?

Mr. Bourn. The Saturday before the Diſcovery, we met at Captain Tracy's, and that evening we had ſome intimation that there was a Diſcovery made. And I went again on Monday morning.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there?

Mr. Bourn. Captain Walcot, Mr. Ferguſon, Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Weſt, Mr. Norton, and my ſelf, one Captain Pottle came in, but he did not ſtay.

Mr. At. Gen. Colonel Rumſey was there too, was not he?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. And what did you reſolve upon then?

Mr. Bourn. Truly they reſolved upon nothing, I left them upon the debate of killing Mr. Keeling.

Mr. At. Gen. Why would they kill him? Was that debated among them?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, becauſe he made the Diſcovery.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you hear them talk of ſtanding to it with Swords in their hands?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, rather than be hang'd, they thought that was the better way, and to have Keeling diſpatched out of the World.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, did any of them talk of ſecuring themſelves?

Mr. Bourn. The next morning I went again, and they were all gone but Mr. Weſt, they had all ſecured themſelves.

L. C. J. Was the Priſoner at the Bar there at that time, when they conſulted about killing Mr. Keeling? Was he there at that meeting on Monday morning?

Mr. Bourn. He was there at Captain Tracy's, he was there I think all the while, while I was there, for I was not there all the time.

L. C. J. (To Walcot.) Now, Sir, what Queſtion would you have?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I would ask whether he ever heard me ſay any thing, more or leſs, of aſſaſſinating the King?

L. C. J. In the firſt place, did you hear any thing in general of aſſaſſinating the King?

Mr. Bourn. I did hear of it, my Lord, when the thing was over. And as to his queſtion, I did never hear him diſcourſe of that matter. I underſtood the deſign was prevented.

L. C. J. Who did you underſtand that from?

Mr. Bourn. From one Mr. Row, and Mr. Ferguſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray in all your meetings, was there no diſcourſe of killing the King and the Duke?

Mr. Bourn. Very little.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The diſcourſe was about ſecuring the King while Walcot was there?

Mr. Bourn. There was ſuch diſcourſe in ſeveral meetings. It was ſaid it would be well if they were off, and the diſcourſe was about Lopping.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell my Lord, what diſcourſe you had of Lopping and the general Point.

Mr. Bourn. They ſaid, there was no way like Lopping them.

Mr. At. Gen. What was underſtood by that?

Mr. Bourn. The taking off the King and the Duke of York.

L. C. J. Was that the uſual phraſe among you to ſignifie that?

Mr. Bourn. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he there?

Mr. Bourn. I have heard it ſeveral times, and I ſuppoſe he was at the hearing of it.

L. C. J. (To Walcot.) Look you Sir, he ſpeaks of the time of diſcourſe, of ſecuring the King, and ſays you were there then.

Capt. Walcot. I had no hand in it.

Mr. At. Gen. We will nail it home upon you, we will call Mr. Weſt. [Who was ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Come, Mr. Weſt, do you tell my Lord and the Jury the whole Story.

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, I came acquainted with the Priſoner at the Bar laſt Summer-Vacation, by the knowledge of one Wilcocks, who, I ſuppoſe, return'd his Money out of Ireland, I heard a very fair Character of him, and he, I ſuppoſe, met with ſuch an one of me, which did incline us both to an Intimacy, and to talk freely with one another. About the middle of October, I obſerv'd a general Diſcontent in the City, and was afraid there was ſome Deſign in hand, and was very inquiſitive to know it: I was unwilling to be involved and ſurprized into a ſudden Ruin, and ſo thought fit to inquire of them that were moſt likely to be concerned. I took Capt. Walcot for one, being inform'd that my Lord Shaftsbury had ſent for him out of Ireland; and Capt. Walcot told me, that my Lord was alſo ſending for ſome Scottiſh Gentlemen, on occaſion of Carolina; but that he was very cool in Carolina buſineſs, and that that was but a Pretence. My Lord, one morning Capt. Walcot came to my Chamber, and we diſcours'd concerning the Election of Sheriffs carried on in the City, contrary, as we thought, to the Juſtice of it: Says he, Will the People do nothing to ſecure themſelves? With that he told me a Secret, and ſaid there was a Deſign of an Inſurrection to be made within three Weeks or a Month, that would make us free, or worſe. I told him, I thought it was a certain way to bring us in a worſe condition, and that it was very full of hazards. He told me then, he did not know whether he ſhould be concerned: But a little while after he told me, my Lord Shaftsbury was engag'd in ſuch a Deſign, and he had engag'd him in it, and he told me, he had an expectation of being a Colonel of Horſe, and ask'd me, If I would have any Command under him? I told him, I knew ſome Gentlemen of the Temple that I might engage in it, but told him, I had not a Conſtitution to bear the Toils of War. My Lord, he told me then, That my Lord Shaftsbury, to the beſt of my remembrance, had another Deſign upon the King and the Duke, as they came from New-Market in October laſt, but he told me he abhorr'd any ſuch thing, it was ungenerous, and he would not be concern'd in it, but only in a general Inſurrection. But this he did tell me, I think, before the thing was to be executed; I imparted it to no Body, till after the time of both was paſt: But in the diſcourſe of the Inſurrection, he

he told me, I ſhould lend him a Suit of Silk Armour, which I bought about four or five Years ago, when the Popiſh Plot broke out, and he would have had me kept that, and uſed it my ſelf, which I did decline. Then he told me, he had very good Swords in Ireland, but he wanted them here. Says he, I am a Man that am obſerved, becauſe I have a Correſpondence with my Lord Shaftsbury, and asked me, if I would provide him a good ſtiff Tuck? I told him I would, and I did beſpeak one; but before it was done, the Deſign was laid aſide, and the Tuck was left upon my Hands. I came to underſtand that the Deſign was put off, by means of Mr. Trenchard, who had diſcours'd about a Fortnight before of great Forces he could raiſe in the Weſt, and the Duke of Monmouth ſent for him, but his Heart fail'd him, and he could not raiſe any Men; upon which, my Lord Grey called him Coxcomb. This was about the 19th of November.

Mr. At. Gen. What time of November?

Mr. Weſt. The 19th.

Mr. At. Gen. But upon what Day?

Mr. Weſt. Queen Elizabeth's Day.

Mr. At. Gen. No, Sir, that is the 17th.

Mr. Weſt. Now after this I underſtood by Capt. Walcot, that Mr. Ferguſon had the Management and Conduct of the Aſſaſſination in October, and that he likewiſe was acquainted with the Inſurrection, and was a great Man in it. I met with Mr. Ferguſon, and fell into diſcourſe with him, and he treated me, as he always did, with a long Story of the Miſeries of Scotland, and that the People were all in Slavery and Bondage, and would be ſo here if they did not free themſelves; and, ſays he, there are two ways thought upon for it, one is by a general Inſurrection, and that is gone off; the other is a much more compendious way, by killing the King and the Duke of York. My Lord, I told him, I thought the firſt way was a very dangerous way, that the People were in no ſort of Capacity to carry it on, that the Government had the Navy and the Militia, and this would at the beſt entail a long War. He told me he thought the other was the beſt way, and we went to a Tavern, where Col. Rumſey, and one Row, and he and I went divers times. They propoſed to meet at my Chamber as a Place of Privacy and little Obſervation. My Lord, when they came to my Chamber, Mr. Ferguſon propoſed ſeveral ways of doing it. One way was as the King and Duke had their private Viſits in St. James's, where it was an eaſy thing for Sword-men to kill them. There is one thing I have omitted, and that was after the Deſign of October had miſcarried, I think, to the beſt of my Remembrance, Capt. Walcot told me, there was another Deſign of attacking the King and the Duke at my Lord Mayor's Feaſt in the Hall, or in their Return home, in Paul's Church-yard, or at Ludgate; and Mr. Ferguſon did likewiſe tell me the ſame thing, but the King not dining there, the thing was wholly diſappointed. Another way that he propoſed was, that they ſhould do it as the King and the Duke went down the River, they ſhould lie behind ſome ſmall Ships within a Hoy, or ſome ſuch thing, and ſo over-run their Barge; and if that fail'd, they ſhould break a Plank with their Blunderbuſſes, and ſo ſink them. Another way was at the Play-houſe, and that was to be done in this manner; there ſhould be 40 or 50 Men got into the Pit with Pocket-Blunderbuſſes, or Hand-Blunderbuſſes, and Piſtols and Swords; and when the Muſick ſtruck up between the Acts, they ſhould fire upon the Box; but this they thought was hazardous, and therefore they thought it better to do it as he came back, and pitched upon Covent-Garden under Bedford-Garden Wall, becauſe there was a Conveniency for a great many Men to walk in the Piazza, and there might be another parcel of Men planted at Covent-Garden Church-Porch, and within the Rails where Horſes could not come; and while the Men within the Rails fired, the Men in the Piazza might engage the Guards, and they in the Church-Porch to come down and ſecure them from eſcaping.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was this time?

Mr. Weſt. I think it was before Mr. Ferguſon went for Holland. And, my Lord, there was another thing propos'd: I think it was Colonel Rumſey did ſay, He wonder'd that the Lords and great Men that were ſo fond of the thing, did not raiſe a Purſe, and buy ſome body an Office, who ſhould rail againſt the Duke of Monmouth, and the Whigs, and by that means get himſelf an opportunity of Acceſs to the King's Perſon. My Lord, after theſe Diſcourſes, when my Lord Shaftsbury retir'd to Holland, Mr. Ferguſon thought fit to do ſo too: He was afraid of a Book that he had printed, and away he went, and Captain Walcot with him. In the mean time I met Col. Rumſey ſeveral times, and ſeveral things were offer'd, but nothing reſolv'd upon. A little after Chriſtmas we met at the Salutation Tavern in Lumbard-ſtreet, and there it was agreed we ſhould ſend for Mr. Ferguſon, and there I writ a canting Letter, that he would come over for his Health, for he was the only Man that could manage the Affair. When he came over, there was one Meeting at the Five-Bells, but I came in juſt as they were coming away, and cannot ſay what paſs'd there. After that they came ſeveral times to my Chamber, and there Mr. Ferguſon, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rumbold, undertook to provide the Men.

L. C. J. The Men, for what?

Mr. Weſt. The Men for the Aſſaſſination: That I was not concern'd in, either in Perſon or Purſe, or to procure any body for it. And they did agree to do it in the going to or from New-Market, and thereupon were ſeveral Debates, Whether it ſhould be done at their Going, or Coming-back. Againſt doing it Going-down, it was objected, That the Guards were left here and there, and they went together, but very often they return apart, and therefore it was not the ſafeſt way Going-down; and nothing alſo being prepar'd, ſo it was reſolv'd to be done Coming-back. Then it was conſider'd what Arms ſhould be provided: Mr. Rumbold was the Man to manage that Matter, and was to procure ſome Blunderbuſſes, ſome Carbines, and ſome Piſtols; but there was nothing to be prepar'd as I know of by other Perſons, but every Man was to provide himſelf. Several Meetings there were, they brought their Notes, and confer'd together about the Men, but I remember no Names, but Keeling and Burton: And Mr. Goodenough ſaid, he had ſpoke to one Hone a Joyner; and, I think, he ſpake of one Manning, and theſe are all the Names I can remember. After they had confer'd their Notes,

Notes, I ask'd Mr. Ferguſon, What Proviſions of Money he had made? Says he, I ſhall have Money when the Men are provided, but not till then: For, ſaid he, the laſt time there was ſome Money rais'd, and put into a Man's Hand, who never returned it, but ſince I underſtand it was paid to Mr. Goodenough. And Mr. Ferguſon ſaid, Mr. Goodenough call'd him Fool, for returning ſome Money he had, and not keeping it for his own Uſe; and my Lord Shaftsbury had often complain'd of that Injuſtice done him: The Colonel ſaid, Mr. Charlton ſhould pay the Money. There was a further Debate, How theſe Arms would be got down to Mr. Rumbold's: It was propoſed, to ſend them down by Smithfield Carts in Cheſts. Others, to ſend them down by truſty Watermen, who were to cover them with Oyſters. Others, that the Men ſhould carry them; but no Reſolution taken: Then it was conſider'd, how they ſhould get off. The next thing was, how they ſhould execute this; and it was propos'd, That one Party was to fall upon the Coach-Horſes, a ſecond upon the Coach, a third upon the Guards: Captain Walcot would not undertake any thing but the Guards.

Capt. Walcot. What do you ſay, Sir?

Mr. Weſt. Sir, I do ſay, you were at my Chamber, and did ſay, you were to command that Party of Horſe that were to attack the Guards. It was to be done at Rumbold's Houſe; they were to lie there Perdue, till the King juſt came down upon them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. At the time of the Aſſaſſination?

Mr. Weſt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Where were theſe Arms to be carried?

Mr. Weſt. To Rumbold's Houſe; I did not ſee it: But he ſaid he could keep them all private, where no body could ſee them till the time of the Execution. And that there was a Gate they were to paſs through, that he could ſhut upon the Horſe-Guards, that they ſhould not be able to come in for their Relief. Mr. Rumbold ſaid, he would bring them off; and ſaid, he thought it dangerous for them to go the Road-way, but he would bring them over the Meadows, and come in by Hackney-Marſh: But the way which the Priſoner did moſt approve of, was, That they ſhould retire within his Wall, there keep till Night, being a Place they could defend againſt any Force for a Day's time.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was this Reſolution taken?

Mr. Weſt. This Reſolution was taken at my Chamber. My Lord, As to the Attempt, when they deſign'd to make it upon the King's coming from the Play-houſe, one Mr. Row ſaid, he had diſcours'd with one Gibbons, that was the Duke of Monmouth's Servant, about it, and ask'd him, if any of their Family knew of it? Yes, ſays he, they all know of it, but they will not be ſeen in't; and ſaid, that he ſhew'd him the place. My Lord, in one of the Diſcourſes I had before Mr. Ferguſon went for Holland, I had a mind to be rid of the thing, but I did not know how; ſo I created Difficulties, and ſaid, I ſuppoſe the Duke of Monmouth is to get moſt by it, what Security will you have you ſhall not be hang'd when the thing is done? He is bound, ſaid I, in Honour to hang us all, and make Inquiſition for this Blood, otherwiſe they will ſay he is a Party. Says he, what if I get it under his Hand? But, ſaid I, engage his Servants, and that will ſtick upon him. There is one thing I have omitted, which was in the firſt Diſcourſe with Captain Walcot about the Inſurrection of November; he told me that my Lord Shaftsbury was preparing a Declaration to be publiſhed, in caſe of an Aſſaſſination or Inſurrection, and he ask'd me if I would undertake to do one too? For, ſays he, I would have ſeveral People draw it to pick one good one out of all. And he told me he had made ſome Collections towards it, and ſhew'd me a Paper which was a Collection of all the Paſſages in the Three Kings Reigns, King James, Charles I. and this King's, that he call'd Attempts to introduce Arbitrary Government and Popery; and concluded, taxing them with ſome perſonal Vices, and that the Government was diſſolved, and they were free to ſettle another Government: Theſe, I perceiv'd, were the Topicks my Lord Shaftsbury laid weight upon. I told him that this did require an exact Knowledge of the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and I would not undertake a thing to which I was not competent, and ſo he deſir'd me to burn the Paper, which I did: But for any other Declaration, my Lord Shaftsbury kept his Paper to himſelf, and I never did ſee it, tho' I deſir'd it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you remember in whoſe Name the Declaration was to run?

Mr. Weſt. No, I do not remember that.

Mr. At. Gen. After the Diſappointment, what Meetings had you?

Mr. Weſt. Sir, I will tell you, when the News of the Fire came, they adjourned to my Chamber, and there conſidered what they ſhould do; they were in no readineſs, nor had any Horſes; nay, I believe the thing could not have been effected if the Fire had not happened, and I was very glad it could not; but for that, I am in the Charity of the Court. They did endeavour to put things in a poſture, to ſee if it could be done another Day; I think they met on Thurſday Night, and Friday Night; but they ſaid, the King would be at home the next Day, and the thing was laid aſide. My Lord, a Day, I think, or two after, I went into the City, and went to the Dolphin Tavern, where I met with Colonel Rumſey, and this Mr. Keeling came in; he was there talking of Blunderbuſſes and Piſtols in downright Engliſh: I told him, it was a fooliſh thing to talk ſo before Drawers, and that was the occaſion of calling them by the Names of Swan quills, Gooſe-quills, and Crow-quills. After this thing we met the next Week, not at my Chamber, Colonel Rumſey was miſtaken in that, but at the George and Vulture: There was Capt. Walcot, Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Ferguſon, one Norton, and one Ayliff: They diſcours'd of the late Diſappointment; and that one reaſon was, they had not Arms in readineſs. Then they agreed, That Arms ſhould be bought, and the Number was ten Blunderbuſſes, that ſhould be twenty or two and twenty Inches in the Barrel. Thirty Carbines, eighteen Inches. And thirty Caſes of Piſtols to be fourteen Inches. My Lord, It was put upon me to provide them, for this reaſon, becauſe I was ſerviceable to them no other way, and could have a pretence for buying them them becauſe I had a Plantation in America; but Mr. Ferguſon was to pay the Money. My Lord, I did beſpeak the Arms, and paid for them with my own Money, and was not paid again a great while; Mr. Ferguſon diſappointed me; but at laſt told me, if I would ſend to Major Wildman, he would pay me. But he told me before that, one Mr. Charlton when he came to Town would pay me, but I had none of him. So I told him, I bought thoſe Arms upon a pretence I intended to uſe them, and had ſpoke to a Sea-Captain to carry them off to a Plantation where I had a Concern my ſelf. After that, Mr. Ferguſon ſent to me to take my Money, ſo I came to him; and found with him Mr. Charlton and another Gentleman, whom I could not diſtinguiſh becauſe it was duskiſh; Mr. Charlton went down, and then ſays Mr. Ferguſon, I have your Money for you; and he paid me in fourſcore and thirteen Guineas, which was ſomething more than the Arms coſt; and ſaid, He had not the Money above half an hour in his hands; by which I did gueſs, it was Mr. Charlton's Money. Another thing was, at laſt meeting with Mr. Ferguſon, he did ſay, There was a Man employ'd to ſee what conveniency there would be for an Aſſaſſination between Windſor and Hampton-Court; but that was never reported, and ſo laid aſide. That is all I can ſay concerning the Aſſaſſination; but I believe they did intend to carry it on; for Col. Rumſey did tell me, He ſaw the Hearts of all the Great Men were upon it; and it would be convenient to have an Army to back it. But in caſe this Aſſaſſination had gone on, theſe things were to be done. It was deſign'd, the Lord Mayor and the Sheriffs ſhould be kill'd, and as many of the Lieutenancy as they could get; and the Principal Miniſters of State, my Lord Hallifax, and my Lord Rocheſter that now is, and my Lord Keeper, for which they gave this Reaſon, becauſe he had the Great Seal; and my Lord Rocheſter, as like to ſtand by the Duke's Intereſt; and my Lord Hallifax, as being one that had profeſs'd himſelf of the Party before, and turn'd from the Right Side, and had put the Court upon that which otherwiſe they would never have acted, nor had the Courage to have done. As for my Lord Keeper, They ſaid, they would hang him for the Murder of Colledge, and upon the ſame Poſt Colledge had hung. Sir John Moore was to be kill'd, and to be hung up in Guild-Hall, as a Betrayer of the Rights and Liberties of the City: And your Lordſhips to be flea'd, and ſtuff'd, and hung up in Weſtminſter-Hall, and a great many of the Penſional Parliament hang'd up, as Betrayers of the Rights of the People.

L. C. J. How was this to be done? To flea them, and ſtuff them?

Mr. Weſt. Yes, I underſtood it ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. At theſe Diſcourſes was this Gentleman preſent?

Mr. Weſt. He was not at my Chamber ſo often as the reſt; he came not there till towards the latter end; but he was there ſometimes when theſe things was diſcours'd of.

L. C. J. But you ſay, he did at laſt undertake to fight the Guards?

Mr. Weſt. Yes, Upon the News of the Fire, ſays he, I believe God ſhews his Diſapprobation of the thing. Says Mr. Ferguſon, I believe he reſerves them for worſe Puniſhment. Mr. Walcot ſaid, He deſired to have his Name conceal'd. Why, ſays Ferguſon, why ſhould you be aſhamed, it is a glorious Action, and ſuch an Action as I hope to ſee publickly gratified by the Parliament; and queſtion not, but you will be fam'd for it, and Statues erected for you, with the Title of Liberatores Patriæ.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What is this Ferguſon?

Mr. Weſt. He is an Independent Parſon.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He preached excellent Goſpel.

Mr. Weſt. Says he, I have told ſome Non-Conformiſts, and they deſired me to forbear; but, ſays he, they are ſilly People, that do not know how to diſtinguiſh between killing a Prince for Difference in Opinion about Religion, and deſtroying a Tyrant, for Preſervation of the Rights and Liberties of the People. He ſaid, it was an Action that would make all the Princes in the World tremble, and teach them to uſe their Subjects kindly. My Lord, they did deſign, at the ſame time when the Mayor and Sheriffs were to be kill'd, that Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, ſhould be forced to take the Office of Sheriffs upon them; and if they would not take it, they would uſe them as they did the other; And that Sir Thomas Gold, or Sir John Shorter, or Alderman Corniſh, ſhould be ſet up for Lord Mayor; but rather Alderman Corniſh, as the fitter Perſon. I asked them further, what they would do with the King's Natural Sons? Says he, They are good luſty Lads, I think we had as good keep them for Porters and Watermen; and for my Lady Ann, they had as good marry her to ſome Country Gentleman for a Breed to keep out Foreign Pretences.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I perceive they left nothing unconſidered.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Weſt, To repeat all their Paſſages would fill a Volume; but as to the Continuation of the Riſing, and whether it was continued?

Mr. Weſt. I have a great many Particulars, but have them not in method.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Anſwer Queſtions then.

Mr. Weſt. When Mr. Rumbold came to Town, he ſaid, he ſaw the King come by but with ſix Guards, and believed he could have done it with ſix Men, if he had been provided with Arms. This is all I can ſay, except ſome little Diſcourſe which I have not time to reduce into method. About Chriſtmas, Colonel Rumſey told me, there was a Deſign carrying on among the Lords, and great Men, by whom I always underſtood, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, my Lord Grey, Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, Major Wildman, Mr. Hambden, for an Inſurrection; and that this was deſigned to be done about March. Colonel Rumſey and I were diſcourſing of it; and Colonel Rumſey thought it fit to draw up ſome things, that we ſhould require of them to do for the People; and a Paper was drawn up, but my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, they were rejected, and all ſhould be left to the Parliament. And Colonel Rumſey ſaid, The Duke was inclin'd to gratify the Parliament, but the Lords about him were for Great Places, and they would ſuffer him to do nothing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Now tell us about Culing.

Mr. Weſt. I dined at a Tavern with Colonel Rumſey, Mr. Wade, Mr. Nelthrop, Mr. Goodenough, Capt. Walcot, and Mr. Norton.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What was your Diſcourſe there about?

Mr. Weſt. There was no Diſcourſe that had any particular Point.

Mr. Sollicitor. Was there nothing of Diviſion of the City?

Mr. Weſt. Sir, Goodenough gave ſome general Account, but nothing was done upon it; while we were there in came Mr. Keeling to ſpeak with Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Nelthrop; and in the Gazette that day was an Account of the Inſurrection at Collen, and Mr. Nelthrop when he came in, called this Man, Culing. What is that, what do you mean? ſays he. I was then writing a Letter, and told him, Culing in Dutch, was the ſame as Keeling in Engliſh. Mr. Nelthrop took me aſide, ſays he, What will you ſay, if I, and ſome Friends of mine, deliver the City, and ſave the Charter, and no body ſhall know of it till it be done? But ſays he, ſhall not I be Hang'd for it? Said I, Take heed what you do, no body will be Hang'd for any good thing, as to the Delivering of the City. There was a Treaty between the Scots, and our Perſons of Quality here, and Col. Sidney and Major Wildman, had the management of it, as I underſtood. At laſt, they came down to ſome Terms: They would have had 10000 l. to buy Arms, and came down at laſt to 5000 l. and the Earl of Argyle was to Head them: But when Mr. Ferguſon paid me for the Arms, he told me, The Scots buſineſs was quite off, and Wildman and Sidney had done ill with the Scots; for after they had kept them, and treated with them two or three months, they broke off becauſe the Scots would not declare for a Common-wealth the firſt hour, and Extirpating of Monarchy, and the Family of the Stuarts; and that the Scots Anſwer was, That would be to deſtroy all their Intereſt among the Lords. and Providence might order it ſo, as to bring it to a Common-wealth; but that was a buſineſs of time. When this broke off, Mr. Ferguſon told me, That the Duke of Monmouth was willing to ſpeak with me, and Goodenough, and ſome others. I told him, I never had, nor was willing to ſpeak with him. Then he ſaid, Sir Thomas Armſtrong would; I told him, I was not willing to ſpeak with him neither: Mr. Goodenough I believe did ſpeak with Sir Thomas Armſtrong. We met at Richard's Coffee-houſe, and adjourn'd to the young Devil-Tavern, there was Capt. Walcot, Col. Rumſey, Mr. Wade, Mr. Goodenough and my ſelf, and one Holloway a Merchant at Briſtol. Mr. Holloway did propoſe, ſince the Scotch buſineſs was broke off, that they ſhould try what Forces they could raiſe here. And Mr. Ferguſon did ſay, if three thouſand men could be had, he believed the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Ruſſel would appear in the head of them. They were to divide the City into 20 parts, each 20*th* part into 14*ths* and 15*ths*, and to divide it into Streets and Lanes; one Principal man was to have a 20*th* part, and to have men under him, and that they ſhould not interfere with one another, they bought a great Map of the City of London. My Lord, I did not read one line in it, but Mr. Goodenough being a man of publick acquaintance by reaſon of his Office, did undertake it. I think he did propoſe Mr. Bourn for one, and one Mr. Grains for another, and ſaid, he would ſpeak with Mr. Keeling. We had ſeveral meetings after this, and Mr. Goodenough did report that there were 1300 men out of two of the Hamlets. My Lord, I ſtood here while Mr. Bourn gave his Evidence; but I ſuppoſe he hath a little forgot himſelf, for he told me he had ſpoken to one Parſon Lobb, and he ſaid to him he would try what his Congregation could do; that he had two in New-priſon, and he would ſet them out to ſee what they could do; that they were poor men, but zealous in their way. I think Mr. Bourn hath forgot himſelf, for he did mention that he had ſpoken to Parſon Lobb.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Then Parſon Lobb was in; there was another Parſon in.

Mr. Weſt. Yes, and he mentioned Lobb's Pound.

Mr. At. Gen. The Priſoner was at thoſe ſeveral meetings, was he not?

Mr. Weſt. Yes, and did ſhew himſelf ready to act his part. About a fortnight before the Diſcovery brake out, Mr. Rumbold told me they had a great jealouſie Mr. Keeling would diſcover all the buſineſs; that Mr. Keeling's Wife and Mother cryed mightily, and charged him for neglecting his buſineſs, and ſaid they were afraid he would do a great deal of miſchief to honeſt people, for he had replied to them, he would not want money, and he would be hanged for no body; upon which Rumbold told me, if I were ſure of this, ſays he, I would diſpatch him, I would get him into the Countrey and kill him; but ſays he, I will not kill an innocent man; if I thought the thing was not ſo, I would not kill him for all the World. Mr. Keeling told him he had an Overture from one Shoot, of fourſcore Pounds a year.

Mr. At. Gen. After you had notice of the Diſcovery, did you meet?

Mr Weſt. The Saturday before the Diſcovery, I dined with Mr. Rumbold, and he took Mr. Keeling along with him; ſays he, We won't diſcourage him too much, it may be 'tis not ſo; Mr. Keeling told him he never wanted money ſo much in his life; Mr. Rumbold and one Gale that was to be one of the Aſſaſſinates, contriv'd to help Keeling to money, and lent him 100 l. Upon the Sunday, I had notice the thing was diſcovered, and that Keeling had accuſed me, and Mr Goodenough, and Mr. Nelthrop. On the Monday morning early I thought fit to retire; but we did agree to meet at Captain Walcot's lodging. My Lord, I came thither pretty early, and all the people came afterwards that had agreed to come thither, but they deſign'd to go beyond Sea. I had no mind to go; they had hired a Boat, and gave 5 l. in earneſt, but the next morning it was ſaid the Meſſengers were abroad, and that it was believed the River was beſet, and there was no getting away; then every man ſhifted for himſelf, and I ſhifted by the means of Mr. Bourn, who, I thank him, helped me to a conveniency for two or three days. When we were all retired, they got Mr. Keeling in the City, and Rumbold diſcourſed him in the preſence of ſeveral people, where he wiſhed a great many imprecations upon himſelf if he had diſcovered. I told them I did not underſtand him; for if he had made a Diſcovery, it was a fine way to catch People in. Then there was a diſcourſe of killing him; they propoſed to him to go out of Town; he refuſed them, but ſaid, he would go in a few days: That night they followed him, and upon tracing of him, they found he had called out his Brother, and that he and his Brother were gone to the Secretary's, and then it was taken for granted, that Diſcovery was made, and every man muſt ſhift for himſelf. Had not Keeling deceived them at that meeting at the Tavern, by the Proteſtations he made, ſome body had killed him there. Then Mr. Wade ſaid, if the Duke of Monmouth would go into the Weſt, we might try a puſh for it, and the Priſoner at the Bar ſaid, I am ſatisfied God will deliver the Nation, though he does not approve of the preſent Inſtruments.

L. C. J. Have you done as to this Gentleman at the Bar?

Capt. Walcot. When was it that I ſhould ſay theſe words? Then I deſire your Lordſhip would ask him, how many months ago it was he ſays I gave him the Paper?

Mr. Weſt. It was in October.

Capt. Walcot. Then whether I did not then lye ill of the Gout?

Mr. Weſt. Not at that time, my Lord. This that I ſay of the Paper was given me at my Chamber, and then I think he was pretty well.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I am not ſo natural a Fool to think, for me to charge the Guards, when another man kills the King, but I am as Guilty as he that kills him.

L. C. J. No doubt of it.

Mr. Weſt. Capt. Walcot, I would not take away your life to ſave my own; but I do take it upon me, that you did agree to Command, or be one of thoſe that were to fight the Guards.

L. C. J. What was the Reaſon he would not kill the King?

Mr. Weſt. He ſays it was a baſe thing that way, being a naked perſon, and he would not do it.

L. C. J. So the point is the ſame, but only you diſtinguiſhed in the point of your miſtaken honour, and thought to kill the King was not ſo honourable a point, as to fight his Guards.

Capt. Walcot. There is no difference between the one and the other, to do one and the other is the ſame thing.

L. C. J. Your Judgment is now rectified; but what ſay you to the Matter? For now you hear what is faſtened upon you, that is, ſeveral Conſults about the ſecuring or killing the King; and your advice was to kill him, and you did go down to Rumbold's houſe, to view the place where it might be done the moſt ſecurely; and you did undertake, as ſeveral Witneſſes ſay, not only Mr. Weſt, but Col. Rumſey and another of them (Bourn, I think it was) That you would fight the Guards, if you might have a conſiderable number of men.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, If ever I was at Mr. Rumbold's houſe, unleſs it was when I travelled from York by Norwich and came to London; if ever I was there ſince, then I am Guilty of all the Roguery imaginable.

Mr. Weſt. I never heard, my Lord, Mr. Rumbold ſay he was there, but Col. Rumſey told me ſo.

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, he bought an Horſe, and he ſaid, he did intend to go down; and indeed to the beſt of my remembrance, he did ſay he was down; but I am not certain: But he did buy an Horſe that coſt him, I think, twenty pounds.

L. C. J. For that purpoſe?

Col. Rumſey. Yes.

L. C. J. Now you hear, this is a little more particular than the other; Col. Rumſey did ſay before, that you did agree to go down, and as he believes, you did go down.

Col. Rumſey. I believe Mr. Weſt may remember he bought an Horſe for that purpoſe.

Mr. Weſt. I remember he bought an Horſe for ſervice; but I can't ſay it was to go down thither.

L. C. J. It does import you tell us upon what account you met ſo often, and what was your meaning in hearing theſe things, and conſulting of them, and what your raiſing of men was for, and the Declaration written for the People, to pleaſe the People when this Aſſaſſination was over.

Capt. Walcot. The Declaration, Mr. Weſt ſays, was in October laſt.

Mr. Weſt. I take it to be ſo, My Lord, to the beſt of my remembrance, there was this paſſage; ſays he, I believe in a month or three weeks you will be better or worſe, ſo that I meaſure it by that.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, Mr. Weſt does tell your Lordſhip a very long ſtory, and ſometimes he names one Gentleman, and ſometimes another. I am very fearful the Jury will be very apt to apply all to me, who was the man leaſt concerned; for I had the Gout for ſeveral weeks together, and Mr. Weſt came ſeveral times to my own Lodging to ſee me: And for that of Aſſaſſinating the King it never entered into my thoughts more or leſs; but here are four Gentlemen, who by their own Confeſſion are ſufficiently culpable; they, to wipe off their own ſtains, are reſolved to Swear me out of Life.

L. C. J. What made you among them?

Mr. Weſt. I do take it upon me, he was there three or four times.

Capt. Walcot. I did not ſtir for three weeks or a month. I came to Town on Aſh-wedneſday, and then fell ill of the Gout, and that continued for divers weeks; for a month's time that the King was at New-Market, I am confident, I was not out of my Chamber, unleſs I made a ſhift to ſcramble to Stepney, and dipp'd my foot in every Well of water I came by.

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, I do remember this paſſage, That he was afraid he ſhould not be able to draw on his Boot, becauſe he had the Gout.

Capt. Walcot. I deſire to know, my Lord, when is the time Mr. Weſt ſpeaks of, that I gave an account of killing the King at my Lord Mayor's Feaſt?

Mr. Weſt. I do not charge you poſitively with it; but I had it from you or Mr. Ferguſon, but I muſt do the Priſoner juſtice, he ſaid, he would be no way concerned in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Blaithwait.

[Which was done.

Mr. Blaithwait, pray tell my Lord and the Jury, whether Capt. Walcot owned that to be his hand.

A Letter being then produced from Captain Walcot to Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

Mr. Blaithwait. My Lord, I remember when Captain Walcot was Examined before the King, he did own this to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Give it in.

Cl. of Cr. Honoured Sir, July 5*th*. 83.——

L. C. J. Who is it directed to?

Cl. of Cr. There is no Direction.

Mr. Blaithwait. It was directed to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, as I find by the Minutes I then took of it.

L. C. J. Here is the Cover it ſeems.

Cl. of Cr. To the Right Honourable Sir Leoline Jenkins, &c.

Honoured Sir,

I Being in the Countrey, and to my great trouble ſeeing my ſelf in his Majeſties Proclamation, I came laſt Night to Town, reſolving to lay my ſelf at his Majeſties Feet, let him do with me what he pleaſeth; This is the firſt Crime I have been Guilty of, ſince His Majeſties Reſtauration, and too ſoon by much now: If His Majeſty thinks my Death will do him more good than my Life, God's Will, and His be done. Until I ſent your Honour this Letter, my Life was in my own power, but now it is in the King's; to whom I do moſt humbly propoſe, That if his Majeſty deſires it, I will diſcover to him all that I know relating to England, Scotland, or Ireland; which I ſuppoſe may be ſomething more than the Original Diſcoverer was able to acquaint his Majeſty with; eſpecially as to Ireland: There is not any thing his Majeſty ſhall think fit to ask me, but I will anſwer Him the Truth, as pertinently and as fully as I can. My Intimacy with a Scotch Miniſter, through whoſe Hands much of the Buſineſs went, I judge occaſioned my knowing very much: And I do further humbly propoſe, That if his Majeſty thinks it adviſable, I will follow thoſe Lords and Gentlemen that are fled into Holland, as if I fled thither, and had made my Eſcape alſo, and will acquaint the King, if I can find it out, what Meaſures they reſolve of taking next: I do aſſure his Majeſty, the Buſineſs is laid very broad, or I am miſinformed. And I am ſure as to that particular, if my being with his Majeſty, and your Honour, be not diſcovered, I ſhall be ten times abler to ſerve him, than either Mr. Freeman, or Mr. Carr; for they will truſt neither of them. There's ſcarce any thing done at Court, but is immediately talk'd all the Town over; therefore if his Majeſty thinks what I have preſumed to propoſe, adviſable, I do then further moſt humbly propoſe, That my waiting upon his Majeſty may be ſome time within Night, that your Honour will acquaint me the Time and Place where I may wait upon you, in order to it; that it may be within Night alſo, and that no body may be by, but his Majeſty, and your Honour; And if his Majeſty pleaſeth to pardon my Offences for the time paſt, he ſhall find I will approve my ſelf very Loyal for the future; if not, I reſolve to give his Majeſty no further trouble, but to lye at his Mercy, let him do with me what he pleaſeth. I purpoſe to ſpend much of this Day in Weſtminſter-Hall, at leaſt from two of the Clock to four. I beg your Pardon I ſend your Honour this by a Porter: I aſſure your Honour, it was for no other reaſon, but becauſe I would not have a Third Perſon privy to it; and that I might have the better Opportunity to make good my Word to his Majeſty, and to approve my ſelf

Your Honour's moſt humble Servant,

THO. WALCOT.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Capt. Richardſon.

[Which was done.

Capt. Richardſon. My Lord, On Sunday at Night, Mr. Walcot deſired to ſpeak with me, and he ſeemed very deſirable to wait upon his Majeſty, and unboſom himſelf to the King; Mr. Attorney ſaid, I ſhould give him Notice, to prepare for his Tryal, which I did, and told him, he ſhould want nothing to prepare himſelf for his Tryal. Yeſterday morning his Son came, and I ſent my Clerk to ſtand between them, and he had prepared this little Paper tyed cloſe with a Thread, which my Man told me he did intend to give his Son; and he deſired me, ſince I had diſcovered it, I would make no uſe of it. The Letter was to Capt. Tracy, that I was his Landlord, to ſpeak to Col. Rumſey, that he would be tender of him, and tell him he had ground enough to ſerve the King upon other men: And alſo to ſpeak to Mrs. Weſt, to deſire the ſame thing of her Husband. The laſt Words of the Note were, If you cannot be private, leave the Iſſue to God.

L. C. J. Mr. Walcot, Have you any thing to ſay for your ſelf, againſt this plain Evidence?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, They have taken a great deal of pains, and made long Speeches, though very little of them relating to me, tho' too much. Col. Rumſey tells your Lordſhip of a Deſign they had to Aſſaſſinate the King, and carrying on a War, or ſomething like it, when I was out of the Kingdom: That at Mr. Shepherd's Houſe they drew up a Declaration; and that upon Mr. Trenchard's ſaying, Things were not ready. This was before I came into England, and he ſays, this was agreed at Mr. Weſt's Chamber before I came out of Holland, that Rumbold undertook it. Then he ſays, that after I came over, I undertook to Charge the Guards while the King was Killing. My Lord, that was a very improbable thing, for I look upon it, there is no difference between killing the King, and ſecuring his Guards: Theſe Gentlemen, by what they have ſaid, do ſufficiently convince the Court, and all that hear them, that they are ſufficiently dipp'd themſelves. Here they combine to take away my Life, to ſave their own. Then they tell you, that Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rumbold brought Notes about men that were to Aſſaſſinate the King; but they do not tell your Lordſhip I was privy to any of theſe Notes; nor that I knew any of them. It's in it ſelf very improbable, that I would engage in ſo deſperate an undertaking, with men I never ſaw, nor heard of in my Life. Then he tells you, that Mr. Ferguſon had been at a place where I was, and there they inquired what Mr. Goodenough had done; and withal, they told you, they met at my Lodging; now that their meeting at my Lodging, was by Col. Rumſey's appointment, I knew nothing of it. Moſt of theſe meetings were by Col. Rumſey's appointment, or Mr. Weſt's: I accidentally came amongſt them ſometimes, but all my buſineſs was only to hear News; nothing was agitated concerning killing the King, or Levying of War, more or leſs, as I know of. I muſt confeſs, I did hear that there was a Deſign by a great many Lords and Gentlemen, and others, for aſſerting of their Liberties and Properties; but I was never in any Conſultation with them, or any Meſſage to them, nor I never ſaw one of theſe Lords, that I know of, that are ſaid to be concerned. Therefore I ſay, 'tis very improbable I ſhould be ſo far concerned, as they ſeem to repreſent it; they met at the Five-Bells, they allow themſelves I was not at that meeting. For Mr. Keeling, he does not at all Charge me. What I ſaid to Mr. Weſt, relating to the buſineſs he talks of in October laſt, that, my Lord, is out of doors in point of time; I pray God forgive him for what he has ſaid, I can't ſay more than I have.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray where do you live? Where is your Habitation?

Capt. Walcot. My Habitation is in Ireland, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, what do you here?

Capt. Walcot. I was invited by my Lord Shaftsbury to go Governor to Carolina.

L. C. J. That Deſign was a great while ago fruſtrated.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, it was ſome while before I came over, and ſo my Lord gave his Commiſſion to another. But being in England, my Lord Shaftsbury invited me to go to Holland with him, which I did; and when he died, I came to London; I had not been here a Fortnight, but I fell ill of the Gout, and that continued three Months: Another thing was, my Son was here, and I deſign'd to marry him, and make Proviſion for my younger Children; my Lord, I have a competent Eſtate, I hope it is no great Crime for a Man of an Eſtate to be here.

L. C. J. You confeſs, you heard ſome Diſcourſe of theſe things; what made you to frequent their Company, when you heard theſe things?

Capt. Walcot. It was my Folly to do it.

L. C. J. Ay, but you are to underſtand, that Folly in theſe Caſes is Treaſon.

Capt. Walcot. I conceive, my Lord, 'tis only Miſpriſion of Treaſon. I did hear of a great deal that theſe Gentlemen have ſaid, and that there would be an Inſurrection; but I had no Hand, directly or indirectly in it; nor did it enter into my Thoughts, either directly or indirectly, the Death of the King. When ſome Gentlemen have talked to me of it, I abominated it, and told them, it was a ſcandalous thing, a Reproach to the Proteſtant Religion: For my part, I had Children would bear the Reproach of it, and I would have no Hand in it.

L. C. J. Look you, Captain Walcot, That you did deny to do the Fact, to Aſſaſſinate the King, that is very true, they ſay ſo, that you did always deny it, for you ſtood upon this point of Gallantry, a naked Man you would not Aſſaſſinate. And then you talk of Miſpriſion of Treaſon: For a Man to hear of Treaſon accidentally, or occaſionally, and conceal it, is but Miſpriſion; but if a Man will be at a Conſult where Treaſon is hatched, and will then conceal it, he is guilty of Treaſon therein; therefore do not miſtake your Caſe. So that your Point of Law fails you, and every thing fails you in this Caſe. It appears plainly by them, That you were not only privy to the Conſult as an Auditor, but as an Actor; you choſe your Poſt, and upon this point of Gallantry you would venture your ſelf, not upon a naked Man, but upon Perſons that would oppoſe you.

Capt. Walcot. Certainly no Man that knows me, would take me for ſuch a very Fool, that I would kill the King's Guards; as if I were not ſenſible, that was equal Treaſon with the other.

Mr. At. Gen. Ill Men are always Fools.

Capt. Walcot. 'Tis clear they have laid their Heads together, they have contrived to take away my Life to ſave their own; 'tis plain enough.

L. C. J. There is nothing more reaſonable, nothing more juſt in the World, than to make uſe of ſome Traitors to diſcover and convict the others, elſe would Treaſon be hatched ſecurely. There's no body capable (where Treaſon does not take effect) of making an Evidence in ſuch a Caſe, but ſome of you that are Conſpirators. You do not publiſh it at the Market-Croſs. And if you could gain but this Point, That none that are concern'd with you in the Conſpiracy ſhould be Witneſſes, it would be the ſecureſt thing in the World to hatch Treaſon. For you would be upon this Point, Either it ſhall take effect, and then 'tis too late; or if it do not, and the Conſpirators are not to be believed, then I am ſecure, no body in the World can convict me.

Juror. We deſire he may be asked what he ſays to the Letter.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to it? You have made Propoſals you will diſcover others, and you will give intimation to the King of the Meaſures the reſt of the Conſpirators were taking in Ireland and other places; upon what Deſign did you write that? And what induced you to it?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, I have told your Lordſhip, that I have heard a great many Diſcourſes relating to that thing, and heard it moſtly by Mr. Ferguſon, with whom I had a very great Intimacy, and I did according to my Promiſe give that account of it; but if His Majeſty would not believe me, I can't help it; but the King was not pleaſed with me, becauſe I could not deſcend to Particulars. And I could not, becauſe I never had been in their Company, nor knew nothing but what I had once by a private Hand; I dealt ingenuouſly and truly with the King, and told him what I knew.

L. C. J. Pray obſerve the Contents of your Letter. You made this Propoſal, That you being in the Proclamation, you were one of the fitteſt Men to underſtand and ſpell out the Meaſures of the other Perſons. By this it is plain, you took your ſelf to have an Intimacy, and ſome Intrigue with the other Perſons that you thought were Impeached. Your Letter does import that you had ſuch an Intereſt with thoſe Perſons, that they would have communicated their Counſels to you.

Capt Walcot. My Lord, I never ſpake but with Mr. Ferguſon, who was a Man they did much confide in; and I knew very well that by my Intereſt in Mr. Ferguſon, I ſhould have an Intereſt in the reſt. But truly, whether the Duke of Monmouth be there, or not, I know not. I do not know him if I meet him, I was never at any Conſult, never at any of theſe Debates.

L. C. J. What did you mean by this? That this was your firſt Crime? You knew what you was charged with, it was for High-Treaſon.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, 'Tis my firſt Crime. My Lord, I have heard there was an Inſurrection intended, I have heard of the Perſons that were to carry it on; I did look upon this as a Miſpriſion of Treaſon; but that I ever acted in it, or intended it, I utterly deny.

L. C. J. The laſt Queſtion is, Whether you have any Witneſſes?

Capt. Walcot. I have only a young Man or two, if he be here, to prove the time that I was ill of the Gout, and therefore it is improbable I ſhould be ſo far concerned.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. I muſt tell you before-hand, that an Argument from the Topick of Probability, will do you but little Service when there is poſitive Evidence againſt you. This it will import you to make a little Anſwer to, if you can, What you meant by your application to Colonel Rumſey, deſiring Captain Tracy to ſpeak to him and Mr. Weſt: What do you mean by that?

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, Would not any Man in my Circumſtances deſire a Man to deal tenderly with him?

L. C. J. Well, is this young Man come in? Come, Sir, what have you to ſay on the behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar? Or will you ask him any Queſtions?

Capt. Walcot. Only about what time I fell ill of the Gout, and how long I continued ſo?

L. C. J. Do you know about what time he fell ill of the Gout, and how long it continued?

Wit. My Lord, I can't remember certainly the time, but I believe it was about three Months; I can't tell certainly when it began.

Capt. Walcot. My Lord, It is very improbable, that when I was not able to put a Shoe on, nor wear a Boot, I ſhould engage in ſo hazardous and deſperate an Undertaking.

L. C. J. Have you done, Sir?

Capt. Walcot. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip ——

Capt. Walcot. The Jury will take notice, here are four Men to ſave their own Lives ſwear me out of mine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, The Evidence you have heard has been very long, and I obſerve that Captain Walcot has complained of it; it has been delivered moſtly in general terms, and is afraid you ſhould not apprehend it aright, to ſee thoſe parts wherein he is concerned, but miſtake what is ſaid in general to be ſpoken againſt him; I will therefore do him the juſtice as to recapitulate that part of the Evidence that does immediately concern himſelf. It has been very full, and given by every one of the four Witneſſes that have been produced againſt him, beſides the Letter under his own Hand, which is twice as many more.

The firſt Witneſs I ſhall remind you of, is Mr. Weſt, tho' not produced firſt, yet becauſe his Evidence goes further backward; his Acquaintance began with him in laſt Summer-Vacation, he became ſoon intimate with him, and Captain Walcot did unboſom himſelf, and tell him that there was a Deſign to make an Inſurrection; that it was my Lord Shaftsbury's Deſign that he was to be an Officer, I think he ſaid a Colonel of Horſe; he invited Mr. Weſt to partake with him in that Deſign, and did propoſe to him the Advantage of a Command in the Army; but he not being qualified, declin'd it. He tells you further, that he did acquaint him there was a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King; and 'tis eaſy enough to be believed; if there was one deſigned, the other was too. And you ſee all along the only Diſpute was, whether the Aſſaſſination ſhould be firſt, or follow; for to raiſe Arms againſt the King is directly to aſſaſſinate the King; for it cannot end any other way with Security to thoſe that raiſed it. He told Mr. Weſt he would not be concerned directly in the Aſſaſſination, but in the Inſurrection he would; he was perſwaded to come in; this was laſt October diſcourſed with Mr. Weſt, they were to riſe in November. Then Col. Rumſey comes in, and he tells you that there was a Deſign to riſe in November. The Lord Shaftsbury ſent him to Perſons concern'd in the Conſpiracy to know in what Readineſs it was; but they being diſappointed of Men, whom they expected to riſe in the Country they did defer it at that time; at which my Lord Shaftsbury being concerned, went into Holland, and I think the Priſoner himſelf hath told you he went with him. The Deſign was not then laid aſide, but ſtill carried on, the moſt material Man, Mr. Ferguſon, being in Holland, there was ſome little ſtop put to it, that is, to the ſwift Progreſs of it; and therefore he was ſent for over to manage it, as being the only Man, in whom all Perſons had confidence. When he comes over, he brings Captain Walcot along with him, Mr. Ferguſon meets at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, this Mr. Weſt and Col. Rumſey give an account of, they both ſwear it. Several Meetings there were, in which Capt. Walcot was not, and poſſibly at thoſe times he might be ſick of the Gout, and that might occaſion his not being there. But afterwards both tell you that Capt. Walcot did meet at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, and there was debated particularly the Aſſaſſination of the King; and it was agreed to be at Rumbold's Houſe called the Rye, looking upon it as a very convenient place; as thoſe that know it ſay; there being a narrow Paſſage that it was eaſy to aſſault, and hard for Perſons to eſcape, and with 40 or 50 Men, thereabouts; it was a Deſign very likely to have ſucceeded. Capt. Walcot's ſhare in this, was not directly the Aſſaſſination of the King, that he would not be concerned in, being a Soldier, it was beneath him to do that; but his Part was to fight the Guards, he looked upon that as the more honourable Employment; Men that were armed to engage them. This is proved both by Mr. Weſt and Col. Rumſey.

In the next place, Gentlemen, when this did not ſucceed, but was prevented by the great Providence of God Almighty, as you have heard, they carry on the Deſign ſtill, and take it into their Councils, and reſolved to carry it on, either at Windſor, or in his Paſſage from Windſor to Hampton-Court; but no place was certainly fixed upon; and I think the latter Reſolution was, that it ſhould be done at the Bull-Feaſt, an Entertainment that was deſigned here in the Fields. Now, Gentlemen, while this was carrying on, it was neceſſary to carry on the other Part too, that is, the Inſurrection; and that Captain Walcot is all along concerned in. He is preſent at the Meetings in the Taverns, where they diſcourſed concerning Men to ſecure the King. This is Mr. Bourn's Evidence, That at the Dragon Tavern on Snow-hill, there they met to conſult to ſecure the King and the Duke. That he was preſent at the Meeting in London, this is ſworn by all, by Col. Rumſey, Mr. Weſt, and Mr. Bourn, where Goodenough was to give an account what Succeſs he had in the Liſt made of dividing the City in ſeveral Parts, and raiſing Men out of every Diviſion, and Capt. Walcot met for to know what Progreſs they had made in it. Gentlemen, every one of theſe are Overt-acts, to declare his Intention to kill the King, and are all High-Treaſon.

The

The Gentleman at the Bar cannot attempt to mitigate his Offence, by saying he would not directly assassinate the King, but would be the man to assist in raising Arms; this makes him equally Guilty. To conspire to raise Arms against the King, certainly that is as great a Declaration of his Imagination of his heart to kill the King, as any thing in the World. And this being proved upon him, there is no room for any Objections for him to make; some he hath made, not worth the mention; but because they are those he thinks to put his Life upon, I will take notice of them to you.

He says the Witnesses are not to be credited, because they have been concerned in the same Conspiracy.

Gentlemen, Because they have been concerned, therefore they are to be believed; for who should know this, but those that were so concerned? I think, Gentlemen, There is no good man, no honest man would desire a better Evidence, for better Evidence could not have been had, unless the thing had taken success, and I am sure that is far from the heart of any man that has the heart of a Christian, to wish. Does he pretend to intrap these Witnesses in any Contradictions? Does he pretend to say these Witnesses have consulted together to make up this story to accuse him for his Life? There is nothing pretended of it, but on the contrary he owns he met these men; but the end of his going there, was only to hear News. I thought that had not been the proper place to hear News in; certainly no man that comes there, would have been admitted meerly for Curiosity; certainly he must bring a mind to accompany them in all their Villany; but his own Confession you have for that. I think he hath hardly confidence to deny, but he was at several Consults for raising Arms at Mr. West's Chamber. You were when Goodenough gave an account, at the Green-Dragon Tavern. You were where Discourses were of raising Arms to secure the King, and nothing he has said, Gentlemen, to clear himself.

Gentlemen, Here is that above all Evidence; here is almost the Confession of the Prisoner, the Letter of his own Hand. That Letter (when he sees his Name in the Proclamation) acknowledges it is his first Crime, he says; What was that Crime? He was proclaim'd as a Traytor: He says in his Letter, that his Life was at the King's Mercy, that if his Death would do the King more Service than his Life, God's Will be done. That if his Majesty would admit him to come in, and use Mercy, he would tell all he knew concerning England, Scotland, and Ireland, which he thought would be more material than any thing that another Discoverer could tell. This shews he hath a deeper hand than any of these Men that have given this Evidence. You see they accuse themselves, they confess this, and 'tis a great Mercy they have so done, for all your Lives and Liberties in the Person of the King are preserved; and God be thanked, that you are here this day to sit in Judgment upon that would have deprived you of them.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury; Here is the Prisoner at the Bar indicted of High-Treason, and 'tis for conspiring the Death of the King, and for endeavouring to raise Arms within his Kingdom against him. You hear he denies himself to be Guilty; you have heard the Evidence, and this does plainly appear upon what you have heard, that there was a dangerous and desperate Plot upon the King, to have destroyed him, that is most certainly plain, the Prisoner himself confessed it, that there were several Consults and Meetings concerning it; and that this had a great Progress from time to time, for near half a year, is very plain; that he was at many Consults is very certain; that there was a Design to raise an Insurrection and War within this Nation, is as plain by them all; it was designed the last Winter to have done it. The Witnesses (who are certainly the Persons most capable of giving Evidence) tell you there were several times appointed, and still they were by one Providence or another disappointed. All of them tell you, there was a Design to kill the King and Duke at the Rye in Hertfordshire, as they came from New-Market: This is very plain too, that this Gentleman at the Bar knew of this; this he himself confesses, that he was at several of the Consults; and this he excuses it by, that that was Misprision of Treason, if he did not undertake to do any thing. As to that, Gentlemen, we do tell you, the Law is, that those that are at a Consult for the killing the King, or doing of a Traiterous Act, that is in them High-Treason, his being at the consulting of it. 'Tis true, it would excuse and mitigate the Fact, if they should come afterwards and discover it, it might intitle them to the King's Mercy; but to be at a Consult upon a treasonable Design, to meet for that purpose to hear the Plot laid, and a Design to take away the King's Life, or to raise Arms against him, and to say nothing of this, this is downright Treason, and 'tis not Misprision of Treason; his Law that he relies upon, fails him there. 'Tis very plain by his own Words, he heard of this Conspiracy, and he kept it secret, and says nothing of it; and this he says is his Crime that he mentioned to the King; so he would mitigate it by saying, 'tis but Misprision of Treason. But without doubt, the Meeting at several times upon this Design, if he had promised and undertaken nothing in it, his keeping of it private, as he has done, makes him guilty of High-Treason; so that out of his own Words 'tis plain that he is Guilty.

But then, consider what two Witnesses positively prove upon him: They prove, that he did there deny to be any of them that should assassinate the King, thus says Col. Rumsey, and thus says Mr. West; but he would be one of them that should fight the Guards, and he did undertake to fight the Guards, as both of them positively swear. This is done with Circumstances of Overt-acts too, as the providing of Horses, and a Tuck was to be prepared in order to it, and a Tuck he did prepare; whether he did go down, that is a little dark, but he did agree to go down.

Gentlemen, 'Tis plain by what Mr. West said of him, that he had a Design formerly in my Lord Shaftsbury's time to have raised War; he had undertaken to be a Colonel of Horse under my Lord Shaftsbury, and he offered Mr. West to be one of his Officers under him. This is a Design to raise War against the King, and declares it sufficiently. That which makes the Evidence further plainly and greatly clear, is a Letter whereby he does submit to the King's Mercy, Mercy, but propoſes that himſelf is abler to inſtruct the King in theſe matters, than any of thoſe that had made former Diſcoveries; and therefore if his Majeſty ſhould think fit, he would make him a full Diſcovery, not only of things in this Kingdom, but of the Tranſactions with other Kingdoms, that is, Scotland and Ireland, in which he takes himſelf to be more capable of diſcovering to the King than any body elſe, becauſe he was concerned with the Agents there; which ſhews this Plot hath gone a great way; this Deſign hath gone into other of the King's Dominions, and it is to be feared, 'tis larger than the King knows. 'Tis time to nip theſe Treaſons when they are gone ſo far; certainly a more barbarous Deſign was never thought of by Mankind. We have had certainly as many Ingagements to the King, as any Subjects ever had to any Prince whatſoever; he has done as many Acts of Grace, we have lived as peaceably, as any People under a Prince can ever expect to do; he hath ſhewed himſelf with as much Kindneſs, with as much Lenity, even to his very Enemies, as any Prince that ever we read of; the Preſervation of our Religion, and the Laws of the Kingdom, our Laws and Liberties, and all our Happineſs depend as much upon his Life, as they ever did upon the Life of any Prince, or ever can do; ſo that we ought all to be concerned, even to the laſt drop of our Blood, to preſerve him: But how this miſchievous Deſign ſhould enter into the Hearts of Men, to undertake to kill him in ſuch villanous and barbarous a manner as this, may juſtly make us aſtoniſhed.

Gentlemen, You hear your Evidence, you have a very ſtrong Evidence in this Caſe, and ſtronger, I think, than could be expected in the Caſe of Treaſon.

The Jury went out for about half a quarter of an Hour, and returned, and brought the Priſoner in, Guilty.

The TRYAL of William Hone.

On Thurſday, July 12. William Hone being ſet to the Bar, and after having held up his Hand, the following Indictment was read.

London. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths preſent, That William Hone late of London, Labourer, with other falſe Traitors, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart; nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King do bear, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move and ſtir up; and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the ſecond Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, King of England, &c. the Five and Thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, aforeſaid, Maliciouſly and Traiterouſly with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, he did Conſpire, Compaſs, Imagine and Intend our ſaid Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but alſo our ſaid Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King through the whole Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move, and ſtir up within this Kingdom of England; And to fulfil and perfect the ſaid moſt horrible Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, He the ſaid William Hone, and many other Traitors, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, he did aſſemble, meet together, and conſult with divers other Evil-diſpoſed and Diſcontented Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, to the Jurors as yet unknown, and had diſcourſe, and did treat of, and for the executing and fulfilling their Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; and that the ſaid William Hone, (together with many other Traitors) as a falſe Traitor, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, did take upon himſelf, and promiſe to be aiding and aſſiſting in the execution of the Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; and in providing of Arms and Men Armed to fulfil and perfect the ſaid Treaſons, traiterous Compaſſings, Ima-

Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid. And to fulfil and bring to paſs the ſaid moſt horrid Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, He the ſaid William Hone (with many other falſe Traitors) as a falſe Traitor, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, then and there, did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbuſſes, Carbines and Piſtols, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, &c. And againſt the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Cl. of Cr. How ſayeſt thou, William Hone, Art thou Guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

Hone. In ſome meaſure I am Guilty.

Capt. Richardſon. You muſt ſay, Guilty, or Not Guilty.

Sir Edmond Saunders. L. C. J. You muſt plead to this, and the way is to confeſs all, or deny all.

Hone. I know nothing of the Arms.

L. C. J. Are you Guilty of the Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and providing of Arms for that purpoſe?

Hone. I never provided Arms, I am Guilty of the Conſpiracy.

L. C. J. We can take notice of none of theſe odd kind of Words you talk of, but either plainly, Guilty, or not Guilty.

Hone. My Lord, I can truly ſay I am not Guilty, for I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. If you ſay ſo, you ſay as much as is required of you at preſent.

Hone. In that underſtanding of it, I am not Guilty.

L. C. J. Well, He ſays he is not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tryed?

Hone. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Friday, July the 13*th. in the Morning, the Court being ſet, and Proclamation made.*

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Set William Hone to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. You the Priſoner at the Bar, hold up your Hand.

Hone. I deſire I may retract my Plea, I would plead Guilty.

L. C. J. Do you confeſs the Indictment?

Hone. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is, That you did conſpire the Death of the King, and in order to that, that you did provide your ſelf with Arms to do this wicked Act.

Hone. I never did that, my Lord, I never provided any Arms.

L. C. J. What were you to have done?

Hone. That Depoſition I gave before Sir William Turner is true.

L. C. J. Tell us what you were to have done in this bloody Matter.

Hone. I was asked by one Mr. Richard Goodenough to go along with him, and I asked him whither, and he would not tell me, but I underſtood it was to kill the King and Duke of York, but he did not tell me the Place.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He does not confeſs fully, we deſire to try him.

L. C. J. Look you, you have pleaded not Guilty to this Indictment, the King is willing, that if you be not Guilty you ſhall not be condemned; and therefore he does deſire and command the Evidence againſt you ſhould be publickly given, that all Perſons may ſee, that you are not without Cauſe brought to Tryal, therefore ſwear the Jury.

The Priſoner challenged none, but the Jury that were ſworn were,

Nicholas Charlton,		William Rutland,
Chriſtopher Pitts,		Thomas Short,
Robert Beddingfield,		Theophilus Man,
John Pelling,	Jur'	John Genew,
William Windbury,		John Short,
Thomas Seaton,		Thomas Nicholas.

Then Proclamation for Information, and for thoſe that were bound by Recognizance to appear, was made.

Cl. of Cr. William Hone, Hold up thy Hand (which he did.) You Gentlemen of the Jury that are ſworn, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe, he ſtands indicted by the name of William Hone, &c. prout antea, in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis; upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and hath thereunto pleaded, not Guilty, and for his Tryal, &c.

Mr. Jones. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner ſtands indicted for the moſt horrid Treaſon that ever was endeavoured to be committed in this Kingdom, for Traiterouſly conſpiring to kill the King, and conſulting how and in what manner it ſhould be done, and for preparing Arms for the doing of it; we ſhall prove this to you, and then I hope you will find him Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Part the Priſoner at the Bar was to act in this Treaſon, was the killing of the King; he was one of the Perſons that were to be aſſiſting in aſſaſſinating the King's Perſon. We will not trouble you with the large Evidence of the Riſing, as we did Yeſterday; but we will prove theſe things upon him, that he undertook to do it, that he was concerned with the reſt of the Confederates: We ſhall ſhew you this is not a new thing, but he hath been an old Rebel; for this hath not been a new Project, but hath been acting ſeveral Years. Five Years ago, when the King attended my Lord Mayor's Show, he undertook to kill him off of Bow-Church: We ſhall call our Witneſſes, and prove it fully upon him. Mr. Keeling, and Mr. Weſt.

Mr. Joſias Keeling ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Keeling. The firſt time I ſaw him was at the Dolphin Tavern, when the Arms were agreed upon, he was there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there then?

Mr. Keeling. Mr. Weſt, Mr. Goodenough, and him I remember particularly, and ſome others, whom I do not at preſent remember, and ſince that he hath taken notice of me.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Rumbold there at that time?

Mr. Keeling. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray at that Meeting tell the Jury what Diſcourſe you had, for many of theſe Gen-

Gentlemen are not the ſame that were on the Jury yeſterday.

Mr. Keeling. It was diſcourſed then of the King's coming home from New-Market the Saturday after the Fire. Mr. Weſt told Mr. Rumbold, he heard the King would come home that Day, but, ſays he, I don't believe it; ſays Rumbold, I hear he will come home on ſays Mr. Weſt, I hear ſo too. They ſaid, they hoped they would not come home on Monday. Says Mr. Weſt to Mr. Rumbold then, How many Swan-quills, Gooſe-quills and Crow-quills, and how much Sand and Ink muſt we have? I think the Priſoner at the Bar muſt needs remember it as well as I. It was agreed by Mr. Rumbold, I think I am exact in the Number, and he was by and heard all the Diſcourſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they mean by this?

Mr. Keeling. By Swan-quills, they meant Blunderbuſſes; by Gooſe-quills, Muskets; and by Crow-quills, Piſtols; and by Sand and Ink, Powder and Bullet. He took Acquaintance with me after that Meeting; (for I never ſaw him, as I know of, before) and after ſome time he told me, he was one of them that was to go down to the Rye to aſſaſſinate the King. And ſince that, at a Coffee houſe in Swithin's Alley, he told me, It would never be well, till the Blackbird and the Goldfinch were knocked on the Head; they being Terms I did not underſtand, I asked him what he meant, he ſaid the King and Duke of York.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You are ſure that is the Man?

Mr. Keeling. I am ſure that is the Man; William Hone.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What, is that the Man, that talked of the Blackbird and Goldfinch?

Mr. Keeling. I am ſure that is the Man.

Mr. At. Gen. Now ſwear Mr. Weſt.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If Mr. Hone has a mind to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

Hone. My Lord, This I deny: As to the Blackbird, I own it; as to the Goldfinch, I never heard a word of it till this time.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You had only a Deſign upon the Blackbird then.

Mr. Weſt ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the Court what you know of the Meeting at the Dolphin Tavern.

Mr. Weſt. I was there, and Mr. Keeling came in. There were ſeveral things ſaid of Swan-quills, Gooſe-quills, and Crow-quills, but this Man did not come in till this Diſcourſe was over, and I am ſure I did not ſpeak of any thing of this nature before this Man in my Life. But Mr. Goodenough did undertake to provide the Men, and Mr. Goodenough ſaid, he would try him, if he would make an Attempt upon the Duke without the King. And I asked him, whether he had ſeen Mr. Goodenough? He told me he had; Says he, he ſpoke to me about a little Job for the Duke. Mr. Goodenough ſaid, he had ſpoke to him fully about the thing. And I ſaw him often in the Company of Mannius, that was deſigned to be another of the Aſſaſſinates. He was at my Chamber once; ſays he, Maſter, ſhall we do nothing? I think he uſed theſe Words, That if the Duke of Monmouth would be true, and appear, he could bring fifty or ſixty honeſt Men of t'other ſide the Water, to do the buſineſs: I asked him what buſineſs? Says he, either a brisk Puſh (that I took for an Inſurrection for the two Brothers: Says I, what Brothers do you mean? Says he, the Captain and Lieutenant; thoſe were the two Terms they uſed ſince the Van-herring was Printed. I think he was a pretty honeſt Fellow before this time; he was deluded by Goodenough, I think, in the thing.

L. C. J. (To Mr. Weſt.) Do you come to juſtify theſe things?

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, He hath been deluded baſely, and I am ſorry for the poor Fellow.

L. C. J. It is a very unuſual thing, for one in your Condition to uſe ſuch Expreſſions in ſuch a Caſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Mr. Weſt, You have been deluded.

Mr. At. Gen. Captain Richardſon, and Sir Nicholas Butler.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I find he is not worthy of the Mercy the King hath ſhewed him.

Mr. Weſt. It was a Word I put from me unawares.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, We will give you an account of a Deſign this Man had long ago to kill the King.

Sir Nicholas Butler ſworn.

Sir Nicholas Butler. My Lord, I know the Priſoner at the Bar very well. I have known him many Years, I have always known him guilty of Plotting and Contriving, and ready upon all occaſions to embrace any thing for theſe Purpoſes laid to his Charge. Particularly, when Sir Francis Chaplain was Lord Mayor, his Majeſty and the Duke ſtood at Mr. Waldoe's Houſe, by reaſon of the Angel Houſe being ſhaken. And he came to my Houſe; and told me, he would diſcourſe me upon ſome private Matter; I called him into a Cloſet, and he told me, they had a fair opportunity to take off the King and the Duke at once; I told him, that would do very well, but how will you do it? Says he, we will do it with Croſs bows, we are to be half a dozen, and we will go into the Steeple, where there is a Window juſt oppoſite to the Balcony, and a great deal of Diſcourſe we had to this purpoſe. My Intent was to divert them from this Deſign, and told him how impoſſible it was they ſhould eſcape the Foot-Guards, and Horſe-Guards, and multitude of People: And if he did not do the Buſineſs effectually, he would be undone, and all the Party. I reſted ſatisfied he would have deſiſted upon this. But I knew the Principles of theſe Fifth Monarchy-Men, and their Aſſociates, and thought it not ſafe to truſt to his bare Say-ſo, that he would deſiſt, but I went to the King and the Duke of York, into my Lord Chamberlain's Chamber, where they came to me, and I gave them this account, and deſired them to ſet ſome to watch the place; and to ſearch if any were got into the Steeple before they came; and there was one Horſal appointed, that did accordingly watch them, but none came: Upon which ſome Goodwillers to it, have reported that it was a Shambuſineſs, but I think that was not well done. But the thing was real, and when he was examined before the King in the Secretary's Office, he did confeſs all theſe things that I charged him with.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Nicholas Butler, Had you any Diſcourſe of killing the King at this time?

Sir Nicholas Butler. No; at laſt they did underſtand I kept a Correſpondence at Court, and then they would tell me no more.

Mr. At. Gen. Since he was taken, what did he ſay about this matter?

Sir Nicholas Butler. About this matter he did acquaint divers, he was one that was to kill the King and the Duke.

Captain Richardſon ſworn.

Capt. Richardſon. Sir Nicholas Butler asked him in my Preſence (I went along with Sir Nicholas when he examined him) as to this thing, how he was concerned? He ſaid Mr. Goodenough came to him, and told him he wanted Labourers; he asked him, for what? At laſt he did confeſs that Mr. Goodenough did tell him, it was to kill the King and the Duke of York; he did confeſs that he did agree to it, and that he would be one of them. He did likewiſe ſay, That after, at another Meeting, he was for killing the King, and ſaving the Duke; but Goodenough was for both.

Sir Nicholas Butler. He ſaid he was to have 20 l.

Capt. Richardſon. He ſaid, he did not deſire to ſtir, and Goodenough told him he ſhould have 20 l. to buy him Horſe and Armour: And told us the Buſineſs of the Rye, the Place he did not know, but ſaid, it was the Place where the King was to be murdered. This is the Subſtance of the Examination taken.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Tho' the Priſoner at the Bar did partly make a Confeſſion, yet for the Satisfaction of the World, my Lord gave us leave to call our Witneſſes.

Capt. Richardſon. That which Sir Nicholas ſays about the Croſs-bows, he did own, but———

L. C. J. What ſay you to this treaſonable Deſign of yours, in undertaking to kill the King, in hiring your ſelf out to be one of the Perſons that ſhould have executed this traiterous Deſign, this horrid Murder, to have killed the King at the Rye?

Hone. I ſay, I did not know the Place where, nor when, at the time it was propoſed about the Rye.

L. C. J. But what do you ſay as to the undertaking to kill the King? The other is but a Circumſtance, this is the material Point.

Hone. My Lord, I was drawn into it by Mr. Richard Goodenough.

L. C. J. You hear what Sir Nicholas Butler ſays of the Croſs-bows you deſigned to kill the King with, what ſay you to that?

Hone. I ſay, there was a Perſon told me of ſuch a thing; and I told Sir Nicholas immediately of it. The Perſon that told me was a Shopkeeper, and I don't know him.

Sir Nicholas Butler. You named three Perſons to the King, that were Confederates with you, but you came to me of your ſelf.

L. C. J. Look you, your ſelf was one of the wicked Undertakers in that traiterous Deſign.

Hone. No, I did never deſign it, but I was told it.

L. C. J. Ay, That your ſelf and ſome other good Fellows were engaged in the Deſign.

Hone. I was not engaged, only as I was told by a Fellow, that there was a Shop-keeper lived hard by that would do ſuch a thing, and I immediately told Sir Nicholas Butler.

L. C. J. Come, 'tis in vain for you to mince the matter, for here is a full Evidence againſt you: The beſt you can do for your Advantage now, is to conſider well with your ſelf, and repent of this wicked Deſign. What Religion do you profeſs?

Hone. Religion, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, Any or none?

Hone. My Lord, I hear ſeveral ſorts of Men, ſometimes Baptiſts, ſometimes Independants, and ſometimes the Presbyterians.

L. C. J. But regard none. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, you hear a plain Caſe of a barbarous Murder deſigned upon the King, one of the horrideſt Treaſons that hath been heard of in the World, to have ſhot the King and the Duke of York in their Coaches, as they were coming upon the Road. You have had full Evidence of this Man's being One of them; and therefore I am of opinion that you muſt find him Guilty.

So the Jury brought the Priſoner in, Guilty, without going out of Court.

THE

THE TRYAL OF The LORD RUSSEL.

July 13. 1683. My Lord Ruſſel was ſet to the Bar, within the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruſſel, hold up thy Hand (which he did) Then this Indictment was read, which is as followeth.

London. The Jurors of our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths preſent, That William Ruſſel late of London, Eſq; together with other falſe Traitors, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart; nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King do bear, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with his whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move and ſtir up; and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the ſecond Day of November, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, King of England, &c. the Four and Thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, aforeſaid, Maliciouſly and Traiterouſly with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, he did Conſpire, Compaſs, Imagine and Intend our ſaid Lord the King, his Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but alſo our ſaid Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move, procure, and ſtir up within this Kingdom of England; And to fulfil and perfect the ſaid moſt horrible Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, He the ſaid William Ruſſel, together with other falſe Traitors, as a falſe Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, between themſelves, and with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, they did meet together, conſult, agree, and conclude, and every of them, then and there, did conſult, agree and conclude, Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to move and ſtir up; and the Guards for the Preſervation of the Perſon of our ſaid Lord the King, to ſeize and deſtroy, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace, &c. And alſo againſt the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay'ſt thou, Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Lord Ruſſel. My Lord, May I not have a Copy of the Matter of Fact laid againſt me, that I may know what to anſwer to it?

Sir Edmond Saunders.

L. C. J. My Lord, We can grant you nothing till you have pleaded. Therefore that which is put to you now is, Whether you ſay you are Guilty, or not Guilty?

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I am not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tryed?

L. Ruſſel. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I thought a Priſoner had never been arraigned and tryed at the ſame time, I have been a cloſe Priſoner.

L. C. J. For Crimes of this nature, my Lord, we do it continually.

L. Ruſſel. It is hard, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord hath no reaſon to complain for want of notice, for ſince Monday ſeven-night he had notice of his Tryal, and the matters alledged againſt him he had notice of, for Queſtions were put to him about this matter, he hath been very fairly dealt with, he hath had the liberty of Counſel to adviſe him; there hath been no ſort of Liberty denied him, which becomes any Subject to have in this Condition.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. My Lord, I do not know whether you hear Mr. Attorney. He ſays, your Lordſhip hath had a great deal of Favour ſhewn you already, in that you have been acquainted with the Crimes for which you are now indicted, that you have had a great deal of warning given you, that you have had the Liberty of Counſel, which hath not been known granted to any under your Lordſhip's Circumſtances. He ſays, he doubts not but your Lordſhip is prepared for your Defence, becauſe you have had ſo much knowledge, and warning of the Time and Matter for which you were to be called in queſtion.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I am much to ſeek, I only heard ſome general Queſtions, and I have Witneſſes, that I believe are not yet in Town, nor will be, I believe till Night; I think it very hard I can't have one day more.

Mr. At. Gen. Monday ſeven-night your Lordſhip had notice.

L. Ruſſel. I did not know the matter I was charged with.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes certainly, for I was with you my ſelf, my Lord; and thoſe Queſtions you were examined upon, were a Favour to you, that you might know what the matter was you were accuſed of.

L. C. J. My Lord, without the King's Conſent we can't put off the Tryal; if the King's Counſel think not fit to put it off, we can't grant your Lordſhip's Requeſt in this Caſe.

L. Ruſſel. I would deſire a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury, that I might conſider of it; for how elſe can I make any juſt Challenge? I thought the Law had been very favourable to Men upon their Lives; and therefore it had allowed People to have ſome little notice.

L. C. J. Hath not your Lordſhip had a Copy of the Pannel? I think your Lordſhip was allowed one. We gave order your Lordſhip ſhould have a Copy of the Pannel.

Mr. At. Gen. We did indulge him ſo far, that he might have a Note of all the Men returned.

L. Ruſſel. I never had a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. It was the fault of your Lordſhip's Servants then; for I gave order for it my ſelf. 'Tis ſuch a Favour, that in regard a Man's Life lies at ſtake, we never did deny it, to my Knowledge. And therefore in this Caſe I gave order to the Secondary to deliver a Copy. I know the King did not deſign to be hard upon my Lord in his Tryal, but that he ſhould have as fair a Tryal as ever any Noble Perſon had.

L. Ruſſel. I Pray I may have a Copy then.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If my Lord had ſent his Agents, and it had been refuſed, there had been ſomething in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Secondary Normanſel was with me, and I gave him my Allowance, though it was not his Right.

L. C. J. That my Lord may not be ſurpriſed, what think you of giving my Lord time till the Afternoon, and try ſome of the reſt in the mean time?

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, if I could imagine it were poſſible for my Lord to have any Witneſſes, I ſhould not be againſt it.

L. Ruſſel. 'Tis very hard.

Mr. At. Gen. Do not ſay ſo, the King does not deal hardly with you, but I am afraid it will appear you would have dealt more hardly with the King: You would not have given the King an hour's notice for ſaving his Life.

Secondary Trotman. I gave my Brother Normanſel a Copy of the Pannel on my ſide, and hear that my Brother Normanſel hath ſaid that he delivered a Copy. Then Secondary Normanſel was ſent for, and the Court ſtaid for him ſome time.

Mr. Atwood. My Lord, a Gentleman told me, he did not know whether it was fit till he had conſulted the Attorney General; afterwards I had a Copy as it ſtood then, not as it is now.

Mr. At. Gen. I deſire my Lord may be asked who he ſent for it?

L. Ruſſel. I did not ſend for it; I inquired, and they ſaid it would be refuſed.

Mr. Atwood. No, the Gentleman had it with the fair Perriwig.

L. C. J. It was delivered to your Servant, or Agent, what did you do with it?

L. Ruſſel's Gent. Sir, The Gentleman gave me out of a Book ſome Names.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What did you do with them?

L. Ruſſel's Gent. I writ them down, they were not perfect, I did not know what they were.

L. C. J. Sir, You were to blame, not to deliver it to my Lord.

L. Ruſſel's Gent. I was not bound to deliver an imperfect thing to my Lord.

L. C J. Sir, You ſhould have conſulted your Lord's advantage, ſo as to have delivered any thing for his good.

L. Ruſſel's Gent. My Lord was in the Tower, I was not admitted to my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you give it to my Lady?

L. Ruſſel's Gent. Yes, thoſe Names I had, my Lady had.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How long ago was it?

Mr. Atwood. Tueſday or Wedneſday laſt.

L. C. J. (To Lord Ruſſel's Servant.) Look you, Sir, when had you this?

L. Ruſſel. I had no Pannel, I will aſſure you, delivered me; I had ſome Names of People that they ſaid were uſually on Juries.

L. C. J. They were the Names of the Jury.

L. Ruſſel. They were only the Names of them that were like to be of the Jury, no other Pannel came to me.

L. C. J. My Lord, There can be no other Copy given, but the ſame that was delivered; for your Lordſhip does know in this caſe, any Perſon accuſed, as your Lordſhip is, may challenge 35; and therefore there is a Return generally of 3 ſcore, or 4 ſcore, and theſe are returned in caſe of your Lordſhip's Challenge. When you have challenged ſo many as you pleaſe, then the 12 Men that ſtand after your Challenge are to be of the Jury: And therefore this is not like a Pannel made up by the Sheriff, in ordinary Cauſes, between Man and Man; there they make a formal Pannel, from which they cannot depart, when that is once returned; but here in Criminal Caſes, becauſe of the Challenge, they return either 60 or 80: And I preſume your Lordſhip was attended with the Names delivered.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How many Names were delivered?

Mr. Atwood. Above 100.

L. Ruſſel. I had nothing of a Pannel delivered to me, but ſome Names.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. There was never any formal Pannel delivered to any Perſon Accuſed: The Copy of it is in Paper always.

L. Ruſſel. How can I know who to challenge?

L. C. J. My Lord, the Copy of it is in your hands; your Lordſhip hath been deceived in this, by not underſtanding the true nature of theſe things: If we were to give you a new one, we could give you but ſuch an one.

L. Ruſſel. I had no Paper from the true Officer.

L. C. J. No, but from your Servant.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you will have cauſe to complain, if they are not the ſame men we now ſhall call.

L. C. J. My Lord, that Paper will guide your Lordſhip in your Challenges.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I did not mind it, I put it away. My Lord, with your Favour, I muſt needs inſiſt upon having a Pannel, and that you will put it off till the Afternoon; I have a Witneſs that is not in Town. My Counſel told me it was never done, or very ſeldom, Arraigning and Trying at the ſame time, except in caſe of Common Malefactors.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Why may not this Tryal be reſpited till the Afternoon?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray call the Jury.

L. C. J. My Lord, the King's Counſel think it not reaſonable to put off the Tryal longer, and we can't put it off without their conſent in this Caſe.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, 'Tis hard, I thought the Law had allowed a pretty deal of favour to a Man when he came upon his Life. How can I know to except againſt Men, that I never heard or ſaw one of them?

Cl. of Cr. You the Priſoner at the Bar; thoſe good Men that have been now called, and here appear, are to paſs between you and our Sovereign Lord the King, upon your Life or Death, if you challenge any of them, you muſt ſpeak as they come to the Book to be Sworn, before they are Sworn.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, May not I have the uſe of Pen, Ink, and Paper?

Court. Yes, my Lord,

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, May I not make uſe of any Papers I have?

L. C. J. Yes, by all means.

L. Ruſſel. May I have ſome body write to help my memory?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, a Servant.

L. C. J. Any of your Servants ſhall aſſiſt you in writing any thing you pleaſe for you.

L. Ruſſel. My Wife is here, my Lord, to do it.

L. C. J. If my Lady pleaſe to give her ſelf the trouble.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, you may have two perſons to write for you if you pleaſe.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, here hath been a name read, that I never ſaw in the Liſt of the Jury I had, I heard Sir Andrew Foſter called.

L. C. J. He is not called to be of the Jury.

Cl. of Cr. Call John Martin. [He appears.

L. Ruſſel. Are you a Freeholder of 40 s. a year? I hope none are allowed in the Pannel, but thoſe that have Freeholds.

L. C. J. There is no Pannel made in London by Freeholders, we have very few Freeholders capable of being impannel'd, becauſe the Eſtates of the City belong much to the Nobility and Gentlemen that live abroad, and to Corporations: Therefore in the City of London the Challenge of Freeholders is excepted.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I thought it had been always ſo, and the Law had been clear in that Caſe throughout England, that no Man ought to be Tryed for his life, but by thoſe that have Freeholds. My Lord, I remember I read the Statute of 2 H. 5. where 'tis poſitive that no Perſons ſhall be Judged in Caſe of Life and Death but by thoſe that have 40 s. a year.

L. C. J. My Lord, that Statute extends not to this Caſe. Read the Statute.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas Perjury is much uſed in the City of London upon Perſons, &c.

L. C. J. Is this the Statute your Lordſhip has read?

L. Ruſſel. This is not in the caſe of Life and Death.

L. C. J. It is not, my Lord.

L. Ruſſel. That that I read is poſitive. And if your Lordſhip will not allow of it, I deſire my Counſel may come and argue it, for 'tis a matter of Law, and I can't argue it, whether the Jury are not to be Freeholders.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There is nothing mentioned in that Statute with relation to the City of London indeed, but the neceſſity of the thing requires it.

Mr. At. Gen. It will not be material, 'tis a collateral point, for moſt of the Jury have Freeholds.

L. C. J. Do you allow the Exception?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Therefore we muſt, if my Lord ſtand upon it, hear his Counſel. My Lord, we will hear your Counſel; what Counſel do you deſire, my Lord?

L. Ruſſel. The Counſel that were allotted me.

L. C. J. No, you muſt have Counſel aſſign'd by us. The Counſel that was aſſign'd elſewhere ſignifies nothing.

L. Ruſſel. Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Holt, and Mr. Ward.

The ſaid Perſons were called, and came into Court.

L. C. J. (To the Counſel.) Gentlemen, my Lord here deſires Counſel, You are here aſſigned as Counſel for my Lord Ruſſel that is at the Bar, 'tis concerning a thing wherein he doubts the Law, he would except to the Jury upon this account, to the Poll, becauſe they have not Freehold within the City of London, and he deſires you may be aſſign'd his Counſel to make it out that this is a Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis a Caſe of Treaſon, Mr. Pollexfen.

Mr. Ward. We take it ſo.

Mr. Pollex. My Lord, Perhaps if we had more Conſideration of it we ſhould ſpeak more, but if your Lordſhip pleaſes to hear us what we can ſay; firſt we take it with ſubmiſſion, at Common Law, a Free-hold was neceſſary to make a Man a Juryman. But that which falls out in this caſe, is the Statute of 2 H. 5. c. 3. which Statute I ſuppoſe is here in Court. That Statute ſays this (if you pleaſe I will quote the ſubſtance of it) That none ſhall be admitted to paſs upon any Inqueſt upon the Tryal of the Death of a Man, except he have Lands and Tenements of the yearly value of 40 s. Now we are here I think within the words of the Statute, and I take it to be no Queſtion at all, were we not in a City and Coun-

County. I think this would be no Queſtion upon any Tryal in any County at large. The Statute does not make any Exception or Diſtinguiſhment between Cities and Counties at large, but the Words are general, as I have opened them. My Lord, the Statute does alſo provide in Caſes of Freehold or 40 Marks. Now, my Lord, to prove this Statute extends to London, tho' a City and County, there are other Statutes that have been made ſubſequent, make it plain that it does ſo extend. But before I ſpeak to them, there is 1 Inſt. Fo. 157. that takes notice of this Statute, and ſpeaks it generally, that the Freehold ought to be in the ſame County, nor do I remember to have ſeen any Book that diſtinguiſhes between Counties at large and Cities and Counties. But Statutes that have been made concerning Cities and Counties are a plain Declaration that this is meant of Juries both in Cities and Counties. I will mention the Statute 7 H. 7. c. 5. The Subſtance of the Statute is this, It takes notice that there were Challenges in London for that they had not 40 s. per Ann. and that this Challenge was to be made in the Wards, which are the ſame with Hundreds in the Counties, ſo this Statute is made to take away the Challenge of 40 s. Freehold. This Statute of 7 H. 7. that takes away the Challenge in London for not having 40 s. is, with ſubmiſſion, a ſtrong Evidence and Authority that it was before that time a good Challenge, for otherwiſe to what end ſhould they make a Statute to take away the Challenge, unleſs it were before a good Cauſe of Challenge? In the next place, 4 H. 8. c. 3. that extends to Civil Cauſes in London, and ſays, that the London Jurors ſhall (but provides only for London in Civil Cauſes) be admitted in Civil Cauſes, that have Goods to the Value of 100 Marks. My Lord, if that firſt Statute or the Common Law had not extended to require Freeholds in London, then there would have been no need of this Statute that was made to enable Men to be Jurors that had Goods to the Value of 100 Marks. So that we take it to be good Authority, that by the Common Law Freehold was required in all Civil Cauſes. Then there is another Statute 23 H. 8. c. 13. and that will be a ſtrong Evidence to ſhew what the Law is: For the Statute ſays, in Cities and Burroughs, in Tryals of Murder and Felony, if a Freeman of the City of London is to be tryed, the Freemen ſhall be upon the Jury, tho' they have not Freehold, and then there is a Proviſo, that for Knights and Eſquires that are out of the Burrough, tho' they are arraigned in the Burrough, that extends not to them, tho' in Caſes of Murder and Felony. As for this Statute we take this Senſe of it, firſt, That it does not extend to Treaſons, for when it only names Murders and Felonies, that makes no Alteration as to Treaſon, therefore that ſtands as before: But if there be any Alteration that extends only to Freemen and Burgeſſes that are to be Tryed, but not to Knights and Eſquires, ſo that if we were in a Caſe of Felony and Murder, I think we are not concerned in this Statute, for we are no Freeman nor Burgeſs, but we are an Eſquire, and therefore ought to be tryed by Freeholders: So that for the Law we rely upon theſe Statutes, that we have looked upon as ſtrong Evidence, that there ought to be in the Tryal of the Life of Man, eſpecially for Treaſon, Freeholders. Firſt, If it were in Civil Cauſes, if this Qualification be not in Jurymen, then an Attaint would lye; the Penalty in an Attaint is, that their Houſes ſhould be pulled down, &c. This is provided by the Law, to the intent the Jury may be careful to go according to their Evidence. 'Tis true, no Attaint does lie in Criminal Cauſes, but if ſo be in Civil Cauſes there be required Freeholders, and an Attaint lies if there be not, 'tis not reaſonable to think but there ſhould be as great regard to the Life of a Man as to his Eſtate. Next, my Lord, I do not know any Law that ſets any kind of Qualification but this of Freehold, ſo that be the Perſons of what condition or nature ſoever (ſuppoſing they be not outlawed) yet theſe Perſons, if this Law be not in effect, may then ſerve, and be put upon the Life of a Man. Theſe are the Reaſons, my Lord, for which we apprehend they ought to be Freeholders.

Mr. Holt. My Lord, I would deſire one Word of the ſame ſide: We inſiſt in this Caſe upon theſe two things; Firſt, we conceive by the Common Law, every Jury-man ought to have a Freehold, we have good Authority for it, Coke's Firſt Inſtitutes, but if that were not ſo, I think the Statute Mr. Pollexfen hath firſt mentioned, 2 Hen. 5. c 3. to be expreſs in this point. My Lord, the Statute in the Preamble does recite all the miſchiefs, it ſays great miſchiefs enſued by Juries that were made up of Perſons that had not Eſtates ſufficient; In what? As well in the Caſe of the Death of a Man, as in the Caſe of Freehold between Party and Party: The Statute reciting this miſchief, does in expreſs Words provide two Remedies for the ſame in theſe Caſes: Firſt on the Life and Death of a Man, the Jury or Inqueſt to be taken, ſhall have 40 s. per Ann. and ſo between Party and Party 40 Marks, ſo that this being the Tryal of the Death of a Man, it is interpreted by Stamford 162 a. That is, In all Caſes where a Man is arraigned for his Life, that is within the expreſs Words of the Statute. Beſides this Expoſition that hath been put upon the Statute, my Lord, it does ſeem that the Judgment of ſeveral Parliaments hath been accordingly in ſeveral Times and Ages. My Lord, to inſtance in one Statute that hath not been mentioned, and that is the 33 of H. 8. c. 23. That does give the King Power to award Commiſſions of Oyer and Terminer, for Tryals in any County of England: And that (ſays the Statute) in ſuch Caſes no Challenge to the Shire or Hundred ſhall be allowed; that is, you ſhall not challenge the Jury in ſuch a Caſe, becauſe they have not Freehold, are not of the County where the Treaſon was committed; but that upon the Tryal Challenge, for lack of Freehold of 40 s. a Year, ſhall be allowed, tho' it alters the manner of trying Treaſon by the Common Law; ſo that, my Lord, here is the Opinion of that very Parliament; that tho' it took away the uſual method of Tryals; yet it ſaves the Priſoner's Challenge for want of Freehold. Now indeed that Statute is repealed; but I mention it as to the Proviſo, that it ſhews the Judgment of that Parliament at that time: My Lord, thoſe other Statutes that have been made to regulate Cities and Towns Corporate, why were they made? 33 H. 8. That no Freehold ſhould be allowed, that ſhews that 2 H. 5. did extend to theſe Caſes. But, my Lord, theſe Statutes that ſhew the Judgment of the Parliament ſufficient to our purpoſe, do not extend to this Caſe; the Statute goes only to Murders and Felonies, but not to Treaſons: And we are in the Caſe of a Penal Statute, and concerning the Life and Death of a Man, which ought to be taken ſtrictly, it ouſts the Priſoner of a Benefit; and by parity of Reaſon, if Treaſon be not mentioned, your Lordſhip can't by Equity extend it to it, when it only mentions inferiour Offences, and takes away the Benefit in lower Caſes: Like the Caſe of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, where the Statute ſet down Dean and Chapters, and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons, it ſhall not extend to Biſhops, becauſe it begins with Perſons of an inferior Nature: No more ſhall Murder and Felony extend to Treaſon. But further the Statute only concerns Freemen, for there is an expreſs Proviſo in the Caſe: For in caſe any Knight or Eſquire come to be tryed in the Place, he has his Benefit as before. My Lord, we are in this Caſe, as in the Caſe not mentioned in the Statute, we are not a Freeman of London. My Lord, there is another thing 7 H. 7. c. 5. Why there was not only requiſite at the Common Law, that the Jurors had ſufficient Freehold, but it was required it ſhould be in the Hundred; and Freehold in the Wards in the City is the ſame with Freehold in the Hundreds in the Country: So that the want of Freehold in the Hundred, was a good Cauſe of Challenge. So that I think it will hardly be denied, but that a Jury that paſſes upon the Life of a Man, ought by the Law, by the Statute, and by the Judgment of the Parliament, to have Freehold. Where is there then any Statute whatſoever that makes a difference in this Caſe, between London and other Counties? We are in the Caſe of Treaſon, we have taken our Exceptions, and on behalf of the Priſoner at the Bar we pray the Challenge may be allowed.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I ſhall be ſhort, becauſe Mr. Pollexfen has obſerved theſe things ſo particularly already. I obſerve the Statute of H. 5. is a general Statute, and extends throughout the Realm: Now when the thing is thus general, there is no room to except Particulars. And in this Caſe 'tis within the very Words of the Law, if the Words be ſo generally penned in the Negative, then we conceive there is no Conſtruction to be made upon them, unleſs ſome ſubſequent Parliament alter it. Coke's Inſtitutes 157. where 'tis ſaid in Treaſon as well as any thing elſe, upon H. 5. there ſhall be Freeholds. If they have provided in Civil and other Criminal Cauſes, it were ſtrange that this ſhould be Caſus omiſſus, but there is no Conſtruction againſt a Negative Law. For the Parliament taking care of the City of London (as the ſubſequent Statutes ſay) that he that hath 100 Marks ſhall paſs in Civil Cauſes, and then it ſays in Murders and Felonies, and that only confined to the Freemen of the Place, does ſufficiently explain the Law, where 'tis not altered by any ſubſequent Act, therefore I deſire the Challenge may be admitted.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Theſe Gentlemen's Foundation is not good, for they prove it not by any Books, that at Common Law it was requiſite for a Jury-man to have Freehold. My Lord, I deny their Foundation, there is no ſuch Law, and at this day in all Criminal Caſes where the Statute does not direct it, as for Riots and other Informations for Miſdemeanor, there is no Law reſtrains them, and they may be tryed by any Men they have no Exception againſt. Then 2 H. 5. ſays, None ſhall be admitted to paſs upon the Death of a Man, (I take it to extend to all Capital Matters, tho' it is pretty oddly expreſſed; for when a Man is accuſed of other Felonies and High-Treaſons, 'tis of the Death of a Man) unleſs he have Lands or Tenements, of the yearly Value of 40 s. But I will take it as theſe Gentlemen do at this time, it not being ſo at Common Law, nor in other Criminal Caſes, but what are provided for by the Statute: As to other Matters of Felony and Murder, no doubt there theſe Challenges are to be taken upon the Statute, but not for Treaſon, becauſe the Statute of Queen Mary does expreſly repeal that Statute; and no Statute ſince takes away the Force of that of Queen Mary; that all Tryals for Treaſon ſhall be as at the Common Law; and according to this the conſtant Practice in all Cities (not only London) where Perſons have been indicted for High-Treaſon, hath been. There was never any ſuch thing pretended: Moſt of theſe Gentlemen have Freeholds, but we would not have this Point loſt to the City of London; ſo that the Statute they ſpeak of, and the Interpretations of the ſeveral other Statutes too, are to no purpoſe; for we ſay by Common Law, all Cauſes might be tryed by any Perſons, againſt whom there was not ſufficient Cauſe of Challenge; and the Common Law is by that Statute reſtored in this Point.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have little to ſay, Mr. Attorney hath given a true Anſwer to it, the Foundation does fail them. It was not neceſſary at Common Law, for a Jury-man to have Freehold: But then they muſt ſhew you, my Lord, it is altered and made neceſſary. The Statute of H. 5. does not ſeem to extend to Treaſon, but if it did, 'tis now out of doors, by that of Queen Mary, whereby all Tryals of Treaſon are reduced to the Common Law. This is that we anſwer, they fail in their Foundation, they do not make it out, that it was neceſſary for a Jury-man at Common Law to have Freehold.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, I confeſs they have cited ſeveral Acts of Parliament, and upon them lay their Foundation, and draw Inferences from them: But they will find, that in ſeveral Acts of Parliament which they have quoted, there is a particular regard had for the Preſervation of the conſtant Uſage and Cuſtoms for Tryals within the City of London. That notwithſtanding ſeveral Acts of Parliament have in other places aſcertained the Value of Jurors; yet they had ſtill an Eye that the City of London ſhould continue in its Uſages. I think it will be neceſſary to put you in mind of the Caſe of the City of Worceſter. It would be very hard, ſay they, becauſe an Attaint does not lie in Criminal Matters; if you intend by that to have People of Ability, 'tis well known, that the ableſt People in the City of London, have ſcarce any Freehold in it; for that moſt of the Inheritances of the City of London remain in the Nobility and in Corporations. Now in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, he hath a peremptory remptory Challenge to 35, and I think I may adventure to ſay, there can ſcarce be 35 more that can call themſelves Freeholders in London; conſider the Conſequence then, Treaſon ſhould be committed in the City of London, and there would not be enow in the City of London to try it. In the Caſe of the Quo Warranto brought againſt the City of Worceſter, to know by what Warrant ſeveral took upon them the Offices of Aldermen; the Gentlemen at the Bar objected that it was reaſonable that no Freehold ſhould be determined, but by Freeholders. But the Judges of the King's-Bench, (the Court being full) for the neceſſity of the thing, leſt there might not be ſufficient Freeholders in the City, having ſent one of the Judges of that Court to your Lordſhips of the Common Pleas, for that Reaſon did agree the Challenge was not good. I know theſe Gentlemen will pleaſe to remember the Caſe; ſo that I ſay, as in one Caſe we ought to be tender of the Life of the Priſoner, ſo we ought ſurely to be tender of the Life of the King, otherwiſe it may ſo happen that the King's Life may be encompaſſed, and Treaſon committed in the City, and there would be no way in the World to try it: Therefore we pray for the King the Challenge may be over-ruled.

Mr. North. My Lord, It is the Practice to make the Venire facias, without mentioning Freehold, for it does not command that they return ſo many Men that have Freehold, but probos & legales homines de viſineto; therefore at the Common Law, thoſe were good Inqueſts to try any Man that were not excommunicated nor under any Out-law. 'Tis true, there are Statutes that ſay, all Jury-men ſhall have Freehold; but we ſay theſe Statutes do not extend to the City of London, but that it is governed by its own Cuſtoms; and we ſay it is the Cuſtom that Citizens of Ability have been returned, that have no Freehold. But granting what we do not, by way of ſuppoſal, my Lord, it does not extend to this Caſe, becauſe Tryals are to be according to the Uſe at Common Law, by the Statute of Queen Mary, which does ſet them at large again; and that is the Reaſon the Priſoner, in this Caſe, hath his Challenge for 35, and is in other Caſes reſtrained to 20; ſo that we ſay, theſe Men of Ability are good, and there is no Statute affects them.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, Do you find any Judgment, that in Caſes of Treaſon by Common Law, they might except for want of Freehold? Have you any Reſolution in the Caſe?

Mr. Pollexf. I think there are Books that ſay, at Common Law there muſt be Freehold.

L. C. J. What, in Treaſon?

Mr. Pollexf. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Unleſs you ſpeak of Treaſon, you do not ſpeak ad Idem. For I do take it that in Caſes of Treaſon, or in Caſes of Felony, at the Common Law, they had no liberty to except to Jurors, that they had not any Freehold, but that at the Common Law any good and lawful Men might paſs. Then take as introductive of a new Law the Statute of H. 5. I am of the mind that this Statute of H. 5. peradventure may extend to Treaſons and Felonies; but when the Statute of Queen Mary comes and ſays, all Tryals ſhall be by ſuch Evidence, and in ſuch manner, as by Common Law they ought to have been, I do not ſee how it is poſſible to make an Objection afterwards of this nature. For, admitting this Act of Parliament of H. 5. had altered the Common Law, and given a Challenge, why then when the Statute of Queen Mary comes and ſets all Tryals at large in the Caſe of Treaſons, then certainly the Challenge is gone again, and I doubt you will not find one Exception in this Caſe, ever ſince that Statute concerning the Jury's Freehold in Caſes of Treaſon, but it hath generally paſſed otherwiſe, and there hath not been any ever excepted; I doubt it will be a very hard thing to maintain ſuch a Challenge now. Here are my Lords and Brothers will be pleaſed to deliver their Opinions. It is a Buſineſs of great Conſequence, not only for this Noble Perſon at the Bar, but for all other Perſons.

L. C. Bar. I agree with your Lordſhip perfectly, but if the Counſel had laid a right Foundation that it had been ſo at Common Law, there had been much ſaid; But I take it at Common Law there was no Challenge for want of Freehold, and I am induced to think ſo, for otherwiſe what needed the Statute of H. 5. been made? But whether it extend to Treaſon or no, I am not ſo clear. And if it did, it's wiped off again by that of Queen Mary, which reduces all to the Common Law Tryal.

Mr. J. Windham. I am of the ſame Opinion: I conceive at Common Law, lack of Freehold no good Cauſe of Challenge. 'Tis true, that Challenge is given in ſome Caſes by Act of Parliament, yet I doubt whether it extend to a thing of ſo high nature as Treaſon, for other Statutes have not mentioned any thing of Treaſon. But ſuppoſe 2 H. 5. did extend to it, yet it is very plain, the Statute of 1 and 2 Queen Mary hath ſet all at large again, they are to be good and lawful Men, and I do not find that any thing of the Lawfulneſs muſt be the Freehold. And therefore, I conceive this is no juſt Exception in this Caſe.

Mr. J. Jones. My Lord, I am of the ſame Opinion: I am of Opinion that the Common Law did not require Freehold to be a good Cauſe of Challenge, in the Caſe of Treaſon, and the rather, Becauſe at the Common Law, a Man that was indicted of High-Treaſon had liberty to challenge, peremptorily, to the Number of 35 Perſons. My Lord, if the Common Law be altered by the Statute of H. 5. yet I take it, that the Statute of 1 and 2 Ph. and M. does reſtore the Common Law in this particular Point. For whereas there was a Statute of H. 8. to reſtrain the Priſoner to the Number of 20 for his Challenge, now the Statute reſtoring it to Common Law, the Priſoner hath his Challenge to 35, as he had before that Statute of H. 8. So I take it, the King ſhall have his Privilege alſo to try a Priſoner for Treaſon, by Perſons that have not Freehold.

Mr. J. Charlton. I am of the ſame Opinion. And truly the rather, becauſe no Preſident hath been offered of any ſuch Challenge before, and many Men have ſuffered, and ſure if it could have been, many would have made uſe of it.

Mr. J. Levins. I am of Opinion 'tis not to be allowed. I do not think my ſelf driven to the neceſſity to determine now, whether Freehold hold was a good Challenge at Common Law in point of Treaſon. I think the Statute of Ph. and M. hath reſtored the Tryals to the Common Law. What was the Common Law? The Common Law is the Cuſtom of England, which is other in Cities than in Counties, and the Cuſtom of London is part of that Common Law. So, tho' it be a Cauſe of Challenge in a County at large, yet it is not a Cauſe of Challenge in Cities, where Freeholders are not to be found. Now that which ſatisfies me is, That this Cuſtom is reſtored by the Statute of Ph. and Mary becauſe never ſuch a Challenge hath been. And it is known when 20 were tryed for Treaſon together in this very place, and one of them a notable cunning Lawyer, and if ſuch a Challenge were to have been allowed, no doubt he would have made uſe of it, but the Challenge was not taken, and if he had made ſuch a Challenge, and it had been allowed, perhaps he could not have been tryed: That was Cook. I have heard ſeveral Perſons tryed for Treaſon my ſelf, and never heard it taken. Therefore I am of Opinion, that before any Statute was made in this Caſe, it was the Cuſtom in London to try without Freeholds, and ſince by the Statute of Queen Mary 'tis reſtored.

Mr. Bar. Street. I think there was no ſuch Challenge at Common Law. The Jury were only to be probos & legales homines, and no more, till the Statute made it ſo, but there is a particular Reſervation for Corporations. And certainly, if this ſhould be admitted to be a good Challenge, tho' it were between Party and Party, there would be in ſome Corporations a perfect Failure of Juſtice. So that without doubt at Common Law there was no ſuch Challenge. As for the Statute of H. 5. 'tis gone by that of Queen Mary. If this were admitted within London, nothing would be more miſchievous to this Corporation. Methinks we have been very nice in this matter, when the Life of the King is at ſtake, and all the Cuſtoms and Privileges of the City of London ſeem to be levelled at in this point. I am of the Opinion with the reſt of the Judges, that this Challenge ought to be over-ruled.

J. Withins. I am of the ſame Opinion.

L. C. J. My Lord, the Court is of Opinion, upon hearing your Counſel, and the King's, that it is no good Challenge to a Jury in a Caſe of Treaſon, that he has not Freehold within the City. But I muſt tell your Lordſhip withal, That your Lordſhip has nothing of Hardſhip in this Caſe, for notwithſtanding that, I muſt tell you, you will have as good a Jury, and better than you ſhould have had in a County of 4 l. or 40 s. a year Freeholders. The Reaſon of the Law for Freeholds is, That no ſlight Perſons ſhould be put upon a Jury, where the Life of a Man or his Eſtate comes in queſtion, but in the City the Perſons that are impannelled are Men of Quality and Subſtance, Men that have a great deal to loſe. And therefore your Lordſhip hath the ſame in Subſtance, as if a Challenge was allowed of Freehold. It will be no kind of Prejudice to your Lordſhip in this Caſe. Therefore, if you pleaſe, apply your ſelf as the Jury is called, and make your Exceptions, if you ſhall make any.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, You ſhall have liberty to ſtay any where here, if you pleaſe.

Counſel. Here is ſuch a great Crowd, my Lord, we have no room.

Then the Jury-men were called, and after the Lord Ruſſel had challenged One and Thirty of them, the Jury ſworn were as follows.

John Martin	Jur'	William Butler
William Rouſe		James Pickering
Jervas Seaton		Thomas Jeve.
William Faſhion		Hugh Noden
Thomas Short		Robert Brough
George Torriano		Thomas Omeby.

Then was made Proclamation for Information.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruſſel Eſq; hold up thy Hand, (which he did.) You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted, by the Name of ——— prout before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon his Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find him Guilty, you ſhall inquire, &c.

Mr. North. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you that are ſworn, The Priſoner at the Bar ſtands charged in this Indictment with no leſs than the conſpiring the Death of the King's Majeſty, and that in order to the ſame, he did, with other Traitors named in the Indictment, and others not known, November 2. in the 34th Year of this King, in the Pariſh of Baſſiſhaw, within the City of London, meet and conſpire together to bring our Sovereign Lord the King to Death, to raiſe War and Rebellion againſt him, and to maſſacre his Subjects. And in order to compaſs theſe wicked Deſigns, there being aſſembled, did conclude to ſeize the King's Guards, and His Majeſty's Perſon. This is the Charge, the Defendant ſays he is not Guilty, if we prove it upon him, it will be your Duty to find it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, moſt of our Evidence againſt this Honourable Perſon at the Bar is to this purpoſe. This Perſon, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, they were the Council of State, as I may call them, to give forth Directions for the general Riſing that hath appeared was to have been within this Kingdom. The Riſing was of great Concern and Expence, and muſt be managed by Perſons of Intereſt, Prudence, and great Secrecy. Theſe Gentlemen had frequent Meetings in October and November laſt, (for then, you may refreſh your Memories again, was the general Riſing to be) and there they did conſult how to manage the Riſing, they conſulted how to ſeize the King's Guards; And this Noble Perſon being mixed with theſe others, eſpecially with Ferguſon, who with others of an inferior Rank was alſo engaged in a Cabal for managing worſer things (tho' this is bad enough;) at ſeveral Meetings they receive Meſſages from my Lord Shaftsbury touching the Riſing. They being looked upon as the Perſons that were to conclude and ſettle the time and all circumſtances about it.

We ſhall make it appear to you in the courſe of our Evidence, that thoſe Underlings (for this was the great Conſult, and moved all the other Wheels) who managed the Aſſaſſination, did take notice that theſe Lords and Gentlemen of Quality were to manage and ſteer the whole buſineſs of the Riſing. It ſeems theſe Gentlemen could not give the Earl of Shaftsbury ſatisfaction to his mind, for he preſſed them to keep their day, which was the 17th of November laſt; but the honourable perſon at the Bar, and the reſt, made him this anſwer, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them, for that he had promiſed to have 1000 Foot and 2 or 300 Horſe at four hour's warning, but now it was come to paſs, he could not perform it, that ſome Perſons in the Weſt would not joyn with them, and therefore at this time they could not proceed, and therefore they muſt defer the day. And as a Counſel, they ſent my Lord Shaftsbury word, he muſt be contented, they had otherwiſe reſolved, and thereupon my Lord Shaftsbury went away, and Mr. Ferguſon with him.

To carry on this practice, they took others into their Council, Sir Thomas Armſtrong was left out, and there falling that ſcandalous Report upon my Lord Grey, he was to be left out, and then there was to be a new Council of Six, whereas the inferior Council to manage the Aſſaſſination was Seven. At this Council there was this honourable Perſon at the Bar, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Howard, and another honourable Perſon, who I am ſorry to name upon this account, who hath this morning prevented the hand of Juſtice upon himſelf, my Lord of Eſſex, and Colonel Sidney, and Mr. Hambden: Theſe ſix had their frequent Conſults at this honourable Perſon's Houſe; for they had excluded Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and my Lord Grey, for theſe Gentlemen would have the Face of Religion, and my Lord Grey was in their eſteem ſo ſcandalous, that they thought that would not prevail with the people, if he was of the Council. There they debated how they ſhould make this Riſing, after ſeveral Conſultations they came to this Reſolution: That before they did fall upon this Riſing, they ſhould have an exact account both of the Time and Method of the Scotch Riſing; and thereupon a Meſſenger was ſent on purpoſe by Colonel Sidney, viz. Aaron Smith, to invite Scotch Commiſſioners to treat with theſe Noble Lords. Purſuant to this, juſt before the Plot brake out, ſeveral from Scotland came to treat with them how to manage the work; 30000 l. was demanded by the Scots, in order that they ſhould be ready in Scotland; then they fell to 10000, and at laſt (for the Scots love Money) they fell to 5000, which they would take and run all hazards, but they not coming to their Terms, that broke off that Week the Plot was diſcovered.

Gentlemen, if we prove all theſe Inſtances, beſides we ſhall call ſome to ſhew you that all the inferior Party ſtill looked upon theſe to be the Heads; and tho' they kept it ſecret, God hath ſuffered it to come to light, with as plain an Evidence as ever was heard.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I will not take up any of your Lordſhip's time; we will call our Witneſſes to prove the Fact Mr. Attorney hath opened. Swear Colonel Rumſey. (Which was done.) Pray Colonel Rumſey will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, from the beginning to the end, of the ſeveral Meetings that were, and what were the Debates of thoſe Meetings.

Col. Rumſey My Lord, I was at my Lord Shaftsbury's Lodging, where he lay, down by Wapping about the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, and he told me there was met at one Mr. Sheppard's houſe the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, my Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, and he deſired me to ſpeak to them to know what reſolution they were come to about the Riſing of Taunton: I did go there accordingly, and call for Mr. Sheppard, and he carried me up where they were, and the Anſwer that was there made me was, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and there would be no more done in the matter at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the whole paſſage.

Col. Rumſey. I did ſay my Lord Shaftsbury had ſent me to know what reſolution they had taken about the Riſing of Taunton. They made me this anſwer, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them, that he had promiſed 1000 Foot and 300 Horſe, but when he came to perform it, he could not. He thought the people would not meddle, unleſs they had ſome time to make proviſion for their Families.

L. C. J. Who had you this Meſſage from?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Ferguſon did ſpeak moſt of it.

L. C. J. Who ſent this Meſſage back?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Ferguſon made the Anſwer, my Lord Ruſſel and the Duke of Monmouth were preſent, and I think my Lord Grey did ſay ſomething to the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray how often were you with them at that houſe?

Col. Rumſey. I do not know, I was there more than once, I was there either another time, or elſe I heard Mr. Ferguſon make a Report of another Meeting to my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was my Lord Ruſſel in the Room when this Debate was?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they ſay further?

Col. Rumſey. That was all at that time, that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there nothing of my Lord Shaftsbury to be contented?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, That my Lord Shaftsbury muſt be contented; and upon that he took his Reſolution to be gone.

L. C. J. Did you hear any ſuch Reſolution from him?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know of their meeting there, or was it by my Lord Shaftsbury's direction?

Col. Rumſey. No, but my Lord told me, I ſhould find ſuch Perſons, and accordingly I found them; and this Anſwer was given.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did you ſtay?

Col. Rumſey. I think I was not there above a quarter of an Hour.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe happened while you were there about a Declaration?

Col. Rumſey. I am not certain whether I did hear ſomething about a Declaration there, or that that Mr. Ferguſon did report it to my Lord Shaftsbury, that they had debated it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. To what purpoſe was the Declaration?

L. C. J. We muſt do the Priſoner that Right; He ſays he can't tell whether he had it from him or Mr. Ferguſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you hear no Diſcourſe to what it tended?

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, There was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in.

One of the Jury. By whom, Sir?

Col. Rumſey. By all the Company that was there.

L. C. J. What was that Diſcourſe?

Col. Rumſey. To ſee what Poſture they were in, that they might know how to ſurprize them.

L. C. J. The Guards?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, That were at the Savoy, and the Mews.

L. C. J. Whoſe were the words? Tell the words as near as you can.

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, The Diſcourſe was, that ſome ſhould——

L. C. J. Who made that Diſcourſe?

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, I think Sir Tho. Armſtrong began it, and Mr. Ferguſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it diſcourſed among all the Company?

Col. Rumſey. All the Company did debate it. Afterwards they thought it neceſſary to ſee with what care and vigilance they did guard themſelves at the Savoy and the Mews, whether they might be ſurprized or not.

Mr. At. Gen. Were there any undertook to go and ſee there?

Col. Rumſey. There were ſome Perſons.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Name them.

Col. Rumſey. I think the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Tho. Armſtrong.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was my Lord Ruſſel, the Priſoner, there, when they undertook to take the view?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. To what purpoſe was the view?

Col. Rumſey. To ſurprize them if the Riſing had gone on.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you obſerve by the Debates that happened, that they did take Notice there was a Riſing intended?

Col. Rumſey. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. And that Direction was given to take a view of the Guards, if the Riſing had gone on?

Col. Rumſey. Yes.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, declare juſtly the diſcourſe.

Col. Rumſey. I went to them from my Lord Shaftsbury: And I did tell them, That my Lord did pray they would come to ſome Reſolution; and they told me, Mr. Trenchard they depended upon, for Taunton had failed them, who when he came up to Town firſt at the Term, had aſſured them, that in three or four Hours time, he could have One Thouſand Foot, and Three Hundred Horſe: But now it came to be tryed, he anſwered it was not poſſible for him to undertake it, for People would not ruſh into it of a ſudden, but have ſome time to prepare for their Families.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it pretended there ſhould be a Riſing at that time?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, the 19th of November was appointed for the Riſing.

L. C. J. Was it before that time, you went to preſs them from my Lord Shaftsbury?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, I think it was a matter of a Fortnight before, or ſomething more. For I think it was concluded Sunday fortnight after my Lord Grey met.

Mr. At. Gen. But you ſay, beſides what you heard there, you underſtood there was to be a Riſing at that time; Was you to be engaged in this?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. You muſt ſpeak ſo, that what you deliver may be ſenſible; for if you ſpeak, I apprend ſo and ſo, that will be doubtful.

Col. Rumſey. No, my Lord, the Riſing was determined, and I was to have gone to Briſtol.

Mr. At. Gen. In what capacity, as Colonel or Captain?

Col. Rumſey. There was no Determination of that, no Quality.

L. C. J. By whoſe Appointment was that?

Col. Rumſey. My Lord Shaftsbury ſpake that to me.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But pray, Col. Rumſey, this you are very able to know, what the Debates were, and need not be pumped with ſo many Queſtions; Pray, was there any Debate, when you came with the Meſſage from my Lord Shaftsbury's, was there a Debate about the Riſing?

Col. Rumſey. There was no Debate of it, becauſe they made anſwer, Mr. Trenchard had failed them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But did not they take notice of the Riſing? Give an account of it.

Col. Rumſey. I have done it twice.

Jury. We deſire to know the Meſſage from the Lord Shaftsbury.

L. C. J. Direct your ſelf to the Court: Some of the Gentlemen have not heard it, they deſire you would with a little more loud Voice repeat the Meſſage you were ſent of from my Lord Shaftsbury.

Col. Rumſey. I was ſent by my Lord, to know the Reſolution of the Riſing in Taunton; they anſwered, Mr. Trenchard, whom they depended upon for the Men, had failed them, and that it muſt fall at that time, and my Lord muſt be contented.

Mr. At. Gen. Was the Priſoner at the Bar preſent at that Debate?

Col. Rumſey. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you find him averſe to it, or agreeing to it.

Col. Rumſey. Agreeing to it.

Baron Street. What ſaid my Lord Shaftsbury?

Col. Rumſey. Upon my return he ſaid, He would be gone, and accordingly did go.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If my Lord Ruſſel pleaſes to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

L. Ruſſel. Muſt I ask him now?

L. C. J. Yes, my Lord, propoſe your Queſtions to me.

L. Ruſſel. I have very few Queſtions to ask him, for I know little of the matter, for it was the greateſt accident in the World I was there, and when I ſaw that Company was there, I would have been gone again. I came there accidentally to ſpeak with Mr. Sheppard; I was juſt come to Town, but there was no Diſcourſe of ſurprizing the Guards, nor no undertaking of raiſing an Army.

of

L. C. J. We will hear you to any thing by and by, but that which we now deſire of your Lordſhip is, as the Witneſſes come, to know if you would have any particular Queſtions asked of them.

L. Ruſſel. I deſire to know, if I gave any Anſwer to any Meſſage about the Riſing: I was up and down; I do not know what they might ſay when I was in the Room; I was taſting of Wine.

L. C. J. Did you obſerve that my Lord Ruſſel ſaid any thing there, and what?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, my Lord Ruſſel did ſpeak.

L. C. J. About what?

Col. Rumſey. About the Riſing of Taunton.

L. Ruſſel. It was Sir Tho. Armſtrong that converſed with Mr. Trenchard.

L. C. J. What did you obſerve my Lord Ruſſel to ſay?

Col. Rumſey. My Lord Ruſſel did diſcourſe of the Riſing.

L. Ruſſel. How ſhould I diſcourſe of the Riſing at Taunton, that knew not the Place, nor had knowledge of Trenchard?

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will give you an account, that my Lord Ruſſel appointed this place, and came in the dark without his Coach.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I think the Witneſs was asked, if I gave my Conſent.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Did my Lord give any Conſent to the Riſing?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, my Lord, he did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Swear Mr. Sheppard.

[Which was done.

Pray will you ſpeak aloud, and give an account to my Lord, and the Jury, of the Meetings at your Houſe, and what was done.

Mr. Sheppard. In the month of October laſt, as I remember, Mr. Ferguſon came to me in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and deſired the conveniency of my Houſe, for him and ſome other Perſons of Quality to meet there. And as ſoon as I had granted it, in the Evening the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Col. Rumſey, and Mr. Ferguſon came. Sir Thomas Armſtrong deſired me, that none of my Servants might come up, but they might be private; ſo what they wanted I went down for, a Bottle of wine or ſo. The ſubſtance of their Diſcourſe was, how to ſurprize the King's Guards: And in order to that, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, as I remember, went one night to the Mews, or thereabout, to ſee the King's Guards. And the next time they came to my Houſe, I heard Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſay, the Guards were very remiſs in their places, and not like Soldiers, and the thing was feaſible, if they had ſtrength to do it.

Mr. At. Gen. How many Meetings had you there?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember but twice, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they meet by chance, or had you notice they would be there that night?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, I did hear it before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you notice would be there?

Mr. Sheppard. The Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Ruſſel, Sir Tho. Armſtrong, Col. Rumſey, and Mr. Ferguſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they come with their Coaches, or a foot, in the night time, and in the dark?

Mr. Sheppard. I cannot tell; it was in the Evening, I did not let them in.

Mr. At. Gen. Were there any Coaches at the door?

Mr. Sheppard. None that I heard, or ſaw, they came not all together, but immediately one after another.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Had they any Debate before they went into the Room?

Mr. Sheppard. No, they went readily into the Room.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Was my Lord Ruſſel both times there?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Had you any particular buſineſs with my Lord Ruſſel, or he with you?

Mr. Sheppard. No, not at that time, but ſince I have had, about the Affairs of my Lord Shaftsbury.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember, Col. Rumſey at the firſt time had any Diſcourſe about any private buſineſs relating to my Ruſſel?

Mr. Sheppard. No, I do not remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. Beſides the ſeizing of the Guards, did they diſcourſe about Riſing?

Mr. Sheppard. I do not remember any further Diſcourſe, for I went ſeveral times down to fetch Wine, and Sugar, and Nutmeg, and I do not know what was ſaid in my abſence.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Do you remember any Writings or Papers read at that time?

Mr. Sheppard. None that I ſaw.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Or that you heard of?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, now I recollect my ſelf, I do remember one Paper was read.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. To what purpoſe was it?

Mr. Sheppard. It was ſomewhat in the nature of a Declaration; it was read by Mr. Ferguſon, who was preſent at the reading, I cannot ſay, whether they were all preſent or not. The purport of it was ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, but truly what Particulars I can't tell: It was a pretty large Paper.

Mr. At. Gen. But you can tell the Effect of it, When was that to be ſet out?

Mr. Sheppard. It was not diſcourſed, it was ſhewn only, I ſuppoſe, for Approbation.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was it ſhew'd to?

Mr. Sheppard. Sir Tho. Armſtrong.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Who elſe?

Mr. Sheppard. As I remember the Duke was preſent, and I think Col. Rumſey.

Col. Rumſey. No, I was not, it was done before I came.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What was the deſign of that Paper? Recollect your ſelf, what was the deſign?

Mr. Sheppard. The deſign of that Paper, was in the nature of a Declaration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, in order to a Riſing, I ſuppoſe by the purport of the Paper; but cannot remember the particular Words of it.

Foreman of the Jury. Can you ſay my Lord Ruſſel was there, when that Declaration was read, as you call it?

Mr. Sheppard. I can't ſay that.

Mr. At. Gen. But he was there when they talked of ſeizing the Guards?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, my Lord was there then.

L. Ruſſel. Pray, Mr. Sheppard, do you remember the time when theſe meetings were?

Mr. Sheppard. I can't be poſitive as to the Time, I remember it was at the time my Lord Shaftsbury was abſent from his own Houſe, and he abſented himſelf from his own Houſe about Michaelmas day; but I can't be poſitive as to the Time.

L. Ruſſel. I never was but once at your Houſe, and there was no ſuch deſign as I heard of. I deſire that Mr. Sheppard may recollect himſelf.

Mr. Sheppard. Indeed, my Lord, I can't be poſitive in the times. My Lord, I am ſure, was at one meeting.

L. C. J. But was he at both?

Mr. Sheppard. I think ſo, But it was 8 or 9 Months ago, and I can't be poſitive.

L. Ruſſel. I can prove I was then in the Country. Col. Rumſey ſaid there was but one meeting.

Col. Rumſey. I do not remember I was at two; if I was not, I heard Mr. Ferguſon relate the Debates of the other meeting to my Lord Shaftsbury.

L. Ruſſel. Is it uſual for the Witneſſes to hear one another?

L. C. J. I think your Lordſhip need not concern your ſelf about that, for I ſee the Witneſſes are brought in one after another.

L. Ruſſel. There was no deſign.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath ſworn it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear my Lord Howard.

[Which was done.

Pray will your Lordſhip give an account to the Court, what you know of a Riſing deſigned before my Lord Shaftsbury went away, and afterwards how it was continued on.

L. Howard. My Lord, I appear with ſome Confuſion. Let no man wonder that it is troubleſome to me. My Lord, as to the Queſtion Mr. Attorney puts to me, this is the Account I have to give. 'Tis very well known to every one, how great a ferment was made in the City, upon occaſion of the long diſpute about the Election of Sheriffs: And this ſoon produced a greater freedom and liberty of Speech one with another, than perhaps had been uſed formerly, tho' not without ſome previous preparations and diſpoſitions made to the ſame thing. Upon this occaſion among others, I was acquainted with Captain Walcot, a Perſon that had been ſome Months in England, being returned out of Ireland, and who indeed I had not ſeen for 11 Years before. But he came to me as ſoon as he came out of Ireland, and when theſe unhappy diviſions came, he made very frequent applications to me; and tho' he was unknown himſelf, yet being brought by me he ſoon gained a confidence with my Lord Shaftsbury, and from him derived it to others, when this unhappy Rent and Diviſion of mind was, he having before got himſelf acquainted with many Perſons of the City, had entered into ſuch Counſels with them, as afterwards had the Effect, which in the enſuing narrative I ſhall relate to your Lordſhip. He came to me and told me that they were now ſenſible all they had was going, that this Force put upon them——

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, raiſe your voice, elſe your Evidence will paſs for nothing.

One of the Jury. We cannot hear, my Lord.

L. Howard. There is an unhappy accident happen'd that hath ſunk my Voice, I was but juſt now acquainted with the Fate of my Lord of Eſſex—My Lord, I ſay, He came to me, and did acquaint me, that the People were now ſo ſenſible, that all their Intereſt was going, by that violence offered to the City in their Elections, that they were reſolved to take ſome courſe to put a ſtop to it, if it were poſſible: He told me there were ſeveral Conſults and Meetings of Perſons about it, and ſeveral Perſons had begun to put themſelves into a diſpoſition, and preparation to Act; That ſome had furniſhed themſelves with very good Horſes, and kept them in the moſt ſecret and blind Stables they could; That divers had intended it, and for his own part, he was reſolved to imbark himſelf in it. And having an Eſtate in Ireland, he thought to diſpatch his Son thither; (for he had a good Real Eſtate, and a great Stock, how he diſpoſed of his Real Eſtate I know not;) But he ordered his Son to turn his Stock into money to furniſh him for the occaſion: This I take to be about Auguſt. His Son was ſent away. Soon after this, the Son not being yet returned, and I having ſeveral accounts from him, wherein I found the Fermentation grew higher and higher, and every day a nearer approach to Action: I told him I had a neceſſity to go into Eſſex to attend the Concerns of my own Eſtate, but told him, how he might by another name convey Letters to me, and gave him a little Cant, by which he might blind and diſguiſe the Matter he wrote about, when I was in the Country. I receiv'd two or three Letters from him, that gave me an Account in that diſguiſed Stile, but ſuch as I underſtood, that the Negotiation which he had with my Correſpondents was going on, and in good Condition; and it was earneſtly deſired, I would come to Town; this was the middle of September. Notwithſtanding was willing to ſee the Reſult of that great Affair, upon which all Men's Eyes were fixed, which was the Determination of the Shrivalty about that time. So I ordered it to fall into Town, and went to my own Houſe on Saturday night, which was Michaelmas day. On Sunday he came to me, and dined with me, and told me (after a general account given me of the Affairs of the times) that my Lord Shaftsbury was ſecretted and withdrawn from his own Houſe in Alderſgate ſtreet; and that though he had a Family ſetled, and had abſconded himſelf from them, and divers others of his Friends and Confidents; yet he did deſire to ſpeak with me, and for that purpoſe ſent him to ſhew me the way to his Lodging: He brought me to a Houſe at the lower end of Wood-ſtreet, one Watſon's Houſe, and there my Lord was alone. He told me he could not but be ſenſible, how innocent ſoever he was, both he and all honeſt Men were unſafe, ſo long as the Adminiſtration of Juſtice was in ſuch Hands as would accommodate all things to the Humor of the Court. That in the Senſe of this he thought it but reaſonable to provide for his own Safety, by withdrawing himſelf from his own Houſe into that Retirement. That now he had ripen'd Affairs to that head, and had things in that Preparation, that he did not doubt but he ſhould be able, by thoſe Men that would be in readineſs in London, to turn the Tide, and put a ſtop to the Torrent that was ready to overflow. But he did complain to me, that his Deſign, and the Deſign of the Publick was very much obſtructed by the unhandſome Deportment of the the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Ruſſel, who had withdrawn themſelves, not only from his Aſſiſtance, but from their own Engagements and Appointments. For when he had got ſuch a formed Force as he had in London, and expected to have it anſwered by them in the Country, they did recede from it, and told him they were not in a Condition, or Preparation in the Country, to be concurrent with him at that time. This he looked upon but as an artificial Excuſe, and as an Inſtance of their Intentions, wholly to deſert him; but notwithſtanding there was ſuch Preparation made in London, that if they were willing to loſe the Honour of being concurrent with him, he was able to do it himſelf, and did intend ſpeedily to put it into Execution. I asked him, what Forces he had, he ſaid he had enough; ſays I, what are you aſſured of? Says he, there is above Ten Thouſand brisk Boys are ready to follow me, whenever I hold up my Finger: Says I, how have you methoded this, that they ſhall not be cruſhed, for there will be a great Force to oppoſe you? Yes, he anſwered, but they would poſſeſs themſelves of the Gates; and theſe Ten Thouſand Men in 24 Hours, would be multiplied into five times the Number, and be able to make a Sally out, and poſſeſs themſelves of Whitehall, by beating the Guards. I told him, this was a fair Story, and I had reaſon to think, a Man of his Figure would not undertake a thing that might prove ſo fatal, unleſs it were laid on a Foundation that might give a prudent Man ground to hope it would be ſucceſsful. He ſaid he was certain of it, but confeſſed it was a great Diſappointment, that theſe Lords had failed him: I told him, I was not provided with an Anſwer at that time, That he well knew me, and knew the general Frame and Bent of my Spirit. But I told him, I looked upon it as dangerous, and ought to be laid deep, and to be very well weigh'd and conſider'd of; and did not think it a thing fit to be enter'd upon, without the Concurrence of thoſe Lords: And therefore deſired, before I diſcover'd my own Inclination, to diſcourſe with thoſe Lords. He did conſent, with much ado; but, ſays he, you will find they will wave it, and give doubtful and deferring Anſwers, but you will find this a Truth. I went to Moor-Park the next day, where the Duke of Monmouth was, and told him the great Complaint my Lord Shaftsbury had made, that he failed him: Says he, I think he is mad, I was ſo far from giving him any Encouragement, that I did tell him from the beginning, and ſo did my Lord Ruſſel, there was nothing to be done by us in the Country at that time. I did not then own I had ſeen my Lord, but ſpeak as if this were brought me by a third Perſon, becauſe he had not given me liberty to tell them where his Lodging was. Says I, My Lord, I ſhall be able to give a better account of this in a day or two; Shall I convey it to my Lord, that you are willing to give a Meeting? Yes, ſays he, with all my Heart: This was the ſecond, third, or fourth of October; I came to Town on Saturday, and was carried to him on Monday; and I ſuppoſe this was Tueſday the ſecond of October; On Wedneſday I think I went to him again (but 'tis not very material) and told him I had been with the Duke of Monmouth, and given him a punctual Account of what I had from him; and the Duke did abſolutely diſown any ſuch thing; and told me, he never did give him any Encouragement to proceed that way, becauſe the Countries were not in a diſpoſition for Action, nor could be put in readineſs at that time: Says my Lord Shaftsbury, 'Tis falſe; they are afraid to own it. And, ſays he, I have reaſon to believe, there is ſome artificial Bargain between his Father and him, to ſave one another: For when I have brought him to Action, I could never get him to put on, and therefore I ſuſpect him: And, ſays he, ſeveral honeſt Men in the City have puzzled me, in asking how the Duke of Monmouth lived: Says he, they puzzled me, and I could not anſwer the Queſtion; for I know he muſt have his Living from the King; and ſays he, We have different Proſpects; We are for a Common-wealth, and he hath no other Deſign but his own perſonal Intereſt, and that will not go down with my People now (ſo he called them) they are all for a Common-wealth: And then ſays he, 'Tis to no purpoſe for me to ſee him; it will but widen the Breach, and I dare not truſt him to come hither. Says I, My Lord, That's a good one indeed, Dare not you truſt him, and yet do you ſend me to him on this Errand? Nay, ſays he, 'Tis becauſe we have had ſome Miſunderſtanding of late; but I believe he is true enough to the Intereſt. Says I, 'Tis a great Unhappineſs to take this Time to fall out; and I think 'tis ſo great a Deſign, that it ought to be undertaken with the greateſt Strength and Coalition in the Kingdom. Says he, My Friends are now gone ſo far, that they can't pull their Foot back again without going further; for, ſays he, it hath been communicated to ſo many, that 'tis impoſſible to keep it from taking Air, and it muſt go on. Says he, We are not ſo unprovided as you think for; there are ſo many Men, that you will find as brisk Men as any in England. Beſides, We are to have 1000 or 1500 Horſe, that are to be drawn by inſenſible Parties into Town, that when the Inſurrection is, ſhall be able to ſcour the Streets, and hinder them from forming their Forces againſt us. My Lord, After great Enlargement upon this Head, and Heads of the like nature, I told him I would not leave him thus, and that nothing ſhould ſatisfy me, but an Interview between him and the Lords: No, I could not obtain it: But if I would go and tell them what a Forwardneſs he was in, and that, if they would do themſelves Right, by putting themſelves upon correſpondent Action in their reſpective Places, and where their Intereſt lay well, otherwiſe he would go away without them. So I went again to the Duke of Monmouth, I ſpake to him only (I never ſpake to my Lord Ruſſel then, only we were together, but I had never come to any cloſe Conjunction of Counſels in my Life with him at that time.) Says I to the Duke, This Man is mad, and his Madneſs will prove fatal to us all; he hath been in a Fright by being in the Tower, and carries thoſe Fears about him, that cloud his Underſtanding: I think his Judgment hath deſerted him, when he goes about with thoſe ſtrange ſanguine Hopes, that I can't ſee what ſhould ſupport him in the Ground of them. Therefore ſays I, Pray will you give him a Meeting. God-ſo, ſays the Duke, with all my Heart, and I deſire nothing more. Now, I told him, I had been with my Lord Shaftsbury, with with other Enlargements that I need not trouble your Lordſhip with: Well, ſays he, pray go to him, and try if it be poſſible to get a Meeting: So I went to him, and told him. Says I, This is a great Unhappineſs, and it ſeems to be a great Abſurdity, that you are ſo forward to act alone in ſuch a thing as this. Pray, ſays I, without any more to do, ſince you have this Confidence to ſend for me, let me prevail with you to meet them, and give them an Interview, or elſe you and I muſt break. I will no longer hold any Correſpondence, unleſs it be ſo. Says he, I tell you they will betray me. In ſhort, He did with much importunity yield, That he would come out the next Night in a Diſguiſe. By this time it was Saturday, I take it to be the ſixth of October; an Almanack will ſettle that: So the next Night being Sunday, and the Shops ſhut, he would come out in a Concealment, be carried in a Coach, and brought to his own Houſe, which he thought then was ſafeſt. I came and gave the Duke of Monmouth an account of it; the Duke, I ſuppoſe, conveyed the ſame Underſtanding to my Lord Ruſſel; and, I ſuppoſe, both would have been there accordingly, to have given the Meeting; but next Morning I found Colonel Rumſey had left a Note at my Houſe, that the Meeting could not be that Day. Then I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and he had had the account before, That my Lord Shaftsbury did apprehend himſelf to be in ſome Danger in that Houſe, and that the Apprehenſion had occaſioned him to remove; but we ſhould be ſure to hear from him in two or three Days. We took it as a Waver, and thought he did from thence intend to abſcond himſelf from us, and it proved ſo to me, for from that time I never ſaw him. But Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, that he was withdrawn, but it was for fear his Lodging might be diſcovered, but he did not doubt, but in a Week he would let me know where his Lodging was. But told me within ſuch a time, which I think was eight or ten Days, there would be a Riſing; and I told the Duke of Monmouth, and I believe he told my Lord Ruſſel; and we believed his Frenzy was now grown to that heighth, that he would riſe immediately, and put his Deſign in execution; ſo we endeavour'd to prevent it. Upon which my Lord Ruſſel (I was told) and the Duke of Monmouth, did force their way to my Lord Shaftsbury's, and did perſwade him to put off the Day of his Rendezvous. I had not this from my Lord Ruſſel, for I had not ſpoke a word to him; but the Duke told me, my Lord Ruſſel had been with him (I had indeed an intimation that he had been with him;) but the Duke told me, ſays he, I have not been with him, but my Lord Ruſſel was, having been convey'd by Colonel Rumſey. After this Day was put off, it ſeems it was put off with this condition, That thoſe Lords, and divers others, ſhould be in a readineſs to raiſe the Country about that Day Fortnight, or thereabouts; for there was not above a Fortnight's time given: And ſays the Duke of Monmouth, We have put it off, but now we muſt be in Action, for there's no holding it off any longer. And, ſays he, I have been at Wapping all Night, and I never ſaw a company of bolder, and briſker Fellows in my Life: And, ſays he, I have been round the Tower, and ſeen the Avenues of it; and I do not think it will be hard, in a little time, to poſſeſs our ſelves of it: But, ſays he, they are in the wrong way, yet we are engaged to be ready for them in a Fortnight, and therefore, ſays he, now we muſt apply our ſelves to it as well as we can. And thereupon I believe they did ſend into the Country; and the Duke of Monmouth told me, he ſpake to Mr. Trenchard, who was to take particular Care of Somerſetſhire, with this Circumſtance: Says he, I thought Mr. Trenchard had been a briſker Fellow; for when I told him of it, he looked ſo pale, I thought he would have ſwooned, when I brought him to the brink of Action; and ſaid, I pray go and do what you can among your Acquaintance: And truly, I thought it would have come then to Action. But I went the next day to him, and he ſaid it was impoſſible; they could not get the Gentlemen of the Country to ſtir yet.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I think I have very hard meaſure, here is a great deal of Evidence by Hear-ſay.

L. C. J. This is nothing againſt you, I declare it to the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, Go on in the method of Time. This is nothing againſt you, but it's coming to you, if your Lordſhip will have Patience, I aſſure you.

L. Howard. This is juſt in the Order it was done. When this was put off, then they were in a great hurry; and Captain Walcot had been ſeveral times with me, and diſcourſed of it. But upon this Diſappointment they ſaid, it ſhould be the Diſhonour of the Lords, that they were backward to perform their Parts; but ſtill they were reſolved to go on. And this had carried it to the latter end of October. About the 17th or 18th, Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, now they were reſolv'd poſitively to riſe, and did believe that a ſmart Party might perhaps meet with ſome great Men. Thereupon I told the Duke of it; I met him in the Street, and went out of my own Coach into his, and told him, That there was ſome dark intimation, as if there might be ſome Attempt upon the King's Perſon; with that he ſtruck his Breaſt with a great Emotion of Spirit, and ſaid, God-ſo, Kill the KING! I will never ſuffer that. Then he went to the Play-houſe to find Sir Tho. Armſtrong, and ſend him up and down the City to put it off, as they did formerly; and it was done with that Succeſs, that we were all quieted in our minds, that at that time nothing would be done. But upon the Day the King came from New-Market, we din'd together; the Duke of Monmouth was one, and there we had a Notion conveyed among us, that ſome bold Action ſhould be done that Day; which comparing it with the King's Coming, we concluded it was deſign'd upon the King. And a remember my Lord Grey, ſays he, by God, If they do attempt any ſuch thing, it can't fail. We were in great anxiety of mind, till we heard the King's Coach was come in, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong not being there, we apprehended that he was to be one of the Party (for he was not there,) This failing, it was then next determined (which was the laſt Alarum and News I had of it) to be done upon the 17th of November, the Anniverſary of Queen Elizabeth; and I remember it by this Remark I made my ſelf, That I fear'd it had been diſcovered, covered, becauſe I ſaw a Proclamation a little before, forbidding publick Bonfires without Leave of my Lord Mayor. It made ſome Impreſſions upon me, that I thought they had got an intimation of our Intention, and had therefore forbid that Meeting. This therefore of the 17th of November being alſo diſappointed, and my Lord Shaftsbury, being told things were not ripe in the Country, took Shipping and got away; and from that time I heard no more of him till I heard he was dead. Now Sir, after this we all began to lie under the ſame Senſe and Apprehenſions that my Lord Shaftsbury did, That we had gone ſo far, and communicated it to ſo many, that it was unſafe to make a Retreat; and this being conſidered, it was alſo conſidered, that ſo great an Affair as that was, conſiſting of ſuch infinite Particulars, to be managed with ſo much Fineneſs, and to have ſo many Parts, it would be neceſſary, that there ſhould be ſome General Council, that ſhould take upon them the Care of the whole. Upon theſe Thoughts we reſolved to erect a little Cabal among our ſelves, which did conſiſt of ſix Perſons; and the Perſons were, The Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Eſſex, my Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Hambden Jun. Algernoone Sidney, and my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. About what time was this, when you ſetled this Council?

L. Howard. It would have been proper for me in the next place to tell you that, and I was coming to it. This was about the middle of January laſt (as near as I can remember;) for about that time we did meet at Mr. Hambden's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Name thoſe that met.

L. Howard. All the Perſons I named before; that was, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Eſſex, my Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, Mr. Hambden Jun. and my ſelf. When we met there, it was preſently agreed what their proper Province was, which was to have a care of the whole: And therefore it was neceſſary ſome general things ſhould fall under our Care and Conduct, which could not poſſibly be conducted by individual Perſons. The Things that did principally challenge this Care, we thought were theſe; Whether the Inſurrection was moſt proper to be begun in London, or in the Country, or both at one inſtant. This ſtood upon ſeveral different Reaſons: It was ſaid in the Country; and I remember the Duke of Monmouth inſiſted upon it, that it was impoſſible to oppoſe a Formed, well Methodiz'd, and Governed Force, with a Rabble haſtily got together; and therefore whatever Numbers could be gathered in the City, would be ſuppreſſed quickly before they could Form themſelves: Therefore it would be better to begin it at ſuch a diſtance from the Town, where they might have an opportunity of Forming themſelves, and would not be ſubject to the like panick Fear, as in the Town, where half an hour would convey the News to thoſe Forces, that in another half hour would be ready to ſuppreſs them.

Mr. At. Gen. Was this determined among you all?

L. Howard. In this manner that I tell you, Why it was neceſſary to be done at ſome reaſonable diſtance from the Town. And from thence it was likewiſe conſidered, that the being ſo remote from the Town, it would put the King upon this Dilemma, that either the King would ſend his Forces to ſubdue them, or not; if he did, he muſt leave the City naked, who being Proximi Diſpoſitioni to Action, it would give them occaſion to Riſe, and come upon the back of the King's Forces; if he did not ſend, it would give them time to form their Number, and be better ordered.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We do not deſire all your Diſcourſe and Debates; What was your other General thing?

L. Howard. The other was, What Countries and Towns were the fitteſt and moſt diſpoſed to Action: And the Third, What Arms were neceſſary to be got, and how to be diſpoſed: And a Fourth (which ſhould have been indeed firſt in Conſideration) propounded by the Duke of Monmouth, That it would be abſolutely neceſſary to have ſome Common Bank of 25 or 30000 l. to anſwer the Occaſions of ſuch an Undertaking. Nothing was done, but theſe Things were offered then to our Conſideration, and we were to bring in our United Advice concerning them. But the Laſt and Greateſt was, How we might ſo order it, as to draw Scotland into a Conſent with us, for we thought it neceſſary that all the Diverſion ſhould be given. This was the Laſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you any other Meetings?

L. Howard. We had about ten Days after this at my Lord Ruſſel's.

Mr. At. Gen. The ſame Perſons?

L. Howard. Every one of the ſame Perſons then meeting.

Mr. At. Gen. What Debate had you there?

L. Howard. Then it was ſo far, as we came to a Reſolution, That ſome Perſons ſhould be ſent to my Lord Argyle, to ſettle an Underſtanding with him, and that ſome Meſſengers ſhould be diſpatch'd into Scotland, that ſhould invite ſome Perſons hither, that were judged moſt able to underſtand the Eſtate of Scotland, and give an account of it: The Perſons agreed on were, Sir John Cockram, my Lord Melvile, and another, whoſe Name I have ſince been told upon my Deſcription, Sir · Cambel. For this purpoſe we did order a Perſon ſhould be thought on that was fit ——

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know who was ſent, and what was done upon this Reſolution?

L. Howard. I have heard (I never ſaw him in ſix Months before) that Aaron Smith was ſent.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was intruſted to take care of that Buſineſs?

L. Howard. Colonel Sidney. We, in diſcourſe, did agree to refer it to Colonel Sidney to have the care of ſending a Perſon.

Mr. At. Gen. Who acquainted you Aaron Smith was ſent?

L. Howard. Colonel Sidney told me he had ſent him, and given him ſixty Guineas for his Journey.

Mr. At. Gen. What more Meetings had you?

L. Howard. We did then conſider that theſe Meetings might have occaſioned ſome Obſervation upon us, and agreed not to meet again till the Return of that Meſſenger. He was gone, I believe, near a Month before we heard any thing of him, which we wonder'd at, and feared ſome Miſcarriage, but if his Letter had miſcarried, it could have done no great Hurt, for it carried only a kind of Cant in it; It was

was under the Diſguiſe of a Plantation in Carolina.

Mr. At. Gen. You are ſure my Lord Ruſſel was there?

L. Howard. Yes, Sir, I wiſh I could ſay he was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſit there as a Cypher, what did my Lord ſay?

L. Howard. Every one knows my Lord Ruſſel is a Perſon of great Judgment, and not very laviſh in Diſcourſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. But he did conſent?

L. Howard. We did not put it to the Vote, but it went without contradiction, and I took it that all there gave their Conſent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The raiſing of Money you ſpeak of, was that put into any way?

L. Howard. No, But every Man was to put themſelves upon thinking of ſuch a way, that Money might be collected without adminiſtering Jealouſy.

Mr. At. Gen. Were there no Perſons to undertake for a Fund?

L. Howard. No, I think not. However it was but Opinion, the thing that was ſaid, was jocoſely, rather than any thing elſe, that my Lord of Eſſex had dealing in Money, and therefore he was thought the moſt proper Perſon to take the care of thoſe things; but this was ſaid rather by way of Mirth, than otherwiſe.

Mr. At. Gen. What do you know elſe, my Lord?

L. Howard. I was going to tell you, I am now at a full Stop. For it was 6 Weeks or more, before Smith's Return, and then drew on the time, that it was neceſſary for me to go into Eſſex, where I had a ſmall Concern; there I ſtaid about three Weeks; when I came back, I was informed that he was returned, and Sir John Cockram was alſo come to Town.

L. C. J. Did you meet after this?

L. Howard. No, my Lord, I tell you, that I was forced to go three Weeks upon the account of my Eſtate, and afterwards I was neceſſitated to go to the Bath, where I ſpent five Weeks, and the time of coming from the Bath to this time, is five Weeks more; ſo that all this time hath been a perfect Parentheſis to me, and more than this, I know not.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruſſel, Now, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, is the time for you to ask him any Queſtions.

L. Ruſſel. The moſt he hath ſaid of me, my Lord, is only Hear-ſay, the two times we met, it was upon no formed Deſign, only to talk of News, and talk of things in general.

L. C. J. But I will tell you what it is he teſtifies, that comes neareſt your Lordſhip, that ſo you may conſider of it, if you will ask any Queſtions. He ſays, after my Lord Shaftsbury went off (all before is but Inducement as to any thing that concerns your Lordſhip, and does not particularly touch you) after his going away, he ſays the Party concerned with my Lord Shaftsbury did think fit to make choice of ſix Perſons to carry on the Deſign of an Inſurrection or Riſing, as he calls it, in the Kingdom. And that to that purpoſe Choice was made of the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Eſſex, your Lordſhip, my Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, and Mr. Hambden.

L. Ruſſel. Pray, my Lord, not to interrupt you, by what Party (I know no Party) were they choſen?

L. Howard. 'Tis very true, we were not choſen by Community, but did erect our ſelves by mutual Agreement, one with another into this Society.

L. Ruſſel. We were People that did meet very often.

L. C. J. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to have any other Queſtions asked of my Lord Howard?

L. Ruſſel. He ſays it was a formed Deſign, when we met about no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. He ſays, That you did conſult among your ſelves, about the Raiſing of Men, and where the Riſing ſhould firſt be, whether in the City of London, or in more Foreign Parts, that you had ſeveral Debates concerning it; he does make mention of ſome of the Duke of Monmouth's Arguments for its being formed in Places from the City; he ſays, you did all agree not to do any thing further in it, till you had conſider'd how to raiſe Money and Arms: And to engage the Kingdom of Scotland in this Buſineſs with you; that it was agreed among you, that a Meſſenger ſhould be ſent into the Kingdom of Scotland. Thus far he goes upon his own Knowledge, as he ſaith, what he ſays after, of ſending a Meſſenger, is by Report only.

Mr. At. Gen. I beg your pardon, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis ſo, that what he heard concerning the ſending of Aaron Smith.

Mr. At. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Ruſſel. We met, but there was no Debate of any ſuch thing, nor putting any thing in method. But my Lord Howard is a Man hath a voluble Tongue, talks very well, and is full of Diſcourſe, and we were delighted to hear him.

Mr. At. Gen. I think your Lordſhip did mention the Cambells?

L. Howard. I did ſtammer it out, but not without a Parentheſis, it was a Perſon of the Alliance, and I thought of the Name of the Argyles.

L. Ruſſel. I deſire your Lordſhip to take notice, that none of theſe Men I ever ſaw; my Lord Melvile I have ſeen, but not upon this account.

Mr. Atterbury ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Aaron Smith did go, and Cambell he went for, is here taken. This is the Meſſenger. Pray what do you know of the Apprehending of the Cambells?

Mr. Atterbury. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I did not apprehend Sir Hugh Cambell my ſelf, but he is now in my Cuſtody; he was making his Eſcape out of a Woodmonger's Houſe, both He and his Son.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he own he had been at London?

Mr. Atterbury. Four Days, and that in that time he had been at their Lodgings; and that he and his Son, and one Baily, came to Town together.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall beſides this, (now we have fixed this upon my Lord) give you an account, that theſe Perſons, that were to Riſe, always took them as their Pay-maſters, and expected their Aſſiſtance. Mr. Weſt, Mr. Keeling and Mr. Leigh.

Mr. Weſt Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. That which I call you to, is to know whether or no, in your managery of this Plot, you underſtood any of the Lords were concerned, and which?

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, As to my Lord Ruſſel, I never had any Converſation with him at all, but that I have heard in this, That in the Inſurrection in November, Mr. Ferguſon, and Colonel Rumſey, did tell me that my Lord Ruſſel intended to go down and take his Poſt in the Weſt, when Mr. Trenchard had failed them.

L. C. J. What is this?

Mr. At. Gen. We have proved my Lord privy to the Conſults, now we go about to prove the Under-actors did know it.

Mr. Weſt. They always ſaid my Lord Ruſſel was the Man they moſt depended upon, becauſe he was a Perſon looked upon as of great Sobriety.

L. Ruſſel. Can I hinder People from making uſe of my name? To have this brought to influence the Gentlemen of the Jury, and inflame them againſt me, is hard.

L. C. J. As to this, the giving Evidence by Hear-ſay, will not be Evidence; what Colonel Rumſey or Mr. Ferguſon told Mr. Weſt, is no Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not Evidence to convict a Man, if there were not plain Evidence before, but it plainly confirms what the other Swears. But I think we need no more.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We have Evidence without it, and will not uſe any thing of Garniture; we will leave it as 'tis, we won't trouble your Lordſhip any further. I think, Mr. Attorney, we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruſſel, the King's Counſel do think to reſt upon this Evidence that they have given againſt your Lordſhip. I would put your Lordſhip in mind of thoſe things that are material in this Caſe, and proved againſt your Lordſhip; Here is Colonel Rumſey does prove againſt your Lordſhip this, That he was ſent upon an Errand, which in truth, was Traiterous, it was a Traiterous Errand ſent from my Lord Shaftsbury by him to that Meeting. He does Swear your Lordſhip was at that Meeting, and he delivered his Errand to them, which was to know what account could be given concerning the Deſign of the Inſurrection at Taunton, and he ſays, your Lordſhip being there, this return was made, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them in his undertaking in the Buſineſs, and therefore my Lord Shaftsbury muſt be contented, and ſit down ſatisfied as to that time. Mr. Sheppard does likewiſe ſpeak of the ſame time, that your Lordſhip was there with the reſt of the Perſons, the Duke and others; That there was a Diſcourſe concerning an Inſurrection to have been made, (though he is not ſo particular, as to the very Notion of it, as Colonel Rumſey is,) as to the time they do agree.

L. Ruſſel. Col. Rumſey is not poſitive that I ſay'd, or heard any thing.

L. C. J. My Lord, If you will have a little Patience to hear me, I will tell you what it is preſſes you; there is this which I have mentioned, and Mr. Sheppard does ſay, there was a Paper purporting a Declaration then read among the Company there, which was to be Printed upon the Riſing, ſetting forth the Oppreſſions and Grievances of the Nation: And then my Lord Howard, (after a great Diſcourſe concerning the many Deſigns of my Lord Shaftsbury) comes particularly to your Lordſhip and ſays, that Six of you, as a choſen Council among your ſelves, (not that you were actually choſen) but as a choſen Council among your ſelves, did undertake to manage the great matter of the Inſurrection, and Raiſing of Men in order to ſurprize the King's Guards, and for to Riſe, (which is a Rebellion in the Nation.) He ſays, that you had ſeveral Conſults concerning it. I told you the ſeveral particulars of thoſe Conſults he mentioned: Now it is fit for your Lordſhip, and 'tis your time to give ſome Anſwer to theſe things.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I cannot but think my ſelf mighty unfortunate to ſtand here charged with ſo High and Heinous a Crime, and that intricated and intermixed with the Treaſons and horrid Practices and Speeches of other People, the King's Counſel taking all advantages, and improving and heightening things againſt me. I am no Lawyer, a very unready ſpeaker, and altogether a ſtranger to things of this Nature, and alone, and without Counſel. Truly my Lord, I am very ſenſible, I am not ſo provided to make my juſt Defence as otherwiſe I ſhould do. But my Lord, you are equal, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, I think, are Men of Conſciences, they are Strangers to me, and I hope they value Innocent Blood, and will conſider the Witneſſes that Swear againſt me, Swear to ſave their own Lives; for howſoever Legal Witneſſes they may be accounted, they can't be Credible. And for Col. Rumſey, who 'tis Notoriouſly known hath been ſo highly obliged by the King and the Duke, for him to be capable of ſuch a deſign of murdering the King! I think no body will wonder, if to ſave his own Life, he will endeavour to take away mine; neither does he ſwear enough to do it. And then if he did, the Time by the 13*th* of this King is Elapſed, it muſt be, as I underſtand by the Law, proſecuted within ſix Months, and by the 25 E. 3. a Deſign of Levying War is no Treaſon unleſs by ſome Overt Act it appear. And my Lord, I deſire to know what Statute I am to be Tryed upon, for Generals, I think, are not to be gone upon in theſe Caſes.

L. C. J. (To the Attorney General.) Mr. Attorney, You hear what it is my Lord objects to this Evidence, He ſays, that as to thoſe Witneſſes that teſtify any thing concerning him, above ſix Months before he was Proſecuted, he conceives the Act of Parliament, upon which he takes himſelf to be Indicted, does not extend to it, for that ſays that within Six Months there ought to have been a Proſecution; And my Lord tells you, that he is adviſed, that a deſign of Levying War, without actual Levying of War, was not Treaſon before that Statute.

Mr. At. Gen. To ſatisfy my Lord, He is not Indicted upon that Statute, we go upon the 25 E. 3. But then for the next Objection, ſurely my Lord is informed wrong. To Raiſe a Rebellion or a Conſpiracy within the Kingdom, is it not that which is called Levying of War in that Statute, but to Raiſe a Number of Men to break Priſons, &c. which is not ſo directly tending againſt the Life of the King. To prepare Forces to fight againſt the King, that is a deſign within that Statute to kill the King; And to deſign to de-depoſe the King, to impriſon the King, to raiſe the Subjects againſt the King, theſe have been ſettled by ſeveral Reſolutions to be within that Statute, and Evidences of a Deſign of killing the King.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, This is a matter of Law; Neither was there but one meeting at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, If you admit the Fact, and will reſt upon the Point of Law, I am ready to argue it with any of your Counſel. I will acquaint your Lordſhip how the Evidence ſtands. There is one Evidence ſince Chriſtmas laſt.

L. Ruſſel. That's not to the buſineſs of Sheppard's Houſe. My Lord, one Witneſs will not convict a Man of Treaſon.

Mr. At. Gen. If there be one Witneſs of one Act of Treaſon, and another of a 2d, another of a 3d, that manifeſt the ſame Treaſon to depoſe or deſtroy the King, that will be ſufficient.

L. C. J. My Lord, That has been reſolved, the two Witneſſes the Statute requires, are not to the ſame individual Act, but to the ſame Treaſon, if they be ſeveral Acts declaring the ſame Treaſon, and one Witneſs to each of them, they have been reckoned two Witneſſes within the Statute of Edw. 6.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If my Lord will call his Witneſs———

L. Ruſſel. This is tacking of two Treaſons together, here is one in November by one Witneſs, and then you bring on another with a Diſcourſe of my Lord Howard, and he ſays the Diſcourſe paſſed for Pleaſure.

L. C. J. If your Lordſhip do doubt whether the Fact proved againſt your Lordſhip be Treaſon or not within the Statute of E. 3. and you are contented that the Fact be taken as proved againſt your Lordſhip, and ſo deſire Counſel barely upon that, that is matter of Law. You ſhall have it granted.

L. Ruſſel. I am not knowing in the Law. I think 'tis not proved, and if it was, I think it's not puniſhable by that Act. I deſire Counſel may be admitted upon ſo Nice a Point. My Life lies at Stake; here's but one Witneſs that ſpeaks of a Meſſage.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The Fact muſt be left to the Jury, Therefore if my Lord Ruſſel hath any Witneſſes to call, in Oppoſition theſe matters, let him.

L. C. J. My Lord, There can be no matter of Law but upon a Fact admitted and ſtated.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, I do not think it proved, I hope you will be of Counſel for me; its very hard for me that my Counſel may not ſpeak for me in a point of Law.

L. C. J. My Lord, To hear your Counſel concerning this Fact, that we cannot do, it was never done, nor will be done. If your Lordſhip doubts whether this Fact is Treaſon or not, and deſire your Counſel may be heard to that, I will do it.

L. Ruſſel. I doubt in Law, and do not ſee the Fact is proved upon me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to call any Witneſs to the Matter of Fact?

L. Ruſſel. 'Tis very hard a Man muſt loſe his Life upon Hear-ſay. Colonel Rumſey ſays he brought a Meſſage, which I will ſwear I never heard nor knew of. He does not ſay he ſpake to me, or I gave him any Anſwer. Mr. Sheppard remembers no ſuch thing, he was gone to and again, here is but one Witneſs, and ſeven Months ago.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, If there be any thing that is Law, you ſhall have it.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord, Colonel Rumſey, the other day before the King, could not ſay that I heard it, I was in the Room, but I came in late, they had been there a good while; I did not ſtay above a quarter of an hour taſting Sherry with Mr. Sheppard.

L. C. J. Read the Statute of 25 E. 3. c. 2. My Brothers deſire to have it read.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas divers opinions have been before this time, in what Caſe Treaſon ſhall be ſaid, and in what not: The King at the Requeſt of the Lords and of the Commons, hath made a Declaration in the manner as hereafter followeth. That is to ſay, when a Man doth compaſs or imagine the Death of our Lord the King, or of our Lady his Queen, or of their Eldeſt Son and Heir; or if a Man do Violate the King's Compagnion, or the King's Eldeſt Daughter unmarried, or the Wife of the King's Eldeſt Son and Heir; or if a Man do levy War againſt our Lord the King, in his Realm, or be adherent to the King's Enemies in his Realm, giving to them Aid and Comfort in the Realm or elſewhere, and thereof be proveable attainted of open Deed by People of their Condition. And if a Man counterfeit the King's Great or Privy Seal, or his Money: And if a Man bring falſe Money into this Realm, counterfeit to the Money of England, as the Money called Luſhburgh, or other like to the ſaid Money of England, knowing the Money to be falſe, to Merchandiſe or make Payment in deſeit of our ſaid Lord the King, and of his People: And if a Man Slea the Chancellor, Treaſurer, or the King's Juſtices of the one Bench or the other, Juſtices in Eyre, or Juſtices of Aſſiſe, and all other Juſtices deſigned to hear and determin, being in their places during their Offices. And it is to be underſtood that in the Caſes above rehearſed, that ought to be Judged Treaſon, which extends to our Lord the King, and his Royal Majeſty.

L. C. J. My Lord, That which is urged againſt you by the King's Counſel, is this, You are accuſed by the Indictment of compaſſing and deſigning the King's Death, and of endeavouring to Raiſe an Inſurrection in order to it; That, that they do ſay, is, that theſe Councils that your Lordſhip hath taken, are Evidences of your compaſſing the King's Death, and are Overt Acts, declaring the ſame; and upon that it is they inſiſt your Lordſhip to be Guilty within that Statute.

L. Ruſſel. It is in a Point of Law, and I deſire Counſel.

Mr A.

Mr. At. Gen. Admit your Conſultations, and we will hear them.

L. C. J. I would ſet your Lordſhip right, for probably you may not apprehend the Law in this Caſe; If your Counſel be heard, they muſt be heard to this, That taking it, that my Lord Ruſſel has conſulted in this manner, for the Raiſing of Forces within this Kingdom, and making an Inſurrection within this Kingdom, as Colonel Rumſey and my Lord Howard have depoſed, whether then this be Treaſon, we can hear your Counſel to nothing elſe.

L. Ruſſel. I do not know how to anſwer to it. The point methinks muſt be quite otherwiſe, that there ſhould be Two Witneſſes to one thing at the ſame time.

Mr. At. Gen. Your Lordſhip remembers, in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, there was but one Witneſs to one Act in England, and another to another in France.

L. Ruſſel. It was to the ſame point.

Mr. At. Gen. To the general point, the lopping point.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. There was not ſo much Evidence againſt him, as there is againſt your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. My Lord, If your Lordſhip will ſay any thing, or call any Witneſſes to diſprove what either of theſe Gentlemen have ſaid, we will hear your Lordſhip what they ſay. But if you can't contradict them by Teſtimony, it will be taken to be a Proof. And the way you have to diſprove them, is to call Witneſſes, or by asking Queſtions, whereby it may appear to be untrue.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If you have any Witneſſes, call them; my Lord.

L. Ruſſel. I do not think they have proved it. But then it appears by the Statute, that Levying War is Treaſon, but a Conſpiracy to Levy War is no Treaſon, if nothing be done, 'tis not Levying War within the Statute. There muſt be manifeſt Proof of the matter of Fact, not by Inference.

Mr. At. Gen. I ſee that is taken out of my Lord Coke. Levying War is a diſtinct branch of the Statute, and my Lord Coke explains himſelf afterwards, and ſays, 'tis an Aſſuming of Royal Power, to Raiſe for particular purpoſes.

Juſt. Withins. Unleſs matter of Fact be agreed, we can never come to argue the Law.

L. Ruſſel. I came in late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, has your Lordſhip any Witneſſes to call, as to this matter of Fact?

L. Ruſſel. I can prove I was out of Town when one of the meetings was, but Mr. Sheppard can't recollect the Day, for I was out of Town all that time. I never was but once at Mr. Sheppard's, and there was nothing undertaken of viewing the Guards while I was there; Colonel Rumſey, Can you Swear poſitively, that I heard the Meſſage, and gave any Anſwer to it?

L. C. J. (To Colonel Rumſey.) Sir, Did my Lord Ruſſel hear you, when you deliver'd the Meſſage to the Company? Were they at the Table, or where were they?

Col. Rumſey. When I came in they were ſtanding at the fire-ſide, but they all came from the fire-ſide to hear what I ſaid.

L. Ruſſel. Colonel Rumſey was there when I came in.

Col. Rumſey. No, my Lord. The Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Ruſſel went away together, and my Lord Grey and Sir Thomas Armſtrong.

L. Ruſſel. The Duke of Monmouth and I came together, and you were ſtanding at the Chimney when I came in; you were there before me. My Lord Howard hath made a long Narrative here of what he knew, I do not know when he made it, or when he did recollect any thing; 'tis but very lately, that he did declare and proteſt to ſeveral People, That he knew nothing againſt me, nor of any Plot I could in the leaſt be queſtioned for.

L. C. J. If you will have any Witneſſes called to that, you ſhall, my Lord.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord Angleſey, and Mr. Edward Howard.

My Lord Angleſey ſtood up.

L. C. J. My Lord Ruſſel, What do you ask my Lord Angleſey?

L. Ruſſel. To declare what my Lord Howard told him about me, ſince I was confined.

L. Angleſey. My Lord, I chanced to be in Town the laſt Week, and hearing my Lord of Bedford was in ſome Diſtreſs and Trouble, concerning the Affliction of his Son, I went to give him a Viſit, being my old Acquaintance, of ſome 53 Years ſtanding, I believe, for my Lord and I were bred together at Maudlin-Colledge in Oxon, I had not been there but a very little while, and was ready to go away again, after I had done the good Office I came about, but my Lord Howard came in, I don't know whether he be here.

L. Howard. Yes, Here I am to ſerve your Lordſhip.

L. Angleſey. And ſate down on the other ſide of my Lord of Bedford, and he began to comfort my Lord, and the Arguments he uſed for his Comfort, were, My Lord, You are happy in having a wiſe Son, and a Worthy Perſon, one that can never ſure be in ſuch a Plot as this, or ſuſpected for it, and that may give your Lordſhip reaſon to expect a very good Iſſue concerning him, I know nothing againſt him, or any Body elſe, of ſuch a Barbarous Deſign, and therefore your Lordſhip may be comforted in it. I did not hear this only from my Lord Howard's Mouth, but at my own home upon the Monday after, for I uſe to go to Totteridge for freſh Air; I went down on Saturday, this happen'd to be on Friday, (my Lord being here, I am glad, for he can't forget this Diſcourſe,) and when I came to Town on Monday, I underſtood that my Lord Howard upon that very Sunday had been at Church with my Lady Chaworth. My Lady has a Chaplain, it ſeems, that preaches there, and does the Offices of the Church, but my Lady came to me in the Evening. This I have from my Lady———

L. C. J. My Lord, What you have from my Lady is no kind of Evidence at all.

L. Angleſey. I don't know what my Lord is, I am acquainted with none of the Evidence; nor what hath been done. But my Lady Chaworth came to me, and acquainted me, There was ſome Suſpicion——

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I don't think it fit for me to interrupt a Perſon of your Honour, my Lord, but your Lordſhip knows in what place we ſtand

ſtand here, what you can ſay of any thing you heard of my Lord Howard, we are willing to hear, but the other is not Evidence. As the Court will not let us offer Hear-ſays, ſo neither muſt we that are for the King permit it.

L. Angleſey. I have told you what happened in my Hearing.

Then Mr. Howard ſtood up.

L. C. J. Come Mr. Howard, What do you know?

Mr. Howard. I muſt deſire to ſay ſomething of my ſelf and my Family firſt: My Lord and I have been very intimate, not only as Relations, but as dear Friends. My Lord, I have been of a Family known to have great Reſpect and Duty for the King, and I think there is no Family in the Nation ſo numerous, that hath expreſſed greater Loyalty, upon which account I improved my Intereſt in my Lord Howard; I endeavoured, upon the great Miſunderſtanding of the Nation, (if he be here he knows it,) to perſwade him to apply himſelf to the King, to ſerve him in that great difficulty of State, which is known to all the World. I ſometimes found my Lord very forward, and ſometimes I ſoften'd him, upon which Parly, upon his Permiſſion, and more upon my own Inclination of Duty, I made ſeveral Applications to Miniſters of State, (and I can name them) that my Lord Howard had a great deſire of ſerving the King in the beſt way of Satisfaction, and particularly in the great Buſineſs of his Brother. I wonder'd there ſhould be ſo much ſharpneſs for a matter of Opinion, and I told my Lord ſo, and we had ſeveral Diſputes about it. My Lord, I do ſay this before I come to the thing. After this I did partly by his Permiſſion, and partly by my own Inclination, to ſerve the King, becauſe I thought my Lord Howard to be a Man of Parts, and ſaw him a Man that had Intereſt in the Nation, tell my Lord Feverſham, that I had prevailed with a Relation of mine, that may be he might think oppoſite, that perhaps might ſerve the King in this great Difficulty that is emergent, and particularly that of his Brother. My Lord Feverſham did receive it very kindly, and I writ a Letter to him to let him know how I had ſoften'd my Lord, and that it was my deſire he ſhould ſpeak with my Lord at Oxon. My Lord Feverſham gave me a very kind Account when he came again, but he told me——

L. C. J. Pray apply your ſelf to the matter you are called for.

Mr. Howard. This it may be is to the matter, when you have heard me; for I think I know where I am, and what I am to ſay.

L. C. J. We muſt deſire you not to go on thus.

Mr. Howard. I muſt ſatisfy the World, as well as I can, as to my ſelf, and my Family, and pray do not interrupt me. After this, my Lord, there never paſſed a Day for almoſt——

L. C. J. Pray ſpeak to this matter.

Mr. Howard. Sir, I am coming to it.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be directed by the Court.

Mr. Howard. Then now Sir, I will come to the Thing. Upon this ground I had of my Lord's Kindneſs, I applied my ſelf to my Lord in this preſent Iſſue, on the breaking out of this Plot. My Lord, I thought certainly, as near as I could diſcern him, (for he took it upon his Honour, his Faith, and as much as if he had taken an Oath before a Magiſtrate,) that he knew nothing of any Man concerned in this Buſineſs, and particularly of my Lord Ruſſel, whom he vindicated with all the Honour in the World. My Lord, it is true, was afraid of his own Perſon, and as a Friend, and a Relation, I concealed him in my Houſe, and I did not think it was for ſuch a Conſpiracy, but I thought he was unwilling to go to the Tower for nothing again. So that if my Lord Howard has the ſame Soul on Monday that he had on Sunday, this can't be true that he ſwears againſt my Lord Ruſſel. This I ſay upon my Reputation, and Honour, and ſomething I could ſay more, he added, he thought my Lord Ruſſel did not only unjuſtly ſuffer, but he took God and Men to Witneſs, He thought him the worthieſt Perſon in the World, I am very ſorry to hear any Man of my Name ſhould be guilty of theſe Things.

L. Ruſſel. Call Dr. Burnet. Pray Dr. Burnet, Did you hear any thing from my Lord Howard, ſince the Plot was diſcover'd, concerning me?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord Howard was with me the Night after the Plot broke out, and he did then, as he had done before, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, ſay he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believed any, and treated it with great Scorn and Contempt.

L. Howard. My Lord, May I ſpeak for my ſelf?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. No, no, my Lord, we don't call you.

L. C. J. Will you pleaſe to have any other Witneſſes called?

L. Ruſſel. There are ſome Perſons of Quality, that I have been very well acquainted and converſed with, I deſire to know of them, if there was any thing in my former Carriage, to make them think me like to be Guilty of this? My Lord Cavendiſh.

L. Cavendiſh. I had the Honour to be acquainted with my Lord Ruſſel a long time, I always thought him a Man of great Honour, and too prudent and wary a Man to be concerned in ſo vile and deſperate a Deſign as this, and from which he would receive ſo little Advantage; I can ſay nothing more, but that two or three Days ſince the Diſcovery of this Plot, upon Diſcourſe about Colonel Rumſey, my Lord Ruſſel did expreſs ſomething, as if he had a very ill Opinion of the Man, and therefore it is not likely he would intruſt him with ſuch a Secret.

L. Ruſſel. Dr. Tillotſon. [He appears.

L. C. J. What Queſtions would you ask him, my Lord?

L. Ruſſel. He and I, happened to be very converſant. To know whether he did ever find any thing tending to this in my Diſcourſe?

L. C. J. My Lord calls you as to his Life, and Converſation, and Reputation.

Dr. Tillotſon. My Lord, I have been many Years laſt paſt acquainted with my Lord Ruſſel, I always judged him a Perſon of great Virtue, and Integrity, and by all the Converſation and Diſcourſe I ever had with him, I always took him to be a Perſon very far from any ſuch wicked Deſign he ſtands charged with.

L. Ruſſel.

L. Ruſſel. Dr. Burnet. If you pleaſe to give ſome account of my Converſation.

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, I have had the Honour to be known to my Lord Ruſſel ſeveral Years, and he hath declared himſelf with much Confidence to me, and he always upon all Occaſions expreſſed himſelf againſt all Riſings, and when he ſpoke of ſome People that would provoke to it, he expreſſed himſelf ſo determined againſt that matter, I think no Man could do more.

L. C. J. Will your Lordſhip call any other Witneſſes?

L. Ruſſel. Dr. Cox.

Dr. Thomas Cox ſtood up.

Dr. Cox. My Lord, I did not expect to have been ſpoken to upon this Account. Having been very much with my Lord of late, that is, for a Month or ſix Weeks before this Plot came out, I have had occaſion to ſpeak with my Lord in private, about theſe Publick Matters. But I have always found that my Lord was againſt all kind of Riſings, and thought it the greateſt Folly and Madneſs till things ſhould come in a Parliamentary way. I have had occaſion often to ſpeak with my Lord Ruſſel in private, and having my ſelf been againſt all kind of Riſings, or any thing that tended to the Diſorder of the Publick, I have heard him profeſs ſolemnly, he thought it would ruin the beſt Cauſe in the World to take any of theſe irregular ways for the preſerving of it, and particularly my Lord hath expreſſed himſelf occaſionally of theſe two Perſons, my Lord Howard and Colonel Rumſey. One of them, Colonel Rumſey, I ſaw once at my Lord's Houſe, and he offered to ſpeak a little privately. But my Lord told me he knew him but a little, I told him he was a valiant Man, and acted his Part valiantly in Portugal. He ſaid he knew him little, and that he had nothing to do with him but in my Lord Shaftsbury's Buſineſs. He ſaid, for my Lord Howard, he was a Man of excellent Parts, of luxuriant Parts, but he had the Luck not to be much truſted by any Party. And I never heard him ſay one Word of Indecency or Immodeſty towards the King.

L. Ruſſel. I would pray the Duke of Somerſet, to ſpeak what he knows of me.

D. of Som. I have known my Lord Ruſſel for about two Years, and have had much Converſation with him, and been often in his Company, and never heard any thing from him, but what was very Honourable, Loyal, and Juſt.

L. C. J. My Lord does ſay, that he has known my Lord Ruſſel for about two Years, and hath had much Converſation with him, and been much in his Company, and never heard any thing from him, but what was Honourable, and Loyal, and Juſt, in his Life.

Foreman of the Jury. The Gentlemen of the Jury deſire to ask my Lord Howard ſomething upon the Point my Lord Angleſey teſtified, and to know what Anſwer he makes to my Lord Angleſey.

L. C. Bar. My Lord, What ſay you to it, that you told his Father he was a diſcreet Man, and he needed not to fear his Engagement in any ſuch thing?

L. Howard. My Lord, If I took it right, my Lord Angleſey's Teſtimony did branch it ſelf into Two Parts, one of his own Knowledge, and the other by Hear-ſay; as to what he ſaid of his own Knowledge, when I waited upon my Lord of Bedford, and endeavoured to comfort him, concerning his Son, I believe I ſaid the Words my Lord Angleſey has given an account of, as near as I can remember, that I looked upon his Lordſhip, as a Man of that Honour, that I hoped he might be ſecure, that he had not entangled himſelf in any thing of that nature. My Lord, I can hardly be provoked to make my own Defence, leſt this Noble Lord ſhould ſuffer, ſo willing I am to ſerve my Lord, who knows I can't want Affection for him. My Lord, I do confeſs I did ſay it; for your Lordſhip well knows under what Circumſtances we were, I was at that time to outface the thing, both for my ſelf, and my Party, and I did not intend to come into this Place, and act this Part. God knows how it is brought upon me, and with what Unwillingneſs I do ſuſtain it, but my Duty to God, the King, and my Country, requires it, but I muſt confeſs, I am very ſorry to carry it on thus far. My Lord, I do confeſs I did ſay ſo, and if I had been to viſit my Lord Pemberton, I ſhould have ſaid ſo. There is none of thoſe that know my Lord Ruſſel, but would ſpeak of my Lord Ruſſel, from thoſe Topicks of Honour, Modeſty, and Integrity, his whole Life deſerves it. And I muſt confeſs, I did frequently ſay, there was nothing of Truth in this, and I wiſh this may be for my Lord's Advantage. My Lord, will you ſpare me one thing more, becauſe that leans hard upon my Reputation, and if the Jury believe that I ought not to be believed, for I do think the Religion of an Oath is not tyed to a Place, but receives its Obligation from the Appeal we therein make to God, and, I think, if I called God and Angels to witneſs to a Falſhood, I ought not to be believed now. But I will tell you as to that, your Lordſhip knows, that very Man that was Committed, was Committed for a Deſign of Murdering the King; now I did lay hold on that part, for I was to carry my Knife cloſe between the Paring and the Apple, and I did ſay, that if I were an Enemy to my Lord Ruſſel, and to the Duke of Monmouth, and were called to be a Witneſs, I muſt have declared in the Preſence of God and Man, that I did not believe either of them had any Deſign to murder the King. I have ſaid this, becauſe I would not walk under the Character of a Perſon, that would be perjured at the Expence of ſo Noble a Perſon's Life, and my own Soul.

L. Ruſſel. My Lord Clifford.

L. C. J. What do you pleaſe to ask my Lord Clifford?

L. Ruſſel. He hath known my Converſation for many Years.

L. Clifford. I always took my Lord to be a very Worthy Honeſt Man, I never ſaw any thing in his Converſation to make me believe otherwiſe.

L. Ruſſel. Mr. Gore.

Mr. Luton Gore. I have been acquainted with my Lord ſeveral Years, and converſed much with him; in all the Diſcourſe I had with him, I never heard him let any thing fall that tended in the leaſt to any Riſing, or any thing like it: I took him to be one of the beſt Sons, one of the beſt Fathers, and one of the beſt Maſters, one of the beſt Husbands, one of the beſt beſt Friends, and one of the beſt Chriſtians we had. I know of no Diſcourſe concerning this matter.

L. Ruſſel. Mr. Spencer, and Dr. Fitz-Williams.

Mr. Spencer. My Lord, I have known my Lord Ruſſel many Years, I have been many Months with him in his Houſe; I never ſaw any thing by him, but that he was a moſt Virtuous and Prudent Gentleman, and he had Prayers conſtantly twice a Day in his Houſe.

L. C. J. What, as to the general Converſation of his Life, my Lord asks you, whether it hath been ſober?

Mr. Spencer. I never ſaw any thing but very good, very prudent, and very virtuous.

L. Ruſſel. What Company did you ſee uſed to come to me?

Mr. Spencer. I never ſaw any but his near Relations, or his own Family. I have the Honour to be related to the Family.

Then Dr. Fitz-Williams ſtood up.

L. Ruſſel. If it pleaſe you, Doctor, you have been at my Houſe ſeveral times, give an account of what you know of me.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I have had the Knowledge of my Lord theſe fourteen Years, from the time he was married to his preſent Lady, to whoſe Father, Eminent for Loyalty, I had a Relation by Service; I have had Acquaintance with him both at Stratton and Southampton Buildings, and by all the Converſation I had with him, I eſteemed him a Man of that Virtue, that he could not be guilty of ſuch a Crime as the Conſpiracy he ſtands charged with.

L. C. J. My Lord, Does your Lordſhip call any more Witneſſes?

L. Ruſſel. No, my Lord, I will be very ſhort. I ſhall declare to your Lordſhip that I am one that have always had a Heart ſincerely Loyal and Affectionate to the King and the Government, the beſt Government in the World. I pray as ſincerely for the King's happy and long Life as any Man alive; and for me to go about to raiſe a Rebellion, which I looked upon as ſo wicked and unpracticable, is unlikely. Beſides, if I had been inclined to it, by all the Obſervation I made in the Country, there was no tendency to it. What ſome hot-headed People have done there, is another thing. A Rebellion can't be made now as it has been in former times; we have few great Men. I was always for the Government, I never deſired any thing to be redreſſed but in a Parliamentary and Legal Way. I have been always againſt Innovations, and all Irregularities whatſoever, and ſhall be as long as I live, whether it be ſooner or later. Gentlemen, I am now in your Hands eternally, my Honour, my Life, and all; and I hope the Heats and Animoſities that are amongſt you will not ſo byaſs you, as to make you in the leaſt inclined to find an Innocent Man Guilty. I call to witneſs Heaven and Earth, I never had a Deſign againſt the King's Life in my life, nor never ſhall have. I think there is nothing proved againſt me at all. I am in your Hands, God direct you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted for High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King. The Overt Act that is laid to prove that Conſpiracy and Imagination by, is the Aſſembling in Council to raiſe Arms againſt the King, and raiſe a Rebellion here. We have proved that to you by three Witneſſes. I ſhall endeavour as clearly as I can to ſtate the ſubſtance of the Evidence to you, of every one of them as they have delivered it.

The firſt Witneſs Colonel Rumſey comes, and he tells you of a Meſſage he was ſent of to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe to my Lord Ruſſel, with ſeveral other Perſons who he was told would be there aſſembled together. And the Meſſage was to know what Readineſs they were in, what Reſolutions they were come to concerning the Riſing at Taunton. By this you do perceive that this Conſpiracy had made ſome Progreſs, and was ripe to be put in action. My Lord Shaftsbury that had been a great Contriver in it, he had purſued it ſo far, as to be ready to riſe. This occaſioned the Meſſage from my Lord Shaftsbury to my Lord Ruſſel, and thoſe Noble Perſons that were met at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, to know what the Reſolution was concerning the Buſineſs of Taunton, which you have heard explained by an Undertaking of Mr. Trenchard's: That the Anſwer was, they were diſappointed there, and they could not then be ready, and that my Lord Shaftsbury muſt be content. This Meſſage was delivered in preſence of my Lord Ruſſel; the Meſſenger had notice my Lord Ruſſel was there; the Anſwer was given as from them all, That at preſent they could not be ready, becauſe of that Diſappointment. Colonel Rumſey went further, and he ſwears there was a Diſcourſe concerning the ſurprizing of the Guards; and the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, went to ſee what poſture they were in, whether it were feaſible to ſurprize them, and they found them very remiſs; and that account they brought back, as is proved to you by Mr. Sheppard, the other Witneſs, That it was a thing very feaſible. But to conclude with the ſubſtance of Colonel Rumſey's Evidence, he ſays, my Lord was privy to it, that he had Diſcourſe among the reſt of it, tho' my Lord was not a Man of ſo great Diſcourſe as the reſt, and did talk of a Riſing. He told you there was a Riſing determined to be on the 19th of November laſt, which is the ſubſtance of Colonel Rumſey's Evidence.

Gentlemen, the next Witneſs is Mr. Sheppard, and his Evidence was this: He ſwears that about October laſt, Mr. Ferguſon came to him of a Meſſage from the Duke of Monmouth, to let him know, that he and ſome other Perſons of Quality would be there that Night; that accordingly they did meet, and my Lord Ruſſel was there likewiſe; that they did deſire to be private, and his Servants were ſent away; and that he was the Man that did attend them. He ſwears there was a Diſcourſe concerning the way and method to ſeize the Guards; he goes ſo far, as to give an account of the Return of the Errand the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong went upon, That it was feaſible, if they had Strength, to do it. Then he went a little farther, and he told you there was a Paper read, that in his Evidence does not come up to my Lord Ruſſel, for he did not ſay my Lord Ruſſel was by, and I would willingly repeat nothing but what concerns the Priſoner. This therefore Colonel Rumſey and Mr. Sheppard agree in, That there was a Debate among them how to ſurprize the Guards, and whether that was feaſible, and Mr. Sheppard is poſitive as to the return made upon the view.

The next Witneſs was my Lord Howard; he gives you an account of many things, and many things that he tells you are by Hear-ſay. But I cannot but obſerve to you, that all this Hear-ſay is confirmed by theſe two poſitive Witneſſes, and their Oaths agree with him in it. For my Lord Shaftsbury told him of the diſappointment he had met with from theſe Noble Perſons that would not joyn with him; and then he went from my Lord Shaftsbury to the Duke of Monmouth to expoſtulate with him about it (for my Lord Shaftsbury then was ready to be in action) and that the Duke ſaid he always told him he would not engage at that time. This thing is confirmed to you by theſe two Witneſſes. Col. Rumſey ſays, when he brought the Meſſage from my Lord Shaftsbury, the Anſwer was, They were not ready, my Lord muſt be contented.

Next he goes on with a diſcourſe concerning my Lord Shaftsbury, (that does not immediately come up to the Priſoner at the Bar, but it manifeſts there was a deſign at that time) he had 10000 brisk Boys (as he called them) ready to follow him upon the holding up his finger. But it was thought not ſo prudent to begin it, unleſs they could joyn all their Forces. So you hear in this they were diſappointed: And partly by another accident too, my Lord Howard had an apprehenſion it might be diſcovered, that was upon the Proclamation that came out forbidding Bonfires, to prevent the ordinary Tumults that uſed to be upon thoſe occaſions. Then my Lord Howard goes on and comes particularly to my Lord Ruſſel, for upon this diſappointment, you find my Lord Shaftsbury thought fit to be gone. But after that, the Deſign was not laid aſide; for you hear, they only told him all along, they could not be ready at that time, but the Deſign went on ſtill to raiſe Arms, and then they took upon themſelves to conſult of the methods of it; and for the carrying it on with the greater ſecrecy, they choſe a ſelect Council of Six, which were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Eſſex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Hambden, and Colonel Sidney. That accordingly they met at Mr. Hambden's (there was their firſt meeting) and their Conſultation there was, how the Inſurrection ſhould be made, whether firſt in London, or whether firſt in the Country, or whether both in London and in the Country at one time. They had ſome Debates among themſelves that it was fitteſt firſt to be in the Country; for if the King ſhould ſend his Guards down to ſuppreſs them, then the City that was then as well diſpoſed to riſe, would be without a Guard, and eaſily effect their Deſigns here.

Their next meeting was at my Lord Ruſſel's own Houſe, and there their Debates were ſtill about the ſame matter, how to get in Scotland to their Aſſiſtance, and in order to that, they did intruſt Col. Sidney one of their Council, to ſend a Meſſenger into Scotland for ſome Perſons to come hither, my Lord Melvile, Sir Hugh Cambell, and Sir John Cockram. Accordingly Col. Sidney ſends Aaron Smith (but this is only what Col. Sidney told my Lord afterwards, that he had done it, but) you ſee the fruit of it. Accordingly they are come to Town, and Sir Hugh Cambell is taken by a Meſſenger upon his arrival; and he had been but four days in Town, and he had changed his Lodging three times.

Now Gentlemen, this is the ſubſtance of the Evidence that hath been produced againſt my Lord Ruſſel. My Lord Ruſſel hath made ſeveral Objections, That he was accidentally at this meeting at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, and came about other buſineſs; but I muſt obſerve to you, that my Lord Ruſſel own'd that he came along with the Duke of Monmouth, and I think, he ſaid, he went away with him too. You obſerve what Mr. Sheppard's Evidence was: Mr. Ferguſon came to tell him the Duke of Monmouth would come; and accordingly the Duke of Monmouth did come, and brought his Companion along with him, which was my Lord Ruſſel; and certainly they that met upon ſo ſecret an Affair, would never have brought one that had not been concerned. Gentlemen, there are other Objections my Lord hath made, and thoſe are in point of Law; but before I come to them, I would obſerve what he ſays to the ſecond Meeting. My Lord does not deny but that he did meet both at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, and my Lord's own: I think my Lord ſaid they did meet only to diſcourſe of News; and my Lord Howard being a man of excellent diſcourſe, they met for his Converſation. Gentlemen, you can't believe that this deſigned Meeting was for nothing, in this cloſe ſecret Meeting that they had no Contrivance among them. You have heard the Witneſs, he ſwears poſitively what the Converſation was, and you ſee the fruit of it, Sir Hugh Cambell's coming to Town, and abſconding when it is diſcovered. Now my Lord Ruſſel inſiſts upon it, that admitting theſe Facts be proved upon him, they amount to no more than to a Conſpiracy to levy War, and that that is not Treaſon within the Statute of 25 E. 3. and if it be only within the Statute of the 13th of this King, then 'tis out of time, that directs the Proſecution to be within ſix months: The Law is plainly otherwiſe. The Statute of the 13th of this King I will not now inſiſt upon, though I believe if that be ſtrictly looked into, the clauſe that ſays the Proſecution ſhall be within ſix months, does not refer to Treaſon, but only to the other Offences that are highly puniſhable by that Statute. For the Proviſo runs thus:

13 Car. 2. Provided always, that no Perſon be proſecuted for any of the Offences in this Act mentioned, (other than ſuch as are made and declared to be High-Treaſon) unleſs it be by Order of the King's Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, under his or their Sign Manual, or by order of the Council-Table of his Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors, directed unto the Attorney General for the time being, or ſome other Council learned to his Majeſty, his Heirs or Succeſſors for the time being: Nor ſhall any Perſon or Perſons by virtue of this preſent Act, incur any the Penalties herein before mentioned, unleſs he or they be proſecuted within ſix months next after the Offence committed, and indicted thereupon within three months after ſuch proſecution; any thing herein contained to the contrary notwithſtanding.

This

This word (Nor) is a Continuation of the former Sentence, and the exception of High-Treaſon will go through all, and except that out of the temporary limitation of Treaſon: But this is High-Treaſon within 25 E. 3. To conſpire to levy War, is an Overt Act to teſtifie the deſign of the death of the King. And the Error of my Lord Coke hath poſſibly led my Lord into this miſtake. But this, Gentlemen, hath been determined; it was reſolved by all the Judges in the Caſe of my Lord Cobham, 1 Jac. A Conſpiracy to levy War againſt the King's Perſon (as this was a Conſpiracy to ſeize the Guards) what does that tend to but to ſeize the King? And that always hath been taken to be High-Treaſon. But there are ſome things called levying of War in Law, that are not ſo directly againſt the King, as if a number of men go about to levy Men to overthrow all Incloſures, this by the generality of the Intent, and becauſe of the conſequences, is accounted levying War againſt the King. A Conſpiracy therefore to levy ſuch a War which by conſtruction only is againſt the King, perhaps that may not be ſuch an Overt Act, as to teſtifie the imagination of the death of the King; but other Conſpiracies to raiſe War againſt the King have always ſo been taken. 'Tis the Reſolution of all the Judges in my Lord Dyer's Reports, the Caſe of Dr. Story: A Conſpiracy to invite a Foreign Prince to make an Invaſion, though no Invaſion follow, is an Overt Act to prove the conſpiring the Death of the King; and as it has been ſo taken, ſo it hath been practiſed but of late days. In the King's Bench I take it, the Indictment againſt Plunket that was hanged, he was indicted for Conſpiring againſt the Life of the King, and his Charge went no further than for raiſing of Arms, and inviting the French King in, and he ſuffered. This is acknowledged by my Lord Coke, for he himſelf ſaid in the Paragraph before that out of which this advice to my Lord Ruſſel is extracted, That a Conſpiracy to invite a Foreign Prince to invade the Kingdom, is a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King. And in the next Paragraph, he ſays an Overt Act of one Treaſon cannot be an Overt Act of another Treaſon; but conſtant Practice is againſt him in that: For what is more common than to indict a Man for imagining the Death of the King, and to aſſign the Overt Act in a Conſpiracy to raiſe Arms againſt the King? And ſometimes they go on and ſay, Did levy War againſt the King. Now by my Lord Coke's Rule, levying War, unleſs the Indictment be particular for that, is not an Overt Act for the compaſſing the Death of the King; but the contrary hath been reſolved by all the Judges in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane, and it is the conſtant practice to lay it ſo in Indictments. It would be a ſtrange conſtruction if this ſhould not be High-Treaſon. 'Tis agreed by every body, to take the King Priſoner, to ſeize the King, that is a compaſſing of the Death of the King; And to ſit in council to conſpire to effect that, that is an Overt Act of the imagination of the Death of the King: Now no man can diſtinguiſh this caſe from that; And this Conſultation amounted to all this, for plainly thither it tended. The Conſultation was to ſeize upon the King's Guards, that could have no other ſtop but to ſeize upon the King's Perſon, and bring him into their Power. As to the killing of the King, I am apt to think that was below the honour of the Priſoner at the Bar; But this is equal Treaſon: If they deſigned only to bring the King into their Power, till he had conſented to ſuch things as ſhould be moved in Parliament, 'tis equally Treaſon as if they had agreed directly to aſſaſſinate him. Therefore I think there is nothing for you to conſider, but to ſee that the Fact be fully proved; and I ſee nothing that hath been ſaid by my Lord Ruſſel that does invalidate our Evidence. He hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes, Perſons of Honour; my Lord Angleſey he tells you of a diſcourſe my Lord Howard had with my Lord of Bedford; That he told my Lord of Bedford that he needed not to fear, for he had a wiſe and underſtanding Son, and could not think he ſhould be guilty of any ſuch thing as was laid to his Charge. This is brought to invalidate my Lord Howard's teſtimony. Gentlemen, do but obſerve, My Lord Howard was as deep in as any of them, and was not then diſcovered: Is it likely that my Lord Howard, that lay hid, ſhould diſcover to my Lord of Bedford, that there was a Conſpiracy to raiſe Arms, and that he was in it? This would have been an Aſperſion upon my Lord of Bedford, that any ſuch thing ſhould have been ſaid.

Mr. Edward Howard is the next, and he proves, That my Lord Howard uſed ſolemn proteſtations that he knew nothing of this Conſpiracy. I did obſerve, that worthy Gentleman in the beginning of his Diſcourſe (for it was pretty long) ſaid firſt that he had been ſeveral times tempting my Lord Howard to come over, and be ſerviceable to the King, and if he knew any thing, that he would come and confeſs it. Why, Gentlemen, Mr. Howard that had come to him upon theſe Errands formerly, and had thought he had gained him, I conceive you do not wonder if my Lord Howard did not reveal himſelf to him, who preſently would have diſcovered it, for, for that Errand he came. But if my Lord had had a deſign to have come in and ſaved his Life, he would have made his ſubmiſſion voluntarily, and made his Diſcovery. But my Lord tells nothing till he is pinched in his Conſcience, and confounded with the Guilt (being then in cuſtody) and then he tells the whole truth, that which you have heard this day.

Gentlemen, this hath been all that hath been objected againſt the Witneſſes, except what is ſaid by Dr. Burnet; and, he ſays, that my Lord Howard declared to him, that he believed there was no Plot, and laughed at it. Why, Gentlemen, the Dr. would take it ill to be thought a perſon fit to be intruſted with the diſcovery of this; therefore what he ſaid to him ſignifies nothing, for 'tis no more than this, that he did not diſcover it to the Dr.

But the laſt Objection (which I ſee there has been a great many Perſons of Honour and Quality called to) is, That 'tis not likely my Lord Ruſſel ſhould be guilty of any thing of this kind, being a Man of that Honour, Virtue, and ſo little blameable in his whole Converſation. I do confeſs, Gentlemen, this is a thing that hath weight in it. But conſider on the other hand, my Lord Ruſſel, is but a Man, and hath his Human frailties about him. Men fall by ſeveral temp-

Temptations; Some out of Revenge, Some by Malice fall into ſuch Offences as theſe are: My Lord Ruſſel is not of that Temper, and therefore may be theſe are not the Ingredients here. But, Gentlemen, there is another great and dangerous Temptation that attends People in his Circumſtances, whether it be Pride or Ambition, or the cruel Snare of Popularity, being cryed up as a Patron of Liberty. This hath been a dangerous Temptation to many, and many Perſons of Virtue have fallen into it, and 'tis the only way to tempt Perſons of Virtue; and the Devil knew it, for he that tempted the Pattern of Virtue, ſhewed him all the Kingdoms of the World, and ſaid, All theſe will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worſhip me. Tho' he be a Perſon of Virtue, yet it does not follow, but his Virtue may have ſome weak Part in him. And I am afraid, theſe Temptations have prevailed upon my Lord. For I cannot give my ſelf any colour of Objection, to disbelieve all theſe Witneſſes who give in their Teſtimony. I ſee no Contradiction, no Correſpondence, no Contrivance at all between them. You have plain Oaths before you, and I hope you will conſider the Weight of them, and the great Conſequence that did attend this Caſe, the Overthrow of the beſt Government in the World, and the beſt and moſt unſpotted Religion, which muſt needs have ſuffered; the greateſt Liberty and the greateſt Security for Property that ever was in any Nation, bounded every way by the Rules of Law, and thoſe kept ſacred. I hope you will conſider the Weight of this Evidence, and conſider the Conſequences ſuch a Conſpiracy, if it had taken effect, might have had. And ſo I leave it to your Conſideration upon the Evidence you have heard.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Cauſe hath detained your Lordſhip a long time, by reaſon of ſo many Witneſſes being called, and the length of the Defence made by the Priſoner at the Bar; and if it had not been for the length I would not have injured your Patience by ſaying any thing, Mr. Sollicitor having taken ſo much Pains in it. It is a Duty incumbent upon me, under the Circumſtances I now ſtand, to ſee if any thing hath been omitted that hath not been obſerved to you; and I ſhall detain you with very few Words.

Gentlemen, You muſt give me leave to tell you, 'tis a Caſe of great conſequence, of great conſequence to that Noble Perſon that now is at the Bar, as well as to the King; for it is not deſired by the King nor by his Counſel, to have you influenced in this matter by any thing but by the Truth, and what Evidence you have received. You are not to be moved by Compaſſion or Pity, the Oath you have taken is to go according to your Evidence; and you are not to be moved by any Inſinuations that are offered by us for the King, nor by any Inſinuations by the Priſoner at the Bar; but the Truth, according to the Teſtimony given, muſt be your Guide. How far the Law will affect this Queſtion, that we are not to apply to you, for that we are to apply our ſelves to the Court (they are the Judges in point of Law) who will take ſo much care in their Directions to you, that you may be very well ſatisfied you will not eaſily be led into Error. For the Inſtances that have been put, I could put ſeveral others; But I will take notice only of one thing that that Noble Perſon at the Bar ſeems to object. Gentlemen, It is not neceſſary there ſhould be two Witneſſes to the ſelf-ſame Fact at the ſelf-ſame time; but if there be two Witneſſes tending to the ſelf-ſame Fact, tho' it was at ſeveral times, and upon ſeveral occaſions, they will be in point of Law two Witneſſes, which are neceſſary to convict a Man for High-Treaſon. Gentlemen, I make no doubt this thing is known to you all, not only by the Judgment of all the Judges in England, but the Judgment of the Lords in Parliament, when I doubt not the Priſoner at the Bar did attend in the Caſe of my Lord Stafford, wherein one Witneſs gave an account of a Conſpiracy in England, Turbervile of another in France; and by the Opinion of all my Lords the Judges approved in Parliament, that was enough, and he was Convicted.

The Queſtion is, Whether we have ſufficiently proved this matter. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, we rake no Goals, nor bring any profligate Perſons, Perſons that wanted Faith or Credit before this time. I muſt tell you, that notwithſtanding the fair Notice that hath been given to the Priſoner at the Bar (that you ſee he hath taken an Advantage of it, he hath given an account of a private Converſation with my Lord Howard before that Noble Perſon that was Witneſs againſt him was taken) he has not given you in all his Proof hitherto, nay I ſay, he has not pretended any thing in the World: Wherefore you, Gentlemen, that are upon your Oaths, ſhould take it upon your Conſciences, that two Men, againſt whom there is no Objection, ſhould come to damn their own Souls to take away the Life of this Gentleman, when there is no Quarrel, no Temptation wherefore theſe Gentlemen ſhould come in the face of a Court of Juſtice, in the face of ſuch an Auditory, without reſpect to that infinite Being to whom they appeal for Confirmation of the Truth of their Teſtimony: And if they had the Faith of Men or Chriſtians, they muſt neceſſarily conclude, That if they did ſwear to take away a Man's Life that was innocent, God would ſink them down preſently into Hell.

Gentlemen, In the next Place I muſt acquaint you, That the firſt Witneſs, Colonel Rumſey, it is apparent that he was taken notice of by the Priſoner as a Man fit to be truſted; he was engaged by my Lord Shaftsbury: But, ſays he, would any Man believe that that Man that had received ſo many Marks of the King's Favour, both in Advantage to his Eſtate, his Honour, and Perſon, could be ever contriving ſuch an helliſh Deſign as this? Gentlemen, If you will argue from ſuch uncertain Conjectures, then all Criminals will come off. Who ſhould think that my Lord of Eſſex, who had been advanced ſo much in his Eſtate and Honour, ſhould be guilty of ſuch deſperate things! which had he not been conſcious of, he would ſcarcely have brought himſelf to that untimely End, to avoid the Methods of publick Juſtice. Colonel Rumſey tells you, my Lord Shaftsbury was concerned in this Conſpiracy. I am ſorry to find that there have been ſo many of the Nobility of this Land that have lived ſo happily under the benign Influence of a Gracious Prince, ſhould make ſo ill Returns. Gentlemen, I muſt appeal to you, whether in your Obſervation you found Colonel Rumſey to be over-haſty and an over-zealous Witneſs; he did not come as if he came in ſpight to the Priſoner at the Bar; you found how we were forced to pump out every thing; but after he had been preſſed over and over again, then he came to it: So that I obſerve to you, that he was an unwilling Witneſs.

Gentlemen, Give me leave to obſerve to you, the Priſoner at the Bar, before ſuch time as Mr. Sheppard came up and gave Evidence againſt him, ſays he, I came only by accident, only to taſte a parcel of Wine. Mr. Sheppard when he comes up, he tells you, there was no ſuch Deſign. Ferguſon, that was the Perſon he kept Company with, the Reverend Dean and the reſt of the Clergy of the Church of England, they were not fit to be truſted with it, but this Independant Parſon Ferguſon, he gives notice of the Coming of theſe Perſons; and in purſuance of this notice they all come, they come late, in the Evening, not in the Poſture and Quality they uſe to go, for you find they had not ſo much as a Coach. Is it probable they came to taſte Wine? Wherefore did they go up into a Room? Wherefore did they order Mr. Sheppard that none of the Boys ſhould come up, but that the Maſter muſt fetch the Sugar and Wine himſelf? Wherefore you may perceive the Action they were upon, there were only to be ſuch Perſons as had an Affection for ſuch a Cauſe. You find purſuant to what Colonel Rumſey ſays, that there was a Direction to take a View of the Guards, that Sir Thomas Armſtrong comes back and makes this Report: Says he, I have taken notice they are in ſuch an idle careleſs Poſture, that it is not impoſſible to ſurprize them. This Mr. Sheppard he does not come, nor does he appear to you to come here out of any vindictive Humour, to do the Priſoner at the Bar any Hurt.

In the next place we have my Lord Howard, he comes and poſitively tells you, after he had given an account (for you obſerve there were two Parts to be acted in this horrid Tragedy; there was firſt the Scoundrel ſort of People were to be concerned to take away the Life of the King and the Duke, the Great Perſons were to head the Party in the Riſing) they put themſelves in proper Poſtures, each of them conſenting to ſomething of the Surprize, inaſmuch as you obſerve that Sir Thomas Armſtrong and ſome other Perſons might not be truſted. They come and reſolve themſelves out of a general Council, and they meet in a particular Council of Six, looking upon themſelves as the Heads of the Party: And I muſt tell you many of them (we live not in an Age of ſuch Obſcurity, but we know them) how fond have they been of the Applauſe of the People! As that Perſon encouraged himſelf yeſterday, they were Liberatores Patriæ, that could murder the King and the Duke.

My Lord, I muſt take notice that this Noble Lord is known to have an Intimacy with him; you obſerve with how much Tenderneſs he is pleaſed to deliver himſelf, how carefully he reports the Debates of the particular Conſults of the Perſons to be intruſted in the Management; he tells you, that Noble Lord the Priſoner at the Bar was pitched upon, and Algernoone Sidney, a Man famous about the Town: For what? To call in Parties from ſome of His Majeſty's other Dominions, Perſons we know ripe enough for Rebellion, to aſſiſt. Purſuant to this, you find Perſons ſent of a Meſſage for ſome to come over, whereof ſome are in hold: So that for all dark and obſcure ſort of Matters, nothing can be brought better to light, than this, of taking all Matters together; with the concurring Circumſtances of Time and Place.

Gentlemen, I muſt confeſs this Noble Lord hath given an account by ſeveral Honourable Perſons of his Converſation, which is a very eaſy matter. Do you think if any Man had a Deſign to raiſe a Rebellion againſt the Crown, that he would talk of it to the Reverend Divines, and the Noble Lords that are known to be of Integrity to the Crown? Do you think the Gentleman at the Bar would have ſo little Concern for his own Life, to make this Diſcourſe his ordinary Converſation? No, it muſt be a particular Conſult of Six, that muſt be entruſted with this. I tell you, 'tis not the Divines of the Church of England, but an Independant Divine, that is to be concerned in this; they muſt be Perſons of their own Complexion and Humour. For Men will apply themſelves to proper Inſtruments.

Gentlemen, I would not labour in this Caſe; for far be it from any Man to endeavour to take away the Life of the Innocent. And whereas that Noble Lord ſays, he hath a virtuous good Lady, he hath many Children, he hath Virtue and Honour he puts into the Scale: Gentlemen, I muſt tell you on the other ſide, You have Conſciences, Religion; you have a Prince, and a Merciful one too; conſider the Life of your Prince, the Life of his Poſterity, the Conſequences that would have attended if this Villany had taken effect. What would have become of your Lives and Religion? What would have become of that Religion we have been ſo fond of Preſerving? Gentlemen, I muſt put theſe things home upon your Conſciences. I know you will remember the horrid Murder of that moſt Pious Prince the Martyr, King Charles the Firſt. How far the Practices of thoſe Perſons have influenced the ſeveral Puniſhments ſince, is too great a Secret for me to examine. But now I ſay, you have the Life of a Merciful King, you have a Religion that every honeſt Man ought to ſtand by, and I am ſure every Loyal Man will venture his Life and Fortune for. You have your Wives and Children. Let not the Greatneſs of any Man corrupt you, but diſcharge your Conſciences both to God and the King, and to your Poſterity.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted before you of High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing and Deſigning the Death of the King, and in declaring of it by Overt Acts, endeavouring to raiſe Inſurrections and popular Commotions in the Kingdom here. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty. You have heard the Evidence that hath been againſt him, it hath been at large repeated by the King's Counſel, which will take off a great deal of my Trouble in repeating it to you again. I know you cannot but take notice of it, and remember it, it having been ſtated twice by two of the King's Counſel to you; 'tis long, and you ſee what the Parties here have proved.

proved. There is firſt of all Colonel Rumſey, he does atteſt a Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, and you hear to what purpoſe he ſays it was; the Meſſage that he brought, and the Return he had; it was to enquire concerning a Riſing at Taunton; and that he had in Return to my Lord Shaftsbury was, that Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and my Lord muſt be contented, for it could not be that time. You hear that he does ſay that they did deſign a Riſing; he ſaith there was a Riſing deſigned in November, I think he ſaith the 17th, upon the Day of Queen Elizabeth's Birth. You hear he does ſay, there was at that Meeting ſome Diſcourſe concerning inſpecting the King's Guards, and ſeeing how they kept themſelves, and whether they might be ſurprized; and this he ſays, was all in order to a Riſing. He ſays that at this my Lord Ruſſel was preſent. Mr. Sheppard does ſay, that my Lord Ruſſel was there: That he came into this Meeting with the Duke of Monmouth, and he did go away with the Duke of Monmouth, as he believes. He ſays there was ſome Diſcourſe of a Riſing or Inſurrection that was to be procured within the Kingdom, but he does not tell you the Particulars of any thing, he himſelf does not. My Lord Howard afterwards does come and tell you of a great Diſcourſe he had with my Lord Shaftsbury in order to a Riſing in the City of London, and my Lord Shaftsbury did value himſelf mightily upon 10000 Men he hoped to raiſe; and a great deal of Diſcourſe he had with my Lord Shaftsbury. This he does by way of inducement to what he ſays concerning my Lord Ruſſel. The Evidence againſt him is ſome Conſults that there were by ſix of them, who took upon them, as he ſays, to be a Council for the Management of the Inſurrection that was to be procured in this Kingdom. He inſtances in two that were for this purpoſe, the one of them at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, the other at my Lord Ruſſel's Houſe. And he tells you at theſe Meetings there was ſome Diſcourſe of providing Treaſure, and of providing Arms, but they came to no Reſult in theſe things. He tells you, that there was a Deſign to ſend for ſome of the Kingdom of Scotland that might joyn with them in this thing. And this is upon the matter the ſubſtance of the Evidence that hath been at large declared to you by the King's Counſel, and what you have heard. Now, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, ſome things it lies upon us to direct you in.

My Lord excepts to theſe Witneſſes, becauſe they are concerned by their own ſhewing in this Deſign: If there were any, I did direct (Some of you might hear me) yeſterday, that that was no ſufficient Exception againſt a Man's being an Evidence in the Caſe of Treaſon, that he himſelf was concerned in it; they are the moſt proper Perſons to be Evidence, none being able to detect ſuch Councils but them. You have heard my Lord Ruſſel's Witneſſes that he hath brought concerning them, and concerning his own Integrity and Courſe of Life, how it has been ſober and civil, with a great Reſpect to Religion, as theſe Gentlemen do all teſtify. Now the Queſtion before you will be, Whether upon this whole matter you do believe my Lord Ruſſel had any Deſign upon the King's Life, to deſtroy the King, or take away his Life, for that is the material Part here. 'Tis uſed and given you (by the King's Counſel) as an Evidence of this, That he did conſpire to raiſe an Inſurrection, and to cauſe a Riſing of the People, to make as it were a Rebellion within the Nation, and to ſurprize the King's Guards, which, ſay they, can have no other end but to ſeize and deſtroy the King; and 'tis a great Evidence (if my Lord Ruſſel did deſign to ſeize the King's Guards, and make an Inſurrection in the Kingdom) of a Deſign for to ſurprize the King's Perſon. It muſt be left to you upon the whole matter: You have not Evidence in this Caſe as there was in the other Matter that was tried in the morning, or yeſterday, againſt the Conſpirators to kill the King at the Rye. There was a direct Evidence of a Conſult to kill the King, that is not given you in this Caſe; This is an Act of Contriving Rebellion and an Inſurrection within the Kingdom, and to ſeize his Guards, which is urged as an Evidence, and ſurely is in it ſelf an Evidence, to ſeize and deſtroy the King.

Upon this whole matter this is left to you. If you believe the Priſoner at the Bar to have Conſpired the Death of the King, and in order to that to have had theſe Conſults that theſe Witneſſes ſpeak of, then you muſt find him Guilty of this Treaſon that is laid to his Charge.

Then the Court adjourned till four a Clock in the Afternoon, when the Jury brought the ſaid Lord Ruſſel in Guilty of the ſaid High-Treaſon.

THE

THE TRYAL OF JOHN ROUSE.

Thurſday, July 12. 1683. John Rouſe and William Blague being ſet to the Bar, and after holding up their Hands, the following Indictment was read.

London. THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, upon their Oaths preſent, That John Rouſe late of London Gent. and William Blague late of London Gent. as falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, their natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the true Duty, and natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King do bear, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and with their whole Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move and ſtir up; and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid Lord the King from his Title, Honour and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to put down and deprive; and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the ſecond Day of March, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, King of England, &c. the Five and Thirtieth, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, Maliciouſly and Traiterouſly with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, they did Conſpire, Compaſs, Imagine and Intend our ſaid Lord the King, their Supreme Lord, not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of this his Kingdom of England to deprive and throw down; but alſo our ſaid Lord the King to kill, and to Death to bring and put; and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, alter and wholly to ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King through his whole Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King to move, and ſtir up within this Kingdom of England. And to fulfil and perfect the ſaid moſt horrible Treaſons, and traiterous Conſpiracies, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid John Rouſe and William Blague, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, as falſe Traitors, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, they did aſſemble, meet together, and conſult between themſelves and with the ſaid other Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, and with them did treat of the taking and ſeizing the Tower of London, and of and for the executing and perfecting their Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid. And that they the ſaid John Rouſe and William Blague, as falſe Traitors, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, they and either of them did undertake, and to the ſaid other Traitors did promiſe for themſelves to be aiding and aſſiſting in the execution of the Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; and in providing Arms and Armed Men to fulfil and perfect the ſaid Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid. And the ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and bring to paſs, they the ſaid John Rouſe and William Blague, as falſe Traitors, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, then and there, did procure and prepare Arms, to wit, Blunderbuſſes, Carbines and Piſtols, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statutes in that caſe made and provided, &c.

Cl. of Cr. What ſayeſt thou, John Rouſe, Art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Rouſe. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Rouſe. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. What ſayeſt thou William Blague, Art thou guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Capt. Blague. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Capt. Blague. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Friday

Friday July 13. in the Afternoon, the Court being met, and Proclamation made.

Cl. of Cr. Set John Rouſe and William Blague to the Bar. You the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe good men that you hear called, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King upon Tryal of your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; if you will challenge them or any of them, your time is as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn. Nicholas Charlton.

Capt. Blague. I hope I ſhall only ſpeak for my ſelf.

Sir Edmond Saunders. L. C. J. Yes, You ſhall be heard.

Rouſe. My Lord, I have had no liberty ſo much as ſending for my Wife. Monday Morning they gave me notice of Tryal, but I have had no advantage of that notice; I preſumed it is meant we ſhould have the liberty of Subjects, but though notice was then given, yet I had not the liberty of ſending for any body till Wedneſday: It was 8 or 9 of the Clock on Wedneſday night that one came and told me, I ſhould have no liberty of Counſel, unleſs I had it from the Court; and yeſterday morning I found that Captain Blague and I were joyned in one Indictment, which alters the Caſe with ſubmiſſion to the Court. What time I have had for Tryal has been ſo ſhort, I have not been able to get my Witneſſes ready. I deſire nothing but as an Engliſh Man.

L. C. J. As an Engliſh Man? You can demand no time to prepare for Tryal, for thoſe that will commit crimes, they muſt be ready to anſwer for them, and defend themſelves. 'Tis Matter of Fact you are charged with, you knew long agoe what you were to be Tryed for, for you were taken up and charged with High-Treaſon. You might then reaſonably conſider what kind of Evidence would be againſt you; if you be an innocent Perſon, you may defend your ſelf without queſtion. But if you have done an ill thing, the Law does not deſign to give you time to ſhelter your ſelf under any ſubterfuge, or make any excuſe, or to prepare any Witneſſes to teſtify an untrue thing for you.

Rouſe. My Lord, I only beg a little time, I don't deſign to make any Evaſion, That I am innocent I thank God I am.

L. C. J. We can't give you any further time unleſs the King pleaſes, we are bound to Try thoſe he brings before us.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Becauſe Captain Blague does not deſire to be joyned to the other, we that are for the King are contented that Rouſe be Tryed firſt.

Then Captain Blague was taken away, and after ſeveral Perſons challenged by Rouſe, the Jury that were Sworn, were

Robert Beddingfield,	Jur'	Richard Hoare,
John Pelling,		Thomas Barnes,
William Windbury,		Henry Robbins,
Theophilus Man,		Henry Kempe,
John Short, Senior,		Edward Raddiſh,
Thomas Nicholas,		Edward Kempe.

Cl. of Cr. John Rouſe, Hold up thy hand. You of the Jury look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe; he ſtands Indicted,——Prout antea in the Indictment Mutatis mutandis; upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto Pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Tryal put himſelf upon his Country, which Country your are, your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Mr. Jones. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands Indicted for High Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and in order thereunto conſulting how to ſeize the Tower, and in providing of Arms in order to deſtroy the King and ſubvert the Government; if we prove it upon him, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. The Priſoner at the Bar was (as you have been acquainted) in that horrid Conſpiracy, whereof ſeveral of the Conſpirators have been brought to Tryal, and received a Verdict ſurely according to Evidence. The Priſoner at the Bar did bear a proportion among the reſt. It does occur to your memories, there were ſeveral undertakers that undertook ſeveral ſtations; ſome whereof were to undertake the blackeſt part of this horrid Villany, by the taking off the King and his Royal Highneſs his Brother; others (in order to the ſame deſign) were to ſeize upon the King's Guards, and ſo to deprive him of all manner of defence whatſoever, and to prevent all perſons to make any defence againſt them, as you heard there was another part to be acted, therefore the Town was to be divided into ſeveral Diviſions, I think there was Twenty, but the moſt numerous and beneficial parts were thought to be about Wapping. A particular part of the Evidence was, that the Tower was to be ſeized and the King's Arms there, I know you obſerved that they took notice of a particular place of the Tower that was moſt capable of acceſs. This Rouſe is a Gentleman very well known, 'tis not the firſt time he hath been at this Bar: He was here at a time when the common Juſtice of the Nation could not be obtained in this place, in ſo much that the Judges who came to execute Juſtice, had more reaſon to fear being executed upon the Bench than the Priſoner at the Bar. It may eaſily appear how far Mr. Rouſe was concerned (I don't love to aggravate matters, he has crimes enough) he was reckoned Pay-maſter to this Rabble, he was to take care to manage thoſe Perſons that were to ſeize upon the Tower. He is a Man of great skill in that ſubject, a Doctrine wherein he was well tutored under a Lord you heard mentioned this morning, but he is in his Grave, and ſo I ſhall ſay no more of him. We ſhall give you an account of a Deſign he had how to compaſs this buſineſs. Black-heath was looked upon as a convenient place, where there was to be a Golden Ball, for which the Sea-men were to play in great numbers, and he that won the prize was to have the Golden Ball, but his eye was upon the Tower all this while. He thought to allure theſe ſilly Sea-men by the advantage of the honourable winning of this Ball, and when they were fraighted with the ſucceſs of this meeting, then it was proper to attack the Tower. We ſhall prove the other Priſoner that was at the Bar, ingaged with this Priſoner at the Bar. We ſhall not only prove this, but that Mr. Rouſe hath been al-always of an inclination againſt the Government. We ſhall call you Witneſſes, that he hath undertaken to diſpute by what Authority the King comes to govern in England, that he hath ſaid he had forfeited his Government, that he told an ordinary Miſcreant one of his Levellers, that he had as much right to the Crown as he had. My Lord, if we prove this matter to your Lordſhip, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, it will be high time for us to endeavour to preſerve the Crown upon that Royal Head, upon which all Loyal Men deſire it ſhould flouriſh as long as the Sun and Moon indure.

Mr. Burton. Call Thomas Leigh.

[Who was ſworn.

Mr. Jones. Pray give us an account what you know concerning Mr. Rouſe.

Mr. North. Of any deſign againſt the King, and providing Arms.

Rouſe. If it pleaſe you my Lord, one word before he ſpeaks: I have an exception againſt him. I wonder with what confidence you can look in my face at this time.

King's Counſel. Nay, nay, ſpeak to the Court.

Rouſe. My Lord, he is a Perſon that before he was taken up, was ſwore by two perſons to have a hand in the Plot, one was Mr. Keeling, the other Mr. How of Old ſtreet, and then being taken up, and conſcious to himſelf that he was Guilty of ſuch notorious Crimes, and knowing I was pretty well acquainted with him, he was deadly afraid I ſhould come and Swear againſt him, and thereupon he took the boldneſs to Swear againſt me firſt.

Mr. North. My Lord, He hath offered nothing of Objection.

Rouſe. I ſuppoſe, with ſubmiſſion to the Court, without he have his Pardon, he is no Evidence in this Caſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Come tell us all you know.

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe you, my Lord, I have been concerned in this Conſpiracy, I know ſomething of it, but I believe Mr. Rouſe knows a great deal more. Mr. Rouſe takes me to the King's Head Tavern in Swithins Alley, where after ſome time Mr. Goodenough came, where there was a Club of Men that were in the Conſpiracy. I had ſeen Mr. Goodenough before, he acquainted me that there was an apprehenſion our Rights and Priviledges were Invaded, and it was time to look to our ſelves, for Popery was deſigned, and Arbitrary Power; and therefore he deſired to know whether I would engage in that Affair to prevent it, and withal he told me, the City of London and Middleſex was divided in Twenty parts, and he asked me to ingage in one part. I told him, my acquaintance did not lie where I lived, but I would get a part where my acquaintance was. I acquainted Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Goodenough what Men I had ſpoke to. Mr. Goodenough told me, the deſign was to ſet up the Duke of Monmouth, and kill the King and the Duke of York, but that all Parties muſt not know of it: But that we muſt tell ſome people there was like to be a Foreign Invaſion, and ask them what readineſs they were in, and if we found they were like to be compliant in that, then we might diſcourſe with them about the other Matter. I diſcourſed with ſeveral Men about this Affair: And he told me, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen were to be killed immediately, (eſpecially the preſent Lord Mayor Sir John Moore) and their houſes plundered, and there would be Riches enough, and that would help to maintain the Army, and we went on further in this Diſcourſe. Then I acquainted Mr. Rouſe with this buſineſs, but he knew of it before, and he did tell me he could provide Arms for an Hundred Men, and ſaid nothing was to be done unleſs the King was ſeized; ſaying, we remember ſince Forty One the King went and ſet up his Standard; Therefore (ſays he) we will ſeize them, that they ſhall not ſet up their Standard. But (ſays he) I am for ſeizing them, but not for ſhedding their Blood. Mr. Rouſe went off with that Diſcourſe, ſays he, I muſt ſpeak with Mr. Goodenough and ſome of thoſe that are principally concerned. Mr. Rouſe acquainted me, that it was a very convenient thing to have a Ball played upon Black-Heath, and to that end we muſt ſpeak to ſome Sea-Captains, and (ſays he) I will engage Ten, and they ſhall manage that Affair, and he that wins the Ball take it. But when they have ſo done, every Captain ſhall take his Party and tell them they have other work, and then go with long Boats and Arms and ſeize the Tower. I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with this, and Mr. Goodenough asked me the charge of the Golden Ball, Mr. Rouſe had told me it would be Ten or a Dozen Pounds; Mr. Goodenough ſaid if it was Forty Pound he would be at the charge of it all. Several ſuch Diſcourſes Mr. Rouſe hath in my hearing ſpoke to ſeveral Men at the King's Head Tavern. I underſtood I was Sworn againſt, I heard of it at the King's-Head Tavern in his Company and Mr. Goodenough's. Mr. Rouſe directed me to go to the Sun-Tavern near Moorgate, and he would come to me, and there Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Goodenough came to me, and Mr. Rouſe told me I ſhould lie at his Houſe. Mr. Rouſe cut off my Hair, and went to Mr. Bateman's and fetched me a Perriwigg; Mr. Rouſe and I went ſeveral times to view the Tower, and took Mate Lee along with us. So Mate Lee directed us to Traitors-Bridge, and he ſaid that was an eaſy place, and he would undertake to do it with an Hundred Men, ſo they had but hand Granadoes. We had ſome time before that appointed to meet at Wapping, to ſpeak with the Sea-Captains, Mr. Rouſe met the firſt day in order to this Buſineſs at the Amſterdam Coffee-houſe, and there Mr. Rouſe met with two Sea Captains (as he told me) that were to officiate in this Buſineſs, and the Two Captains he took to the Angel and Crown in Threadneedle ſtreet. A ſmall time after, about an hour and a half or thereabouts, Mr. Rouſe came, (I am not poſitive whether Mr. Goodenough was there or no) and told me, he had ſpoke to both the Sea-Captains, and they were willing, but one was going to New Jerſey, and therefore the work muſt be done before he went, or he could not aſſiſt: Another time he appointed Mate Lee to meet at the Anchor in Wapping. I did ſpeak to Mr. Goodenough, but he did not meet us, ſo that we could not go down that day, but Mr. Rouſe always undertook that Buſineſs to get Ten Sea-Captains, and get Arms for an Hundred Men. After I was Sworn againſt, and went to Mr. Rouſe's Houſe; the next day Mr. Nelthrop and Mr. Goodenough came to me to Mr. Rouſe's, ſays Mr. Rouſe, be not diſcouraged let the Buſineſs go on. I was directed by Mr. Nelthrop and Mr. Goodenough, when ever I was taken into Cuſtody, I ſhould deny all, and it could not touch my Life.

I thank him for his kindneſs, I lay well, and eat well at his Houſe, my Lord; but however I will tell the truth. We met afterwards ſeveral times, and went to Captain Blague's, and the reſt of the Company, but at different places. We had an account that Mr. Goodenough was in the North raiſing Men, and that the Duke of Monmouth was thereabouts, and that a Deliverance ſhould be wrought for all this.

L. C. J. About what time was this?

Mr. Leigh. In laſt June. The Deſign was ſo laid, that I was told it was to be done in a Fortnight. They never agreed on a way or method of killing the King, but they told me they had a Thouſand Horſe ready in the Country, and that there was Five Hundred Horſe or thereabouts ready in the Town, and that the King ſhould be killed coming from Windſor. Now they were contriving how to ſend Arms, that they might not be ſuſpected, to ſome private place, they were to be ſent in Trunks to ſome private Houſe, and there they were to Arm themſelves in the Night, and ſome Brick-men were to go to Windſor to know when the King came, and give Information, and ſo they were to ſet upon him in ſome convenient place, and both were to be taken off together, the King and the Duke; and Mr. Rouſe ſaid, take them off, and then no Man can have Commiſſion to fight for them.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He is a Politician every inch of him.

Mr. Jones. What did he employ you to do?

Mr. Leigh. I was employed by Mr. Goodenough to make all the Friends I could in this Engagement. I went into Spittle-fields and engaged ſome Weavers and other People. They promiſed me a Gratuity, but I never had any thing.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. If Mr. Rouſe has a mind to ask him any Queſtions.

Rouſe. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Propoſe your Queſtions to the Court.

Rouſe. I ask him by the Oath he has taken, Whether ever I ſpake with him of any Deſign againſt the King and Government? I ask you, whether you did not begin with me?

L. C. J. You hear his Queſtion, anſwer it.

Mr. Leigh. For that I anſwer, That Mr. Rouſe was the firſt Man that ever I heard propoſe that the King and the Duke ſhould be ſecured, and there is another thing come in my mind, Mr. Rouſe hath been a Traveller, he did preſume to ſay, and has ſaid to me, and in Company, that the King was Sworn in France and Spain to bring in Popery and Arbitrary Power in ſo many Years, and therefore it was no Sin to take him off, and he told me he had it under his own Hand.

Rouſe. It was impoſſible, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I do believe it. I do not believe he thought thee fit to be a Secretary.

L. C. J. Look you, if you would have any thing asked him, propoſe it to me.

Rouſe. What place was it I began to ſpeak of any thing of this Deſign?

Mr. Leigh. The King's-head.

Rouſe. Who was with us?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Goodenough and ſeveral others.

Rouſe. Was it diſcourſed of before them?

Mr. Leigh. No, You never diſcourſed of it before them.

Rouſe. You diſcourſed of going an Hay-making in the Country; ſays you, I will truſt them one alone, but ſays you, I am under an Oath of Secrecy not to communicate it but to one at a time, but I make bold to acquaint you with it; I give you an account what I heard from his own Mouth.

L. C. J. Look you, What you heard from him will ſignify nothing, unleſs you are able to make proof of it by other Witneſſes: If you will ask him any Queſtions, you ſhall. We will hear what you can ſay for your ſelf at laſt. But you muſt not invade the King's Evidence with any Diſcourſe at random.

Rouſe. Did I ever put you upon any thing of this nature? Did you not tell me, there was a Deſign to overturn the Government, but you would not ſhed Blood?

Mr. Leigh. I will anſwer; I can't be poſitive whether I came to Mr. Rouſe, or he to me. I had been in his Company ſeveral times before, and whether he diſcourſed it firſt to me, or I to him, I cannot tell; but when that Point was diſcourſed, he was very zealous to get ten Captains, and that the Ball might be played, and the Tower taken.

Rouſe. Did ever Mr. Goodenough and you and I meet upon ſuch an account?

Mr. Leigh. Yes, at the King's-head Tavern.

Rouſe. I can take my Oath I never ſaw Mr. Goodenough but twice in your Company, and I never knew you till May laſt.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. You came to a very ſtrict Alliance by that time it came to June.

Mate Lee ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Tell my Lord and the Jury what you know, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Lee. The whole Truth I will tell. About a Week before Midſummer or thereabouts I met Mr. Rouſe, I think it was in Pope's-head Alley, going to look after Captain Blague: Says Mr. Rouſe, I have ſomething to ſay to you, but he did forbear ſpeaking it then; ſo I went to the King's-head Tavern by the Exchange, we went into a little Room; ſays he, there is ſomething I would have you do. What's that? ſays I. Says he, can't you get ſome Sea-men fitting to make Commanders of Ships? I did not underſtand Mr. Rouſe's meaning in it, but I thought Mr. Rouſe being in Employment might put me in, being deſtitute of Employment as well as other Men. So after we did appoint to meet at Wapping, at the Sign of the Blew Anchor in Wapping-Dock. Says Mr. Rouſe, If I come not at ten of the Clock, do not look for me. Says he, Can you get no Men that are fit to make Commanders of Ships? Says I, I have no Acquaintance with any, I do not know but two or three: But, ſays I, I will ſee what I can do. I waited for Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Leigh next Day (both were to come.) The next Day I asked him, what he intended by the Commanders of the Ships? Where would he have thoſe Ships? He anſwered, ſome of the King's Men of War that lay at Deptford and Woolwich to make Guard-Ships. Says I, what will you do if you have no Powder and Shot? If you could take the Tower, then you might provide them with every thing fitting. Says Mr. Rouſe, We muſt ſecure cure the Tower and Whitehall both, or we can do nothing. Says I, Mr. Rouſe, where is your Oath of Allegiance then that is to the King? Says he, We will ſecure the King that he ſhall come to no Damage, and he ſhall remain King ſtill. If Mr. Rouſe hath any thing to object againſt what I ſay, I deſire to hear it, I ſpeak nothing but the truth.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you meet with him at any other time?

Lee. This was the firſt time he put out any ſuch thing to me, concerning any ſuch Contrivance.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Did you meet with him afterwards?

Lee. Yes, We had ſome Diſcourſe, it was to the ſame effect, but it ſignifies nothing, and my Memory being ſhallow, I do not exactly remember it. I know I muſt give an account of this before a greater Court than this.

Mr. Burton. Mr. Corbin.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. I did acquaint you, my Lord, that there was occaſion to make uſe of Evidence againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, I gave you an account how that Evidence was not received. Now I deſire to give you Proof, that the continual Inclination of this Man's Heart was the Killing of the King, and Deſtruction of the Government.

Mr. Thomas Corbin ſworn.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Pray, Sir, tell my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what Meetings you had heretofore with the Priſoner about the Year Eighty One or thereabouts. See whether you know him.

Mr. Corbin. What I have to ſay againſt Mr. Rouſe is only what I gave in Evidence to the Court before.

Rouſe. When was that?

Mr. Corbin. In Eighty One.

L. C. J. Pray what do you know of him? Don't tell us what you gave in Evidence, but you are on your Oath to ſpeak truth, not what you ſaid then.

Mr. Corbin. My Lord, Some few Days before the Members for the City of London went for Oxford, I happened to appoint a Gentleman (one Mr. Wyat) to meet me at Mr. Leech's in Cornhil. Mr. Rouſe came by, I knew him very well, he was concerned in the Commiſſion for Disbanding the Army as well as I. He came in, and ſaluted not only me but the Maſter of the Shop with How do you? He enter'd into Diſcourſe, and ſaid he intended to go for Oxford, and that he had agreed with the Coffee-men about Town to furniſh them with News; ſays he, there are ſeveral Gentlemen reſorting to your Shop, it would do well if you had it. Says Mr. Leech, what ſhall I give you? Says he, if you will go to the Tavern, we will agree it over a Glaſs of Wine. But Mr. Rouſe told me he had a Kindneſs to beg of me, and (ſays he) I would have you engage ſome of your Friends to deliver them ſpeedily to ſuch a Perſon I ſhall appoint, de die in diem; for, ſays he, if they be delivered by the ordinary Letter-Carrier, they won't turn to account, nor give ſatisfaction. By and by Mr. Wyat came in, (that I was to meet at the Stationers) Mr. Wyat asked me, what I thought of the Seſſions? Mr. Rouſe made anſwer, he did foreſee it would be a very ſhort Seſſions. Says he, theſe frequent Prorogations and Diſſolutions of the Parliament won't avail him, for whatever the King has, the Parliament gave him, and they may take it away when they pleaſe. One bid him have a care what he ſaid, and he reply'd, the King had forfeited his Crown, and had no more Right to it than he had.

L. C. J. Mr. Rouſe. If you would ask him any Queſtions, pray direct your ſelf to us and we will ask them.

Rouſe. I deſire he may be asked what was ſaid before and after?

L. C. J. Can you tell him? Do you know there was any previous or ſubſequent Diſcourſe to this, that might any way alter it?

Rouſe. It was the ſame Queſtion propounded in Eighty One.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray, Did he ſay the King had forfeited his Crown?

Mr. Corbin. Yes, and when he was rebuked for it, he reiterated it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We will trouble your Lordſhip but with one piece of Evidence more, only to give you an account Mr. Rouſe is a Man very well known in the City of London, yet when there were Officers came to ſeize him, he had forgot his Name of Rouſe, and did not remember it. Swear William Richardſon (which was done.) Pray tell my Lord, and the Jury, whether you were at the taking of this Mr. Rouſe, and what Name he went by.

Mr. Richardſon. I was upon the Fourth of July inſtant, to ſearch for one Armiger, and coming to Widow Hay's Coffee-houſe (I think they call it) the Widow told me there was no Man in the Houſe: I went down the Street and came back again, and one ſaid he ſaw a Man go into the Garden; ſays he, do you ſtay here and I will go and ſee; he ſaw this Gentleman, ſays he, what is your Nume? He ſaid Johnſon, I asked him and he ſaid Johnſon. I told him, we muſt have an account of him. Some ſaid they did not know him. We went to the Half-Moon Tavern in Alderſgate-ſtreet, he ſent for other Men, they ſaid they did know him, but they could ſay nothing in his behalf.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Is that the Man, Johnſon?

Mr. Richardſon. That is the Man that ſaid his Name was Johnſon.

L. C. J. Look you now, Mr. Rouſe, this is your time to ſpeak for your ſelf. What have you to ſay to this that is charged upon you? You hear the firſt Witneſs does ſay, That you would have engaged him in a Deſign of raiſing of Men, and you told him you deſigned to ſurprize the Tower, and to that purpoſe he ſurveyed it with you, and you told him what your Deſign was you met Mr. Goodenough about, it was to raiſe Men. Goodenough was for Killing the King, you, it ſeems, at firſt was but for ſecuring the King, and making him do what you pleaſe; but afterwards it was come to an higher matter, and then you had found out a way to engage ſome Captains to ſeize the Tower, and others were to ſeize Whitehall, both were to be done at once. What ſay you to this? (Here are three Witneſſes that teſtify very ſtrongly againſt you) and the Device you had to get Men to Black-heath to ſecure the Tower.

Rouſe. My Lord, I ſtand here for my Life; it never enter'd into my Heart, nor came out of my Mouth, but he came to me ſeveral times about it, and I oppoſed it. At laſt he dogg'd me ſo often, that he gave me occaſion to ask him the meaning of it. The firſt place I ſaw him in was the King's-head (as he ſaith truly) in Swithin's Alley. There were ſeveral Perſons (as they met there every Day upon their private Occaſions) that is true. He asked me a ſtrange Queſtion, (that was the firſt time I heard of it) whether I was willing to oppoſe a Foreign Invaſion that was like to be made ſpeedily? And whether I would engage in the Defence of it? And this he did two or three times afterwards. To which I replyed, Sir, I and every honeſt Man are bound (as we are Subjects, and have taken the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance) to engage in ſuch a thing you put me upon, that was, to engage againſt a Foreign Invaſion. The next time, he asked me how far I would aſſiſt, if ſuch a thing ſhould fall out as a Foreign Invaſion. I wonder'd to hear it ſo often repeated; I anſwered, I never had but one Sword for ſeveral Years, tho' I have had occaſion for many in other Countries, but I make no queſtion but by the Aſſiſtance of my Friends, to Raiſe an hundred Arms, that was my very Expreſſion. But withal I demanded what he meant by Invaſion, and that I inſiſted upon ſeveral times; for, ſays I, I know of none, and I hope there is none like to be. I took an account of this in Characters, and have acquainted His Majeſty and the Council with it. He replyed to me, ſays he, I wonder you are a Stranger to ſuch a thing. 'Tis true, ſays he, that is the Word goes up and down, but, ſays he, there is another kind of Invaſion meant by ſome Men. I asked him what other Invaſion do you mean? He anſwered preſently, Don't you know? Are you a Stranger in England? in Iſrael? Says he, there is an Invaſion upon our Rights and Liberties and all we have: Whereupon I was a little ſtartled. This was at the King's-head Tavern. Another time I deſired him to explain his meaning, being a Stranger to it, when I expreſſed my readineſs to ſerve the King upon ſuch an Occaſion in thoſe Words; they that know me, know that I am not in the Capacity of Raiſing an hundred Arms, but I intended it, as God knows, in oppoſition to a Foreign Invaſion. But I thank God, I took Characters day by day, and with a Reſolution day by day to diſcover it, but he has got the ſtart of me, for fear I would ſwear againſt him. He inſiſted ſtill upon it, that our Rights and Liberties were invaded, and that was the Invaſion all along intended, and that was the way to hook in Perſons, only upon that pretence of a Foreign Invaſion. I asked him in what manner he meant Invaſion? Says he, what with their Doctrines on one hand, and Oppreſſion on the other, they lye ſo heavy that we can't bear it no longer. Says I, What do you mean by this? What Courſe do you think of? What can you propound to your ſelf to extricate your ſelf out of theſe Troubles you ſo much complain of? To which he anſwered, You are a Stranger to what is a foot and hath been a foot a great while. Do you not know the Perſons that are engaged in the Deſign? (I was a little inquiſitive to know what was meant by the Perſons.) No (ſays I) poſitively, I know not what you mean, I am a perfect Stranger to theſe Perſons and this Deſign, and I wiſhed him and all others (as they were Men and Chriſtians) that they would take care of oppoſing the Government they lived under, that was my very Words. Says he, that we have conſider'd very well, and how to ſecure the two things, and, ſays he, you ſhall ſee we will do it dexterouſly, without ſhedding a drop of Blood, nay, ſays he, not the Blood of the Duke of York, tho' he be the verieſt Dog in England. I deſired him to explain himſelf, he anſwered, The miſchief of it is we can't agree among our ſelves, for it was Us and We at every Word; ſo I concluded he was of the Cabal and Club that met together on this Deſign (that hath come before your Lordſhip;) and I am pretty confident there was ſuch a helliſh Deſign, tho' I thank God I had no hand in it. Said I, Who are the Perſons? Pray declare the bottom of this Story you come to me about one day after another. With much ado, he told me Mr. Goodenough was one. After this Diſcourſe I never ſaw Mr. Goodenough but twice, once was at the King's-head Tavern, where I believe was twenty; the ſecond time was a day or two after I ſaw the Proclamation and his Name in it. So much I ſpeak of Mr. Goodenough. I asked him the Names of the other Perſons that were engaged in this Deſign, and (ſays he) I muſt conceal them, for I am under an Obligation; but the firſt time I ſaw the Proclamation againſt Colonel Rumſey, and the others, ſays he, I was deadly afraid I was in the Proclamation; but (ſays he) all theſe Perſons are concerned and ſeveral others. Thereupon he told me, that when they met they came to this Reſolution of ſeizing the Tower, the Aldermen, and taking of London. Says I, Pray what Money have you to carry on this? Money! Oh, ſays he, we don't want Money; ſays he, Mr. Goodenough hath aſſured me there is 40000 l.

L. C. J. Look you, You invert all his Diſcourſe: He hath ſworn it againſt you. Have you any Evidence in the World? You are not in a Capacity to ſwear againſt him.

Rouſe. My Lord, he hath turned it upon me, he ſpake to me always in private.

L. C. J. Look you, You have fixed but upon one Perſon here was Mate Lee, that gives a very ſhrewd Evidence againſt you; Did he come and teach you? Did he uſe theſe Words?

Rouſe. My Lord, I have nothing to ſay againſt Mate Lee, I hope he is an honeſt Man. But I having a Deſign to diſcover this whole thing, and having ſo much out of Leigh the Dyer.——

L. C. J. What did you uſe theſe Words to him for then?

Rouſe. To ſatisfy the Gentlemen that put me upon it, that I might come to the bottom of the Deſign.

Mr. Juſt. With. You ſay you know a great deal more: How came it to paſs you never told the King one word of this till after you was taken?

Rouſe. I have told it ſince I was taken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when you had got to the bottom of all this (as you call it) Why did you deny your Name?

Rouſe. I did not deny my Name.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath as many Names as he has Deſigns, and they are abundance.

Rouſe.

Rouſe. I did not know they were Officers. I did not think there was any Obligation upon me to tell every Man my Name.

L. C. J. You hear what Evidence is given againſt you concerning your Diſcourſe in Eighty One, which tho' it be not the thing for which you are directly called in Queſtion; yet if you could clear your ſelf of it, it would import you much, for that does ſhew your Spirit, and that you have had a long while a Deſign againſt the King's Life, if that be true; therefore it would be very fitting that you purged your ſelf of it, and that you could ſome way or other give an Anſwer to what you ſaid, That the King had forfeited his Crown, and had no more Right to it, than one of thoſe ſorry Perſons you ſpoke to: And to ſay the Parliament might take away the King's Authority. Theſe are ſtrange Treaſonable Expreſſions.

Rouſe. My Lord, Tho' this thing be revived, which was out of doors two Years ſince, and I ſuppoſe it is well known to your Lordſhip, who was then upon the Bench. As I was told, there was a Word in the Indictment called Colloquium: He was asked what Diſcourſe paſſed before? But if Mr. Corbin would remember himſelf, I do confeſs I did ſay theſe Words; but the Words that followed before.

Mr. Juſt. With. What do you mean, the Cart before the Horſe?

Rouſe. Mr. Wyat was urging of ſeveral Diſcourſes, the Popiſh Grandure in Depoſing Kings, and I gave this Anſwer in theſe Words: Sir, (ſays I) If it were in the Power of any Pope to depoſe the King, then he might as well take away the Crown off the King's Head; but he hath no ſuch Power; if he had that Power, ſays I, then the Crown of England is yours as much as his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Colloquium, when you ſaid the Parliament might take it away?

Rouſe. I never ſaid that.

L. C. J. I have heard a great deal of your Diſcourſe, if you think you can make any of it good by Witneſſes to your Advantage, call them.

Rouſe. My Lord, I have not had time to collect my Witneſſes. How can it be ſuppoſed I ſhould call Witneſſes? I don't know whether they are here. Here are Witneſſes called to prove a Matter, whereof upon a Tryal two Years paſt I was acquitted.

Mr. Juſt. With. Pray do not go away with that, here are two Witneſſes ſince.

L. C. J. You were told, that was not the thing laid to your Charge now, that does only ſhew the Temper of your Spirit, and how your Inclinations have been all along. Look you, this you are now charged with, is a Deſign to Seize and Kill the King, and to that purpoſe to have enter'd into a Conſpiracy with Goodenough and others, for the raiſing of Men, and the making of a Rebellion and Inſurrection here in the Kingdom; whereby you might have ſeized not only the King but his Fort here the Tower, and made your ſelves Maſters of his Ships, and ſo enter'd into a perfect War with him in his own Kingdom, to the Deſtruction of himſelf and the Government. You hear what the Witneſſes ſay againſt you.

Rouſe. I do declare in the Preſence of God Almighty, before whom I muſt ſtand, it never enter'd into my Heart.

Mr. Jones. If that would do, we ſhould have none hanged.

Rouſe. I appeal to your Lordſhip, and this honourable Court, whether 'tis likely for me, who am ſuch a ſilly Perſon, to engage in ſuch a deviliſh Deſign, eſpecially being concerned with no Perſon in the World about it; for I declare, if I was upon ten thouſand Oaths, I never had any Diſcourſe with any Perſon in the World about it. In the next place, I was never in any Meeting, tho' I have heard of ſeveral darkly that they met in London, and in ſeveral Clubs, but I could never find out the places. I deſire to ask him, whether he knows with whom I did concern my ſelf.

L. C. J. Look you, Did you never meet him with any Company concerning any of theſe Treaſonable Deſigns that you have ſpoken of?

Mr. Leigh. I will give your Lordſhip, and the Jury, an account. Mr. Rouſe acquainted me he could make ten Sea-Captains, I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with it. He told me he would have a Golden Ball, and told me the Charge. We went to the Angel and Crown Tavern, from thence he came to meet Mr. Goodenough to tell him what he had ſaid to theſe Captains. The next Day he met Mr. Goodenough; and Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Pachin, and I, went from Joſeph's Coffee houſe in Exchange-Alley, and he diſcourſed about getting of theſe Captains.

Rouſe. Who was preſent?

Mr. Leigh. We never diſcourſed the Matter joyntly, but ſingly with one Man. Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Goodenough went into a Room apart above ſtairs, and diſcourſed this Matter (as I believe) half an hour.

Rouſe. How do you know what Diſcourſe I had with Mr. Goodenough when you was not preſent?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Goodenough thanked me for bringing him acquainted with you.

L. C. J. How do you know what Diſcourſe they had?

Mr. Leigh. I know only what Mr. Rouſe told me, Mr. Rouſe told me that he would engage ten Sea-Captains, that a Ball ſhould be played, and every Man take his Dividend.

L. C. J. Did he tell you he had diſcourſed this with Mr. Goodenough.

Rouſe. Did I tell you ſo?

Mr. Leigh. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. You ſpeak of ſeveral in Company, one Pachin and others.

Mr. Leigh. We went from the King's-head Tavern, for there was Company we did not like, tho' we diſcourſed there but of Hay-making, and getting Men to help the Country People.

L. C. J. What did you mean by that?

Mr. Leigh. That was to get Men for this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. What did he ſay the Intention was of raiſing theſe Men?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Rouſe hath frequently and often acquainted me, that the King had taken an Oath in France and Spain to bring in Popery and Arbitrary Power in ſo many Years, and that he had not done it, made the Popiſh Party angry, but that he would do it.

L. C J. Well, what Deſign was there in raiſing of Men and ſeizing the Tower?

Mr. Leigh. He told me all things muſt be done together. The King and the Duke muſt be ſeized, for that was the principal Work.

Rouſe.

Rouſe. It never enter'd into my heart. Be pleaſed to ask him if he was not arreſted by one Keeling, and what was the account of it.

Mr. Leigh. No.

Rouſe. I mean ſworn againſt.

Mr. Leigh. I will give your Lordſhip an account of it. Mr. Goodenough, Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Pachin, and I, had been at the King's-Head Tavern, a Man came and told me, a Man had been at my Houſe, and that one ſwore againſt me, and it would be dangerous to go home. A while after comes one Armiger, and he told me Mr. Bateman was gone one way and he another to ſeek for me, and deſired me to have a care of my ſelf. With that Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Pachin came out to me. Mr. Rouſe directed me to go to the Sun-Tavern at Moorgate, and I went; Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Pachin, came to me. I told them I would meet my Wife, but they would not let me go on by any means, but ſent one Mr. Thomas a Coffeeman for my Wife.

She came and told me Mr. Goodenough had ſworn againſt ſeveral People, or he was ſworn againſt, I went to Mr. Rouſe's Houſe, where Mr. Goodenough came to me, Mr. Rouſe would have had Mr. Goodenough ſtaid there all night: Mr. Goodenough ſent for his Wife, to know if his Brother had ſworn, ſhe acquainted him he had not ſworn; Mr. Rouſe invited him to lie with me. He ſhewed me behind the Bed a Window to go into another man's Room to make my Eſcape, if any man ſhould come to ſearch the Houſe. I lay there on Saturday, Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Nelthrop came to me; Mr. Goodenough told me, he had lain at Mr. Nelthrop's all Night, but he had ſeen his Brother, and he had not ſworn againſt me: I heard that Mr. Keeling had ſworn againſt me, and did ſay in Diſcourſe, if I did light of Keeling, I would kill him.

Rouſe. I deſire to ask him another Queſtion, When he was told he was ſworn againſt, what did he ſay?

L. C. J. He tells you before-hand, that he ſaid he would kill Keeling if he could meet him.

Rouſe. He ſays, Mr. Goodenough and Nelthrop came to my Houſe, ask him if I was in the Houſe, or ſaw Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Lee. I am not poſitive whether he ſaw them together, but that he ſaw Mr. Goodenough there the Friday Night, for he invited him to lie with me.

L. C. J. Pray what was your Reaſon in putting Mate Lee upon the inquiring out men to make Maſters of Ships?

Rouſe. To ſatisfie the Gentleman, becauſe he told me there was ſuch a Deſign in hand, to get to the bottom of that Deſign, that ſo his Majeſty might come to no damage. Pray, my Lord, How could I acquaint the King, or any Juſtice of Peace, what he meant by it, unleſs I underſtood it?

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ask? Or would you have any Witneſſes called?

Rouſe. My Lord, 'Tis my unhappineſs I have no Witneſſes.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. He hath confeſſed the Treaſon enough.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, of the Jury. You hear that this perſon at the Bar is Indicted for High-Treaſon in conſpiring the King's Death, and declaring this by Overt Acts, that is, endeavouring to raiſe Men here for to ſeize the Tower, and to make an Inſurrection here, and a Rebellion within the Kingdom: You hear two poſitive Witneſſes of what they have heard from him: He did endeavour, ſays Lee, to bring him into it, and he told him the whole Deſign, he did declare to him the manner how they intended to ſeize the King and the Duke of York: Mr. Goodenough was one of the Perſons that confederated with him, one of them, but ſeveral others they had. They had covert Terms to diſguiſe this, by getting the Country People in their Harveſt. He told them of a Deſign he had to get the Seamen, a Thouſand of them together, to ſeize the Tower and White-Hall both at a time. And you hear that Mate Lee had the ſame diſcourſe in ſubſtance with him, of endeavouring to ſeize the Tower and get Arms, for to ſeize the King's Ships, to raiſe a Thouſand Perſons for the effecting of this. All theſe things you have heard proved againſt him, he gives no Anſwer to any of them, but only tells you, That in truth he did not ſay theſe things to them; but they, that is the firſt Lee, ſaid theſe things to him. He hath no Evidence at all of it. You hear likewiſe (which does agree with this caſe) the Teſtimony by the other perſon concerning his Diſcourſe in 81. How he ſaid, The King had forfeited his Crown, and had no Right to it; but the Parliament gave him his Authority and might take it away. All theſe Diſcourſes they ſavour of a wicked Spirit as can be in the whole World. I muſt leave it to you whether you believe him Guilty.

The Jury preſently gave their Verdict that he was Guilty.

THE TRYAL OF WILLIAM BLAGUE.

William Blague having been Arraigned on Thurſday, July 12*th*, pleaded Not Guilty, and put himſelf upon his Country was brought to the Bar again Friday July 13*th*. He made no Challenges, and the former Jury was Sworn.

Robert Beddingfield, John Pelling, William Windbury, Theophilus Man, John Short, Senior, Thomas Nicholas, Jur' Richard Hoare, Thomas Barnes, Henry Robbins, Henry Kempe, Edward Raddiſh, Edward Kempe.

Clerk. GEntlemen of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Charge. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of William Blague, late of London, Gent. that he, together with John Rouſe, &c.

Mr. North. Gentlemen, you that are ſworn; the Priſoner at the Bar, is charged with compaſſing the death of the King, and conſpiring to raiſe War and Rebellion to deſtroy the Government, and take poſſeſſion of it; that he did conſpire with one Rouſe, and ſeveral others not yet known, to bring theſe things to paſs, and being join'd together to ſeize the Tower, and to provide ſeveral Arms: To this he hath pleaded not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, we ſhall not need to trouble you much with the Priſoner at the Bar, for this Priſoner, with him that went before, were to undertake that part of this horrid Conſpiracy relating to the ſeizing the Tower, becauſe the the ſame Witneſſes that were againſt the former, are againſt the Priſoner at the Bar. We ſhall not need to trouble you with the hiſtory, we will cauſe our Witneſſes to prove it.——Do you hear, Lee, you muſt tell my Lord and the Jury what the Priſoner at the Bar was concerned in.

L. C. J. What do you know of any Treaſonable practices of his?

Mr. Lee. I will acquaint your Lordſhip and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that Capt. Blague, and Mr. Rouſe were frequently at the Tavern. I preſume many times they came in about buſineſs, and ſometimes there were Diſcourſes to carry on this Conſpiracy. Mr. Rouſe told me he had acquainted Capt. Blague with it, about getting ten Sea-Captains; Captain Blague told him, they had better engage one or two Ships to ſhoot Mortar-pieces into the Tower, which would preſently deſtroy it; and diſcourſing with Captain Blague about the Affair, he told me he would be ready in a Fortnight or Three Weeks.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Will you pleaſe to ask what time that was.

L. C. J. You ſhall have any queſtion asked by and by.

Capt. Blague. Very well.

Mr. Lee. Capt. Blague told me he would be ready in a Fortnight or ſomething more, and he had an intention to lay in about fourteen Guns in his own Ship that he had bought, he would have twenty four in it, and lay it on Southwark ſide againſt the Tower. He would venture his Ship, but they muſt ſee they were provided with money for the Sea-men. I acquainted Mr. Goodenough with this, and Mr. Goodenough deſired to ſpeak with Capt. Blague; I told Capt. Blague of it, and we took Coach at Stocks-Market, and went to the King's-head in Chancery-Lane, where we met with Mr. Richard Goodenough, and Mr. Francis Goodenough, Capt. Blague asked what money they had provided, they ſaid, about 40000 l. ſays Capt. Blague, the Sea-men will ſwallow that up immediately.

L. C. J. What did Capt. Blague ſay?

Mr. Lee. Mr. Goodenough and Capt. Blague diſcours'd about the matter at the King's-head Tavern at Chancery-lane end, and the Diſcourſe about the matter was, how to ſeize the Tower, he then told them again, the only way was to do it with Mortar pieces, that he would venture his own Ship, and provide Two hundred Men.

L. C. J. What did he ſay about Money?

Mr. Lee.

Mr. Lee. He asked what Money was provided, he ſaid, there was about 40000 l. then he ſaid, that would be eaſily ſwallowed. Mr. Goodenough ſaid, that there would be more provided at any time. Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough, both of them, drank a Glaſs or two of Wine together, and ſo at that time we parted. I met with Captain Blague again, and he bid me for God's ſake, don't diſcourſe before my Mate ſuch a one, but my Mate Lee is a very honeſt Fellow: Said he, I will undertake once in twenty times to diſmount them ſix Guns that face towards Surrey ſide, which I underſtood to be about Traitors-Bridge, he would undertake to diſmount them. What Diſcourſe Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough had apart I can't tell, but Mr. Goodenough told me, he would get ſome other Captains to engage in that Affair. That Buſineſs was left to him and I, and I was deſired to be frequently with Captain Blague for the managing this Affair of the Tower; and, ſays he, I have had a Commiſſion, tho' not in England, by Land as well as by Sea.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any thing, Sir? Now he ſhall be asked any thing that you will propoſe. Firſt, You do propoſe to him about what time this Meeting was. What ſay you to that?

Mr. Lee. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I believe it was toward the latter end of May, or the beginning of June.

Capt. Blague. If you pleaſe, my Lord, I will give you a Journal or Narrative of all my Proceedings.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more than that?

Capt. Blague. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. We will call Mate Lee. This Mate Lee was the Man that might not be truſted. —— Mate Lee, Tell my Lord, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, what Diſcourſe you have had with the Priſoner at the Bar, Captain Blague, about ſeizing the Tower.

Mate Lee. I ſhall, Sir. The firſt Diſcourſe that ever I underſtood, was one time he and I was riding in a Coach, ſays Capt. Blague, one of theſe days we ſhall have a Ball to toſs. I did not know the meaning of this Ball, till afterwards Mr. Rouſe, and Mr. Lee and I came together, and he told me of toſſing a Ball upon Black-heath. Then I began to underſtand it. And after this, I can't tell whether it was before that, Captain Blague and I walking about the Tower, and diſcourſing of this, my Way was to ſcale the Tower, and take it that way; ſays Captain Blague, the beſt way is to ſhoot Mortar-pieces on Southwark ſide; this was all the Diſcourſe.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Can you ſay any thing about the Ship?

Mate Lee. Nothing about the Ship, but about Mortar-pieces on Southwark ſide.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. What time was that?

Mate Lee. I cannot be poſitive, about ſix Weeks ago, or leſs.

Mr. Serj Jefferies. The firſt time was in the Coach?

Mate Lee. That was about the Ball, I did not underſtand it, only toſſing up a Ball, I did not underſtand the meaning of it, till afterwards Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Lee and I came together.

L. C. J. How came you to diſcourſe with him concerning the beſt way of taking the Tower?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouſe, and Mr. Lee and I, and Captain Blague had been together. We diſcours'd about taking the Tower. And we had this Diſcourſe among our ſelves, which was the beſt way to take the Tower; my Approbation was Scaling Ladders, and Hand-Granadoes, that was the beſt Way, Captain Blague's way was with Mortar-pieces on Southwark ſide.

L. C. J. To what Intent was this Diſcourſe, had you had any former Diſcourſe with any Perſons?

Mate Lee. Not at all, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip. The firſt Diſcourſe I had was with Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Lee.

L. C. J. And was that about taking the Tower?

Mate Lee. To ſurprize the Tower, and Mr. Lee and Mr. Rouſe and I went down to view the Tower.

L. C. J. Then afterwards Captain Blague came in about the way to take it?

Mate Lee. This Diſcourſe with Captain Blague about the Tower was between him and I. I don't remember it in any other Company.

L. C. J. What was your Buſineſs with Captain Blague?

Mate Lee. My Buſineſs was with Capt. Blague to be his Mate, and I was converſant with him at the Exchange, the Coffee-houſe, and the King's-head Tavern. And we had Diſcourſe about theſe things.

L. C. J. Come Captain Blague, Would you have him asked any Queſtion?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Otherwiſe I had gone to Sea ſoon after I came home, but ſo it was, that I had an occaſion for Penſilvania, and New York, and coming one day to the Exchange, I met Mr. Rouſe, whom I had not ſeen in 16 or 17 Years before, for Mr. Rouſe made a Voyage to Virginia with me about 20 Years ago. Now, my Lord, meeting with Mr. Rouſe, I had an occaſion then to take up two or three hundred Pounds, and knowing Mr. Rouſe was a Broker, I did employ him to procure it me, but he did not; however, daily I came to him to diſpatch that Affair, and Mr. Rouſe being a Man for a Tavern, I went to the King's-head Tavern, and the Sun Tavern, if he was not at one place I found him at another, in order to perfect this Buſineſs. So, my Lord, when I came into his Company, ſeveral People uſe to be with him that I never ſaw in my Life, and Mr. Rouſe would ſay, ſit down a little, and I will go with you preſently, ſo I would ſit down and drink a Glaſs of Wine, and go to the places where the Affair was to be managed; after I had done thus ſeveral days, and to no purpoſe, I did it my ſelf. Now, my Lord, Mr. Rouſe in that time brought me acquainted with Goodenough, becauſe Goodenough was in his Company and Mr. Lee, not that I ever ſaw Mr. Goodenough in my Life before, and not as Mr. Lee ſays, that I ever was with him at the Dragon.

Mr. Lee. The King's-head Tavern in Chancery-Lane.

Capt. Blague. I was juſt coming home when Mr. Lee was going to meet with Mr. Goodenough, and I went in there and took a Glaſs of Wine, and bid him farewel, and ſo went home. When I was

I was with Mr. Rouſe, I was asking what People they were that were in his Company, he ſaid very honeſt Men, drank a Glaſs of Wine and went away, and ſtill I found them together. I was ſaying to this Mr. Leigh here, if you will go along with me, you ſhall give me as much for your Paſſage as any of the reſt of the Paſſengers do. Now at this time my Ship was not in my Poſſeſſion; this very Day three Weeks I had it in my Poſſeſſion, and now at this very Day ſhe is in the Carpenter's Hands, who is here now, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Capt. Blague. Now Sir, whereas Mr. Leigh reports that I diſcours'd with Mr. Goodenough concerning any publick Affairs, or any thing tending to the Diſturbance of the Peace, then am I not a Chriſtian. Beſides, Sir, I did not ſpeak twenty Words, or ten Words at the time, but your Servant, Sir, or here's to You in a Glaſs of Wine; and this I do ſpeak in the Preſence of God Almighty. And when I came into a Room, I never ſtaid longer than Mr. Rouſe, for my Buſineſs was with him, and ſo went about my own Affairs. As for Mr. Goodenough, I believe I was three times in his Company before I could remember his Name, I would ask Rouſe ſeveral times, What do you call that Man? But in reference to the Tower that Mr. Leigh ſpeaks of, that muſt be touched at; I do remember very well, I ſhall by no means palliate it, if I were preſently to die; Coming up from the Ship, we were coming by Water, indeed I ſhould have had Poſſeſſion of the Ship a Fortnight before, if they had done me Juſtice, I had two or three hundred Pounds for them before, but coming from the Ship, we were coming up by Water by the Tower, I don't know how it was, I ſpake it to the Water-man, this Place is not well fortified, and if any occaſion ſhould happen, this Place lies in more peril and jeopardy than any Place of the Tower, and ſo it does. It is an eaſy matter for any to give their Sentiments, whether they be accepted of or no. This is the very thing I ſaid, and then they were talking of a French War, and the like. Then I ſaid, you ſilly Fools, if they ſhould take it, it is but going over a t'other ſide, and throwing half a dozen Bombo's to them and ſet them out again. But however, Mate Lee, if he remember, I told him the ſame thing at that ſame time; and I told Mr. Leigh, It was pity a thouſand times that Place was not better Fortified. But as to what Mr. Leigh ſays, to have two hundred Men in a poor Pink, I have refuſed ſeveral in that very Ship, becauſe I could not ſtow an hundred Men, Women and Children, and that I ſhould preſs two hundred Men in that Ship, that will not hold. And beſides, it is a Pink, let any one look upon her, and ſee whether that Ship be fit or no to take in two hundred Men. But whereas they ſay I had Arms and ſuch things, I bought the Ship and Arms together, I had 4 Blunderbuſſes, 2 Javelins, and Half-Pikes, that is all.

L. C. J. You forget to anſwer ſeveral things, you had Diſcourſe about a Bank of Money.

Capt. Blague. A Bank of Money, my Lord, I never diſcours'd of. And as to the Ball that my Mate ſpeaks of, my Lord, I know no more what it means to this very day, than one that never ſaw a Ball.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, you were with Mr. Leigh, this Mr. Leigh hath ſworn, he ſays, you told him, That you would undertake to get two hundred Men, and you had bought fourteen Pieces of Ordnance already, and that you would within a Fortnight's time, do you remember, bring your Ship to Southwark, and be ready to beat down that part of the Tower.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, I have told you already the Ship was not mine to bring till this Day three Weeks.

L. C. J. That was within compaſs, for they tell you this Diſcourſe was about a Month ago.

Capt. Blague. It was in May, my Lord, they talk of.

L. C. J. No, they ſpeak of about a Month ago, you were to have them in a Fortnight's time —— What ſays the firſt Leigh, what time does he ſpeak of?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he ſaid his Ship would be ready in a Fortnight's time or thereabouts.

L. C. J. How long was that ago?

Mr. Leigh. About a Month or five Weeks.

L. C. J. To what purpoſe did you meet Mr. Goodenough ſo often to diſcourſe about this matter of the Tower?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, I never met with him at all, but when I came to Mr. Rouſe about this Buſineſs of the two hundred Pounds.

L. C. J. Mr. Leigh. What ſay you concerning his Enquiry for Money?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, Mr. Goodenough and the Captain met at the King's-head Tavern, they met ſeveral times apart out of Company, and diſcours'd of the Buſineſs apart; Mr. Goodenough asked me for the Captain many times, I told him what the Captain ſaid to me. Mr. Goodenough took the Captain out, and diſcours'd him about this Affair. Mr. Goodenough hath told me ſeveral times the Captain would be very ſerviceable. The Captain asked what Money there was; I told him about 40000 l. and he ſaid that would be quickly gone. I enquired of Mr. Goodenough again, and Mr. Goodenough told me there was more Money in Holland.

L. C. J. What Money was he to have?

Mr. Leigh. Two hundred Men—— The Captain ſays, I named him before the King and Council, to be at a Meeting at the Green-Dragon Tavern. It is true, I did acquaint the King and Council, that Mr. Rouſe had Buſineſs at the Green-Dragon Tavern. But this was at the time of my abſconding, I could not tell where to meet him again.

L. C. J. What Guns did he ſay he had provided?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he ſaid, he had fourteen Guns in the Ship, and would make them up twenty four: He would undertake in twenty ſhot, to diſmount them Guns.

L. C. J. Where was this Diſcourſe you had with him, about this two hundred Pound?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, it was at ſeveral times, one was with Mr. Goodenough at the Kings-head at the corner of Chancery-Lane.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, by the Oath you have taken, did he undertake to raiſe Men, and to aſſiſt with his Ship in taking the Tower?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he told me he would ſo do it. He told me he would have twenty four Guns.

Jury. Did the Captain tell you ſo?

Mr. Leigh. Captain Blague that is here.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, in reference to the two hundred Men, this is the thing that I would anſwer, I could not ſtow a hundred Men, Women and Children.

L. C. J. Two hundred Men he ſays for this Service.

Capt. Blague. Yes, my Lord, I mean ſo. Who can you have to ſay ſo beſides your ſelf?

Mr. Leigh. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, this Diſcourſe was only with Mr. Rouſe, Mr. Goodenough, Captain Blague and I.

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Mr. Lee ſaid before the King and Council, that he was never along with me but once, and of what I ſaid then, he could tell only he was there when I went to look Mr. Rouſe. How can theſe two Expreſſions go together?

Mr. Leigh. My Lord, As to that before the King and Council, I did ſay I was not apart with Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough at the King's-head Tavern, but Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough were there ſeveral times, and they were apart by themſelves, and that I had Diſcourſe with Captain Blague and Mr. Goodenough, and came with them once to the King's-head Tavern.

L. C. J. What did Captain Blague tell you of what Diſcourſe he had with Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Leigh. Captain Blague did tell me, that we muſt have a great care, or elſe we ſhould be all ruined, and that his Ship ſhould be ready, and always encouraged me. And ſays he, when I have done the Buſineſs, I have been a Captain aſhore in another Country, I have been in Commiſſion in another Country aſhore, and can tell how to manage Men aſhore as well as aboard. Another thing was, after all this, ſome time, when I underſtood I was ſworn againſt, I was indeed, the Captain ſays right, to have gone with him a Paſſenger, and was with him ſeveral times, I gave him a Report how the Tower might be taken by Ladders and Granadoes, and he told me that Nelthrop's Brother came to ſee him, and did inform me that neither Mr. Goodenough nor his Brother was taken, and that the Duke of Monmouth was in the Country, and quickly would come.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Mr. Leigh. Captain Blague.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. This is a pretty matter to ſmirk at, Captain.

Capt. Blague. I will aſſure you, Sir, there is no truth in it.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Would you ſmile the Witneſſes out of their Oaths?

L. C. J. Look you, Mate Lee, what ſay you to this? In your Judgment and your Thoughts, was the Diſcourſe concerning taking the Tower in a jeſting way?

Mate Lee. No, an't ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, I was in earneſt in diſcourſing of it, my Way was, as I told your Lordſhip before, Scaling Ladders and Hand-Granadoes.

L. C. J. Had you any Talk before of ſurprizing the Tower?

Mate Lee. No, my Lord, by no body but Mr. Rouſe and Leigh.

L. C. J. What had they ſpoken to you concerning ſurprizing the Tower?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouſe ſpoke to me of getting ſome Sea-men, that might be fit to make Maſters of Ships, and I asked him what he would do with thoſe Sea-men to make Commanders of Ships? He ſaid, to put them aboard the King's Men of War, and make Guard-Ships of them; I ſaid, what can you do with them to make Guard-Ships, when there is neither Powder, Shot, nor Ammunition? But ſaid I, if you can take the Tower you may do well enough: So that our Diſcourſe was about taking the Tower.

L. C. J. Was Captain Blague with you then?

Mate Lee. What Diſcourſe we had about taking the Tower was between our ſelves.

L. C. J. How came you to diſcourſe concerning this?

Mate Lee. This was our common Diſcourſe, I ſuppoſe the inſtigation might be by Mr. Rouſe. I was acquainted with Mr. Rouſe, by going with Captain Blague; this was my firſt Diſcourſe with Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Lee together.

L. C. J. Who was with you when you diſcours'd it firſt?

Mate Lee. There was only Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Leigh, I can be poſitive that Captain Blague was not, but this Captain Blague did ſay, when I gave my Way of taking the Tower by Scaling Ladders, and Hand-Granadoes, no, ſays Captain Blague, it is a better Way to have Mortar-pieces over the Water, and ſhoot into the Tower.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Hark you, Friend, Did Leigh or Rouſe tell you that Blague was made privy to it?

Mate Lee. I underſtood nothing of it, but what we diſcours'd together, for I was acquainted with none of the Cabal, but Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Leigh.

L. C. J. What did you diſcourſe about?

Mate Lee. About taking the Tower. I won't mince it, I am upon my Oath.

L. C. J. Therefore we would have the truth out of you.

Mate Lee. I did gather from Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Leigh, that the Intention was to take the Tower.

L. C. J. Give ſome account how you and Blague came to diſcourſe of ſuch a thing as this is, and in order to what Deſign.

Mate Lee. The Deſign was to take the Tower.

L. C. J. Did Blague and you diſcourſe it to this purpoſe?

Mate Lee. Captain Blague and I diſcours'd it to that purpoſe of taking the Tower.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you diſcourſe of it as a thing that might be done, or that was intended to be done?

Mate Lee. We did diſcourſe of it as a thing that might be done, or was intended to be done.

L. C. J. Now, Captain Blague, if you have any thing to ask him, you may.

Capt. Blague. Ask him, whether there were any Projections or Proviſions made for the taking it, and whether or no there was any Reſolution taken, that the Tower ſhould be taken.

Mate Lee. An't ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, the King's Majeſty asked me when I ſaid what Captain Blague ſaid about taking the Tower with Mortar-pieces, if it pleaſe your Majeſty, ſaid I, I don't

I don't know whether there was any ſuch thing diſcours'd, that I did not hear.

L. C. J. Well, was there any thing provided or deſigned in order to it?

Mate Lee. An't pleaſe your Lordſhip, there was nothing of Men or Guns provided, that I did know or hear of.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. How many times did you talk with Captain Blague about this?

Mate Lee. Several times.

L. C. J. Had you any Order from any other Perſons for to diſcourſe Captain Blague in order to this?

Mate Lee. No, An't ſhall pleaſe your Lordſhip, to the beſt of my knowledge I had no order, for they were commonly together, Captain Blague, Mr. Rouſe, and Mr. Lee, and I came to them when I had buſineſs with Captain Blague.

L. C. J. Did you ever diſcourſe this thing with Captain Blague before them?

Mate Lee. I cannot be poſitive in that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did thoſe other Perſons that you ſaid you diſcours'd with engage you?

Mate Lee. Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Lee, and I went out, to view the Tower, how it might be taken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they engage you?

Mate Lee. Yes, they did engage me.

Jury. My Lord, We deſire to have the Witneſs asked, Whether the Captain knew he went to view the Tower.

L. C. J. Had he any intimation you went to view the Tower?

Mate Lee. My Lord, I can't be poſitive in that: Some time after we met the Captain, and did tell the Captain we had view'd the Tower; but I don't remember what Obſervations we made.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. Nor what he ſaid to you?

Mate Lee. No, nor what he ſaid to me upon it.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Lee, Mate Lee, the Captain told you of this Ball that was to be thrown upon Blackheath, how long ago was it?

Mate Lee. An't pleaſe your Lordſhip, I cannot be poſitive, it was five or ſix Weeks ago, I think it was the laſt time I rid along with him to the King's-head Tavern. I went to Chancery-Lane, and you gave me Coach-hire for nothing, and then you ſpoke of toſſing up the Ball.

L. C. J. What was it he ſaid?

Mate Lee. This was all, I did not know his meaning, neither did he expreſs his meaning, he was ſaying to the beſt of my remembrance, we ſhall ſee a Ball toſs'd up, I don't remember he ſaid upon Blackheath; the Confirmation of it was by Mr. Rouſe and Mr. Leigh, then I came to underſtand what the Ball did mean.

Sir James Butler. With his Lordſhip's Leave, Did you ſpeak firſt to the Captain about the Tower, or did he ſpeak to you, was it your motion to him, or his to you?

Mate Lee. I don't know but it might be my motion to him.

Sir James Butler. Then, my Lord, give me leave to ask another. How were theſe Mortar-pieces to be brought up, to be planted on Southwark-ſide to play upon the Wall of the Tower?

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. That was t'other Man, Sir James.

L. C. J. Is there any thing more that you would have asked of any of theſe Witneſſes, or have you any Witneſſes of your own?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, The Witneſſes that I have, in reference to the Number of Men are here. I deſire, my Lord, you will be pleaſed to order them to come in, to know upon what account I Shipped them.

Jury. My Lord, Pray let us ask t'other Leigh one Queſtion.

L. C. J. The firſt Leigh.

Jury. We deſire to know, whether he heard any thing of the Ball or Toſſing it?

L. C. J. He hath told you a long Story of it.

Mr. Leigh. The Story of Blackheath I acquainted you with it, about Mr. Rouſe. There was a Golden Ball to be play'd upon Blackheath, a thouſand Sea-men to be at the playing of this Ball, ten Sea-Captains to manage theſe thouſand Sea-men, and after the Play was over, every Captain to take his Diviſion apart, and treat them with Punch, and after that was done, to tell them they had other Work to do, and to have Long-boats and Arms ready, to go and ſeize the Tower.

Jury. Did Captain Blague acquaint you with this?

Mr. Leigh. Mr. Rouſe told me, Captain Blague was acquainted with it, I never diſcours'd with Captain Blague about it. Captain Blague told me, the beſt way was to ſet a Ship on t'other ſide, and ſhoot Mortar-pieces into the Tower.

L. C. J. What would you have Mr. Wright asked?

Capt. Blague. My Lord, Pleaſe to ask him upon what account he was ſhipped.

L. C. J. Was you ſhipped upon the Captain's Ship, and upon what account?

Mr. Wright. An't ſhall pleaſe your Honour, I was ſhipped upon him almoſt four Months and three Weeks ago.

L. C. J. Upon what account?

Mr. Wright. I was ſhipped upon him upon the account of New York, England and Holland.

L. C. J. Well, what uſe do you make of this Evidence?

Capt. Blague. Only, my Lord, if you pleaſe to ask the reſt, Whether I have ſhipped any more Men, or ſpoke with any more than theſe are.

Mr. Wright. An't like your Honour, I have waited upon the Captain ever ſince I have been ſhipped: I have waited upon him in London at the Coffee-houſe about Buſineſs: Since I have belonged to him I was in Pay, altho' we had not a Ship in Poſſeſſion: Sometimes at the Mayor's Court Office, Mr. Briggs, ſometimes with Mr. Rouſe, who had ſomething to do for Captain Blague. I kept at the Coffee-houſe commonly every Day from Eight or Nine a Clock in the Morning, ſufficient Perſons know me in London. I have kept at the Coffee-houſe from Nine or Ten a Clock in the Morning till Four or Five in the Afternoon, and ſo I have ſatisfied him about what People have inquired after him.

Capt. Blague. Call Robert Chappel.

L. C. J. Captain Blague, What would you have him asked?

Capt. Blague. Carpenter, Declare to my Lord how long you have been with me, and upon what account I ſhipped you?

Chappel. Four Months and an half.

L. C. J. What beſides?

Chappel. We were to go to New York. I have been ſhipped four Months and an half to go to New York: We came to the Coffee-houſe in Birchin-Lane.

L. C. J. Well.

Chappel. We have had the Ship a Month in our Hands next Monday.

L. C. J. Is ſhe fitted?

Chappel. No, ſhe is not fitted.

L. C. J. Was ſhe in a condition to have done any Service upon the Water?

Capt. Blague. Carpenter, Do you hear what my Lord ſays?

Chappel. The Ship is a ſmall Veſſel, about an hundred and fifty Tun, between that and an hundred.

Capt. Blague. My Lord asks you if ſhe be in a condition to do ſervice.

L. C. J. Was ſhe capable to do any ſervice upon the Water?

Chappel. No ſervice at all upon the Water ſhe could do three Weeks ago.

Mr. Serj. Jefferies. A Ship of one hundred and fifty or two hundred Tun, would hold a great many People, ſhe was to lie ſtill, that was the Miſchief.

Chappel. We haled her down to the Carpenter's Yard, ſhe is now in a condition to work.

L. C. J. Have you any more Men?

Capt. Blague. Doctor, Upon what account were you ſhipped?

Bellinger. For New York, England, and Holland.

Capt. Blague. When were you ſhipped?

Bellinger. Seven Weeks ago.

L. C. J. When were you to begin your Voyage?

Bellinger. I belonged to the Captain before he had a Ship.

L. C. J. But when did you reckon to begin your Voyage?

Bellinger. That I cannot tell.

Capt. Blague. My Bill upon the Exchange doth ſpecify it, Sir.

Jury. Pray, my Lord, will you ask if he have any Guns aboard, and how many?

L. C. J. What ſay you? What Guns are there about the Ship?

Bellinger. Fourteen, Sir, and four Wooden ones.

L. C. J. What are they?

Bellinger. Six above Deck, four in the Hold.——

Capt. Blague. They are Saker Guns.

L. C. J. Saker?

Capt. Blague. Yes, Sir —— Richard Clarke, What Voyage had we?

Clarke. New York.

L. C. J. Surely it doth appear that theſe Men were ſhipped a great while ago.

Capt. Blague. Some of them have had a Dependance upon me a great while, one hath depended upon me I believe ſeven Months.

L. C. J. Have you any thing more to ſay?

Capt. Blague. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen, You that are of this Jury, This Gentleman is Indicted for conſpiring the death of the King, and doing ſome Acts in order to it, that is, endeavouring to ſurprize the Tower, and raiſing of Men, and preparing of Shipping and Guns, and this on purpoſe to ſurprize the Tower. That there was an evil Deſign, a very wicked notorious Deſign of ſeizing the King's Perſon, and killing the King, that is moſt certain, you have heard it by a great many Witneſſes, and it is a thing I think not to be doubted of by any. The queſtion is, whether this man be guilty of it, and hath undertaken any thing in relation to it. Look you, you ought to have in ſuch Caſes of High-Treaſon, as you have been told, you ought to have two Witneſſes againſt a Perſon. Here are two Witneſſes produced, one of them does ſpeak very ſhrewdly to the Caſe, and tells you, he had it from this perſon himſelf, that he had ſpoken with Goodenough about this matter, about ſurprizing the Tower, and that he told him it was an eaſy thing to ſurprize the Tower, and that he could do it; that he had a Ship ready, and he would undertake that 200 Men ſhould be ready with Mortar-pieces from Southwark-ſide to throw them and beat down the Tower, ſo that it might have preſently been down. Firſt, Mr. Leigh doth ſay, That the Captain there at the Bar, that he was oftentimes with Mr. Goodenough, and Mr. Rouſe, and others, who it is plain were in that Deſign, both Rouſe and Goodenough was, and that he heard Goodenough ſay, That the Captain had undertaken it; and he ſays, that the Captain had Diſcourſe with Goodenough about it. He ſays, the Captain asked him in order to this, what Money could be raiſed, and he told him there was 40000 l. and the Captain told him that was but a ſmall matter, the Sea-men would eat up that; and Goodenough told him, there was a greater Bank in Holland, that would be brought over. So that this Evidence goes a great way. But then, Gentlemen, you muſt conſider whether you have another Evidence or not. There is a Perſon that you call Mate, the Mate doth give a dark kind of an Evidence; he does ſay here, That he and the Captain had Diſcourſe about the way of taking the Tower, and he believes it was in order to take the Tower; but he does ſay, when he heard it, no body was preſent but himſelf, and he was of one Opinion how the Tower might be taken, that is, by Scaling Ladders and Hand-Granadoes, and that the Captain was of another Opinion, whether it might be the better taken by Mortar-pieces thrown from Southwark-ſide, but whether the Captain had any notice of this Deſign of taking it, he cannot tell, or whether he had any Acquaintance concerning it. So that his Evidence does ſeem to be ſomewhat dark. Whether this were ſportive, or a Trial of their Skill, or whether it was a Deſign to have Counſel and Advice one of another, which way to take it, I muſt leave it to you, whether it was done with an Intent and Deſign, for to find out the beſt way in order to the taking of it. But if it were only a Diſcourſe at large between them, and Endeavour to try their Judgments one with another, and ſpeaking their Minds one with another in that Caſe, then this Evidence doth not come home to make him guilty of the Plot of taking the Tower, or taking away the King's Life. He tells you, he did ſpeak of a Ball to be thrown up, but whether he ever heard of the other Deſign that Leigh ſpeaks of, the firſt Leigh, Thomas Leigh, of throwing up a Ball by Sea-men in order to the taking of the Tower, he knows not. Leigh ſays, the firſt Witneſs, he does not know any thing whether this Man at the Bar was ever acquainted with the Ball or not. If upon what you have heard, you believe that there are two Witneſſes to prove this Gentleman at the Bar Guilty of this Deſign of ſurprizing the Tower, and killing the King, and taking the Tower in order to it in this manner; then you ought to find him Guilty: But if you have not two Witneſſes that do teſtify the thing, then Gentlemen, under two Witneſſes a Man cannot be Guilty.

in

After which the Jury withdrawing to conſider of their Verdict, in a ſhort time returned, and brought him in Not Guilty.

Saturday 14*th*, July, My Lord Ruſſel was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. William Ruſſel Eſq; hold up thy hand (which he did.) Thou haſt been Indicted for High-Treaſon againſt our Soveraign Lord the King, and thereupon haſt pleaded Not Guilty, and for thy Tryal haſt put thy ſelf upon the Country, which Country has found thee Guilty. What canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon thee according to Law?

L. Ruſſel. Mr. Recorder, I ſhould be very glad to hear the Indictment read.

Mr. At. Gen. You may read it.

Cl. of Cr. Will you have it read in Latin or in Engliſh?

L. Ruſſel. In Engliſh.

The Clerk read to the Words, Of Conſpiring the Death of the King.

L. Ruſſel. Hold, I thought I had not been charged in the Indictment as it is, of Compaſſing and Conſpiring the Death of the King.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. Ruſſel. But Mr. Recorder, If all that the Witneſſes ſwore againſt me be true, I appeal to you and the Court, I appeal to you whether I am guilty within the Statute of 25 E. 3. they having ſworn a Conſpiracy to levy War; but no Intention of killing the King: And therefore I think truly Judgment ought not to paſs upon me for Conſpiring the Death of the King, of which there was no Proof by any one Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. That is no Exception.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, that was an Exception proper (and as I think you did make it) before the Verdict; whether the Evidence does amount to prove the Charge, that is proper to be obſerved to the Jury; for if the Evidence come ſhort of the Indictment, they can't find it to be a true Charge: But when the Jury has found it, their Verdict does paſs for Truth. We are bound by the Verdict as well as your Lordſhip, we are to go by what the Jury have found, not their Evidence.

L. Ruſſel. Without any Proof?

Mr. Recorder. The Jury muſt be governed by their Evidence.

L. Ruſſel. I think it very hard I muſt be condemned upon a Point that there was not one thing of it ſworn, therefore I think I may very Legally demand Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. Recorder. I hope your Lordſhip will conſider 'tis not the Court can give a Verdict, it muſt be the Jury. I believe there is no body in the Court does delight in giving ſuch Judgments, eſpecially againſt your Lordſhip. The Verdict is found, and the King's Attorney General on behalf of the King does demand it.

Mr. At. Gen. I do demand Judgment of the Court againſt the Priſoner.

Proclamation made for ſilence, whilſt Judgment was giving.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Ruſſel, your Lordſhip hath been Indicted, and Tryed, and found Guilty of High-Treaſon, the greateſt of Crimes, your Quality is great and your Crime is great. And I hope and expect that your behaviour and preparation in this Condition will be proportionable. My Lord, It is the Duty of the Witneſſes to give Evidence according to Truth: It is the Duty of the Jury to proceed according to Evidence, and 'tis the Duty of the Court to give Judgment according to the Verdict. It is the King's Pleaſure ſignified by his Attorney General, to demand Judgment againſt your Lordſhip according to this Verdict, and therefore, my Lord, I ſhall not delay it with any further circumlocution. The Judgment the Law hath provided, and is the Duty of the Court to give, is,

That you be carried back again, to the place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn upon an hurdle to the place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged up by the Neck, but cut down alive, your Entrails and Privy Members cut off from your Body, and burnt in your ſight, your Head to be ſevered from your Body, and your Body divided into four Parts, and diſpoſed at the King's Pleaſure. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. At. Gen. Set up the other now.

Cl. of Cr. Set Captain Walcot to the Bar, Rouſe, and Hone.

Which was done, and they bid ſeverally to hold up their hands, which they did; and Captain Walcot being asked, What he could ſay why Judgment of Death ſhould not be paſſed upon him, ſaid,

Capt. Walcot. I have nothing to ſay, only I have one favour to beg of the Court, whether it be proper to beg it now or no, I can't tell.

Mr. Recorder. What is it?

Capt. Walcot. I would beg the favour that the Youth my Son might come and ſee me, and ſome of my Friends.

Mr. Recorder. Capt. Richardſon does not deny it to any man after he is condemned, that is a piece of Humanity you need not ask, I never knew it denied.

Then

Then Hone was asked, what he could ſay againſt Judgment.

Hone. I beg the ſame favour.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, Ay, God forbid. You had beſt ask for ſome Divine to come to you.

Then Rouſe was asked the ſame Queſtion.

Rouſe. I would ſpeak of the diſadvantages I had when I came upon my Tryal. When I was put upon my Tryal, you know very well, I begged the favour of ſome things; one was a Copy of the Indictment, when I ſaw a perſon come before me, who in his own Conſcience knew was the Author of all theſe things: I have nothing to ſay againſt the Judgment or Verdict, I always had a great Veneration for the Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, I pray God forgive them that came againſt me. I wiſh I had no more weight upon my Legs than I have in my own Conſcience. I prayed a Copy of my Indictment. Theſe things unexpectedly came upon my Tryal, that I had not opportunity to ſpeak what I ſhould.

Mr. Recorder. We are content to hear you. But obſerve, You are to anſwer the Queſtion that is asked. Why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon you. You ſay you won't ſpeak againſt the Jury, we muſt not hear you, nor againſt the Verdict.

Rouſe. I have one word more, and that is, the vaſt difference between the Indictment and their Oaths; the Indictment was, That ſuch and ſuch Words and Diſcourſes, paſſed the ſecond of March; the Oaths ſworn were, That the Words were not ſpoken then, but the laſt of June, which was three Months difference, but however the Jury have pleaſed to find it. I muſt throw my ſelf at His Majeſty's Feet, I have nothing more to ſay.

Then Silence was proclaim'd, and Judgment given againſt Walcot, Hone, and Rouſe, in like manner as upon the Lord Ruſſel.

The Magiſtracy and Government of England Vindicated. In Three Parts. Containing, I. A Juſtification of the Engliſh Method of Proceedings againſt Criminals, &c. II. An Anſwer to ſeveral Replies, &c. III. Several Reaſons for a General Act of Indemnity.

IN the preſent Age, when the variety and multiplicity of new Prints is ſuch, that the Money and Time required for their Purchaſe and Peruſal, is more than an ordinary Gentleman can reaſonably allow; it may deſervedly be thought a Nuſance to the Publick to have their Numbers increaſed; eſpecially ſince the Complaint of the ingenious Author of the Trimmer's Character, that for this very Cauſe, he could almoſt have wiſhed himſelf unable to read; but yet the Support of Magiſtracy and Government is a noble Theme, ſo uſeful to the Publick, and ſo generally agreeable to the Humour of Mankind, that the meer Subject will (I preſume) be an Excuſe for this Publication, if any thing can be ſo.

At this time of day none would have thought that a Neceſſity ſhould happen of writing upon ſuch a Topick, when every Engliſh Proteſtant was entertaining himſelf with the pleaſing Proſpect of Impartial, Due, and Indifferent Adminiſtrations, when Authority was becoming Amiable and Eaſy to the People, when the People were inclining to a Zeal and Affection for the Honour of Magiſtrates; in ſhort, when the Law was recovering its clouded Credit: In this Conjuncture none expected to ſee all the Pillars and Poſts in the Town daubed with plentiful Title-Pages (like ſo many Hiſtriomaſtrixes of William Prinn's) directing their Spectators to Books of Obloquy and Reproach, not only on the Perſons and Opinions, but the Authority of Judges; when neither of the three are corrigible, or ſo much as cenſurable any otherwiſe than in and by a Parliament; much leſs was it expected, that Gentlemen of the long Robe would appear in Print to ridicule their own Profeſſion, and expoſe our Law even to the Scorn of Foreigners. It would not have been ſo very ſtrange to have ſeen a Doctor of the Commons exerciſing his Wit and Railery on the Common Law Proceedings, when he ſaw his deareſt Diana, I mean his Excommunication-Proceſs, in danger of becoming uſeleſs, and a fair occaſion given him for ſuch an Eſſay from the Diſguſt of the People againſt Weſtminſter-Hall.

But none imagin'd that Satyrs and Invectives upon paſt Proceedings ſhould be writ by Lawyers, who expect a farther Benefit from their Profeſſion by the Grace and Favour of the Government, which if they happen to acquire, according to their Expectations, I would only remember them that Mocking is catching in the Proverb. There was once upon a time a certain Maſter of Arts, who, whilſt at Cambridge, did ridicule and expoſe the Clergy of the the Engliſh Church, by writing the pretended Cauſes of their Contempt; but the Templars ſaid, that he, whilſt at London, did give an occaſion for a third Part to the ſame Tune, or at leaſt a new Edition of the Book, with Additions by the Author himſelf, even of his own dull—— as proper for the like uſe. In petty Corporations they who have moſt complained of other Hardſhips have frequently outdone their Predeceſſors, when once they have got their Places. A whining complaining Servant doth often prove a peeviſh imperious Maſter; and I am ſure, in the Inns of Court, the moſt noiſy, troubleſome and mutinous Students and Barriſters, make the ſtiffeſt and moſt magiſterial Benchers. I make no application, but I leave the Reader to do what he pleaſeth. Better things are to be hoped of all concerned in Publick Government.

Since the Preſs ſeems open, and Lawyers Books are publiſhed without a Licenſe, another may aſſume the ſame Liberty with equal Authority, and with more Reaſon, when his Province is only to correct the Miſrepreſentations of Things, Actions and Perſons, tho' made by Authors of Age, Experience, Figure and Learning, (I will not ſay Candour or Honeſty,) eſpecially ſince they are private Men, and having vented their own Thoughts in Print, they remain no longer theirs, but are equally expoſed to the Cenſure or Applauſe of every Reader. Beſides, 'tis generally preſumed, that an Author expects a publick Animadverſion, or otherwiſe he would never have become ſuch. He preſumes his Arguments irrefragable, and then an Anſwer does him no miſchief; and if they are otherwiſe, he deſerves it. And ſurely he ſtands as liable to be corrected by others, as others were to be cenſured by him. And it is more warrantable certainly to write and print for the Vindication of former Proceedings, than it can be either candid or gentile to arraign or expoſe them; eſpecially, ſince to do ſo, is and muſt needs be miſchievous to paſt, preſent, and future Governments, as Experience will unqueſtionably teach us; but the other is and will be of Service to future Adminiſtrations, by maintaining the Reputation and Credit of Judiciary Proceedings.

It is well known, that the Lord Ruſſel being ſo unfortunate as to fall under the Accuſation of Treaſon, was the moſt pitied of any under thoſe Circumſtances, by all who knew either his Family or perſonal Character; great Expectations were then had of the Iſſue of that Tryal, the Event gave great occaſion for Diſcourſe afterwards, and almoſt ever ſince; the printing of his Laſt Speech, with the ſeveral Anſwers to it, did much augment the Talk. It cannot but be remember'd how various and different the Sentiments of moſt were upon that Subject; the Debates concerning it generally concluded in a Pity to his Perſon and Relations, as a great Misfortune upon both, and in truth upon the Nation, that a Gentleman of ſuch Qualifications ſhould be guilty of ſo much Inadvertency (to ſay no worſe) as to engage ſo frequently in ſuch Conſults as he unhappily did. Some blamed the Jury, moſt cenſured the Witneſſes, but very few arraigned either Counſel or Court; and in truth, the Fairneſs and Indifferency of that Tryal was ſuch, that his own Relations were pleaſed, and his Enemies angry, with thoſe that then ſat upon the Bench; and thus it continued till the preſent Revolution.

Then the Memory of that unfortunate Gentleman was revived by the Publication of a Defence of his Innocency; the Name ſubſcribed to the Title-page is ſo great, that I ſhould be afraid to proceed, but that I am reſolved not to be known; and therefore if any thing falls from my Pen indecent or diſreſpectful, he muſt excuſe it as a Privilege claimed by Authors, eſpecially of Books that have no Name to them.

To begin at the end; for what purpoſe was that Pamphlet printed?

It could not be for the Good of the Nation, as a means for conſumption of Paper; for, as I have been told, that's a French Commodity.

It could not be for the Bookſeller's Profit only, for a Reaſon to be gueſſed at.

It could not be for the ſake of that Lord's Memory, or any of his ſurviving Relatives; for no Man will think it a Service to them, to renew the Thoughts of that unhappy Accident in ſo Noble, Ancient, and Worthy a Family. In truth, the whole Treatiſe is nothing but a painting to the life the too deep Concern of that Branch on't in a weak as well as criminal Enterprize; for what elſe doth ſignify the Expreſſion, pag. 4. that being preſent at a Conſult of Traitors a ſecond time, or oftner, raiſes a ſtrong ſuſpicion, that the Party who does ſo, likes it, conſents to it, and approves it; or elſe he would have forborn after his having been once amongſt them. And many other ſuch Expreſſions there are with the like Reflections; as pag. 7. that Rumſey and Sheppard, the two firſt Witneſſes, &c. raiſe a ſtrong ſuſpicion upon my Lord, and make it probable that he was guilty. And in the ſame Page the Author ſeems to agree him guilty of Miſpriſion. And pag. 17. he re-publiſhes the Evidence of Rumſey, that there was a Conſent, and this the Author agrees to be High-Treaſon; but he then endeavours to invalidate the Credibility of that Evidence, by ſhewing the wildneſs of his own Memory. Now how this could ſerve the Reputation of the Deceaſed, or cure the Reſentment of his Relations upon that account, I confeſs my ſelf utterly unable to imagine. Nor can any Reader ſuppoſe the Title verified by the Book, viz. A Defence of Innocence, when there's not one Word to be read of it but in the Frontiſpiece. Surely there's no thanks due to the Author from that Family, no more than was an extraordinary Fee due to that Lawyer who pleaded for a Defendant to this effect: My Client, I muſt confeſs, is a Wag, but not ſo great a Wag as the Counſel of the other ſide would repreſent him; their Proof is very ſtrong, but not ſo ſtrong as they would boaſt it to be; our Defence is but dark and weak, but not ſo weak as they would argue it. So that the Book could not be writ for a Service to that Family, unleſs a Conceſſion of Guilt can be called a Vindication of Innocence.

It could not be for the ſake of the Government: for it can never be deemed a politick Service to rake into old Sores, when lenifying and moderate Methods are more adviſable; and if every thing ſhould be re-publiſhed which hath given diſguſt to the People, few would eſcape the laſh, the Righteous themſelves would ſcarcely be ſaved, for abundance of them have tript either in their publick or private Converſation, and ſome in both, and that notoriouſly too: I name no Body. Beſides, the Government muſt of neceſſity never allow the Doctrines divulged in this Pamphlet, unleſs 'tis intended that its being and continuance ſhall be as precarious as a Beneplacito Judgeſhip, and as dependent upon the People's humour as that is upon the King's: Nor can any Government countenance and encourage the Arraignment of a conſiderable number of wealthy worthy Citizens, with the Printed Cenſure and Inſinuation of their being a parcel of corrupt, ignorant, injudicious, diſhoneſt and partial Fellows, and this is done to the full, when ſaid, that the contrary would have ſworn to a Not Guilty, or at leaſt wiſe they ſhould, if the Author had been there. But moſt of his Readers are of another opinion, notwithſtanding the ſecond Letter, pag. 7.

and

It could not be for the ſake of popular Applauſe; for it's thought, that the Treatiſe will never deſerve or procure it, eſpecially if you take it in pieces, and conſider them apart, and with ſober Reflections. So that no Man can tell what it was writ for.

When the Title of the Book, and Name of the Author was firſt publiſhed, Mankind was full with a pregnant expectation of ſome rare, abſtruſe, uncommon Learning upon the Point of Treaſons with which the World was before unacquainted. No Man looked for a Preachment concerning the Body and Blood of our Saviour, the World to come, and the Guards of Heaven, as Topicks proper for an Animadverſion upon that Tryal, eſpecially from ſuch an Author. But there's nothing ſtrange under the Sun.

The Preface is an Encomium upon the Author himſelf, declaratory of his readineſs for publick Services, and ſeems to be calculated for a Cooler, or a Defence againſt the Heats and Rigors of an harſh and oppreſſive Government, for an help to ſuch as may poſſibly hereafter fall into the like danger and trouble: and to teach the People the fear and jealouſie of a poſſibility of ſuch Occurrences again, can never be thought a publick Service. As to part of the Preface, it is ſo dark, that a ſlender underſtanding can never reach the ſenſe of it, I mean that long Paragraph, The Copies of, &c.

The firſt Letter begins with a ſeeming ſhew of a bold Reſolution in the Author to perform the Duty of a Friendly Counſel, maugre all the inconveniencies that might happen to himſelf thereby. But it concludes with an extraordinary caution and care to prevent all danger, even to ſuch a degree as much diminiſhes the credit of that invincible and heroick Reſolution at firſt boaſted of. And if his Courage had been ſo ſtrong, why were not theſe Letters publiſhed formerly, and in times when in the Author's judgment there was more occaſion for their uſe, than the preſent can poſſibly afford? But rather it may be again asked why are they Printed at all, the Obſervations contained in them having been Printed not above 500 times already, and perhaps with as much advantage? Was it a Secret to the World, that a variance between the Indictment and the Evidence might be alledged on the general Iſſue? Did no Man in Town know that Treaſon and the Miſpriſion of it are different Crimes? Is the diſtinction between them ſuch a new invention, and ſo very uſeful, as to be an equivalent for the want of Counſel in capital Tryals, as the Preface and Letter do inſinuate, if they do any thing? Who ever doubted, but that Proofs of Treaſon muſt not be by Hear-ſay or Argument only? Was it ever a Queſtion for this Hundred Years, but that every Indictment of Treaſon muſt contain an Overt Act? Or that leſs than two Witneſſes was allowable for proof of that Crime? Or did any Man ever ſcruple but that Keble's Statute-Book contains a true Copy of the 13 Car. 2. cap. 1. which requires Witneſſes credible? Now if theſe Queſtions muſt be anſwered in the Negative, how can the advice of theſe Letters be aſſiſtant to a better Defence, than was known long ſince?

The Book itſelf begins with Stories of Tranſubſtantiation of Bodies, and Tranſmigration of Souls, as much to the purpoſe, as the Parſon's Text was to his Doctrine, who Preached upon the Certainty of a Day of Judgment from that Verſe in Geneſis, And Adam knew Eve, and ſhe conceived, &c. But perhaps the Author intended all that firſt Page for a Flouriſh, and to entice his Reader into a patient peruſal of what follows, and prejudice him againſt the Sheet he pretends to anſwer. He is very frank in ſtiling it a Libellous Pamphlet, and the Author ſome rank bigotted Papiſt, but to what purpoſe no Man can divine, unleſs it were to expoſe him to the rage of the Mobile; but his Name was never poſted, and ſo he is ſafe from that danger.

The Aſſertions are two, that there was neither Charge nor Proof; that the Indictment and Evidence were both inſufficient.

I muſt confeſs, that it would be a mighty Addition to the Liberty of the Subject, to have the Law eſtabliſhed, and declared to be what the late Judge doth argue it is; for then there would be a freedom for Malecontents to endeavour their own ſatisfaction by Conſpiracies and Conſults, and that with Impunity. But as the Law was, and always hath been taken to be, an Engliſh Subject hath very little colour for his pretence to ſuch a priviledge as that Doctrine gives.

The Indictment is, that at ſuch a place and time he did Compaſs and Imagine not only to Deprive the King of his Government and Royal State, but to kill and put him to Death, and to procure a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the King's Subjects; and to Subvert the Government of England, and to raiſe a Rebellion againſt the King. Then follows, That to fulfill and perfect theſe Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations, he, together with other Traitors, did then and there with them traiterouſly Conſult, Conſpire, Conclude and Agree, to raiſe a Rebellion, and to ſeize and deſtroy the Guards of the King's Perſon, contra, &c. Now whether theſe laſt Acts be not a natural and genuine Evidence of the former, let any rational Man judge. But I will particularly prove, that this Indictment was ſufficient to warrant the Judgment which the Court gave, and pronounced upon a Verdict, that the Accuſed was guilty of that Fact in the Indictment, and then anſwer the Objections ſtarted againſt it.

Firſt, There's a ſufficient Treaſon alledged. And, ſecondly, Here's a ſufficient Overt Act; both theſe I'll agree are neceſſary, and if either were wanting, the Indictment was naught. Now it muſt be agreed to me, that the firſt is clear and plain, for by the Law, to compaſs or imagine the Death of the King, Queen, or their their eldeſt Son, is High Treaſon. It is true, by the ſame Law ſome Open Act of which human Juſtice can take a Conuſance is requiſite to be proved; the very Words of the Statute do expreſsly require it; and in truth it is no more than what muſt have been, had no ſuch Words been uſed; for Thoughts are ſecret, and can never be arraigned, proved, or cenſured, any otherwiſe than as they are diſcovered by ſome Overt Act; ſo that the Clauſe requiring an appearance of the Compaſſing and Imagination by ſome Overt Act or Open Deed, is no more than would have been impliedly requiſite, had the Clauſe been omitted. 'Tis the Imagination and Compaſſing which is the Treaſon, that alone is the Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis, which is prohibited and condemned; the Overt Act is not the Treaſon, that's only a neceſſary Circumſtance, without which no Court can ever take Conuſance of the other. And it is neceſſary to alledge ſome ſuch Deed, à neceſſitate rei, without reſpect to the Words of that Statute. I inſiſt the longer upon this, becauſe it is uſed as an Objection, that the Clauſe of proveably attaint by, &c. is reſtrictive, whereas it is not ſo; for it is only to make that firſt ſpecified Treaſon of Imagination and Compaſſing to be a thing intelligible and triable; and farther to prove this, it is conſiderable, that this Requiſite of the Overt Act is of uſe and neceſſity barely, and only in the Caſe of that which is firſt mentioned, viz. Compaſſing; for the other ſorts of Treaſon are Acts themſelves whereof notice may be had, as Levying War, Violating the Queen's Bed, and the like; and in an Indictment you need only alledge the Facts themſelves, as that there was a War levied, there was a carnal Knowledge had, and the like. And this farther appears from the very Form of Indictments uſed ever ſince that Statute; for there never was an Indictment (and if there were, it could never be good) barely averring an Overt Act without an expreſs Allegation of the Compaſſing.

Then the Matter reſults ſolely into this Queſtion, Whether the Fact here laid be naturally and neceſſarily declaratory of the Party's Imagination to deſtroy the King; for if ſo, the Indictment is undoubtedly good; and it can never be called a conſtructive Treaſon, or a thing deviſed by the Judge's Interpretation of the Statute; for they adjudge no more Treaſon, than what the Statute declares, and that is an Imagination of the King's Death; now whatſoever is ſignificative of a Man's Intention or Imagination, is a ſufficient Overt Deed to demonſtrate, that that Man had ſuch Intention or Imagination; and whatſoever is expreſſive or ſignificative of a Man's Intending, Compaſſing, or Imagining of the King's Death, is a ſufficient Overt Act to prove and make ſuch a Man a Traitor within this Law. Now that a Conſult about, and an Agreement and Concluſion actually to ſeize the King's Guards, and raiſe a Rebellion, are a natural and genuine Declaration, that the Perſon who did ſo conſult, agree and conclude, did Compaſs and Imagine the Death of the King, is ſurely plain enough; for a Rebellion, if ſucceſsful, can determine in nothing elſe but the King's Death, either Natural or Civil, which is all one within this Law; now he that deſigns and intends the neceſſary means naturally conducing to a particular end, that Man may certainly be ſaid to intend and deſign that end, Cauſa Cauſæ eſt Cauſa Cauſati. If the Deed tend and conduce to the Execution of the Treaſon, that's a ſufficient Overt Act, ſays Coke 3 Inſt. 12. and in the ſame Book, fol. 6. he hath theſe Words, That he who declareth by Overt Act to depoſe the King, is a ſufficient Overt Act to prove, that he Compaſſeth and Imagineth the Death of the King; and ſo it is to impriſon the King, to get him into his Power; and to manifeſt the ſame by ſome Overt Act, this is alſo a ſufficient Overt Act for the Intent aforeſaid.

In 3 Inſt. p. 12. 'tis held, That a Preparation by ſome Overt Act to depoſe the King, or take the King by Force and ſtrong Hand, or to impriſon him till he hath yielded to certain Demands, that is a ſufficient Overt Act to prove the Compaſſing and Imagination of the King's Death; for that this, upon the matter, is to make the King a Subject, and to deſpoil him of his Regal Office; and ſo he ſays it was reſolved by all the Judges of England, Hil. 1. Jac. 1. in the Caſe of the Lord Cobham, Lord Grey, Watſon, and Clark, Seminary Prieſts; and ſo he tells us in the ſame place, that it had been reſolved by the Juſtices in the Caſe of the Earls E. and S. Now if we conſider the reaſon why theſe were Overt Acts of Treaſon, 'twill appear to be only becauſe of their natural tendency to the Accompliſhment of that particular Treaſon of Compaſſing, which holds the ſame in the Author's Caſe as well as in thoſe there mentioned.

A Conſpiracy with a Foreign Prince, is agreed by my Lord Coke, ib. 14. to be Treaſon, if it be to invade the Realm; and an Overt Act of ſuch Practice to be a ſufficient Overt Act of a Compaſſing the King's Death; and the reaſon is, becauſe ſuch Actions cannot be thought to be intended for any other purpoſe; and yet that particular Act may be accompliſhed, and it may ſo happen, as that the King's Death may not follow, and yet they are Overt Acts of that treaſonable Imagination, becauſe of their Conduciveneſs and Tendency thereto. The Caſe of Cardinal Poole was, writing a Book of the Pope's Supremacy, in which were contained Incitements of Charles the Emperor to an Invaſion of this Realm; and that was held an Overt Act of Imagining the King's Death. In the Lord Cobham's and Sir Walter Rawleigh's Caſe, a Conſpiracy, Conſult and Agreement to promote an Inſurrection and procure an Invaſion, was held an Overt Act, 1 Jac. 1. and their Meeting, Conſulting and Agreeing, was laid as an Overt Act, tho' diſcovered before the thing took effect. Dr. Story's Caſe, which is mentioned by the Lords Dyer and Coke, was no more than a Practice or Perſwaſion to promote an Inſurrection and Invaſion, and the Overt Act that was alledged was the Writing of Letters for that purpoſe; which is no more influential towards it, not ſo much as frequently Meeting, Conſulting and Conſpiring, and at laſt Concluding and Agreeing to make an Inſurrection. The Caſe of Mr. Coleman was no other; for whatſoever the Indictment laid, the Evidence was only of Letters to the like effect (as to this point) with thoſe of Dr. Story; and the Caſe of Dr. Story was before the 13 Eliz. which made a new Treaſon during her Life; for the Tryal was in Hilary Term, and the Parliament did not begin till April following. A Machination or Agreement to raiſe a Rebellion naturally tends to the Deſtruction both of King and People; and an Advice to it hath been adjudged ſo: As in the Reign of Hen. 4. one Balſhal going from London, found one Bernard at Plow in the Pariſh of Oſley in the County of Hertford; Balſhal told him, that King Ric. 2. was alive in Scotland, (which was falſe, for he was then dead) and adviſed him to get Men, and go to King Richard; in Mich. 3 Hen. 4. Rot. 4. you'll find this adjudged Treaſon. Throgmorton's Caſe is as plain, for his was only a Conſpiracy to levy War within this Realm; he did not join in the Execution, and the Conſpiracy alone was declared to be a ſufficient Overt Act by the Judges; 'Tis no Anſwer to it, to ſay, that a War was afterwards levied, for quoad him 'twas a bare Conſult; his Offence was no more than that. In Sir Henry Vane's Caſe, Meeting and Conſulting were alledged and held to be Overt Acts. The Caſe of Conſtable, mentioned in Calvin's Caſe, was only an Act tending to depoſing the Queen, as diſperſing Bills in the Night, that Edw. 6. was alive and in France; and held an Overt Act declarative of his Compaſſing her Death, and he was executed for it: And in the Report of Calvin's Caſe you have ſeveral other Caſes mentioned, where Endeavours to draw Subjects from their Allegiance have been adjudged Overt Acts of this ſpecies of Treaſon, The Compaſſing, &c.

The Word Compaſs in the Statute is of a larger extent than only to mean an actual Aſſault on the King's Perſon, and an Endeavour to cut his Throat; it moſt certainly implies any Conſult or Practice of another thing directly which may produce that effect, as the diſſwading People from their Fidelity; ſuch was Owen's Caſe in King Jac. 1. his Time, in the 13th Year of that Reign: This Advice was to this effect, That King James being excommunicated by the Pope, might be killed by any Man, and that ſo to do was no Murder; for being convicted by the Pope's Sentence, he might be ſlaughter'd without a Fault, as an Executioner hangs a Criminal condemned by Law; and for this he was hanged as a Traitor. He that denies the Title to the Crown, and endeavours to ſet it upon another's Head, may do this without a direct and immediate deſiring the Death of him that wears it; (ſo ſaid Saint-John in his Argument againſt the Earl of Strafford;) and yet this is Treaſon as was adjudged in the Caſe of Burton, and in the Duke of Norfolk's Caſe, 13 Eliz. This denying of the Title, with Motives, tho' but impliedly of Action againſt it, hath been adjudged on Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death, as it was in John Sparhawke's Caſe, Paſch. 3. Hen. 4. Rot. 12. The like was the Caſe of John Awater, who was indicted for a Treaſon of that nature in Kent, and the Indictment removed into B. R. Trin. 18 Ed. 4. ſee Rot. 17. and he was thereupon afterwards out-lawed as a Traitor; and ſo was Thomas Heber at the ſame time; and Words ſignificative of an actual Intention have been held ſo, as are the Opinions of Yelver. 107. 197. Arthur Crobagan's Caſe, Cro. Car. 332. and abundance of others might be named as they are reported in our Law-Books, but I do not particularly mention them, for that their Authority in ſome of them is very ſlender, and may be ill uſed, to the ſtraining of raſh and unadviſed Words into a Signification of a Man's Compaſſing, when perhaps the Man never thought as he ſpoke: However all of them do evince, that adviſed and deliberate Preparations moving to a Danger to the King's Perſon, have all along been held Overt Acts of a Compaſſing his Death; and ſome of them prove, that Preparatives and Motives to the levying of a War have been held Treaſon, as was Sir William Aſhton of Suffolk, 31 Hen. 6. mentioned in Cro. Car. 119. for making Ballads reflecting upon the King, and writing Letters to the Men of Kent, exciting them to riſe to aid the then Duke of York, &c. ad guerram levandam; and no mention of any War actually levyed. Germain and Taylor's Indictment hath very little more in it mentioned than the like Preparations and Incitements to a Rebellion; and yet the Treaſon there laid was a Compaſſing of the King's Death, anno 2 Ed. 4. The Caſe of Thomas Burdett, in 17 Ed. 4. as at large it appears in the ſame Report of Cro. Car. amounts to no more than the Indictment in queſtion, viz. That he compaſſed the King's Death; and to accompliſh that Intention, he did diſperſe divers Writings, &c. ad intentionem that the People ſhould riſe and levy War, &c. the Judgment in that Caſe, Drawing, Hanging, and Quartering; the like in Collingbourn's Caſe, 2 Rich. 3. in the ſame Rep. 122. where he is indicted in like manner, for exciting and moving the People to an Inſurrection and War, and he incurred the like Judgment; which Caſes are infinitely ſhort of this in queſtion; and it cannot but be wonder'd that any Man who has read them ſhould queſtion, whether a conſulting and conſpiring about Riſing, and an actual Agreement and Determination to riſe, be an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death. In the very Tryal of the Lord Stafford it is affirmed by Sir William Jones (who was certainly of great Authority with the Author) that the meeting and conſulting together is an Overt Act, tho' the thing agreed on be never put in Execution; and 'tis there reſolved by the Judges that the ſame Treaſon may be proved by two Witneſſes to ſeveral Overt Acts, tho' one ſpeak of Words or Actions that were ſpoken or done at one time and place, and another ſpeak of Words and Actions at another time and place; which argues, that Words, much more a Conſult and Agreement, may make an Overt Act. Even in the Caſe of Stephen Colledge, in which tho' the Tryal hath been cenſured, yet the Indictment never was, and in that Indictment the Treaſon is laid as in this Caſe, That he traiterouſly Imagined and Compaſſed the King to depoſe, kill, and deſtroy; the Overt Acts are, That he armed himſelf, and adviſed others to arm, and ſpoke ſeveral Words, &c. Here was no War levyed, only a Preparation, and yet that was allowed an Overt Act; and as for the Words, if they are allowed to be one, with much more reaſon may Meeting, Conſulting, Concluding, and Agreeing to do.

As to the Objection, Surely there is no weight in the firſt which is Page 10. that criticizes upon the Word fait Act, and that 'tis only a Meeting to agree, and an Agreement to do, but 'twas not done: Suppoſe they had concluded and agreed to poiſon or ſtab, &c. according to the Opinion in that Page, this was no Treaſon; for 'tis only agreeing and concluding upon a thing to be done, but it is not done. He doth in Page 13. argue, that this can never be an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death, becauſe levying War is a diſtinct ſpecies of Treaſon, and a Conſpiring to levy War is not a Levying War, and even Levying War it ſelf cannot be aſſign'd as an Overt Act of Compaſſing, unleſs the Indictment were particularly for that; but ſurely another ſort of Act that favours of another ſpecies of Treaſon, if it naturally conduce to the Accompliſhing of the firſt ſpecies, viz. that of Compaſſing, it may be aſſigned as an Overt Act of it; and Sir Henry Vane's Caſe is quite otherwiſe, for there a Levying War was the Overt Act alledged of the Compaſſing, and allowed by all the Judges; and all the Indictments in the Weſt upon Monmouth's Rebellion were ſo, and yet drawn by very good Advice; beſides, what Anſwer can be given to the Caſes which I have cited, where Conſults, Conſpiracies, Practices, Advices, Letters, Perſwaſions, and other Motives and Preparatives to an Inſurrection, have been held Overt Acts of an Imagination of the King's Death, tho' no War was levied, though no Inſurrection was made.

'Tis apparent from what was ſaid before, that to take the King Priſoner, or to ſeize his Perſon, is a Compaſſing of his Death; and if ſo, then to ſit in Council to Conſpire the effecting of that, is an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death; and this Caſe amounts to that, here was a Conſultation to ſeize upon the King's Guards, which could tend to nothing but the ſeizing of his Perſon; and then the Conſequence is plain. The Author ſays, Page 14. If it had but been alledged in the Indictment, that in purſuance of the Conſult and Agreement, there had been a View of the Guards, and a Report made that the thing was feaſible, this would have been more to the purpoſe, how much more, no Man can tell; for every Objection in the Book would have been as good againſt that as this. The great Objection he ſeems to rely on, is, That the Law takes no notice of them: For once I will ſuppoſe that it doth not, and then let us obſerve if any Argument can be drawn from thence: Perhaps the thing was not uſed or known when the 25 Edw. 3. was made. Can nothing be Treaſon, if the Plot laid to accompliſh it be concerning a thing not in eſſe at the time of the Statute? Certainly it may. If ſeveral Malecontents ſhould conſult and agree and prepare (in order to an Inſurrection) to ſeize the Tower, Portſmouth, Hull, and Plymouth Fort, would not this be an Overt Act of Treaſon? And yet our Law takes no notice of any Garriſons there or any where elſe; they have no relation to the Militia, nor were there any Arms in thoſe places in Edward III. his time that we read of in our Law-Books; if this be otherwiſe; Why did not the Author find fault with Rouſe's Indictment, which was tried much at the ſame time with this in queſtion? Suppoſe all the Gentlemen Penſioners, Grooms of the Stole, Gentlemen of the Bed-chamber, and the like, killed in the Night, and the Doors in Whiteball broken up, and all the Swords, Muskets, and Piſtols there taken away, and yet it happen'd that the King's Perſon was left untouch'd; would this be an Act of Burglary and Murther only? We have no Law-Books that take notice of Arms at Whiteball, or ſuch Names as thoſe Servants go by; and ſuppoſe, at the ſame time, upon the Conſult, that the Conſpirators did move, diſcourſe, debate, and conclude of an Inſurrection, would it not then be Treaſon? If not, nothing can be ſo, unleſs the King's Perſon be murthered or ſeized, and the Statute ſhould not have ſaid Compaſs or Imagine, but Seize or Kill, &c. It ſuffices then, that the Guards are in common Underſtanding known to be uſed and employed for the Attendance upon and Preſervation of his Perſon. If common Senſe and Reaſon be Judge, no Man can think but that he who intended to move an Inſurrection and ſeize the Guards, had a farther Deſign upon the King's Perſon; and then 'tis Treaſon; if otherwiſe, a King of England is in a worſe Condition than the worſt and meaneſt of his Subjects; for a King muſt not, cannot, in or by our Law, aſſault, ſtrike, ſeize, attach, or impriſon in Perſon, and conſequently cannot defend himſelf; and ſhall not his Servants, Guards, and Attendants (which are all of the ſame nature) wear a Sword, or carry a Muſket before him? If they do ſo, is it not then known that they do it? If it be commonly known to be ſo, doth not he that ſeizes and deſtroys thoſe Attendants, endanger the King's Perſon? And if that be ſo, the Inference is eaſy. It can never be, it will never be allowed for Law, that a Seizing all the King's Guards is only a Breach of the Peace, unleſs we renounce the Law, and will judge more by Inclinations and Partyſhips than by Reaſon and Precedents. As to the diſtinction between an actual Seizing them, and a Conſult and Agreement to ſeize them, what I have urged before overthrows it; and what the Author ſays doth not maintain it, for both have a tendency to the Execution of the Treaſon intended.

I will not take the pains to remark upon all the Inconſiſtencies of the Conceſſions and Denials in the Book, they are obvious to the Readers. As to his Quarrel at the King's Guards as an illegal thing, and terrible to the People, ſomewhat of the French Growth, I hope the King will always preſerve them for his own perſonal Preſervation, notwithſtanding the Author's Opinion. As to his Temporary Laws, which declare Words Treaſon, moſt part of them were affirmative of the Old Law, and were made only in Compliment to a New-crown'd Head, when they prohibited nothing but what was before ſo; and for the reſt, no Concluſion could be made from them for the maintenance of his Aſſertion if he had repeated them; which ſince he does not, nor will I.

As to the Caſes cited by the Author of the Antidote (which I have mentioned,) he agrees to Conſtable's Caſe, but does not diſtinguiſh it in its Reaſon from that in Diſpute. He denies the Authority and Law of Dr. Story's Caſe, which no body ever denied before him. He ſays, that in the Lord Cobham's Caſe there were People aſſembled, but gives not any Anſwer to what the Antidote affirmed, viz. That the Overt Act, taken notice of in the little Book, called, The Pleas of the Crown, was only the Conſpiring to make an Inſurrection. He doth confeſs, that in the Lord Grey's Caſe there was only a Conſpiracy: He ſays, that in Sir Henry Vane's and Plunket's Caſe there were ſeveral other Ingredients to mount them to Treaſon, but what they were no body muſt learn at leaſt not from the Author, for he names none of them.

He conſumes half a Page in an Encomium upon the Judiciouſneſs of that Court, which made a conſcientious legal Scruple, Whether the Murther of a Miſtreſs by her Servant were Petit-Treaſon, by reaſon of the difference of her Gender? But at laſt he tells us, That the Judges of the Common Pleas did upon much Deliberation ſatisfie thoſe of the King's Bench, that Maſter and Miſtreſs were in effect but one.

In the concluſion of the firſt Letter, he ſays, That Conſpiring againſt the King's Perſon, is moſt juſtly taken to be to conſpire againſt the King's Life; but in the Book he will not allow a conſpiring and agreeing to ſeize (i. e. beat and deſtroy) the Guards, which are ordinarily and commonly known to attend the King's Perſon, to be a conſpiring againſt his Perſon; which whether it be or not, the next Tryal of this Nature will determine. Now, after all, what can be a greater Reflection upon the Learning, Judgment, and Integrity of the King's Counſel, Judges, and Recorder, than to declare and publiſh in Print, that the firſt proſecuted, the ſecond tried, and the laſt condemned a Gentleman as a Traitor, when the Charge had nothing in't of that nature: If true, the bare Printing it is unbecoming the —— But as for their Reputations, let them juſtifie themſelves. The reaſon of my undertaking to explode ſuch a Reflection, was my own and every Man's Duty to the preſent Government (the King and Queen's Majeſties being both concerned, and eminently too, in the Conſequence of ſuch Doctrines) and a Love to my Countrey-men, that they may not preſume upon the Authority of ſuch a Defence; for if they do, they may find their Miſtake, when noozed through the Power of Truth, the contrary Opinion.

As to the Proof I will not rake into it, ſince the Author hath repreſented too much of its Strength, and De mortuis nil niſi bonum, it can never be thouhgt a grateful Province to debate or convince of Guilt; but yet I may ſay ſo much, that there was Evidence enough to juſtifie All concerned in the Proſecution and Tryal, though for ſeveral Reaſons the Attainder is fit to be reverſed, but hardly for thoſe which this Author mentions.

Since the Writing of this Sheet, there came to my Hands a Treatiſe, calling it ſelf, The Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, which ſavours more of Policy than Law, and his Topicks are the Rights of the People and Power of Parliaments; they argue the Author to be a greater Stateſman than Lawyer, and therefore much too great for me to encounter; and a Debate concerning the Heads he inſiſts on, is neither ſafe nor allowable without Doors. I ſhall make but three Remarks on what he ſays: Firſt, He may aſſure himſelf, That that Power from which he argues his Law, is now apparently lodged in the Commonalty, not in the Nobility. Secondly, the King's Solicitor (whom he reflects on) twittered more Reaſon and Law than yet hath been or ever will be anſwered: And thirdly, The Indictment contained no new conſtructive Treaſon, but only that which was plainly and directly declared in and by the 25 Edw. 3. if the Letters of it make Words, and the Words Senſe, and one Man may be allowed able to read them as well as another.

Since the writing of the laſt Paragraph, there came to my Hands another Pamphlet, written by a new Obſervator; but I ſuppoſe the Judges that ſhall be, will correct that Sort of Licentiouſneſs which he aſſumes in his Remarks: Which if they do not, they'll have fine eaſie Places on't as well as their Predeceſſors; and much good may it do them.

A Second Vindication of the Magiſtracy and Government of England, by way of Anſwer to the ſeveral Replies, &c.

IT is very obſervable, that ſince the late Revolution, nothing hath more diſturbed our Peace than the Liberty of the Preſs: And amongſt all our new Prints, the moſt malignant and miſchievous Libels on the preſent Government, have been written by thoſe Lawyers who pretend themſelves the greateſt Zealots for its Honour and Service, which may be ſuſpected as falſe, unleſs it be withall conſidered, that ſome modern Royaliſts have nothing recommendatory of themſelves, but the Miſcarriages of others, and others of them have ſuch great ones of their own, that an Extenuation or Excuſe is impoſſible, and therefore to cloud their own Deformities, they would blacken other Men's Reputations, and in order to it they have cenſured Innocence, and arraigned Laws; and where a Slip or Fault hath been, though ſo ſmall as ſcarcely to deſerve the name of one, they have magnified it into an execrable Villany; and for a colour of ſuch their Calumny and Slander, they have vented new Goſpel and Law both: Nay, they have broached ſuch Notions to the World, as are directly fatal to that Crown, of which they boaſt themſelves the Makers and Supporters, and yet in doing ſo they pretend to merit——

It is ſtrange but true, for the Fact is plain, and the Conſequence too: Upon the preſent Change, the Republicans of both Gowns did deem it their Policy and Intereſt to beſpatter and reproach other Men's Actions; and, like baſe and means Spirits, gave ill Names and Words to every thing in which themſelves had not been concerned, and made Reviling ſo cuſtomary, that it is become the modiſh Sin of the Age. It is moſt certain, the old Engliſh Honour, Frankneſs, Ingenuity, and good Nature, is quite abandoned from ſome Companies and Places in the Town, and inſtead of Folly, we have aſſumed a Vice in our common Converſation, inſtead of Drollery and Banter, the new faſhioned Wit at—', allows allows nothing as acceptable but Lying and Slander; nay, the very Spark of a Courtier hath changed his Note: Whereas fulſom, groſs, and falſe Flattery was wont to be his Talent, he is now got to the other Extreme, i. e. revengeful, weak, and falſe Characters, both of Perſons and Actions: Which is the worſt is difficult to determine, but Falſhood is the moſt predominant humour in both; and that Age is ſurely unhappy, which is plagued with a Surfeit of either, eſpecially when the Exceſs is ſo great as now, that no Gentleman can be thought a good Companion, no Clergyman a true Proteſtant, no Lawyer an honeſt Engliſhman, no Courtier a faithful Servant, unleſs he can, and do rail and ſnarl, and ſcold, and that at Things that were juſtly uſed in former Times, and muſt neceſſarily be uſed in theſe Times, and will be ſo in all Times whatſoever, even in Secula Seculorum: Theſe little ſtinging Animals, do value themſelves upon their Honeſty, becauſe they find Faults, but it is in Caſes where no Eye can ſpy them but their own; they value themſelves upon their Wit, becauſe their Cenſures are ſharp and biting, but that is ſo eaſy, ſo very eaſy a Province, that Nature teaches even the rudeſt of her Breed to be ſatyrical, and the Natural oftentimes outdoes the pretended Scholar in Ribaldry, and hath perhaps a better Faculty that way than Fancy for Picquancy of Reflection.

Now as the Fact is thus criminal and ridiculous both, ſo muſt the Conſequence prove fatal to the Government which they would be thought (but intend not) to ſupport; for when once reſolved to arraign all paſt Proceedings, they are forced for the maintenance of ſuch their Reflections to vent thoſe Opinions, Doctrines, and Rules in Divinity and Law, which have in every Age (ſave one) been juſtly exploded, as deſtructive to the Honour and Being of the then Poſſeſſors of the Crown; and can conduce to no other end than the utter Subverſion of this, and every other Government that doth but ſmell of a Monarchy.

It cannot be denied but in moſt Reigns there have been ſome Occaſions given for Diſguſt to the People, that Kings have born too hard upon their Subjects, that the Subjects have worthily complained of ſome Warps from the Law, but no Man ever with Senſe pretended that this is a Reaſon to induce a Belief, that every Act of State, and every Judgment of Law in former times was Arbitrary and Unwarrantable: No ſurely, the Publiſhers of ſuch Reflections are of another thought themſelves; and ſome folks imagine, they who formerly were engaged in Seditious Practices againſt the Crown, would now upon the preſent occaſion explode that Law which doth condemn ſuch Practices, that they may with impunity repeat them whenſoever the King or his Miniſters ſhall chance to diſoblige them, and that this is the true reaſon of half the new Libels and Invectives upon paſt Proceedings.

It is now apparent to all Mankind, that every Line, or at leaſt Page of ſome Men's Works are deſigned only as a Courtſhip to the Mobb, by bridling the Sovereignty, and clipping the Prerogative, even to ſuch a degree, as doth abſolutely deprive it of thoſe Rights, Powers, and Authorities, which the ancient Law, continued Uſage, and our preſent Repreſentatives conſent to allow it.

To check this growing Itch of Pamphleting the Nation into another Change, and to vindicate the Rights of the Crown, and juſtifie the Magiſtracy of England, from the Obloquy which was induſtriouſly thrown on it in one Particular, there was three Months ſince, a Sheet Printed and Publiſhed, at which ſome Men took Offence, but others were of Opinion, that its Publication was ſeaſonable and well timed; that its reflection on the trifling Defence which it aſſumed to anſwer, were juſt and ſmooth, and very ſoft, conſidering the occaſion given for a more Satyrical Style, from the fondneſs and incoherence of the Defenders Expreſſions and Inferences, and that the mode of managing his Argument, was modeſt and tender, with a decent and due regard to the Memory of the unfortunate Deceaſed, which had ſuffered more than enough of Injury by that pretended Juſtification.

A Cholerick and Sedulous Enquiry hath been made after the Author's Name, but the Inquiſitor is ſtill at a loſs, notwithſtanding his Confidence of a certain Knowledge who it was that came behind and ſtruck him, &c. But to give him ſome Satisfaction, after all his fatigue in ſearching, I will aſcertain who it was not; he may aſſure himſelf that none concerned in that Tryal, were concerned or privy to its Vindication, and when it was compoſed and writ, the Party intended it chiefly for his own and the World's Diverſion, from the ungrateful neceſſity of Reading always on one Side, by the interpoſal of a few Lines on the other; that our Humours might not be quite ſowred, and our Genius turn too peeviſh, through the Influence of Satyr and Libel, with which the World hath too much abounded of late Years; nor had there been one Word more publiſhed upon that Subject, but that the Authority of the Defender doth challenge a Vindication, and the Word of a Prieſt ſays, that it needs one; both ſhall have an Anſwer preſently.

But firſt it is remarkable, that this new Reply hath got a Licenſe, when none of his other elaborate Works could procure one; however, it is poſſible that the Licenſer may hereafter renounce, or retract his Allowance in this Caſe, as he hath done in ſeveral others already, when his Superiours are acquainted with the Contents and Tendencies of that to which he hath given his Imprimatur; for it is not to be ſuppoſed, that Miniſters of State will ever be ſo incurious of their Maſter's Honour, and the Rights of his Crown, as to approve their Diminution, when once they perceive it.

The ſingle Point which the Advocate for Magiſtracy aſſumed to maintain, was that the Indictment in queſtion was Legal and Good, ſufficient both for Matter and Form, and did warrant the Judgment which was pronounced upon the Verdict that affirmed its Truth; this ſeems the principal Aſſertion in that Paper, which whether his Precedents and Authorities, Arguments and Reaſons, are ſufficient to prove, the Reader muſt judge; that the Caſes he cites are truly reported for ſo much as he uſes them, none can deny, and that the Law is with them upon the whole Matter, ſhall be farther evinced.

But ſince that Sheet hath made ſome noiſe amongſt angry Men (which was little expected by him that wrote it,) it will not, I hope, be thought impertinent to ſpend a few Paragraphs upon upon the boisterous and blustering Invectives and Remarks made against its Author, in a pretended Reply. In his Vindication therefore I shall observe, the Temper, the Wit, the Guess, the Reason, the Religion, and lastly, the Law of that Replication.

As to the Temper, it seems to be writ under some disappointment, for the Author doth in every Sentence declare his Passion, and plainly tells us, that he was then discomposed; but whether his Displeasure were conceived at a past or present Chief, is not so easie to determine: To expose his Fury, it is enough to repeat his Epithets of Daring, Bold, Impudent, Presumptuous, Base, Ingenerous, Insolent, &c. and all this despised by his reputed Author, and smiled at by the real one. He is pleased to call the Sentence and Execution a plain Murther, which if so, sure I am that he is bound in Conscience to Prosecute an Indictment against the Judges, the Recorder, the Grand and Petit Jury, the Witnesses, the Clerks, the Sollicitors, the Goaler, the Sheriffs and the Executioner, for they were all concerned either as Accessories, or Principals, and demerit a Halter if the Repliant's Opinion be Law; but it is observed amongst Honest Men, that none of these Parties shew any fear on't; and the reason they give for it is, because the Indictment was as good as their Jurisdiction, and the Concurrence of those two makes them as safe as an Act of Indemnity can do: But all this was Passion.

As to the Wit on't, most of his Readers are at a loss where to find it, unless it be in his English Verses, which do so hit the sense of the Original, and contain such strong and pregnant flights of English Poetry, that some of his Readers have compared them even with Sternhold and Hopkins; and others are of Opinion, that they do not come short of the Essays of the two Grays-Inn Poets, one of which Translated Grotius, de Veritate Christianæ Religionis, and the other Coke upon Littleton into Rhime, but the generality do declare that for Heighth of Fancy, Propriety of English, and Exactness of Rhime, he hath much out-done all those: but for my part, I believe, that last Rhapsody was added not so much for the Ingeny sake, as to menace the Answerer with a design to Sacrifice him whensoever an occasion should offer it self, and consequently to do what the whole Book complains of; but that Advocate is not so much a Coward as to be afraid on't.

As for the Guess, it is very cunning, and argues more Figure-Knowledge than true Judgment in Styles, Modes, Dialects, or Peculiarities of Speech, or Writing, for he will have the Author of that Sheet, to be the Author of the Antidote, though he never saw it till he had the misfortune to have read the Defence; and his particular Idioms are as different from those of the Antidote, as they are from those of the Defence; but this is all Guess. He will have it one of the Counsel of that Tryal, because he hath put Counsel before Court: A Cunning Man would have guess'd the contrary, as supposing it done fallendi gratia, for the sake of disguise; but he may be assured it was meer accident that occasioned that fault. He will have it to be the then Sollicitor, because of his Reputation, which is supposed to be touched in that Defence: But his Readers think that that Gentleman's Figure for Learning, Honour, and Virtue, is so far above the reach of a little Pamphlet, that all the virulent Reproaches of the Reply cannot sully it, nor is it in the power of his Tongue or Pen, to prejudice his Character in the World; but however it is prudent to suppose to my self an eminent Adversary, that if a Foil be my fortune, it may be the easier.

But since we are at guessing, the World guesses, that he who wrote the Reply, did write the Half Sheet called the Justification; and it is really sportive to read the Justifier, commending the Defender for a learned worthy Person; and the Repliant doing the same good Office for the Justifier, and almost in the same words commending him: Nay, he spends a whole Page in the fulsom Praises upon that Small Bulk Author, and rejoyces that the Work was done to his Hands, which is a very pretty jest. However, it is at most but R. for A. and A. for R. and R. A. still, which is much better than the contrary practice, of which some Authors have been guilty.

As to the Reasoning part, the Reader must excuse my brevity, for in truth there is very little in it of that nature; however, a few remarks may quicken and revive that faculty against the next turn. The Advocate owns it to be writ in answer to his Defence, ergo it reflects upon the Nation's Wisdom. He expresses a Resentment at my Lord Russel's engaging in such a weak and criminal Enterprise, ergo he reflects upon the Nation's Justice. He names the Lord Russel, (though with the most tender Appellations that could be used,) ergo he reflects on that Lord's memory. He vindicates the Indictment as good, ergo he justifies all the Proceedings in that Case. He argues that the Sentence was legal upon such a Verdict, ergo he is against the Reversal. He puts a Case, offers a Point, and makes a Proof on't, ergo he is transcendently impudent. These, and such like, are the Inferences, and do demeric a Laugh.

As to Religion, I see none in it, unless it be in the mention of the Devilish Powder Plot, which is still as much to the purpose of his Reply, as the story of Transmigration of Souls, was to that of his Defence; only Meekness is transparent in his Style, Humility in the Title Page, and true Christian Charity in his Menaces of an exception out of the Act of Indemnity, which he repeats three or four times at least, as if his whole interest were designed to promote it. The Gentleman's Danger is from publick and scandalous Actings in the Eye of the World; which were (says he) labouring to Support the Government, every Man knows what sort; lashing the innocent with a bitter and sharp Tongue, and inveigling of Juries with Rhetorical Flourishes. Now to examine a little these three monstrous Transgressions, let us go backwards. As to the last, a Duty can never be a Crime; every Servant owes Truth to his Master, while such: Every Advocate is to do his utmost, and a failure in it had deserved both the worst of Names, and Punishment, which the Repliant could invent, or his Interest procure. For all Mankind must agree that the now Servants of the present Crown are obliged to do the like upon the like occasion; if otherwise, the Jacobites side will be the safest. I will not reflect on the weakness of the Juries that were thus inveigled, if any such there were, but rather suppose that the Oaths of Witnesses, not the Pleading of Counsel, ſel, did govern their Conſciences. As to the ſecond, that is falſe, and needs no other anſwer. As to the firſt, that Gentleman's Honour and Merit afterwards, is as remarkable as his Fault at firſt, if it were any; but however he is likely to have abundance of Company, in Deſert at leaſt, if not in Cenſure; for a Duke of York's Creature is certainly as culpable as a King James's Servant. And Andrew Marvel's Characters in his Growth of Popery, will be as true a Directory to decypher Criminals as the Four Volumes of noted Tryals. And perhaps if the Ordinance of May 10. 1650. ſhould chance to be revived, Danger and Fear may ſeize other Men, as well as thoſe that ſerved paſt Governments; it is therefore thought adviſable, for all to ſit down quiet and forgive and forget what is paſt, but ſerve God and their Majeſties for the future, and not belabour the excepting one another; for if any ſhould be ſuch Fools, the Knaves will get the better of it, and the Righteous ſcarcely be ſaved. So much for Religion.

Now for the Law if we can find it: But becauſe the Defender ſeems ſomewhat diſpleaſed at the Repetition of that unhappy Lord's Name, whoſe Caſe gives occaſion for the preſent Queſtion. Let us therefore put it like Mooters, John a Styles was indicted, for that he, at ſuch a time and place, did compaſs to deprive his Natural Lord the King that then was, of his Regal State, and to deſtroy his Life, and to ſubvert the Government, and raiſe a Rebellion, and to fulfil that Imagination, he, together with others, did then and there conſult and agree to raiſe a Rebellion againſt the ſaid King, and to ſeize and deſtroy the Guards of the ſaid King's Perſon, contrary to, &c. The Queſtion was not whether J. S. was not Guilty? nor, If the Witneſſes ſwore falſe? Whether his Attainder were fit to be reverſed, But the Diſpute was, Whether that Indictment were legal? Whether ſuppoſing J. S. to be found Guilty, the Court that pronounced the Sentence of Treaſon againſt him, ought to have arreſted ſuch Judgment on the motion of J. S. that the Indictment was inſufficient? The Sheet argues that the Indictment was good, and conſequently the Sentence purſuant thereto was warrantable by the Laws of this Land. The Argument ſeems founded both upon the Reaſon of Things, and the Authority of Precedents.

Firſt, The Reaſon alledged was, that the laſt part, which in Lawyers terms is called an Overt Act, was a natural and genuine Senſe or Declaration, or Overt ſignification of the firſt part, which is an internal ſecret Thought, i. e. the Imagination and Compaſſing, which is the Treaſon prohibited and condemned. That the latter directly and conſequentially tending and conducing in the common Senſe and Reaſon of all Mankind, (excepting the Defender, and two or three more,) to the accompliſhment of the former, makes a good and ſufficient charge within the Stat. Ed. 3. A Repetition is tedious, and an Abridgment is ſcarcely poſſible, the whole Sheet being but a Breviate, I ſhall therefore refer you thereto.

Secondly, The Authorities there urged, are either the Opinions of Judges and other Lawyers, or Precedents of Indictments of the like, or the ſame nature, from which the Legality of this may be juſtly concluded. The ſubſtance of them on the whole matter is, that Overt Acts to depoſe the King, or deſpoil him of his Regal Office, or take him by Force or ſtrong Hand, or to impriſon his Perſon till he yields to the demands of thoſe who practiſe ſuch endeavours, are ſufficient Overt Acts to prove the Compaſſing and Imagination of his Death. That levying War, cauſing an Inſurrection, promoting an Invaſion; nay, that Conſults, Conſpiracies, Practices, Advices, Letters, Perſuaſions, and other Motives, and Preparations to an Inſurrection, or Invaſion, though none ſucceed, have been held Overt Acts of Imagining the King's Death. I will not repeat the Caſes, but as occaſion offers from the other ſide.

The Objections there mentioned and anſwered from the Penning of the Statute are too trivial to deſerve a remembrance, nor would they have ever been thought otherwiſe, but that J. S. was a Noble Perſon, and the Defender a great Man, and the Prefacer thought ſo too, either by himſelf or others. Theſe and ſuch like Ingredients, have made ſome ſemblance of difficulty: And in truth, had there been a real doubt in the Caſe, the Author of the Remarks on that Tryal, who wanted neither Senſe nor Will to cenſure it, had his Opinion ſo inclined, I ſay, he would certainly have fallen foul on it in thoſe invidious Obſervations of his upon the late Times. He quarrels with the Legality of the Jurors, the Defender with that of the Indictment, and both with the Evidence. The Author of the Sheet differs from them in the two firſt, but agrees with them in the laſt, that Teſtimony delivered for fear of Life, or hopes of Pardon or other Reward, is hardly creditable; but that is not the Point. Let us ſee if the Replication doth overthrow the Charge as inſufficient; and for my part I cannot find a Line of Argument in it, but only it is naught, becauſe it is naught. The conſulting and concluding to make an Inſurrection and Rebellion, and ſeize the King's Guards, is not a Declaration of the Party's compaſſing the King's Depoſal or Death, and why? Becauſe conſpiring to levy War, is not a levying War, and levying War is a diſtinct Treaſon; this is the ſubſtance of the tenth Page, if I can read: The Sheet ſaid truly, That levying War it ſelf might be alledged as an Overt Act of Compaſſing, and hath been ſo frequently, and meeting and agreeing to rebel and ſeize the Guards, hath a direct tendency to promote a Demiſe of the King either natural or civil, and therefore might as well be alledged an Overt Act as moſt things whatſoever.

I had almoſt forgot one Clauſe, and that is the Unneceſſarineſs of making 13 Car. 2. if it ſhould be as the Advocate argues; I ſuppoſe he means the firſt Paragraph, for the ſecond is agreed to be introductive of a new Law, &c. but the firſt is only a Paraphraſe upon the 25 Ed. 3. It is thus, That if any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever, ſhall within the Realm or without, compaſs, imagine, invent, deviſe, or intend death or deſtruction, or any bodily harm, tending to death or deſtruction, maim or wounding, impriſonment, or reſtraint of the perſon of our Sovereign Lord the King, or to deprive or depoſe him, from the ſtyle, honour, or Kingly name of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, or of any other his Majeſty's Dominions or Countries, or to levy War againſt his Majeſty within this Realm Realm or without, or to move or stir any Foreigner or Stranger with force to invade this Realm, or any other his Majesty's Dominions and Countries being under his obeysance, and such compassings, imaginations, inventions, devices, or intentions, or any of them shall express, utter, or declare, by any printing, writing, preaching, or malicious advised speaking, being legally convicted thereof, by the Oaths of two lawful and credible Witnesses upon Tryal, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due course of Law; then every such, &c. shall, &c. Now what is this but a Confirmation of the old Statute in words at length; which was agreed to be so in the House of Commons, 1 Jac. 2. when a Motion was made to renew that Law, the Lawyers Answer was, that the 25 Ed. 3. did the same thing, and a Man may boldly say it, that here's nothing declar'd Treason, but what had been adjudg'd so before, and Attainders and Executions had pursuant to it: The Sheet mentions Cases enough, and to the purpose, tho' some think otherwise; but I'll not repeat them.

In the 11th Page the Reader is referr'd to the Justification in the Half-sheet; and therefore let's examine that a little; a third part of it is spent upon the Evidence, but that is not within my Province, which is only to vindicate the Vindication: As to the rest, the Force of it, if any, seems only to be founded on his first Assertion, the Conspiring to do a thing is not the doing a thing, and he quotes two great Men's Names for it, I would have agreed that, tho' he had spar'd the Authority to justify it; but this is sufficiently answered in the Sheet: He offers an Argument from the late Statutes declaring Treasons, because they were temporary, but I answer as the Sheet doth, they were in affirmance of the Old Law, and I can shew him three or four temporary, and an hundred other Acts of Parliament that are so, and therefore that is no Argument at all; but I am, as the Party I justify was, confin'd to a Sheet, and therefore cannot enlarge.

He lays down a Rule for Construction of Statutes, that a thing particulariz'd in one part is not to be construed within the general Words of another part, but that Rule hath near fourscore Exceptions in the Books; besides it comes not to this Case, for here's Compassing the King's Death made Treason, and declar'd by Overt Act; then Levying War is made Treason: Now says the Repliant, nothing can be an Overt Act of and conduce to promote and accomplish the first, that doth any ways concern the latter, I say it is a non sequitur; for there are several Instances mentioned in the Sheet, which respect the Levying War, and yet are a genuine Evidence of the Intention and Compassing; and if so, the Judges who have ruled such Indictments to be good, did neither assume an Arbitrary Power, nor transgress any Rule of Law, as the half Sheet insinuates.

Then the Lord Cobham's Case is endeavoured to be answered, by a Wonder that Sir Edward Coke, late Lord Chief Justice, and then Sheriff, should differ from Mr. Attorney Cook; for we know his thoughts in Sir Walter Rawleigh's time, and his Speeches in Car. I. his time; they are as different each from other as the times were, and in this particular that Gentleman hath had more Followers than Precedents; but the Query is, What is Law?

Then Sir Henry Vane's Case is endeavoured to be answered by this, that Syderfin mentions not the Overt Act in the Indictment, but he oth say, the Treason alledged was a Compassing the King's Death, and every Man knows what Sir Henry Vane did to accomplish that: He neither sign'd the Warrant to execute that Murther, nor was he actually concerned in it, the Justifier says, he does not remember it printed any where but in Syderfin's Report; for the refreshment of his Memory, I'll tell him of another Book where it is, and that Keble's First Volume of Reports, 304. and there the Indictment is said to be for Compassing the King's Death, and endeavouring to accomplish the Treason, by Changing and Usurping the Government, and Levying War, which Case doth directly overthrow all the Defender's, Justifier's, and Repliant's Arguments, from the distinctness or difference of the Sort of Treason.

Then for Dr. Story's Case, he says, 'tis hard to justify it for Law; whereas there are above Forty Places in our printed Law-Books, where 'tis cited and agreed to be Law: Now 'tis pretty odd, that a Case so resolved and so ratified, should one Hundred and eighteen Years after, be arraigned in Print, for 'twas Hil. 13 Eliz. if any thing be Law, that is so, and not distinguishable from this Case in question, but that the Evidence was different, which the Justifier would make a reason to invalidate this Indictment; the Logick of it passeth all Understanding: Besides, 'tis observable, that the Benches were filled both with Learning and Integrity in 1571, and 1662, neither of those Times were Tory or Popish; and in Dyer, 298. the reason given was, That it could not tend but to the great Peril of the King's Person, and therefore an Attempt to promote such Invasion, though none followed, was adjudged as aforesaid. In 2 Anderson, pl. 2. fo. 5. Grant's Case, 'twas held, That when any Person intendeth or contriveth to levy War for a Thing, which the Queen by her Law or Justice ought or may do in Government as Queen, it's not material whether they intend any hurt to her Person; but if they intend to levy War against the Office and Authority of the Queen, that's enough, and that Resolution overthrows the Justifier's Notion, that J. S. his Design was only to defend the Laws, though the 13 Eliz. also was then in force, it's a good Argument to answer that Pretence.

Now I have repeated and observed all the Replication or Justification offers in answer to my Friend's Sheet, the Reader may perhaps expect some new Matter, not so much for Confirmation, as to give occasion for a farther defence. In Sir Fr. Moor's Rep fol. 621. pl. 849. on the Tryals of the Earls of Essex and Southampton, before the then High Steward, the Justices did there resolve, that when the Queen sent to the Earl of Essex the Keeper of her Great Seal, and others, with a Command to him to disperse the Persons armed which he had in his House, and to come to her, and he did refuse to do so; and continued the Armour and armed Persons in his House, that this was Treason; and they did also resolve, that when he went with a Troop of Captains and others from his House to the City of London, and there prayed Aid of the Citizens to assist him in defence of his Life, and and to go with him to Court, that he might get into the Queen's Preſence, that he might be ſufficiently powerful to remove from her his Enemies who were then attendant, that this was High Treaſon, becauſe it tended to a Force on the Queen, &c. I make no Inference, let the Reader do that; 'tis plain, that an actual mental intention of Hurt, is not material in the one Caſe or other. As the Duke of Norfolk's Caſe is related by Cambden, in his Hiſtory of Q. Eliz. 163. the Treaſon which the Duke confeſſed, was a Plot to ſeize upon the Tower of London, and deliver the Queen of Scots; and that's all.

There's nothing remains in doubt, but the legality or illegality of the King's keeping Guards for the preſervation of his Perſon; they ſay the Law takes care of him, and therefore he is to take none of himſelf, and that the Judges are his Guards, and therefore he needs no other, that Henry VII. was the firſt that had any other. But let us reaſon a little; can it be ſuppoſed, that he ſhould be ſo ſacred in his Perſon, ſo great in his Power, and of ſuch Authority as to make War or Peace Abroad, and raiſe Forces and ſuppreſs them at Home, as the Danger or Defence of his Realm ſhould require, and not be able to provide for his own Perſonal Safety de præſenti? Can he only puniſh by his Judges afterwards, or prohibit by Proclamation before, but not defend himſelf for the preſent? Is it Senſe to ſuppoſe it? The Kings of England might have, and actually had Soldiers or Guards (call them what you will) even in times of Peace, and long before Hen. VII. as well as continually ſince; I may be ſo bold as to defie any Man to ſhew me the Year, the Month, the Week, or the Day, ſince the Conqueſt by William I. that England was without armed Men, actually upon Duty in ſome part or other of the Nation. This Sheet is not intended for a ſtudied Argument on this Subject; and perhaps it would be difficult to juſtifie a ſtanding Army as warrantable, when there's no Occaſion for it; but to ſay he can't by Force, even by Force, provide for his own Perſonal Safety, when he apprehends it in Danger, as every Engliſh King hath continual reaſon to do, eſpecially if ſome Men's Doctrine prevail, it may be modeſtly affirmed unreaſonable: Hath not every Subject power to keep Arms, as well as Servants in his Houſe for defence of his Perſon? Is not his Manſion called his Caſtle? And yet the Law protects him too by Prohibitions à parte ante, and Puniſhments ex parte poſt: There are many Tenures in England, which oblige to the annual Payment of certain Sums towards Soldiers Wages, for Defence of the King and Kingdom; there are others oblige to the annual finding certain quantities of Grain in kind, for the ſupplying the King's Caſtles and Garriſons, as well as Houſhold; which being annual, do demonſtrate the lawfulneſs of their continuance, even in Times of Peace, and their being immemorial, do conclude a Common Law Right in the Kings of England, to have thoſe Occaſions, as they do conclude him a Right to have them ſupplied by ſuch like Services: Nay, Grand Serjeantry, is either by Services of Attendance on the King's Perſon in Time of Peace, or for Military Aids in Time of War. The Crown may raiſe Forces by Commiſſion, or of the Militia, to ſuppreſs Inſurrections, in caſe the Civil Power of the Sheriff is not ſufficient, or ineffectual. The King's of England have the ſole Power and Force of the Nation; Complaints have been in Parliament againſt Billeting Soldiers contrary to the Will of the Hoſts, but never for maintaining a Guard for their own Perſon at their own Charge; Complaints have been of a ſtanding Army, but never of a ſelect Company for his Perſonal Preſervation; a Terror to the People may as well be pretended from his Coachmen, Footmen, or Grooms, if their Numbers be great: Beſides, for a competent Power in Arms he always may have occaſion, when his Subjects know nothing on't; 'tis his Province to foreſee and prevent as well as ſuppreſs and puniſh domeſtick Tumults, and the Buſineſs of War is ſeparately his Office, and that excluſive of his Subjects, any otherwiſe than as they are bound to obey and fight, or deſired to aſſiſt with Aids and Subſidies; and for this to avoid a numerous Volume of Citations, I'll name one notable Roll or two in Parliament. 6 Ric. II. Mem. 9. the manner and way of the Proſecution of a War, being given in Charge to the Commons to adviſe upon, they anſwered, That this nec doit nec ſolayt appertain al eux mes al Roy, and ſo they did, 31 Edw. III. Parte prim. n. 11. & 21 Edward III. n 5. It's true in 5 Edward II. n. 4. Ordinances were made, that the King without the aſſent of his Barons could not make War; but thoſe were repealed and dampned, 15 Edw. II. Parl. Rot. M. 13. becauſe prejudicial to the Royal Power of a King; and this is ſufficiently affirmed by the Act concerning the Militia, in Carol. II. his Time. It is well known in what Time Bryan Chief Juſtice ſaid, that if all the Subjects of England ſhould war with the Subjects of another Kingdom, that this is no War, unleſs the King denounces it: It ſuffices for my Friend's Point, that the King may lawfully have armed Men or Guards, when himſelf judges his Perſon or People to be in danger, or ſtand in need of them: And that he may, when reaſons of State will not admit their Publication to the World. But however, ſome ſtanding Force the Crown ever had, and ever will have, though not always to ſuch a Degree as ſhall be burdenſome or oppreſſive; and our old Law-Books ſay, that Arms as well as Laws are neceſſary for the Prince, not only in, but againſt the Times of Neceſſity, I mean War or Tumult; beſides in Bracton, Lib. II. Cap. 3. de Corona, 'tis ſaid, that Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis, is the greateſt Crime, becauſe of the Greatneſs of the Perſon againſt whom 'tis committed; his Deſcription of it is, Preſumptio contra perſonam ipſius Regis; then when he particularizes the ſeveral Sorts of Treaſon, the firſt which he names is, Si quis auſu temerario machinatus ſit in (i. e. towards) mortem domini Regis, vel aliquid egerit vel agi procuraverit ad ſeditionem Domini Regis vel exercitus ſui, licet id quod in voluntate habuerit non perduxerit ad effectum. I'll make no Inference, there needs no Paraphraſe, the Words are plain; an Act tending to the Deſtruction of the King's Hoſt is High Treaſon againſt his Perſon, agere ad ſeditionem exercitus regis eſt preſumptio contra perſonam Regis, & preſumptio contra perſonam Regis eſt crimen læſæ Majeſtatis: Now can Bracton be thought to ſpeak only of Treaſons in Time of War? Glanvil, Lib. XIV. Cap. 1. Crimen læſæ Majeſtatis dicitur de ſeditione Domini Regis, vel regni, vel exercitus; and Fleta, L. I. c. 20. De ſeductione exercitus ſui: & cap. 21. the ſame Words, Seductionem ejus vel exercitus ſui; this was the Senſe of the old Law, and is very appoſitely applicable to the Caſe in queſtion, as I could eaſily ſhew, would my Paper bear it. There is one Thing which I had quite forgot, and that is, that the Inſtrument of Grievances which the Prudence of the preſent Parliament hath provided, complains of a Standing Army; the Anſwer is eaſie, 'tis not of Perſonal Guards, and the wiſe Enquiry of the Houſe of Commons, into the quantum requiſite to maintain ſuch and ſuch Forces during the preſent Occaſion, and of the Expences of the Crown in Houſhold, Courts, Guards, &c. afterwards do plainly ſhew, that that was not the intended Grievance: Now, to ſum up what is not anſwered at all or endeavoured to be ſo by the Defender, nothing is ſaid to the reaſon of the Thing, or the neceſſity and nature of an Overt-Act, to the Opinion of Coke in the Places cited, to the Caſe of Sir Walter Rawleigh, the Caſe of the Cardinal, the Caſe of Mr. Coleman, the Caſe of Conſtable, the Caſe of Owen, the Caſe of Burton, the Caſes of Sparhawke, Awater, and Heber, the Indictment againſt Sir William Aſhton, Germain, and Taylor, and Thomas Burdett, Collingbourne, and Colledge, nor to the Opinion of the Judges in the Lord Stafford's Caſe, as if 'twere all impertinent, but the Reader is Judge if it be ſo.

Now for the Prefacer, I'll be as ſhort upon him as he was upon my Friend; he ſaid that the Sheet needed a Vindication, and I have given it one, and if this needs another, I hope the Crown will find a Friend to write ſome Third. He ſeems ſo us'd to the Word Libel, that he cannot forbear calling it an infamous one; he ſays, it has not one true material Word in it; I'll remember him of one, that Mocking is catching in the Proverb, that is, A Grumbletonian in the Stirrup generally proves a Tyrant——in the Saddle; that's enough for him to remember: If he wants any more Truth, and that he may not ſay this hath none in't, Treaſons are eaſier committed than diſtinguiſh'd, by ſome Men eſpecially, and the reaſon why I ſay this, is becauſe of his Octavo Preface, where he is grumbling ſtill, for I always thought that he had ſmarted too much for Libelling on Miniſters of State and Male-Adminiſtrations, to venture again; but when a Prieſt meddles with Law, he is like an Apothecary at Politicks, he generally runs himſelf into a Nooſe, for he'll never leave off till he's advanced one way or another. To conclude, the Deſign of the Sheet was to juſtifie the Prerogative of the King and Queen, and the Rights of their Crown; and the Republican is angry that either ſhould have any, and from thence flames the Paſſion; nay, rather than it ſhould be allowed, they'll attempt another Change, from which good Lord deliver us, Prov. 28. 2.

During the compoſure of the Premiſes, News was brought me, that another Pen had been procured to attack the Vindication, viz. The Author that runs a-muck at all Mankind, except his own Patrons: A deſerved and full Remark upon ſo voluminous a Book, is not here to be expected, however, this Appendix may ſerve for an Advertiſement to the World, that the new Repliant is in ſeveral Particulars obliged to Sollicitor Coke, and the other Regicides Defence on their Tryals for much of his Materials; Time is wanting to ſhew the Parallel; at preſent 'tis fit to be obſerved, that his blind Side alſo is apparent, and conſequently capable of a ſufficient Anſwer, and to give my Reader a Specimen thereof, I'll take notice of a few (amongſt many) Miſtakes, both in Fact and Law, which he hath wilfully committed. In the firſt Page he ſays, That to juſtifie what hath been taken ill, accuſes the preſent Government of Injuſtice; which is falſe. In pag. 2. he ſays, That the Vindication ventures on a Point of Law, which it pretends is the reſult of the Evidence given; there's no ſuch Pretence in the whole Paper, the only Debate was upon the Indictment. He ſays in the ſame Paper, that it's ſaid his Relations were pleaſed with the juſtneſs of the Tryal; it only ſays, his Relations were pleaſed, and his Enemies angry with thoſe who then ſat upon the Bench, and that's true; for ſome of his Relations cannot deny it, the Fact is ſo well known. The laſt Line of pag. 3. and firſt of the next are alſo falſe; for 'twas neither written, perus'd, nor approv'd by any of his pretended Criminals: I believe they thought the Point too clear to need a Vindication; but this is juſt like his wonted poſitiveneſs in his Remarks; where for inſtance, he ſays, that one of the Judgments he cavils at, was the firſt that was ever given without Argument or Reaſons delivered in Court, which is alſo falſe; for in Plowden's Comment, 459. In Sir T. Wroth's Caſe, the Author takes expreſs notice, that the reaſons of the Judgment were not diſcloſed, when the ſame was pronounced; and Fifty other Caſes I could name him of the ſame, but one Inſtance is enough to falſifie a general indefinite Poſition, though there are ſeveral more even in that very Book.

But to run over his Volume, Pag. 2. is only a farther ſcurrilous Reflection to vindicate his own Remarks, and an impertinent bombaſt of Words on the Phraſe of Engliſh Proceedings: The 3d pag. aſſigns four Reaſons of Printing, the two laſt are applicable to himſelf only, and he thinks ſo of the fourth, or elſe his Story is fooliſh like — In the 4th pag. he boulſters himſelf in his Railery, by reſorting to his refuge of the Parliament's Authority that reverſed the Judgment, which all Men agree to be juſt, but it was not becauſe the Recorder did not arreſt the Judgment on that trivial Exception to the Indictment, but becauſe the Proſecution was ſuppoſed malicious, and the Evidence ſuppoſed falſe or deficient, or both.

The 5, 6, 8, 9, and 10*th* Pages are all impertinent to the Point in queſtion, and contain nothing but a Vindication of his juſtly condemned Clamour in his former Book; concerning which, I'll boldly ſay it, in ſeventeen Points of twenty he is out in his Law; if 'twere convenient to publiſh the Proof on't, I could make it plain. His Deſign is to ſhew in thoſe Pages his Wit and Fancy, more than Candor or Law; for my Part, I am of his Friend's Mind, that he comes not ſhort of the old Obſervator for managing a Dialogue: But all this is not to the Purpoſe, he is not come at it yet, the 12 pag. ſavours of the ſame Kidney, and 13 and 14 are no better: There he vents his Gall, and that in Ribaldry; no ſofter a name than Tools can be afforded to Men of Worth and Honour: If himſelf be one, as ſome ſuppoſe him, I am ſure it is not to the preſent Government, for he plainly condemns it, and declares the People, i. e. his ſort of them, unſatisfied with it, for its ſparingneſs in Vengeance; and it is becauſe others are not puniſhed for maintaining the Law, and themſelves not preferred for arraigning it: Some Men know my Meaning. He ſays, he is only only for mumbling of Judges and Counsel, Causa patet.

But I must tell him two things, 1. The Inclinations of Englishmen, and the Laws of the Land, will never quadrate with a Commonwealth.

2. His supposed Criminals do not depend on their Number, but the Law, which ought, and will justify them; if it doth not please, let it be changed by Parliament, or if the Author thinks that a tedious way, let us burn all our Law-Books at once, and then perhaps his Remarks and Reply will be thought to be Reason, and himself the greatest and only Lawyer in the Realm; but till then, he must give others leave to know, and to say that they know, he is mistaken: For Resolutions, and Opinions, pursuant and agreeable to the Opinions and Rules of former Ages, I mean, frequent and repeated Precedents, approved by the Lawyers of the Age that used them: I say these will be the Law to the End of the World, unless altered by new Statutes.

And now we are come to debate the Question, all that is past is upon the Times, and not the Point. In p. 18. is his Reasoning-part which is no more than was said before in, &c. To redargue him I must repeat; if therefore he will observe what is said by the Sheet, p. 22. I will say no more on't, but submit to the Judgment of the Reader; he says the Inferences are ridiculous, I say they are Rational and Genuine: The single Issue is, if his or my Friend's Arguments are the most Logical and Natural, let the Reader judge.

Now for Authority, let us see if he urges any on his side, or answers that on the other. He admires (p. 24) at the Assurance of the Sheet-Author, and others admire at his. He says the Parliament had often adjudged it, but none can shew any Judgment in the House of Lords, or Vote of the Commons House to that purpose. I have shewn the Sense of the present Parliament in the Point of Guards, and his temporary Laws are already answered; nor would any Man but he, and one more, pretend that they are Judgments in the Case. Surely it will not be pretended that his Case of the Earl of Northumberland in Hen. IVth's Time, is any thing to the purpose: Nor is it any Argument to say, no King of England was ever killed for want of Guards.

Now for Cases, p. 26. He saith that in the Earl of Essex's Case there was an actual War levyed, and that, as I said before, destroys the Argument from the Different sorts of Treason. As to Cardinal Pool's Case, he only says there was another Statute in force then, but no Record or History says that he was indicted on any other than the 25 Edw. 3. As to Dr. Story's Case, he tells a long Tale out of Camden about the Fact, but answers not one Word to the Indictment, whatsoever the Evidence was, the Indictment was as the Sheet alledges, and that is enough.

His Answer to Coleman's Case is that, that things happening afterwards proved more, but the Evidence was no more than what my Friend alledges. As to Sir Henry Vane's Case, his Answer is, his own Hearsay of what was proved, but the Indictment he never perused, argued like a Lawyer. As to Constable's Case and the rest, he gives no Answer, but only that a Repetition of a number of Cases makes a Mutter and a Noise, and so it does when they govern and rule the Matter in question, and are not answered. Owen's Case, he says, the Author presses it strangely, and that is all. He says, the Cases of Burton, Duke of Norfolk, Awater, Heber, and Crohagan, are not to the purpose, let the Reader judge if they are not pertinent: As to the Opinion of the Judges in the Lord Stafford's Case, he doth not mention it, but says the reviving that Case might have been spared, and that is all, a pretty Answer: As to Colledge's Case, he talks of a Proof of a Self-defence, but nothing to the Point it was urged for. As to the Cases of Lord Cobham, Grey, and Rawleigh, in 32, 33, 34, 35, Pag. Setting aside his scandalous Invectives and Reflections upon those Times, Ministers, and Governments, he no ways attempts to answer the Argument drawn from them, viz. That the Charge was the same as in the Case in Dispute.

Now I appeal to any Man of Sense and Reason that will read and think closely, if the Repliant hath offered any one Argument more than the Lord Russel's Case, Defence and Justification had alledged. If he hath shewn any one Judgment where such Indictment was resolved naught; if he hath given any Answer to Dr. Story's, Collingborn's, Sir William Ashton's, Burdett's, and Sir Henry Vane's Indictment; in short, if he hath answered any two of the Cases cited; or if he hath done any thing but reflect on past and late times, and if the Indictment remain not good, both for Matter and Form, notwithstanding all these pretended Replies. Upon the whole, I desire the Reader to peruse the Book cited, and to judge if there be not Precedents enough unanswered to justify the Indictment in question, and that the Recorder gave a good Judgment upon the Verdict that affirmed its truth; quod fuit Probandum.

To conclude, Since the Repliant is in love with Horace, I would advise him to consider one hint of his,

Mandabo siccis, ——— Hor.

The third and laſt Part of the Magiſtracy and Government of England Vindicated, with Reaſons for a General Act of Indemnity, &c.

IT hath been the obſerved Misfortune of moſt mix'd Governments, particularly of our own, never long to enjoy the intire Friendſhip of all its individual Subjects; the lowermoſt Side hath too frequently acquired the greateſt ſhare of the People's Love, or at leaſt Pity: It's then no point of Wonder, that the Servants of former Crowns ſhould have incurred their proportion of Envy, Hatred, and Reproach; and amongſt all thoſe none more obnoxious to it, than the Miniſters, Officers, and Inſtruments of Juſtice; for ſuch are the viciated Sentiments of Perſons intereſted in all Suits, that the Vanquiſh'd is certainly injured, or thought, or ſaid to be ſo, which is all one, by the Perſons themſelves, their Friends or Relatives, their Patrons or Creatures. In truth there's ſcarce a Tryal on the Plea or Crown-ſide, but one Party, and ſometimes both, do leave the Court with a ſwinging Curſe or two on Judge, Counſel, Jury, Witneſſes, and perhaps all concerned; upon which account, it can never be deemed a juſtifiable, much leſs a commendable and meritorious Employment, for Lawyers to note and report, and afterwards publiſh to the World the Clamours of ſuch Malecontents, with the addition of Sarcaſm inſtead of Argument, and bluſhleſs Lies inſtead of Law and Precedents, and all this under the pretence of ſerving their Majeſties and the Government, but 'tis a meer pretence; for firſt, it's not their Province; theſe Publications are made by them, not as Legiſlators or Judges, but as private Perſons; and one of their Libels ſeems calculated only for private Lucre, as either the Hopes of a Place, or Encreaſe of Practice, by telling the Town in the firſt and laſt Pages where the Author lives, of what Profeſſion, and how long ſtanding; an Art learn'd from ſome of thoſe exquiſite Doctors inhabiting towards the Fields, whoſe Knowledge and Converſation is pretended to be in Heaven: Another writes for Bread, and ſcribbles that he may eat, &c. A third, or rather the firſt and prime, is inſpired with Venom and Revenge, even the pure Spirit on't, as one baulk'd he is angry at all, and becauſe ſome were not his true Friends, he's reſolved to make Enemies of thoſe who deſpiſe him, and of them the number is great. But ſecondly,

It's of no uſe to the preſent Government, for Truth only can be a ſure Baſis of Reſpect to that; and in caſe of Slander, the Filth rebounds, and the Dirt thrown moſt ſurely turns on, and dawbs their own Faces, eſpecially when they arraign thoſe as ignorant, whoſe Learning, Knowledge, and Judgment, are ſo clear and acknowledged, as to render the Cenſors unworthy even of being their Bag-bearers; the like when they cenſure thoſe as corrupt, who have always boldly done their Duty, even in defiance of a Court Cabal, or a Popular Faction; who have always adhered to the old Engliſh Law and their juſt Opinions in it, tho' Frowns from Whitehall, or Clamours from Wapping, tho' Lampoons from Grub-ſtreet, or a worſe Uſage from an Obſervator, tho' a Superſedeas or a Take him, &c. were the only Reward they could expect for ſuch their (formerly called Puritanical, now Arbitrary) Juſtice: Gentlemen who never poll the Law (which the great and good Sir Mat. Hale did truly call a robbing the Poor of Juſtice) for the acquiring a Farm or an Office, or a lumping Summ for Sale of it; who never begg'd an Executorſhip for to gain a Fortune; Gentlemen who never gave ſtrain'd Opinions concerning the Revenue when made for their Clients the Farmers, but clamour'd at the ſame when uſed by their King with more Moderation; Gentlemen who parted with their Places, tho' of Honour and Profit, rather than comply with a Court-Opinion or a Club-Notion, when others (I name no body) offered entire and everlaſting Service, if they could have preceded or ſucceeded them, (Teſte.... apud St. James's and the City of Glouceſter,) but miſſing their Aim then, as now they do, their Gall muſt have a Vent, and ſo it hath with a vengeance, when a true and bold Juſtice is made the Subject on't: The Reaſon is plain, thoſe Men's Repute is too great for Truth, Probity, and Uſefulneſs: An Eclipſe is neceſſary if poſſible, for if otherwiſe, the Defender will never be Keeper, the Remarker Solicitor, nor the Gray's-Inn Poet wear Scarlet in Wales; their Hopes are but ſmall, unleſs they can poſtpone all their Betters by Death, Commitments, or that which is but little worſe, Reproach and Slander; but ſome think their Sting grows weak, for 'tis apparent, that there are a ſort of Men, who tho' they might and did love His Majeſty when as Prince, yet do not, will not, cannot love him, or any Man elſe, as King; and this is now pretty plain. But thirdly,

Their Libels are criminal, and injurious to common Juſtice, for they create a Diſreſpect and Contempt upon all Judiciary Proceedings; to arraign all paſt is to excite a Suſpicion of all preſent and future Adminiſtrations; whereas Plowden ſaith, fol. 38. It's a good and ſure way to believe the laſt Judgment; and if ſo, 'tis plain what Name the contrary Practice deſerves; beſides, were it otherwiſe, the Inſtitution of Judges and Courts were vain, and our State, as Engliſhmen, the moſt unfortunate; for we have no Rule but ex ore Judicum, or from particular Statutes, and of them they are the Expoſitors. Now let's inquire which is law, the Defender's Fancy in his Argument inter S. and B. or the Judgment in the Exchequer Chamber, affirmed affirmed by the Lords? If the Judicial Reſolution be ſo, then the Publication of his Argument was injudicious, and I am not to follow him as my Guide; but perhaps he'll tell me, That manifeſt Reaſon and good Lawyers ought to govern me; if ſo, then I ask him, Who ſhall I follow in the E. of D's Caſe of a Capias pro fine puis Judgment, &c. whether the Eleven beſt Lawyers, or the Vote of the Houſe? If the latter, why not ſo in the former Caſe? And if otherwiſe, then his Judgment was miſtaken; ſo that quacunque via data, there's no Infallibility in this World, and conſequently no Excuſe for Private Cenſures of Publick Proceedings in Courts of Juſtice: Beſides, the Books are pretty clear, that ſuch things are puniſhable; but I leave the Reader to peruſe them at leiſure. Then let us conſider the Confuſion that muſt enſue upon the publick countenancing ſuch a Practice as theſe Scribblers have introduced; for if allowable on a Disbanded Judge, 'tis ſo on a Sitting one, for the Caſe is the ſame in reſpect of private Lawyers, who pretend to think their Judgments erroneous or corrupt; but ſurely both are unlawful. Beſides all this, in the preſent Caſe;

They have palpably wreſted the Law in divers Inſtances: I need name no more than the Indictment in queſtion, which that it was legal and good, moſt Men do now agree, eſpecially ſince the dint of the Oppoſal ſeems current only on the Evidence, with a Waver of the other, and more ſince that Guards are proved lawful, and the Obſervator concedes it the moſt legal part of the Procedure, and the Juſtice of Parliaments, &c. ſuppoſed written by the Defender, ſtrains all its Forces on the Evidence and the Times: and their Follower, the Poet, in his new Non conformiſt, pag. 10. runs the ſame way too: Only

There remains one Objection to the firſt Vindication, which is, that it affirms, Words may be Treaſon within the 25th of Edw. 3. and the Remarker challenges a Proof of it, and asks where it may be found; and the Non-conformiſt quarrels at the Lawyer that did aſſert it, and ſome others have done the ſame ore tenus.

I confeſs, that the firſt Sheet did publiſh the Aſſertion, but waved its Eviction, for fear of a ſtrained Uſe of ſuch Opinion to ill purpoſes, for the ſerving a turn upon particular Occaſions; nor had there been any more ſaid on it, but that their Confidence and Malice ſeems ſo exorbitant as to extort a Check, for the Regulator is grown ſo confident of his own Knowledge as to undervalue the greateſt of Judgments; whereas his Common-place-Book affords us no Titles but thoſe of Colluſion and Malice prepenſe; and his Practice hath been much of the ſame Stamp, only that ſometimes he hath added a little of the Lunatick, as appears by his Rhimes, Prophecies, Dreams, Politicks, and other Religionary Works.

To prove the Aſſertion, I depend not on the Authority of the Senſe of the Commons Houſe. 1 Jac. 2. tho' (let the Cryer for Juſtice, or who elſe pleaſes, contradict it) it was in Fact then affirmed and agreed unto, and upon that, the then King's Council and Courtiers deſiſted the Motion and Proſecution of a Bill to make Words, &c. But that's a ſupernumerary Argument, there's more than enough beſides.

I am not to maintain, that all rank, malicious, groſs Words againſt the King or Queen's Perſon are ſuch, nor that whoſoever drinks an Health to our Sovereign Lord the People, or to the late King James, is a Traitor; but that Words ſignificative and expreſſive of a preſent Intention to do an Act to the King's Deſtruction, ſuch Words deliberately, maliciouſly, and adviſedly ſpoken on purpoſe to accompliſh the Demiſe of the King, as by Promiſe of Money with importunity to commit the Fact, may be an Overt fait to prove the Imagination within 25 Edw. 3.

To evince this, let us think a little..... and 'twill be plain.

The Words of this Statute are clear and of an eaſy Conſtruction, if we will allow thoſe dull old Times to ſpeak Senſe: They are to this effect. That if it ſhall compaſs or imagine the Death, &c. and de ceo provablement ſoit attaint per overt fait: Now the Objection is this, That Words are not Deeds within that Clauſe; to this the Anſwer is very clear; for by all the Grammatical and other Rules for Interpretation of the Senſe of Words, the latter part of a Sentence is to be conſtrued (if uſed by way of oppoſition) as oppoſite to the thing mentioned and intended in the foregoing Part, and not as oppos'd to every thing which it may ex vi termini exclude in other Caſes; and this is an agreed difference, both amongſt Divines in Expoſition of Sentences in Scripture, and Grammarians in almoſt all Caſes whatſoever. Now to apply this:

Overt fait is uſed not in oppoſition to Words, for there's no ſuch thing mentioned; but 'tis added in contradiſtinction to that which was before ſpecified, viz. Thoughts, and ſuch are Imagination and Compaſſing; and therefore overt fait muſt mean any open manifeſt thing as can truly diſcover thoſe Thoughts, as may proveably attaint the Traitor of ſuch his Imagination; and it is a moſt natural and proper Mode of Speech, if they did intend, as moſt undoubtedly they did, that the Thought ſhould be the thing prohibited, then 'tis as plain they intended by the Word fait any Diſcovery of ſuch Thought by Words or Actions; and ſo ſaid Newton in 19 Hen. 6. That to imagine the Death of the King, is Treaſon, tho' he do no act towards it, if ſuch Imagination be diſcloſed that it can be tried if he did ſo think and imagine. If that Thoughts and Words are mentioned both in a Sentence, and afterwards Deeds in oppoſition, then the laſt will exclude both the former; but here when uſed only in contradiſtinction with Thoughts, it ſeems plainly otherwiſe. That Deed, when uſed in oppoſition to Thought, doth include both Words and Acts, none can deny; a thouſand Inſtances might be given of it; and in the exacteſt propriety of Speech, Words are Deeds when and as contradiſtinguiſh'd from Thoughts; for the Soul thinks even as abſtractly conſidered from the Body, but Man never ſpeaks without Action and Motion: The difference is plain, and needs no Explication. But further,

I would fain know, What is a Conſult or Plot, but the mutual and reciprocal Declaration of two or more Traitors Minds each to the other? Each declares his Traiterous Imagination by Words, and ſo of an Agreement to commit commit the actual Murther, 'tis but a Declaration of their Minds by Words each to the other, only they do happen to agree. Now ſuppoſe one Man thinks and intends to deſtroy the King, and by Words doth willingly, deliberately, and adviſedly declare this to another that is not of his Mind, tho' by miſtake is thought to be ſuch; is not this the ſame thing? If a Man traiterouſly offers and promiſes to another a thouſand Pounds to perpetrate the villainous Act; if he accept it, and a parole Agreement is made between them accordingly, ſurely the Apologiſts for Treaſon will agree that to be an Overt Thing, and both guilty, if it can be proved by two Witneſſes of Credit. Suppoſe then the Party offered and promiſed doth abhor and refuſe, will that make a diſtinction? If it does, 'tis without a difference: Perhaps the Word Conſult will be called a new Cant; we know whoſe Coin it is, and who gave it the firſt Stamp; 'twas no leſs a Man than Sir William Jones, who at the time of ſuch his Invention was no Prerogative Lawyer, tho' conſiderably ſo in Times then lately paſt: Nor is it imaginable what is the meaning of a Conſpiracy or Plot to take away the King's Life, but a Communication by Words between ſeveral Traitors concerning ſuch Act, and the method of its Accompliſhment, and a Declaration by Words of each Man's being fixed in that purpoſe; which, if it be proved by ſufficient Teſtimony, will undoubtedly be an Evidence of a Compaſſing, &c. which is the Treaſon Prohibited and Puniſhable; nor can the Meeting make it more ſo, for they could not diſcourſe unleſs they met; and therefore 'tis the Words only that are the manifeſt overt fait. Nor doth Hugh Pynes's Caſe, or the Reſolution of the Judges therein, contradict this, notwithſtanding the Confidence of the Remarker that it did; they only ſay that the Words in that Caſe were not Treaſon, that thoſe Words were not an Evidence of Compaſſing, that for thoſe Words he could not be Indicted upon that Statute; but their Opinion doth plainly imply, that had the Words been Evidence of a Compaſſing, &c. as they were only ſlanderous and reflective, it had been otherwiſe; and the Inſtances there mentioned are full to this, as John Quick's Indictment was only for Words to King Henry, unleſs ſtanding up and ſpeaking will alter the Caſe: Thomas Koiver's, John Clipſham's, and John Mirfield's, are all for Words, and ſome others there ſpecified. Beſides, it's obſervable, that in moſt Indictments on this Statute, ſome Words have been alledged in them as an overt fait to demonſtrate the Imagination, which would be impertinent if the Law were thought otherwiſe. I'll not inſiſt on Colledge's, becauſe the Caſe hath been cavilled at, tho' with no colour as to the Indictment: Part of Patrick Harding's Indictment was loquendo publicavit, but I'll not dwell on that, becauſe fooliſhly drawn; but Arthur Crohagan's Caſe in Cro. Car. is pretty full, and for Words; and the Words of the Book are, That the traiterous Intent and Imagination of his Heart was declared by his Words, and therefore held High-Treaſon within the expreſs Proviſion of 25 Ed. 3. and upon his coming into England he was arreſted, &c. Now no Anſwer can be to this, but that he came into England; but the Words only ſhewed his Intent, and by that Book the Words are alledged as the overt fait; beſides the Caſe of Blanchflower and Atwood, Mic. 5. Jac. 1. B. R. in Telverton's Reports 107. per curiam, reſolved, that Words may be Treaſon; and that is an expreſs Reſolution; for there was then no temporary Law in being concerning Parole Treaſons that I know of. The Caſe of Berisford and Preſſc. Hill. 8 Jac. 1. B. R. Telvert. 197. adjudged, That Treaſon may be committed by Speech as well as by Act, for any thing which diſcovers the Mind of a Man to be Traiterous to his Sovereign, is capital to the Party: Hitcham ad. Brook Paſch. 1 Car. 1. Hutt. 75. held per cur. that the ſpeaking of Treaſon was Treaſon, and that ſermo eſt index animi as well as Preaching or Writing; and no Man can doubt but thoſe are Acts; and Speech is as much ſo.

Beſides, If the Conſequence of the contrary Doctrine be well conſider'd, 'twill appear to be a plain Evaſion of the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. as is manifeſt upon the reading it; and the common Books are full of this, for otherwiſe no Action could lie for ſaying a Man hath ſpoke Treaſon: But here's enough ſaid to anſwer the Challenge, where's the Authority for ſuch an Aſſertion? Tho' infinitely more might be ſaid for it, nay 'tis as eaſy to dumbfound the contrary as 'tis to tranſcribe Law Caſes. If this doth not give them ſatisfaction, they ſhall remain unſatisfied for me, I'll plague the World no more with writing on this dull, flat, unprofitable Subject, Crown-Law, leſt I ſhould provoke our new Scribblers to double the Plague by their Replies: If they attempt an Anſwer, I'll leave the Tobacconiſt and Grocer to confute them; and unleſs a Trunk or Band-box chance to bring them to my View, I'll never be tempted to read them; and of this they may aſſure themſelves. I ſay it to complement the Reader with Patience to peruſe the reſt of the Sheet, being aſcertained never to hear more on't, at leaſt not from this Hand.

Some perhaps may wonder at the reaſon of the Publication of theſe Sheets, and conceive them the Product of Malice on one ſide, as thoſe virulent Pamphlets are on the other: To ſolve that Scruple, I need only repeat the Reaſons alledged in the firſt; but a Repetition is damnably dull, as well as tedious and irkſome: I'll therefore add a new one, and that's to ſhew the Reaſonableneſs as well as the Neceſſity of a general, indefinite, ſpeedy Act of Oblivion; for tho' the Blood-hounds fret, and huff, and bounce, as if all their Madneſs and Rage were founded on a true Baſis; yet 'tis apparent from the Premiſes, that their Foundation is falſe, and the Law is direct and plain in their Teeth, and doth and will juſtify in moſt of the Particulars, at which they foam their Curſes and Execrations: Reaſon therefore as well as Neceſſity enjoyns a ſilence as to what is paſt, for otherwiſe the Kingdom can never have its deſired ſatisfaction; for in Points juſtifiable, or at leaſt doubtful, the Juſtice of inflicting Puniſhments can never be vindicated, did I call them Puniſhments, I beg the Reader's Pardon for the Impropriety; however I'll not name their proper Term, but with calmneſs endeavour to evince three things.

1. That it would be grateful to the Nation in general, and every good Man in particular.
2. Conducing to the Settlement and Intereſt of of the preſent Government ; and laſtly, That 'tis conſiſtent with, and promotive of the higheſt and trueſt Juſtice.

Firſt, The Nation did and doth expect it, for Revenge is never natural but when freſhly purſued, and Time wears off the Senſe of Injuries, by the Intervention of new ones either real or imaginary, which is all one as to this Purpoſe: The Horror of any Crime, or at leaſt the Deteſtation of the Criminal, grows faint and languid upon the removal of the Object, eſpecially if Time interpoſes with the acceſſion of preſent Fears, which at preſent do more affect us than greater if more diſtant. It can never therefore be thought the Deſire of the People of England, to have their Neighbours or Acquaintance harraſs'd and perſecuted by Fines, Confiſcations, Impriſonments, Marks of Diſgrace, or the like, for Actions done in the laſt or former Reigns, about which the World hath been ſo much divided, if lawful or not : Beſides, that this was the general Expectation of the Kingdom on the the new Settlement, or at leaſt the Coronation, of which nature there never was an Inſtance before this without an Act of Grace ; and it is moſt plain, that none are Adverſaries to it, but the Republicans and the Jacobites, not for that they need it nor, as I ſhall ſhew anon, but for different ends, each drives at and wiſhes a Change, it matters not to what, for if to the latter, the other hopes a Common-wealth will be the more deſirable : If the Republican ſucceeds, then the other believes a Reſtoration the more eaſie, but both diſlike the preſent, and therefore dread a Settlement, and conſequently dread the People's Satisfaction and Quiet under their Majeſties, and conſequently dread an Act of Indemnity : 'Tis true, the Cry for Vengeance is loud, but 'tis only from theſe two Corners ; which leads to the ſecond Particular, that

It will eſtabliſh and promote the Intereſt of the preſent Government, while the Popular Bully is full of his Damme's and Menaces, there's certainly Danger, and where there's Danger there's Fear ; now fear cauſes an Averſion, and Averſion begets Hatred ; and the Object of it is that from whence the ſuppoſed Danger ariſes, which is from the Government irritated by the Venom and Fury of thoſe hot-headed Animals, whatſoever hath Power and Will to hurt me, muſt and will be abhorr'd ; and though none are immediate actual Patients, yet the being poſſibly obnoxious to it, and the want of Security for the contrary, doth of neceſſity cool their reſpect to the preſent Power, under which they were not ſafe, and this tempts them and their Friends upon Contrivances and Attempts of Danger, both to Themſelves and the Publick ; and Danger by the Attempt is no Diſcouragement where the like Danger attends their forbearance : And this is of Weight, unleſs Cromwell's Politicks be thought Chriſtian, to cheriſh and promote a Plot, as of advantage to Settlement, if ſeaſonably diſcovered and ſubtilly managed ; but however 'tis as true, that Enemies who are deſperate, ought never to be thought inconſiderable ; for they may ſhake and batter what they can't deſtroy, they may do Miſchief, though they can't work Ruin to their Adverſaries, upon which Account, the Temptation of continual impending Danger is fit to be removed : Beſides

The want of Security, and the fear of Danger, making Men uneaſie in their Thoughts, repleniſhes them with Complaints and Murmurs at every awkard Action, or ſuppoſed miſcarriage of the Government feared ; it makes them Mutineers at publick Taxes and Impoſitions, partly becauſe they think it ſtrengthens and increaſes the Power of hurting them, and partly becauſe it ſponges and bleeds them of that, which they fear an occaſion of themſelves to bribe Blackrods, Serjeants at Arms, and other Goalers with ; and in a conjuncture when extraordinary Aids are indiſpenſibly requiſite, no temptation to Complaint is deſerving of Countenance ; beſides, that it cramps Trade, and diſcourages Projects for Publick Good, &c. but farther, it's the living, not the dead, the happy, contented, and chearful, and free, not the oppreſſed, miſerable, forlorn, or impriſoned Subject, that doth Service to the Crown and the Publick.

It hinders all ſuch as are thought to be ſo obnoxious from any bold Eſſays for the Uſe of the preſent Government, for that if Succeſs be the attendant of ſuch their Attempt, they continue unſafe notwithſtanding, for no Man will adventure an hazard to ſecure that Authority, which he is not ſure will make him ſafe, if he doth undertake the preſent Adventure, and eſcapes that Danger, and performs the Service ; ſo that Self-preſervation renders it their Policy to unhinge themſelves from, or to be ſhy of the preſent Power ; of which a conſiderable number might prove uſeful Friends, which are now Neuters at leaſt, if not Enemies.

It's obſervable in all foreign Policies, either to work a total Extirpation of the whole Party, or an univerſal Indemnity, after ſo grand a Revolution as this was ; the former is not to be practis'd here for two Reaſons : 1. Becauſe we want People : 2. Many of our Friends muſt be baniſh'd too, for divers of the ſuppoſed Criminals were inſtrumental to the preſent Change, &c. Ergo the latter only is, and can be moſt adviſable ; for once I'll ſuppoſe their Numbers but ſmall, in compariſon to the Saints and Innocents, (if any ſuch there are in the Nation) yet under our preſent Circumſtances, all are to be obliged as Friends that poſſibly may ; but if the thirteen Heads, with the Surrenderer's Clauſe, and all its and their Subdiviſions had been reduced into a Law, in the deſigned Act of Attainder, one third at leaſt of the Nation had been involved, who with their diſobliged Relatives and Dependants is not ſo contemptible a Flock, though but of Sheep for the ſlaughter. Beſides,

It's impolitick as well as unjuſt to deny or delay it to thoſe who have ſubmitted to the Government, yielded it Obedience, and quietly bore its publick Charges according to their Proportion, and yet give a free, full, and general Pardon, both in Scotland and Ireland, to all that took up Arms, for all their Sins then paſt and preſent ; it provokes the former to repent their Non concurrence with the latter, for 'twas but reſuming their Quiet and Submiſſion at pleaſure, and then they were ſafe, which now they are not, but under continued Menaces and Dangers of both, as appears in their being baited by every barking Cur, that can but write with Gall in his Ink, or ſpeak with a Damme in his Mouth.

Experience farther tells us, that nothing turns or changes the Humour of the Engliſh Commoner, like Rage, Inſolence, and Cruelty in their Fellow-Subjects, when made Superiors, and ſuch is

s raking into old Sores, thought to be; it matters not whether juſtly or no as to this Purpoſe, the Effect is generally ſuch: The Star-Chamber in Car. I. his Time, the Major-Generals in Cromwell's: The Tophamizing of Abhorrers in Car. II. his Time: The Weſtern Campaign, and the other Criminal Proſecutions in the beginning of Jac. II. I ſay all the Violences uſed in theſe ſeveral Periods (and yet they had their reſpective Provocations) did moſt notoriouſly alter the Kidney of the Commons, and made even their once beloved, firſt dreadful and terrible, then odious and loathſome; they produced conſiderable Changes in their ſeveral Conſequences: I could come nearer Home, even to the teazing of Moore and North, and other Citizens of London, which firſt turn'd the Stomach of that City, as is now apparent; but Sat verbum, &c. But farther,

The want of this renders both the Policy and Honour of the great Bellowers for Vengeance to be juſtly ſuſpected: 1. Their Honour in taking care of their own Servants, for all their Exceſſes upon the Revolution, and oppoſing the Indemnity of all others, as by the Act appears. 2. Their Policy, for that it's obſervable in Story, that the Aſſociation in Queen Eliz. Time, was under a Proteſtant Prince for the Proteſtant Religion, and no ill Succeſs attended it, yet thoſe wiſe Anceſtors of ours thought fit to ſecure themſelves, by turning the Aſſociation into a Law, and a general Act of Indemnity; I do not ſay they needed it, but the Aſſociators in that Reign thought it needful; and 'tis very conſiderable, that in no Reign was there more Peace and Quiet than in Hers, and in none were there ever more free and general Pardons, and in truth the latter was the occaſion of the former; for when Men are once ſafe and quiet, no ſmall Temptation will provoke any more Adventures, though they like another better, yet Men being eaſy are generally contented. There was one free and general Pardon of the Queen's at firſt confirmed, 5 Eliz. cap. 11. another 8 Eliz. cap. 18. 13 Eliz. cap. 28. 18 Eliz. cap. 24. 23 Eliz. cap. 16. 27 Eliz. cap. 30. 29 Eliz. cap. 9. 31 Eliz. cap. 16. 35 Eliz. cap. 14. 39 Eliz. cap. 28. 43 Eliz. cap. 19. Eleven in number, and never five Years without a Parliament-Pardon, and this made Parliaments and Crowns the Darlings and Deſire of the People. Beſides, it's the Intereſt of each Party amongſt us, though ſome don't ſee it; the Whig ought to promote it for two Reaſons; 1. Leſt being the leſſer Part he chance to feel the want of it, and for that he has given ſome Provocation. 2. That if it be the greater, the Memory of his Vengeance and Fury may be forgotten, and himſelf reſtored to the good Opinion of the reſt of Mankind, by one act at leaſt of good Nature: The Tory ought to purſue the ſame Meaſures, and much for the ſame Reaſons, for his Top-gallantry hath been, and if repractis'd, will be again as odious and loathſome to the moderate and good, as ever it was, or as the others could be; Temper therefore is now the Game, and a Veil over all that's paſt, is certainly the moſt Politick, eſpecially conſidering the Multitude of the ſuppoſed Criminals, and the Juſtice of their ſeveral Excuſes, which comes next: For,

Laſtly, It's conſiſtent with, and promotive of the trueſt and higheſt Juſtice, for in moſt of the Caſes the Law was doubtful, and to puniſh Opinion in Matters of Law, is as unjuſt, as to perſecute Miſtakes in Matters of Religion is unchriſtian, and new Laws for Government de futuro, are more agreeable to natural Equity, than a retroſpective Fury; that it was the doubtful, is plain, the modern Scribblers have ſufficiently proved it. In two of the Caſes cited they differ themſelves, for Dr. Story's Caſe, the Defender crys 'tis not Law, the Remarker agrees 'tis, and that he was well hanged; for Plunket's Caſe, the Defender cries, he was well hanged, for there was Treaſon enough in his Charge, the Remarker inſinuates as if he ſuffer'd hardly; now what ſhall a little Lawyer believe between theſe two great Bodies of Learning? The like may be ſaid of Soames's Caſe, and the other above mentioned. But what is more: In the Voluminous Argument againſt the Diſpenſing Power, owned by Sir R. A. he doth concede, that there are ſome Prerogatives ſo perſonally and inſeparably inherent in the Crown, that no Act of Parliament can cramp or diminiſh, or at leaſt take away; and that being granted, I'm ſure all that the reſt of the Book ſays can never make that a plain Caſe, and in Truth his own Argument ſhews and leaves it a diſputable Point; and if that were doubtful, every particular elſe may well be buried in Oblivion; beſides in Caſes of Conſtruction the nature of the thing admits of Doubt, and then there's no Colour for Puniſhment. Beſides,

In reſpect of Inferiour Perſons, by our Conſtitution they are obliged to ſubmit to and follow Weſtminſter-Hall, which is the Lex loquens Angliæ, and when all theſe Things are duly conſidered, there will remain but few grand execrable Criminals, who are fit to be made Examples of, only to tickle ſome, aggrieve others, and terrify none; for that will be the Conſequence; for that's the Caſe of all Violence, where the Juſtice of the Thing is not clear and undoubted. Then for Exceptions;

Let us think a little; Is it reaſonable that ſome ſhould ſuffer for not being afraid of Puniſhments never declared or promulgated, and others ſhould eſcape, becauſe their Countenances are more fawning, or that by conſent their Relations have play'd on the other Side, or that their ſwinging Fortunes enable them to ſcatter Mice for their perſonal Indemnity, or that they have had the lucky Principle of being faithful to all Changes, and true to nothing elſe, or that they have been forward to ſubvert their old Maſter, after their Fire and Folly had ruined him, and endangered themſelves? Theſe and ſuch like are no Pleas for Juſtice, and yet this is the Caſe. Farther,

The Drift is to magnify and aggrandize Puniſhments by Bill, which by the ſtanding Laws and common Juſtice of the Realm could not be inflicted, and they urge two Reaſons for it, 1. Their particular Pardons will otherwiſe excuſe them. To that I anſwer, Either they are valid in Law, or not, if not, there's no need of Bills; if they are valid in Law, the ſame Law and Juſtice of the Land enjoin their allowance; even the ſame Law by which the Countrey-man plows his Land, the Gentleman receives his Rent, the Trader recovers his Debt, and the Senator ſits in the Houſe; and by the ſame Reaſon that theſe enjoy their Properties, the Criminal ought to have his Pardon allowed, for one's a Right accrued by the Law, as well as the other.

other. 2. The common Channel is too ſmooth; Severity is ſometimes neceſſary, and that now if ever; and therefore the Legiſlative Authority ought to exert its Power, and puniſh according to Demerit. To anſwer that, I ſay, either they are no Offences by Law, and there needs a Bill to make them ſuch, and inflict Evils upon them as ſuch; or elſe they are Offences, but deſerve a greater Puniſhment than a common Court may pronounce: Now if the firſt be the Caſe, then I'm ſure 'tis rank palpable tyrannical Injuſtice, and that's the Plague of living under an Arbitrary Power, for none can know what's not Criminal: If they mean the latter, as I ſuppoſe they do, then I ask, to what end were Puniſhments invented in Societies, but to reſtrain Men from doing particular Actions, through the power and influence of Fear? And how could that Conſequence be expected, when the Penalty was never known before 'tis inflicted? And to inflict an Evil afterwards, which was not known before, is to make a Man ſuffer that which he could not fear, becauſe he could not know it, and this becauſe he did not fear it: And the Juſtice of that is plain too.

I agree with the Satyriſts, that there are ſome Precedents of this laſt Method of proceeding, but moſt of them are repealed; I'll name two that are ſo, the Earl of Strafford's, which the very Law it ſelf did enjoyn Poſterity not to obſerve, or follow, or do the like. I can't forget one Expreſſion of his to this Effect upon the Tryal, if there be an Error in a Judge, ſo that he give a Sentence otherwiſe than a Man of better Underſtanding conceives Reaſon for, there's no cauſe the Offence ſhould be heightened, becauſe he was not ſo wiſe a Man as he might have been, nor ſo underſtanding as another; which if allowed, will make it more eligible to follow a Plow than ſerve a Government, to dig in a Ditch than bear an Office; for all Men ſtand obnoxious to the Conſtructions and Paſſions of ſucceeding Times. There's one Inſtance more, and that was Sir Tho. Haxey's, who was attainted of Treaſon, for bringing in a Bill into the Commons Houſe againſt the Prerogative, though while and as a Member: I ſuppoſe the Sparks will not much applaud the Juſtice of that Procedure for their own Sakes; but as I ſaid before, that, and moſt others of their Precedents, were repealed, when a cooler Aſſembly met upon the next Seſſion, and ſo was Haxey's, in 1 Hen. 4. Cott. abr. rec. 362, 363.

But if Vengeance be requiſite, it ought to be without reſpect of Perſons, the Juſtice of it ought to be impartial, true, and Catholick: And then come in the Penſioners and Surrenderers, the Regulators and Promiſers, the old High Commiſſioners, and the new Creed Makers, &c. and, God knows, quis non? &c. To conclude, our Saviour's Rule, if obſerved, will be the moſt infallible Indemnity that can be contrived, and that is, John 8. 7. Let him that is without Sin amongſt you, caſt the firſt Stone. And in truth a Cenſor of the Manners of others ought himſelf to be pure, clean, and innocent, in omni re quacunque; and if there be no Danger but from ſuch, I'm ſure there's no Danger at all, and that it ſhould be ſo, is the trueſt Juſtice in the World, quod fuit probandum.

I'll not mention the Argument from the Vacancy, that the Government was diſſolved, every Thing reduced into its primitive State of Nature, all Power devolved into Individuals, and the Particulars only to provide for themſelves by a new Contract; for if ſo, there's yet no new conſent for Puniſhment of Acts done before the Diſſolution, and conſequently revenge for that is at an end; Indemnity therefore ought to be promoted by thoſe who made that Vote, for otherwiſe their Truth may be ſuſpected, &c.

The Lord Ruſſel's Innocency further Defended; in Anſwer to the Magiſtracy and Government of England Vindicated.

THERE is a Pamphlet very lately publiſhed, which ſtiles it ſelf, The Magiſtracy and Government of England Vindicated.

It appears by the following part of the Title, to be no leſs than a Juſtification of the Proceedings againſt Criminals; impudently declaring in plain and expreſs Words, as alſo by all his ſubſequent Diſcourſe, That by the Criminal he means the late Lord Ruſſel, Pag. 2. Column 2. in the middle of it.

And the Author does profeſſedly own, That the Book is written by way of Anſwer to a ſmall Diſcourſe or Argument lately printed, which bears the Title of A Defence of the late Lord Ruſſel's Innocency.

It argues a tranſcendent Boldneſs in this Anſwerer, to call this Noble Lord a Criminal, and to juſtifie thoſe Proceedings againſt him, which all honeſt Men ever accounted no leſs than Murther, under a Pretence and Colour of a legal Proceeding, and to preſume to publiſh ſuch a Diſcourſe as this, after the King and the Two Houſes of Parliament have, by the moſt Solemn Judgment that can be given, pronounced that Noble Lord to have been Innocent; and thereby have done ſo great Right to his Memory, and that with ſo high a Zeal, and ſo mighty a Concernment for him, as the like cannot be ſhewn in former Precedents.

It is moſt evident, that the Author was compoſing this ſcandalous Libel even when he very well knew the Bill was brought down from the Lords to the Commons, for reverſing this Noble Lord's Attainder; and the Author could not but obſerve with what Zeal and Affection the Bill was entertain'd at its firſt Entrance into that Houſe.

The Author, by endeavouring to conceal himſelf, is from thence, as he plainly profeſſes, encouraged to take the more liberty to lay about him in the dark (as he fanſies) and thinks to eſcape unſeen; and not only ſtrikes at the Author of the Lord Ruſſel's Defence; but, as far as in him lies, wounds that Noble Lord in his Honour, whoſe Juſtification and Defence was ſo undertaken, and labours to overthrow that Right and Juſtice that hath been done by the Supreme Authority of the Nation.

This is no way agreeable to a Noble and Generous Soul, to come behind a Man and ſtrike him, it rather follows the Example of that deviliſh Powder-Plot, to deſtroy and blow up the King and both Houſes, and to do it in ſuch a cloſe and clandeſtine way, as it ſhould not be known who hurt them; for he was too much a Coward to ſet his Name to it.

But it is very eaſy to tell you what are the firſt Letters of this Author's Name, without caſting of a Figure. His Argument in Law plainly ſpeaks his Profeſſion; and what Robe he wears; and his Style and Phraſe of ſpeaking having appear'd in ſo many noted Tryals, as do in ſo many viſible and legible Characters diſcloſe the Author, Sir R. S. does under his Hand readily and utterly diſclaim it; and is heartily believ'd in what he ſays.

This ſlanderous Author acknowledges, that upon the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal ſome blamed the Jury, moſt cenſured the Witneſſes, but very few arraigned the Counſel or Court. Here it evidently appears how our Author is concerned, firſt for the Counſel, and then the Court, and Self hath the Preference, tho' it be here with a breach of good Manners to name the Counſel before the Court.

Page 1. he takes it heinouſly that any Gentlemen of the Long Robe ſhould appear in Print to ridicule their own Profeſſion, this groſsly ſpeaks our Author, one that was of Counſel in the Tryal. Et tu, Brute?

If it had been an open Enemy, a Doctor of the Commons exerciſing his Wit and Raillery on the Common Law Proceedings, then (as he expreſſes himſelf) this Author could have born it; but he did not imagine that Satyrs and Invectives upon paſt Proceedings ſhould be writ by Lawyers.

In reply to which it may be juſtly ſaid, That when Lawyers will make uſe of their Wit and Rhetorick, as this Anſwerer has done, to bouſter up an unjuſt and revengeful Proceeding, and out of ambitious Deſigns, to get or continue in Favour, and to gain greater Preferment, or ſhew their Parts, will engage in Cauſes of Blood, and help to deſtroy the Innocent, and be inſtrumental in ſubverting the Laws and Government, it is every Lawyer's Duty, as far as in him lies, to vindicate the Profeſſion, by utterly diſclaiming and abhorring all ſuch Practices: And the Defender can appeal to all that have known his Converſation for above theſe forty Years and under, whether ever he uſed any ſuch pitiful, mean and ungenerous Arts and Methods, better becoming the Stage than a Court of Juſtice; and whether he did not, when it was in his Power, conſtantly reſtrain and condemn that ſcandalous and diſgraceful way of Practice. And he can as freely appeal to all that will be at the pains to read his Printed Argument (which this conceal'd Author ſo unjuſtly cenſures) whether any ſuch bitter Reviling, and revengeful Humour appears in any part of what he ſo publiſh'd, or the leaſt reflecting upon any particular Perſon, but only in the general, and no further than the meer Juſtice of the Cauſe did extort from him; ſo far was he from this Author's ſcurrilous and rude Courſe of reflecting upon any Perſon's private Converſation; but ſome Men's Faculties lie this way, and they are very well known, tho' after ſuch manifeſt and groſs Provocations that have been given by this Author, and ſuch publick and ſcandalous Actings of his in the Eye of the World, it might juſtly be ſaid with the Poet:

Difficile eſt Satyras non ſcribere.

The Author of this Anſwer, in his firſt Paragraph, would have the World believe that he writes upon no other Deſign than to ſupport Magiſtracy, and the Government; a noble Theme (as he terms it.) Every Man knows what ſort of Government he labour'd to ſupport but the other day, and how far he was inſtrumental in it; but it is rather thought fit to leave him to a general Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, than take any Revenge upon him.

He ſeems to allow the Lord Ruſſel's Defender, in his fourth Paragraph, to be an Author of Age, Experience, Figure, and Learning, (but he will not ſay Candour or Honeſty.) Thus he writes.

The Lord Ruſſel's Defender is very glad he hath ſo little of this Adverſary's Commendation, for it would gain but ſmall Eſteem amongſt Men of true Worth, to be commended by him. It might be ſaid to him with the Philoſopher upon the like Occaſion, being commended by an infamous Perſon, What Ill have I done, that thou ſhould'ſt thus Commend me? Yet that Candor and Honeſty, which he covertly refuſes to allow, is that which the Lord Ruſſel's Defender prefers before all this Anſwerer's mercenary Wit and Rhetorick.

In his fifth Paragraph he judges the Lord Ruſſel very unfortunate to fall under the Accuſation of Treaſon, and ſays, that Noble Lord was moſt pitied, of any under thoſe Circumſtances.

That Noble Lord's Misfortune (among other things) was his falling under the laſh of ſo bitter and ſharp a Tongue as yours, who, however you ſeem now to mention that Lord with Pity, had then no Pity for him, but uſed him with Severity, as may appear by your own Printed Narrative of that Tryal, and your Rhetorical Flouriſhes in a Caſe of innocent Blood, which contributed in an high degree to inveigle the Jury, and bring that Noble Lord to the Scaffold. Reply.

He confidently ſays in the ſame Paragraph, that in truth the fairneſs and indifferency of that Tryal was ſuch, that his own Relations were pleaſed.

How untrue this is, in both the Parts of it, that the Tryal was very fair and indifferent, and that his neareſt Relations were highly exaſperated and offended, ſhall appear before we part. Reply.

In

In the ſixth Paragraph of his Sheet, he complains that the Memory of that Unfortunate Gentleman was revived by the Publication of the Defence of his Innocency.

Why, what Hurt in the reviving of his Memory? His Memory is precious, he dyed a Martyr for his Religion, and for the Rights and Liberties of his Country, and fell a Sacrifice under cruel and mercileſs Hands.

It is indeed this Anſwerer's Conſcience that flies in his Face, the reviving of this Noble Lord's Memory ſpeaks Terror and Amazement to the Anſwerer. Thus did bloody Herod when he heard of the Fame of Jeſus, he preſently cries out, This is John whom I beheaded.

He does prepare himſelf to make uſe of indecent or diſreſpectful Language, (as himſelf expreſſes it) and comforts himſelf with the thought, that his Name ſhall not be known. A pitiful and unmanly dealing, not becoming a Perſon pretending to Ingenuity. The Lord Ruſſel's Defender dealt otherwiſe, and owns his Name, and will let the World know what this Anſwerer is.

In the four next enſuing Paragraphs, he is much to ſeek for what end and purpoſe the Lord Ruſſel's Defence was Printed in that Pamphlet (as his wonted Rhetorick thinks fit to call it.)

It could not be (as he moſt contemptuouſly ſays) for Conſumption of Paper.

Nor for the Bookſeller's Profit, for a Reaſon to be gueſs'd at.

Forbear, for ſhame, to uſe theſe ſly and ſilly Intimations, they are fitter for School-boys, or the Mountebank's Stage, or for Billingſgate, than for a Man of your Figure, one may be aſhamed to have any Diſpute with ſuch an Emperick, or rather a jeſting and jeering Merry-Andrew. Pray keep this Sport for the next Bartholomew-Fair, and learn more Gravity and Civility.

It could not be (as he further proceeds upon the ſame Enquiry) for the ſake of the Lord Ruſſel's Memory, or any of his ſurviving Relations; for what was written in the Lord Ruſſel's Defence, is (ſays he) but a painting to the Life the too deep Concern of that Noble Lord, in a weak as well as criminal Enterpriſe.

This is wonderful Boldneſs and daring in this Anſwerer, ſtill to pronounce him a Criminal (that Noble Lord) whom the Supreme Power of the Nation, and the higheſt Judicature and Authority have adjudged innocent. And yet he has the Impudence to entitle his undutiful Pamphlet, The Magiſtracy and Government of England Vindicated: And to publiſh this, after he, as well as any Man, knew that the Act of Parliament had paſs'd, aſſerting the Innocency of that Noble Lord, and the Barbarity and Injuſtice of the Proceedings againſt him. Wherein this Anſwerer had ſo great an Hand, and ſo bitter and ſharp a Tongue.

One would think that an ordinary Wit might have ſerved to put him in mind, that as yet there is no Act of General Pardon and Indemnity paſs'd: And who knows upon whom the great Exception may light.

But he gives a very juſt occaſion to the Lord Ruſſel's Defender, to let the World know for what end and purpoſe he long ſince writ, and ſo lately printed ſo deſpiſed a Pamphlet; by which, even his Adverſary may be convinc'd it was not meerly for Conſumption of Paper, or for the Bookſeller's Profit, but truly for the ſake of that Lord's Memory, in aſſerting his Innocency, and at the deſire, and for the ſake of his ſurviving Relations. And for the truth of what is thus affirm'd, he does appeal to thoſe Noble Relations of his who are yet alive.

While that Noble Lord was upon his Tryal, or very ſoon after, there came a Letter to his Defender's Hand, who was then in the Country, near 80 Miles from London, and this from a Perſon of great Honour, and one of the neareſt Relations to that Noble Lord, requeſting the Author of his Defence to afford the beſt Advice he could; and accordingly he heartily and freely gave it: Much of which does appear by what is printed by him.

This was not the only Letter he receiv'd from that Lord's great Relations, upon that ſad occaſion: But after that bloody Stroke had been given, a Paper was Publiſh'd, as the Speech intended by that Dying Lord.

In Anſwer to which, the now Anſwerer and Adverſary (as is too evident) did publiſh his firſt Pamphlet, Entituled, An Antidote againſt Poyſon, compoſed (to uſe its own Words) of ſome Remarks upon the Paper printed by the Direction of the Lady Ruſſel, and mentioned to have been delivered by the Lord Ruſſel to the Sheriffs at the Place of the Execution. Thus far of the Title of that pretended Antidote.

In the latter end of his ſecond Page, that which is mentioned in the Diſcourſe out of his Pamphlet call'd the Antidote, and which is barely repeated in order to be anſwer'd and confuted, he groſsly miſtakes in this latter Pamphlet, and falſely affirms, it is admitted to be true; and from thence endeavours to have the Lord Ruſſel's Defender underſtood as arguing againſt the Lord Ruſſel, and acknowledging his Guilt: Which is a very unworthy way of dealing by this pretended Anſwerer, but eaſily diſcern'd by any wary and intelligent Reader. Nay, this Anſwerer himſelf immediately after, before he is aware, clears the Lord Ruſſel's Defender again from the Imputation, by taking notice that the Defender of the Lord Ruſſel endeavours to invalidate the Credibility of the Evidence given againſt the Lord Ruſſel.

This Reply declines the taking notice of many of this Anſwerer's Paragraphs, that are ſpent meerly in vilifying the Lord Ruſſel's Defender, it being obvious that they were intended only to render mean and contemptible the Perſon he undertakes to anſwer; it being beneath this Reply to repeat them, and to follow the Anſwerer in his rude and ſcurrilous way of writing.

It was indeed no Secret to the Learned, that a Variance between the Indictment and the Evidence, might be alledged on the General Iſſue; nor that Treaſon and the Miſpriſion of it are different Crimes; nor that Proofs of Treaſon muſt not be by Hearſay nor Argument only; nor that leſs than two Witneſſes are not to be allow'd for Proof of that Crime; nor that the Witneſſes ought to be credible: But theſe are not ſo generally known to ſuch as are not profeſs'd Lawyers, and may be uſefully remember'd to ſuch as are brought upon their Tryals for their Lives, and are denied the Help of Counſel when they moſt need it, and are apt to be more under a Conſternation, when they are beſet with ſuch ſad Apprehenſions of their Danger, and baited at by a multitude of crafty Wits, and ſuch as abuſe their Parts and Eloquence, to deſtroy the Innocent, and the Court (it may be) not always ſo indifferent as they ſhould be. And theſe uſeful and well-intended Aſſiſtances, as ordinary and uſeleſs as the pretended Anſwerer would repreſent them, were very thankfully entertain'd, and made uſe of by ſeveral Perſons of great Abilities, and of the beſt Quality, who afterwards fell under the like cruel and malicious Proſecution; but they were no profeſs'd Lawyers. And moſt of theſe are ſtill living, and will and do teſtify the truth hereof.

The Anſwerer, in his fourth Page, falls to argue the Points in Law upon the great Head and Title of Treaſon.

This Reply forbears to repeat what the Anſwerer ſays upon this Subject, or to repeat what this Repliant has formerly printed, but therein refers himſelf to what is ſo printed.

Only finds it neceſſary to ſtate the Point in queſtion in as few and plain Words as he can, and leave it to any impartial Reader to judge of it.

The great Statute of Treaſon, viz. that of the 25th of Edw. 3. was the only Statute upon which the Lord Ruſſel was indicted, and this is acknowledg'd and profeſs'd by the Attorney General, as appears by the printed Narrative of the Tryal, and he could beſt know his own Meaning.

They could not proceed againſt the Lord Ruſſel upon the late Statute of Treaſons, made in 13 Car. 2. for that Statute limits the Proſecution to a certain time, after the Treaſon committed, which was elaps'd in the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe.

Now the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. does ſpecify and enumerate the ſeveral and particular Heads, and Sorts, or Species of Treaſon, that might be proceeded upon, or tryed and adjudged in the ordinary Courts, viz. in the King's-Bench, or Judges of Oyer and Terminer, or Goal-delivery. Such as that of Newgate, or the Seſſions for Goal-delivery at the Old-Baily, where the Noble Lord Ruſſel was brought to his Tryal.

The ſcope and drift of that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. (as appears by the Preamble) was to confine thoſe ordinary Courts and the ordinary Judges to plain manifeſt Rules, what they ſhould adjudge Treaſon, and what not, it being of ſo great Concernment to the Lives of Men; and not to allow the Judges or Lawyers a latitude or liberty to make what they thought fit to be Treaſon, or to exerciſe the Tongues and unruly Noiſes of Lawyers in a matter of that moment. And that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. being in its nature a confining, reſtraining and explanatory Law, ought therefore not to be largely extended or improv'd and ſtretched beyond the plain Words and apparent Senſe of them.

Now among other ſeveral Species, or Heads, or Sorts of Treaſon, particularly enumerated by that Statute, there are theſe two, pertinent to our Caſe, viz.

1. Compaſſing or Imagining the Death of the King.
2. Levying War againſt the King.

Whereupon the common Reader (for whoſe Satisfaction this is written) may eaſily obſerve this diſtinction, That the firſt of theſe is Treaſon (in the very Imagining or Conſpiring) tho' the King's Death do not enſue.

But the latter is not Treaſon in the Conſpiring and Imagining, but the Treaſon muſt be in the actual Levying of War.

So that barely to Conſult, Conſpire, or Imagine to levy War, tho' there be never ſo plain nor ſo open or overt an Act of ſuch Conſulting or Conſpiring or Imagining of it, will not amount to this Species or ſort of Treaſon, upon this Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which is the only Statute upon which the Lord Ruſſel was concern'd.

For that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. did not intend to make it Treaſon, to Conſult or Conſpire to levy War, without the actual Levying of War.

This will not be denied nor diſputed by the Lord Ruſſel's Adverſaries, nor by this Anſwerer.

But perfectly to evade this Statute and the manifeſt Intent and Meaning of it, they inſiſt,

That tho' Conſpiring to levy War, be not Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. yet to Conſpire, Conſult, Agree, or Conclude to ſtir up, or raiſe, or move Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the King, and to Conſult or Conſpire to ſeize the King's Guards (which ſignify one and the ſame thing with Conſulting or Conſpiring to levy War) theſe (ſay they) may be an open or overt Act, to prove a Conſulting or Conſpiring to kill the King.

What is this but to confound the ſeveral and diſtinct ſorts and ſpecies of Treaſons, which the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. doth ſo carefully and induſtriouſly labour to diſtinguiſh?

And what is this, but to make a bare Conſpiring and Conſulting to levy War, without any actual levying of it, to be Treaſon within this Statute of Edw. 3. which plainly this Statute would not have to be ſo taken? And ſo the good Deſign and Scope of the Statute, the Security of Men's Lives, is wholly overthrown by this Artifice; and what ſhall be taken to be Treaſon, and what not, will be ſtill as uncertain as it was before the making of that Act of 25 Edw. 3.

And it was then a needleſs idle thing in thoſe that made the Statute of 13 Car. 2. and ſo of former Statutes, to make the Conſpiring to levy War to be Treaſon; for by this Practice and Conſtruction it is already made ſo to their Hands, by 25 Edw. 3.

Now the Lord Ruſſel was Indicted for Conſpiring to kill King Charles II, and the overt or open Act alledg'd to ſhew and ſignify it, is nothing but his Conſulting and Conſpiring to raiſe and ſtir up Inſurrection and Rebellion, and Conſulting to ſeize the King's Guards, (tho' they were not actually done) which are juſt the ſame thing with Conſpiring to levy War; which plainly is no Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. and therefore moſt clearly the Lord Ruſſel was not guilty within that Statute, upon that Indictment and Evidence.

Since the Lord Ruſſel's Defender has compos'd this ſhort State of his Caſe upon this great Point, there hath come to his Hands a Printed Half-ſheet, which has excellently well done the ſame Work, which, had it been but a few Hours ſooner, had ſaved the Labour of this part of the preſent Diſcourſe and Argument: This Half-ſheet is juſtly entituled, A Juſtification of the late Act of of Parliament, for the Reverſing the Judgment againſt the Lord Ruſſel.

There is but one Point more to ſpeak to, and then the Lord Ruſſel's Defender will bid his Anſwerer and Reader Adieu: And it is that Point which the Anſwerer's firſt Print, viz. his Antidote againſt Poyſon, did not mention, and ſo no occaſion was given then to conſider of it; but it is largely debated by Court and Counſel, at the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal; yet being then but ſuddenly ſtarted, tho' it were well argued by the Lord Ruſſel's Counſel aſſign'd, no Authorities however were then cited (tho' called for by the Court) to juſtify and make good the Arguments and Reaſons urged by the Counſel; and it is a Point in Law which the Act for Reverſing the Judgment againſt the Lord Ruſſel is principally and in the firſt place grounded upon, viz. That there had been an undue and illegal Return of Jurors to Try that Noble Lord (too often practiſed of late) and that the Noble Lord was refus'd his Lawful Challenge to them for want of Freehold. The truth of this as to matter of Fact, doth evidently appear by the large Narrative of the Tryal, Printed by that Lord's Adverſaries; and this is not in the leaſt touched upon by the printed Half-ſheet, ſtiled, A Juſtification of the Act for Reverſal of the Judgment againſt that Lord.

That Point in Law now only remains to be ſpoken to, viz. That in all Caſes of the Tryal of a Man, eſpecially in a Tryal for his Life, the Jurors ought to be Freeholders even at the Common Law, and before the Statute of 2 H. 5. Cap. 3. and that not only in Tryals within the City of London (as the Lord Ruſſel's was) but in all other Cities or Towns Corporate, where there was a Juriſdiction of Trying for Life in Caſes Criminal.

It was not material at the Common Law, how much, or of what yearly Value that Freehold was, or is to be, but ſome Freehold (tho' never ſo ſmall) the Jurors ought to have, or elſe it was a juſt Cauſe of Challenge.

It was indeed the Statute of 2 H. 5. C. 3. that firſt ſate the yearly Value of the Freehold, and requir'd it ſhould be of 40 s. per Annum, which 40 s. per Annum was then in that King's Reign, being ſo long ſince, equivalent to a much higher Value now.

And therefore the Books and Authorities that ſpeak of Freehold of a leſs Value than 40 s. per Annum, muſt of neceſſity be underſtood not to ſpeak of Caſes within that Statute, but of Caſes at the Common Law.

3 H. 4. fol. 4. b. Rolle's Abridgment, Title-tryal, fol. 648. It is there held, that Freehold of any Value was ſufficient for a Juror. This proves that Freehold is requiſite, and that it was ſo before the Statute of 2 H. 5. it being in the Reign of King Henry Vth's Father; and with this agrees Kelloway, fol. 46. towards the end.

Some other Caſes after the Time of King Henry V. prove the ſame, as 16 Edw. 4. fol. 8. half an Acre of Land, ſo it be within the Hundred, ſays that Book, is ſufficient, and it is well known, that as to this Qualification of having Freehold, the ſame Rule governs in the reſt of the Jurors, as in thoſe of the Hundred 10 H. 6. Brooke's Abridgment, Challenge 192. Hales's Pleas of the Crown, 260.

Nor do theſe Authorities diſtinguiſh at all between Caſes Criminal and Civil, nor in Caſes Criminal between that of Treaſon and in Caſes leſs Criminal.

This being ſo at the Common Law, and the Statute of 2 H. 5. c. 3. only adding the yearly Value, viz. 40 s. per Annum Freehold, which before at the Common Law, might be of any lower Value. Now tho' that Statute of 2 H. 5. be Repealed, as to Tryals in Treaſon, as in truth it is by the later Statute of 2 and 3 of Philip and Mary, cap. 10. which enacts that all Tryals in Treaſon, ſhall be according to the Courſe of the Common Law, the Reſult is, that ſtill there muſt be Freeholders to Try, tho' they may be Freeholders as at the Common Law, of any yearly Value whatſoever.

That the Statute of 2 H. 5. (while it was in force) did extend to Caſes of Treaſon (tho' Treaſon was not expreſsly mentioned in it, and the Statute ſpeaks very ambiguouſly and obſcurely) appears by the Authorities following, viz. Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, 161; and Poulton de Pace Regis & Regni, 187; and by the Statute of 33 H. 8. c. 23. in the Proviſo, that reſerves to the Party the Challenge, for want of 40 s. Freehold, even in Caſe of Treaſon, tho' it make the Treaſon tryable in any County.

See Sir Chriſtopher Blunt's Caſe, Juſtice Croke, 37 Eliz. fol. 413. In an Information of Intruſion, by the Queen; a Juror was challenged for want of Freehold, and upon Examination of the Juror, it appear'd he had Freehold of 15 s. per Annum Value, and that was adjudg'd ſufficient; which admits it had been a good Cauſe of Challenge, had there been no Freehold at all; and it neceſſarily implies that it was requir'd by the Common Law, for no Statute interpoſed as to any lower Value than 40 s. per Annum. Nor does this Caſe diſtinguiſh between the Caſe of Intruſion upon the Queen, and any other Caſe.

But it may reaſonably be argued, if Freehold be neceſſary in a Juror, who is to try a Caſe of Intruſion only, à Fortiori, it is requiſite in a Caſe of High-Treaſon, but in that Caſe of Sir Chriſtopher Blunt, another Juror was challenged that had no Freehold, and he was therefore ſet aſide.

Now that the Challenge, for want of Freehold, extends to the City of London, and other Cities and Burroughs, as well as to the Counties, is abundantly proved by the Statutes of 11 H. 6. c. 1. 7 H. 7. c. 5. and 23 H. 8. c. 13. to which the Reader for brevity's ſake is referred.

It is no where maintain'd that an Agreement to Poyſon or Stab, &c. is no Treaſon, if the very Act do not enſue, as the Anſwerer very falſely alledges in the ſecond Column of his ſixth Page, towards the lower end; for thoſe have a manifeſt tendency towards killing, nor are they any diſtinct ſpecies or ſorts, or kinds of Treaſon from the Killing of the King, as that of Levying of War, and Seizing the King's Guards (eſpecially not ſhewing what Guards) are a diſtinct ſpecies from that of Killing the King, and need not neceſſarily be underſtood to terminate and conclude in a Killing the King, taking the King Priſoner, or ſeizing his Perſon, may more reaſonably be thought to aim at a Killing of the King, or have a tendency towards it.

And the Indictment ought ſurely to have declar'd and expreſs'd clearly and plainly what Guards were meant, there being variety of Guards; for every Indictment ought to contain Certainty.

Herein the very Indictment was faulty.

The bold Anſwerer hopes the King will always preſerve thoſe Guards, tho' the Parliament have declared their Senſe to the contrary, when the preſent extraordinary Occaſion ſhall be over.

This daring preſumptuous Anſwerer, in defiance of the Act for Reverſal of the Lord Ruſſel's Attainder, the Tryal having been partial, unjuſt, and illegal, as the Act affirms it, yet dares to averr in his laſt Page, that there was Evidence enough to juſtify all concerned in the Proſecution and Tryal.

The Anſwerer, towards his Cloſe, takes great Care, and is much concern'd to juſtify the King's Sollicitor that then was.

And this would incline one to think that the then King's Sollicitor was not the Author of that Antidote againſt Poyſon; nor of this laſt Print, intituled, The Magiſtracy and Government Vindicated; which are ſo much alike in their Style and Strain. And in truth that late King's Sollicitor doth utterly deny that he had any Hand in either of them. And Sir George Jefferies, the laſt Lord Chancellor, could not compoſe this laſt. This being ſo, it may eaſily be judged where it muſt fix: For this, look into the printed Tryal.

I now refer the Anſwerer to juſtify himſelf at Law, if he happen to be in danger of an Exception out of an Act of General Pardon and Indemnity, where he may have a fairer Opportunity to defend himſelf in his own more immediate Concern for endeavouring to ſubvert the Law, which ever proves too hard for all its Oppoſers. And I will ſo far follow his Humour and Vein, as to conclude with Verſes too.

Rode Caper Vitem, tamen hic cum ſtabis ad Aras
In tua quod fundi cornua poſſit, erit.

Which I thus Engliſh:

Go, ſpightful Satyr, browze that Sacred Vine
(The LAW) but know there ſhall not want for Wine
To pour upon thy Head, which may ſuffice
To render Thee a perfect Sacrifice.

The Case of William Lord Ruſſel, Tryed for High-Treaſon, July 13. 1683.

THE Indictment is very long: But for ſubſtance it is, for Conſpiring the Death of the King, and intending to Levy War, and to that end to ſeize the Guards: For the Indictment concludes, and the Guards for the Preſervation of the Perſon of our ſaid Lord the King to ſeize, and deſtroy, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace, &c. and alſo againſt the Form of the Statutes, &c.

Thoſe that gave their Evidence againſt the Priſoner, were Rumſey, Sheppard, and my Lord Howard.

The Overt Act of Conſpiring the Death of the King, is Conſulting to Levy War, and to that intent to ſeize the Guards. So that the Deſign to ſeize the Guards, is the Overt Act aſſign'd of Conſpiring the King's Death.

The Quære then is, Whether my Lord Ruſſel was Guilty of High-Treaſon within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. (for upon that Statute he was tryed) And I conceive he was not; and therefore his Attainder ought to be Reverſed.

But before I ſpeak to the Matter of Law, on which I ſhall chiefly inſiſt, I muſt deſire you to obſerve ſome Inconſiſtencies and Contradictions in the Evidence.

Firſt, That none of theſe Perſons had their Pardons: Which was otherwiſe in the Popiſh Plot. For no Perſon gave Evidence before he had his Pardon. Therefore being unpardon'd, tho' they might be Legal; yet not Credible Witneſſes: Both which are required by the Statute. For whilſt the Fear of Death attends a Man, he is thinking how he may ſave his Life, rather than to ſpeak nothing but the Truth; and he that is ſo baſe to purchaſe his own Life at the Price of another Man's, will be ſure not to ſpeak leſs than the Truth.

Next, I obſerve how the King's Counſel, by the Queſtions they put to the Witneſſes, did lead, if not, in a manner, dictate to them what to ſay.

And I take notice, that my Lord Howard, who muſt be ſuppoſed to have a full Knowledge of the Plot, yet never ſays a word of their Intent to ſeize the Guards, which was the principal thing in the Evidence of Rumſey and Sheppard: For had there been any ſuch Intent, it is ſtrange that my Lord Howard, who had brought in ſo many other things by Head and Shoulders, ſhould forget ſo remarkable a piece of Evidence, and ſo home as that.

This is only in general. But in particular, do but obſerve Rumſey's Evidence.

He ſays, He was not there above a quarter of an hour; and whilſt he was there, two things were debated, and reſolved, and a third thing diſcourſed. Surely they were things which they did not much value; or elſe they were Men of wonderful Diſpatch, that could receive, and debate the Meſſage which he brought from my Lord Shaftsbury, then debate the Matter of the Guards, and come to a Reſolution in both; and and afterwards discourse about the Declaration; and all this in a quarter of an hour; or else Rumsey is perjured.

In the next place it is very remarkable, where he says, He was not certain whether he was at another Meeting, or else heard Mr. Throgmorton make a Report of another Meeting to my Lord Shaftsbury. And again he says, that he was not certain, whether he did hear something about a Declaration, when he was at that Meeting; or that Mr. Ferguson did report it to my Lord Shaftsbury, that they had debated it. To say no more of it, It is very strange, that a Man cannot be certain, whether he knows a thing of his own knowledge, or by hear-say. And if in so plain matters as those, he spoke on uncertain Knowledge, it is not unreasonable to suppose that he might as easily be mistaken in the rest of his Evidence.

Then as to Sheppard, He first swears point blank, that my Lord Russel was at two Meetings at his House. But being press'd by my Lord Russel, he can remember but one; and when that was, he could not recollect himself, tho' not above eight or nine Months before, as he confesses. It's strange that a Man should be so much in a wood about so remarkable a thing. But surely it must be hard upon the Prisoner, that the time could not be better fix'd: For if Witnesses may give Evidence at that rate, it will be much ado for any Prisoner to make his Defence.

As to my Lord Howard, his Evidence is so notorious that I need say nothing of it, but refer you to the Printed Tryal for your Satisfaction. Only I will take notice of one thing which he says, to reconcile what he said to my Lord of Bedford, my Lord Anglesey being present, and what he afterwards swore against my Lord Russel at his Tryal. Says he, Your Lordship knows that every Man that was committed, was committed for a Design of Murdering the King. Now I laid hold on that part: For I was to carry my Knife close between the Paring and the Apple; and I did say, that if I were an Enemy to my Lord Russel, and to the Duke of Monmouth, and were call'd to be a Witness, I must have declared in the Presence of God and Man, that I did not believe either of them had any Design to Murder the King.

As to the first, What he said to my Lord of Bedford, was as to the Plot in general, and if to any particular Part of it, it must be as to the Insurrection: For there was to be my Lord Russel's Province.

2*ly.* My Lord Howard knew that all that were committed, their Commitments run as well for Levying of War, as for Conspiring the King's Death. So that his Lordship must find out something that will reconcile himself to himself, better than his Knife betwixt the Apple and the Paring, or else it will follow, That he solemnly said one thing and swore another.

I have but only touch'd these things; because I hasten on to the matter of Law. For tho' it were without contradiction, that every thing sworn against my Lord Russel were true, yet it did not amount to High-Treason.

First, Because a Conspiracy to Levy War, is not an Overt Act of Imagining the Death of the King.

In arguing of this, I will not meddle at all with the Original of Allegiance, nor the true Nature of it; neither make any Discourse, that heretofore it was a less Offence to Plot against the King's Life, than against the Government; but I will leave those sore Places, and endeavour to prove my Point, by considering these five things,

First, Whether any Court, the Parliament excepted, can try a Man upon an Indictment for High-Treason, that is grounded upon the Common Law?

Secondly, To what end and intent the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. was Enacted?

Thirdly, Whether [Conspiring the Death of the King,] and [Levying of War] are distinct Species of Treason?

Fourthly, Whether every Law is not to be construed most strictly, to restrain the Mischief against which it was Enacted?

Fifthly, What is the true Meaning and Signification of being Provably Attainted by Overt Deed?

1. As to the first, It seems to be out of doubt, at this day there can be no such thing as an Indictment at Common Law for High-Treason; tho' for other things there may: Because there is no Precedent of it, since the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. For nothing is more common, than for every Prisoner that is Arraigned for High-Treason, to demand upon what Statute he is Indicted. And the Court, or King's Counsel, to tell him the particular Statute. Besides, every Impeachment before the Lords in Parliament, is grounded upon some Statute: And if so, à fortiori, no inferior Court can Try a Prisoner upon an Indictment for High-Treason grounded upon the Common Law. For the Law, which greatly delights in Certainty, especially in Case of Life, will not allow of an Indictment at Common Law: Because no Issue can be joyn'd upon it by reason of the Uncertainty.

As to the second, viz. to what End or Intent the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. was made? I thus answer:

Edward III. was a Victorious Captain, and Potent Prince, whereby he became very Renowned. But that which made his Name the Greater, and his Fame the more lasting, was those good and wholsome Laws which were Enacted in his Time; by which he restored and beautified the Government, that had been defaced, and almost destroyed, by the illegal Proceedings during his Father's irregular Reign. And of all the Oppressions under which the Nation groan'd, there was none that lay heavier upon the People, than the extravagant Licence which the Judges took in the Interpretation of Treason. And this appears by the particular, and universal Joy expressed by the whole Land at the making of the said Statute. For tho' he called Parliaments very frequently, and none of them prov'd abortive of good Laws; yet that Parliament which was held in the 25th Year, did more than any of the rest. And of all the beneficial Laws that were then Enacted, the second Statute whereby Treason was reduc'd to Certainty, gave the People the greatest Cause to lift up their Heart and Voice in Thankfulness to God, and the King; because the Jaws of that devouring Monster were broken, which had torn in pieces so many Families, and threatened Destruction to the rest. So that this Statute was made to restrain, and limit the Judges from calling any thing Treason, that might be so by Inference or Implication, and only to judge upon that which is Literally so within that that Statute. For it is there provided, That if any ſuch like Treaſons ſhall come before any of the Juſtices, that they muſt ſtay, without going to Judgment, till the Cauſe be declared before the King and his Parliament. And all Subſequent Statutes of Treaſon, are all as ſo many Confirmations of this Statute. For they had been needleſs, if the Judges could have called any thing Treaſon, but what is Literally ſuch within that Statute. And the Statute it ſelf had been made to no purpoſe, if it had not ſtrictly reſtrained the Judges. And my Lord Chancellor Nottingham, was of Opinion, that even the Lords in Parliament, could not proceed upon an Indictment for High Treaſon, unleſs the Fact therein alledg'd, were firſt Declared by ſome Statute to be Treaſon.

3. As to the Third Thing, It never was, nor ever will be deny'd, That Compaſſing the Death of the King, and Levying of War, are two diſtinct Species of Treaſon, unleſs all Treaſons are of the ſame Kind. But if there are ſeveral Sorts of Treaſons, then it will follow, that theſe are alſo Diſtinct: Becauſe in every Statute of Treaſon, which mentions Conſpiring the Death of the King, and Levying of War, they are named Diſtinctly. Beſides, they are different in the manner of Proof: For that which is neceſſary to prove the one, does in no Sort prove the other. And furthermore, the one may be effected, and the other never ſo much as intended, or deſigned. As for Example, the King may be Murder'd, and no War Levied, nor Intended. And moreover, in the one Caſe it is Treaſon, as well to Intend as to Execute it, without tacking it to any other Thing: But it is not ſo in the other. For it is in it ſelf, and abſtractly from every thing elſe, Treaſon, as well to Compaſs the King's Death, as to Kill him. But an Intention to Levy War, and doing all Things in order to it, is not Treaſon, unleſs the War be Levied, except by Implication, or Inference. And I am perſwaded that the want of obſerving that theſe are diſtinct Species of Treaſon, has been the occaſion of that Miſtake, of calling a Conſpiracy to Levy War, an Overt Act of Conſpiring the King's Death.

4. As to the Fourth, No doubt, every Statute is to be conſtrued moſt ſtrictly, to reſtrain the Miſchiefs againſt which it was Enacted. For the uninterrupted Courſe of all Judgments, and Reſolutions have been accordingly; and nothing can more directly thwart Common Senſe, than to make it otherwiſe. And therefore if the Statute be abſolute, the more forcibly it is conſtrued to reſtrain that Miſchief, the more truly is the Intent of that Statute purſued. For how ſhall any Evil be ſuppreſſed, if the Remedy muſt be applied but by halves? The Law then would be rather a Mockery, than a Means to redreſs the Evil, if it ſhall not be taken moſt ſtrongly againſt it. Either it is, or it is not a Reſtraint of the Grievance complained of. If it is not, why was it made? If it is, why muſt it not be underſtood in that Senſe, whereby the Miſchief, or Evil may be more effectually ſuppreſs'd and prevented?

5. As to the Fifth, The Anſwer will be beſt underſtood, by conſidering, firſt the Signification of the two Words apart, viz. Provably and Overt.

Provably ſignifies to prove, or make good by Evidence, Argument, Reaſon, or Teſtimony.

Overt has all theſe Significations, Open, Clear, Plain, Apparent, Manifeſt, Notorious, Evident, Publick, Known, Undoubted, Certain, Perſpicuous.

Theſe then being the Significations of thoſe Words, what can follow more naturally than that, To be Provably Attainted by Overt Deed, is, that the Fact muſt not only be Direct, Apparent, and Notorious to the Point, but it muſt alſo be proved Clearly, Evidently, Plainly, and Perſpicuouſly, void of all Doubt, or Obſcurity? And thoſe two Words being taken together, do the better expound each other, and ſeem to be choice Words, and Words of Art, cull'd out by the Penners of that Statute, as the moſt expreſſive, to exclude all Implications, or Inference, that might be made in Caſe of Treaſon.

Theſe Things being premis'd, which are as eaſily proved, as alledg'd, there will remain very little, beſides Shifts and Evaſions, to prove, That a Conſpiracy to Levy War, is an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death.

The Things that are chiefly and commonly urged to maintain that Opinion, are theſe two.

Firſt, It would be of dangerous Conſequence, if a Conſpiracy to Levy War, may not be interpreted an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death: Becauſe there is no means left to prevent it, and the Miſchief attending it, when the War is levied.

Secondly, If a War be Levied, the Death of the King muſt needs be intended, and will certainly enſue, if the Rebels prevail.

In anſwer to theſe, it may be replied, That the one of them is but a bare Objection, and the other no ſubſtantial Argument; becauſe it begs the Queſtion; which is ſurely a feeble way of Arguing.

But I will give a more particular Anſwer to them. And it will be more proper to begin with the Second; becauſe in ſpeaking to it, the other will in a great meaſure receive an Anſwer.

Now as to the Second, It may be obſerved, that the Death of the King is made ſo certain, and neceſſary a Conſequence of Levying of War, that by reaſon of that Certainty, a Conſpiracy to Levy War, is an Overt Act of Compaſſing the King's Death. If therefore the Certainty will not hold, but that many Caſes may be put, and inſtances produced wherein the King's Death is not intended, nor did enſue upon the prevailing of the Party, then is the whole weight and ſtrength of the Argument of no effect.

The Huguenots in France have heretofore aſſembled in Arms: And tho' they repeated it ſeveral times, yet on which of thoſe Occaſions does it appear, either by the Cauſe of their coming together in that manner, or by the Effect of it, that it was levell'd at the King's Life? No, the Cauſe of their Riſing in Arms was for the Aſſerting of their Religion, and juſt Rights. For as ſoon as their reaſonable Demands were ſatisfied, they laid down their Arms more willingly than they took them up; neither did they attempt any thing against the King's Life, when he was in their Power; but after they were answered in those Things to which they had Right, both by the Laws of Nature, and the Government, immediately they returned Home in Peace, and upon all other Occasions proved the most firm, and Loyallest Subjects of all other in that King's Dominions, and so this present King of France must testify for them, if he will do them right.

If the Protestants in France should at this time rise in Arms upon so just a Provocation as now they have, it would be senseless to suppose, that they Levied the War with a principal Design to Murder the King, and not for the Defence of themselves and just Rights, which are so inhumanly, and against all Law, and Justice, at this time Invaded, and Ravished from them. Story is full of like Cases and Instances to this. But to speak more particularly to England, What was the Barons Wars? The Answer to which must be, That they took up Arms to assert their Rights and Liberties, which the King contrary to his Oath with-held from them, and though it lasted near Forty Years, yet the King's Death was never intended, nor his Life in any danger. For as soon as their just Demands were answered, they put up their Swords, and every Man returned Home, and prayed for the Life of the King. And out of English Story, what one Instance can be produced, where the Cause of War was Declared to be against the King's Life; or if the Party prevailed, the King was to be put to Death by their general Consent and Approbation? For though it be true, that there are some Instances where they have been Murdered after the War; yet it is also as true, that it was by private Assassination, and not by the Consent and Privity of those who Levied the War. For all those who were concerned in the Murther, were afterwards Condemn'd and Executed for it, as Traytors. As in the Case of Edw. 2. and Ric. 2.

As for that of Charles the First, which is so much press'd and urg'd, though the Cause of War had been expresly against his Life; yet as one Swallow does not make a Summer; so neither does one Precedent prove the Point. But besides, in that Case of Charles the First, To infer from thence, that the King's Death is principally intended by Levying of War, is altogether as weak an Argument, as to say, because a Thing falls out by Accident, therefore that very Thing was the principal Design and Aim of the whole Action. For in that War, those who first took up Arms, did it to oppose the King's Arbitrary Practices: And though he was afterwards put to Death; yet it was altogether against their Consent or Desire; and most of the Army was against it, and would have prevented it, but that they were at that time so broken into Factions and Parties, that they durst not trust one another. For after that Tragedy was acted, those who first took up Arms, immediately upon it laid them down, and were afterwards the chief Instruments of the late King's Restoration.

But if the King's Death be the Principal Thing intended by Levying of War, to what purpose is the War Levied? Cannot the King be taken off more easily by Poison, or a private Assassination? To the effecting of which, Opportunity cannot be wanting; and so with more certainty the End is obtained, and a less Hazard run in the Execution, than could be done by a War; except those who Levy the War to kill the King, are not content with the Murther of him, unless they cut the Throats of all those that would defend him. Indeed to do it by an open War, rather than by Poison, or a private Assassination, is the more generous way; for they give him fair warning to look to himself; like a Noble Enemy that scorns to kill his Adversary basely. 'Tis indeed to go round about, for the neareſt way. Therefore a War when Levied, must be for some other Intent than to take away the King's Life: Since Englishmen, if they enjoy their Properties, no Prince is so Great and Happy in the Heads, Hearts, Hands, and Purses of his Subjects, as an English King.

But yet allowing that upon every War levied, the Death of the King would certainly ensue, if the Rebels prevail; yet this Question does naturally arise, viz. Where is that Statute which does in expres Terms say, That a Conspiracy to Levy War is Treason? For if it be not so expresly, and literally, within some Statute, then it is a Constructive Treason, and consequently no such Treason, as upon which the Judges may proceed, if the Statute of the 25th Ed. 3. was made to any purpose. For that the Statute restrains all Constructive Treason, or none. But if the Judges may in any one Case, make a Constructive Treason, they may do it in all: And so we are left in the same Uncertainty about Treason, as we were before that Stat. 25th. Ed. 3d. was made.

If the Judges might judge upon Constructive Treason, yet it seems to be a far-fetch'd Construction to make a Conspiracy to Levy War, an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death. For this is not to be Provably attainted by Overt Deed.

First, Because the Conspiring the Death of the King, and Levying of War, are two distinct Species of Treason; and therefore it would be very unnatural, and too much forc'd to join these together, and as it were, to make them one and the same thing, that are so different, and divers, not only in the Manner and Matter of Proof, but also in themselves.

For then, Secondly, A Conspiracy to commit any other Treason, may also be called an Overt Act of Imagining the King's Death: Which was never yet pretended.

Thirdly, A Conspiring of any one Treason, may then be Overt Act of any other Treason.

Fourthly, Any other Criminal Act may then as well be called, An Overt Act of Conspiring the King's Death.

Fifthly, This is to make a Conspiracy to Levy War, Treason in it self. For there is very little difference, between calling a Thing Treason in it self, and to make it an Overt Act of some Treason within the Statute.

Sixthly, Because a Conspiracy to Levy War, was not Treason at Common Law.

Seventhly, The Statutes of 23d, of Eliz. and the 1st, and 3d Jac. 4th. which make it High Treason to Reconcile any to the Church, or See of Rome, or to be so Reconciled, were Enacted to no Purpose, if a Conspiracy to Levy War, is an Overt of the Compassing the King's Death. For what can tend more plainly, and directly to Levy War, than to perswade the People to renounce their Allegiance to the King; and to promise Faith and Obedience to some other Power? So that these, and all other Statutes concerning Treason, which have been made since the Statute 25*th Ed.* 3. are as so many Confirmations of it; and consequently prove that the Judges can call nothing Treason, but what is Literally such, within that, or some other Statute.

Eighthly, My Lord Cook says, That Conspiracy to Levy War is not Treason, unless the War be Levied in facto. And questionless his Opinion is very good Law: Because in many Cases it is not Treason to Levy War: & à fortiori, a Conspiracy cannot. For look into the Statute, Queen Mary 12. and there you will find several Things provided against, which are plainly, and directly a Levying of War; and yet they are declared to be but Felony.

But it may be objected, That by Stat. 3, and 4 Ed. 6. the Offences mention'd in 1 Queen Mary were made Treason. It is very true: Yet it does not alter the Case, but rather prove the Point. For First, they being made Treason by Statute, proves that it was no so in it self: Secondly, because in the two next succeeding Reigns it is declared to be but Felony. For the Statute of Queen Mary is confirmed by 1 Eliz. 16. And thereupon the Argument is the stronger; because those two Queens were of different Religions. Thirdly, because when a Thing is declared an Offence by Act of Parliament, and is afterwards made a less Offence by Statute, it proves that it was not so great in it self; but that the necessary Circumstances of Time and Affairs requir'd it should then be such.

But the Case is yet stronger, because in some Cases it may be but a Trespass to Levy War; as it was in the Case of my Lord Northumberland, 5 Henr. 4*th.* He did actually raise Forces, and such as were taken to be a Levying of War: For which he was questioned before the Lords, and tryed for High Treason. But though the Lords did find the Fact, yet they adjudged it but a Trespass; because the Powers raised were not against the King, but against some Subjects. This Precedent seems to carry great weight in it: First, because it is a Judgment given in the highest Court of Judicature; Secondly, because it was given so soon after the making of the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. who must be supposed to understand the Intent and Meaning of that Statute full as well as succeeding Ages.

The Case of those who aided Sir John Old-Castle might also be urg'd; who were acquitted, because in their Defence, it did appear, that by reason of Fear, and to save themselves, they were constrained to what they did. Which is Ground for another Argument, if there were Occasion; because it proves, that the Maxim in Law, Actus non sit reus, nisi Mens sit rea, holds in Case of Treason, as well as in all other Cases. But I think there's no need of it. For if War may be Levied, which is neither Treason nor Felony; it must be a very unnatural Construction of a Conspiracy to Levy War, to make it an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death.

Thus the Second Thing objected has received a full Answer; and likewise the First, in a great measure. Yet I will add a few Words; that no Doubt may remain.

If the Consequence on all Hands be duly considered, the Danger will be found to lie on the other hand. Yet be it as great as can be pretended; it must be remembered, that the Law has settled the Point; and so it must stand, till by the same Authority it be altered. For the Rule in Law is not to be forgotten, Nemo Legibus Sapientior. It is pretended, that out of a tender Regard which the Law, and all Subjects ought to have for the King's Life, a Conspiracy to Levy War, is taken to be an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death: To this it may be answered, by way of Question, How comes it about that this Age should have a greater Care of the King's Life, than our Fore-fathers had? Can it be imagin'd that they did not understand the Nature of the Government as well as we do? Nor did know of what Consequence to the Publick, the Preservation of the King's Life is? Can it be thought that they did not impartially weigh, and consider the Consequence on all Hands? Yet however let the Defects be never so many; seeing it is settled by Law, it cannot be alter'd but by the same Power: For if it may, then let the Consequences be seriously debated, of leaving it in the Breast of the Judges to rectify the Mistakes, or Defects, be they fictitious or real. For then, when a Turn is to be serv'd, the Law will be sure to be Defective; and so in effect they shall Legem dare. Treason will then be reduced to a Certainty; that is, if the Judges please; otherwise not: There will be then no need of Parliaments: for the Judges shall both declare, and make Law. What will all our Laws signify, though made and penn'd with all the Wisdom and Caution that a Parliament is capable of, if the Judges are not tied up, and bound by those Laws? It renders Parliaments useless, and sets the Judges above that great Council. They can undo what the other has done. The Parliament chains up some unruly Evil, and the Judges let it loose again. But besides, where is this dangerous Consequence, as is objected? Indeed there had been some Weight in the Objection, had a Conspiracy to Levy War been wholly left unpunishable. But the Law has provided a Punishment commensurate to the Offence: Which though it does not extend to Life; yet is sufficient to deter Men from the Commission of it. Yet if a Conspiracy to Levy War is to be punish'd in as high a degree as a War when Levy'd, this would be to punish Thoughts as highly as Deeds; which if it be just, yet is summum jus.

Mr. Sollicitor Finch twitter'd out two or three imperfect Precedents, viz. that of my Lord Cobham, Dr. Story, and Plunket. These, as they are not altogether to the purpose, so they are so very modern, that no great regard is to be had to them; and they rather prove the Ignorance, or Boldness of those Judges, than that a Conspiracy to Levy War is an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death. Because the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. has provided, That if any such like Treasons come before the Justices, they must tarry without going to Judgment, till the Cause be shew'd before the King and his Parliament. And therefore for those Judges to take upon them to judge upon that which was doubtful, and not

not litterally nor expresly a Treason, was to assume the Part which the King and Parliament had reserved to themselves. And therefore upon what has been said, this Conclusion will follow, that no Man can (before the Judges) be Convicted of Treason, unless the Fact be expresly and literally Treason within some Statute, and he be thereof provably Attainted by some Overt Deed, and consequently a Conspiracy to Levy War, is not an Overt Act of Compassing the King's Death; but a Trespass, or High Misdemeanour: And therefore the Judgment against my Lord Russel was manifestly unjust; and so of Course it ought to be Revers'd.

If a Conspiracy to Levy War were Treason of it self, or an Overt Act of Imagining the King's Death; yet my Lord Russel was not Guilty of High Treason within the Statute of 25 Ed. 3. because the Overt Act assign'd against him, was His being of a Council of Six, to manage an Insurrection, and in order to it, to seize the Guards. For had he actually seiz'd the Guards, yet it could not be Treason within the Statute 25 Ed. 3.

First, Because the Guards are not settled by Act of Parliament, and consequently they are no Legal Force. For the Law has pronounced that all standing Force, other then the Militia, is in terrorem populi, Illegal, and a Grievance. And the Reason of it is clear; because the Law does never Protect or Countenance any Thing that is, or may be burthensome, or that is useless. And it is so evident, that in the Pensionary Parliament, this Vote pass'd in the House of Commons, Nemine Contradicente. That all Standing Force other than the Militia is Illegal, and a Grievance. And though they have the King's Commission, as may be objected; yet his Commission cannot make that Lawful that is Illegal; no more than he can tolerate a Riot, or pardon a common Nuisance. For if several Persons were Try'd for a Riot, and it manifestly appear upon the Evidence to be such, would their producing the King's Commission keep them out of the Compass of the Law? Or should those who did assemble together to suppress them, be Guilty of Levying War, because those other Persons had the King's Commission? Therefore if my Lord Russel had assembled a Force sufficient to seize the Guards, the most that could have been made of it, was to bring it within the Statute of the 1*st*, Qu. Mary 12. which makes it but Felony. And this being duly compared with the Precedents urg'd by Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Sollicitor, will retort them strongly upon themselves.

Secondly, It could not be Treason within the Statute, 25 Ed. 3. because at the Time of making that Statute, there was no such thing as the Guards. For the first thing of that Sort was the Band of Pensioners which Hen. 7*th*, set up, in imitation of what he had seen, and learned in France. For in Ed. the 3*d*'s Time, though he was the Third, that without interruption, had succeeded to the Crown; yet Succession had not then obtained so sacred a Reputation, as not to stand in need of the People to uphold them in the Throne. And therefore Kings were then too wise, to do any thing that would be so apparent a Distrusting of the People, as to call in Guards to their Aid. And besides, the constant Wars, either with France, or Scotland, made them stand continually in need of the People's Supplies: And therefore they would be sure cautiously to avoid all Things, that might give the Nation occasion of Offence. And nothing could be more distasteful to the People, than to be nosed by a standing Force, which the Law had adjudged to be Illegal, and a Grievance. And therefore, as there were no such things as Guards at the making of that Statute 25 Edw. 3. So that Statute cannot be supposed to take notice of them.

Thirdly, If the Guards were Established by Act of Parliament, yet if they were so Established since the 25 of Ed. 3. my Lord Russel was not within that Statute, because it provided for nothing but what was lawfully in being at the time when it was made. So that if it were an Offence to seize the Guards, my Lord Russel ought to have been Indicted upon that Statute which did so make it an Offence. For if a Prisoner is Indicted upon a wrong Statute, and the Evidence proves nothing of that Statute on which he is Indicted, but comes very home, and point blank to the Statute on which he ought to have been Indicted, he may plead specially to it, and the Court must direct the Jury to bring him in Not Guilty.

Fourthly, My Lord Russel was not within the Statute 25 Edw. 3. Because the Indictment concluded falsly; and more falsly than any Indictment that I ever saw or heard of. For it says [And the Guards for the Preservation of the Person of our said Lord the King to seize and destroy, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace, and also against the Form of the Statutes.] This Conclusion contains in it four Parts, and none of them is true. First, That the Guards are for Preservation of the King's Person. It will be an easier Matter to find a World in the Moon, than that the Law has made the Guards a lawful Force, or any Statute that has Established any Force, particularly for the Guard of the King's Person. And though the Law had established any such Force; yet it was not done by the 25 Ed. 3. and therefore in this the Indictment concluded falsly.

The Second Thing is this, That to seize and destroy the Guards was against the Duty of his Allegiance. To speak fully to the Nature of Allegiance, would require a long Discourse. But a few Words will lay this upon it's back. It cannot be deny'd, that Nature and the Law did nothing in vain. And if so, can it be imagin'd that the Law would establish such a Thing as the Guards, which had made so much a better Provision for the Preservation of the King's Person, even the Duty and Interest of every one of his Subjects? In the next Place, Subjection and Protection are Convertible Terms, and therefore if the Subjects do not receive Protection by the Guards, it is not against their Allegiance to seize and destroy them: Whereas to seize the Militia is against their Allegiance; because they receive Protection by them. Besides, no Man becomes an Offender, till the Law has been promulged so, as that no Man can reasonably be supposed to be ignorant of it. Now then, though the King by his Commission might make the Guards such a lawful Force; yet non constat, that they are so Commission'd by him. For it has not been publish'd in that due manner and form, as that the Nation can regularly take notice of it. And beſides, there is no Record enter'd, or remaining of it in any Court, or any other Place, whereby the People may come to a certain knowledge of it. Which is alſo a forceable Argument againſt the Legality of ſuch a Commiſſion. So that tho' in other Caſes Ignorantia Juris is not allow'd; yet in this Caſe it is a very good Plea, That it was not againſt my Lord Ruſſel's Allegiance to ſeize the Guards, tho' the King's Commiſſion did make them a lawful Force.

The Third thing is, That it was againſt the Peace, which is an untrue Concluſion. For it is not againſt the Peace to ſeize any Force that is not countenanced by Law. And a Needle may ſooner be found in a Cart-load of Hay, than any Statute that hath Eſtabliſhed the Guards. And if the King's Commiſſion can make a Force a lawful Force, then it's hard to ſay, whether the Rebellion in Ireland did not act upon ſufficient Authority, ſince no clear Anſwer has yet been made to the Commiſſion under the Broad Seal, which the Rebels produced to juſtify their Proceedings. In the next place, every Treaſon is againſt the Peace. But to conclude, becauſe it is againſt the Peace, therefore it is Treaſon, is neither Law, nor Reaſon. For every Offence is againſt the Peace; but every Offence is not Treaſon. Furthermore, the King's lawful Commiſſion is not to be oppoſed in any Caſe; and the Indictment upon it will run, that it is againſt the King's Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Peace. Therefore to conclude, that it is Treaſon, is a non ſequitur. For it is not Treaſon in many Caſes, to ſeize and deſtroy thoſe that Act by the King's Lawful Commiſſion.

The Fourth thing is, that it was againſt the Form of the Statutes. The Statutes thus mention'd muſt be thoſe Statutes, or at leaſt muſt comprehend ſome Statute that ſettles the Guards for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon: For the Seizing of the Guards, is the Overt Act aſſigned of Compaſſing the King's Death. Now if there be no ſuch Statute, then is this Part of the Concluſion of the Indictment alſo falſe. And conſequently the Judgment againſt my Lord Ruſſel ought to be revers'd.

The ARRAIGNMENT of Algernone Sidney Eſquire, November the 7th, 1683.

ALgernone Sidney, Eſq; was by Habeas Corpus brought up to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, and the Clerk of the Crown having read the Return, Mr. Attorney General informed the Court there was an Indictment againſt the Priſoner, and prayed he might be charged with it.

Cl. of Cr. Algernone Sidney, Hold up thy Hand. (which he did.

Midd. ſſ. The Jurors for our Lord the King, upon their Oaths do preſent, That Algernone Sidney, late of the Pariſh of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Eſquire, as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Excellent Prince, our Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, and his Natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, utterly withdrawing the cordial Love, and true, due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King ſhould bear, towards him the ſaid Lord the King, and of Right is bound to bear; Contriving, and with all his Strength intending, to diſturb the Peace and Common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, and to ſtir up and move War and Rebellion againſt the ſaid Lord the King, and to ſubvert the Government of the ſaid Lord the King, in this Kingdom of England, and to Depoſe and Deprive the ſaid Lord the King, from the Title, Honour, and Regal Name, of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England, and to bring and put the ſaid Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction, the thirtieth Day of June, in the Five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Lord King Charles II, now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and Times, as well before, as after, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Maliciouſly, and Traiterouſly, with divers other Traitors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, did Conſpire, Compaſs, Imagine and intend to deprive and caſt down, the ſaid Lord the King, his Supreme natural Lord, not only from the Regal State, Title, Power and Rule of his Kingdom of England; but alſo to Kill and bring and put to Death the ſame Lord the King, and to change, alter and utterly ſubvert the Ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England, and to cauſe and procure a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of the ſaid Lord the King thorough his whole Kingdom of England, and to move and ſtir up an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, And to fulfil and perfect thoſe his moſt horrid, wicked and diabolical Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes, the ſame Algernone Sidney as a falſe Traitor, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly, and Adviſedly, did Aſſemble himſelf, meet and conſult, with the aforeſaid other Traitors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, and with the ſame Traitors did Treat of, and for thoſe his Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes, to be executed and fulfilled. And that the aforeſaid Algernone Sidney as a falſe Traitor, Maliciouſly, Traiterouſly and Adviſedly, then and there, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, upon himſelf did aſſume, and to the aforeſaid other Traitors did promiſe that he would be

Aiding

Aiding and Aſſiſting in the Execution of their Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, and to fulfil, perfect and reduce to effect thoſe their moſt horrid Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſame Algernone Sidney as a falſe Traitor, then and there, Falſely, Maliciouſly, Adviſedly and Traiterouſly did ſend one Aaron Smith into Scotland, to invite, procure, and incite divers evil diſpoſed Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, of his Kingdom of Scotland, to come into this Kingdom of England, to adviſe and conſult with the aforeſaid Algernone Sidney, and the aforeſaid other unknown Traitors in this Kingdom of England, of Aid and Aſſiſtance to be expected and ſupplied from the Kingdom of Scotland to fulfil, perfect, and reduce to effect thoſe their moſt wicked, horrid, and traiterous Treaſons aforeſaid. And that the aforeſaid Algernone Sidney to fulfil and perfect thoſe moſt wicked, horrid, and deviliſh Treaſons, and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, And to perſwade the Subjects of the ſaid Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, That it is lawful to make and ſtir up an Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt the ſaid Lord the King that now is, the ſaid Thirtieth Day of June, in the Five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of the ſaid Lord the King that now is, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, falſely, unlawfully, wickedly, ſeditiouſly, and traiterouſly, did make, compoſe, and write, and cauſed to be made, compoſed, and written a certain falſe, ſeditious and traiterous Libel, in which ſaid falſe, ſeditious and traiterous Libel among other things is contained as followeth in theſe Engliſh Words, viz. The Power Originally in the People of England is delegated unto the Parliament, He (the moſt Serene Lord, Charles II. now King of England, meaning) is ſubject unto the Law of God, as He is a Man to the People, that makes him a King, inaſmuch as He is a King, the Law ſets a meaſure unto that Subjection, and the Parliament judges of the particular Caſes thereupon ariſing, He muſt be content to ſubmit his Intereſt unto theirs, ſince He is no more than any one of them in any other reſpect than that He is by the Conſent of all, raiſed above any other: If he doth not like this Condition, He may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon that Condition (as all Magiſtrates do the Power they receive) and ſwear to perform it, He muſt expect that the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by thoſe that He hath betrayed. And that in another place in the ſaid falſe, ſeditious and traiterous Libel, among other things, theſe falſe, ſeditious, and traiterous Engliſh Sentences are contained (that is to ſay) We may therefore change or take away Kings, without breaking any Yoke, or that is made a Yoke which ought not to be one, the Injury is therefore in making or impoſing, and there can be none in breaking it, Againſt the Duty of his Allegianee, againſt the Peace of the ſaid now Lord the King, His Crown and Dignity, &c. And againſt the Form of the Statutes in this Caſe made and provided, &c.

How ſay'ſt thou, Art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I find here an heap of Crimes put together, diſtinct in nature one from another, and diſtinguiſhed by Law; and I do conceive, my Lord, That the Indictment it ſelf is thereupon void, and I cannot be Impeached upon it.

L. C. J. We are not to admit of any Diſcourſes, till you anſwer the Queſtion, Whether you be Guilty or not Guilty. Sir George Jefferies.

Mr. At. Gen. If he will demur, my Lord, we will give him leave. Sir Robert Sawyer.

Col. Sidney. I preſume your Lordſhip will direct me, for I am an ignorant Man in Matters of this kind, I may eaſily be ſurprized in it, I never was at a Tryal in my life of any body, and never read a Law-Book.

L. C. J. Becauſe no Priſoner under your Circumſtance is to have Counſel, but in ſpecial Caſes to be aſſigned in Matters of Law, the Court is bound by their Oaths and Duty of their Places, that they ſhall not ſee any wrong done to you: But the buſineſs we are to tell you now is, You are to plead Guilty, or not Guilty, or Demur, which is a Confeſſion in point of Law.

Col. Sidney. Under favour, my Lord, There may be Indictments that are erroneous, and if they are erroneous and vitious, they are null, and ought not to be anſwered to.

Mr. Juſt. Withins If you pleaſe to demur to it, you ſhall have liberty to make any Exceptions.

Col. Sidney. I don't demur, 'tis only Exceptions. I think in Matters of Life, a Man may give in his Exceptions to the Bill, and plead not Guilty afterwards. I am ſure in Sir Henry Vane's Caſe, the Court ſaid it, and offered him to do it; That which, under favour, I hope to do.

L. C. J. You muſt Plead or Demur.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, If I put in Exceptions to the Bill, I don't Plead till thoſe Exceptions are over ruled. This was in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane.

L. C. J. Sir, I muſt tell you, You muſt either Plead or Demur.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, There are in this Indictment, ſome Treaſons or repured Treaſons, that may come within the Statute of the 13*th* of this King, which is limited by time, the Proſecution muſt be in ſix Months, and the Indictment within three. Now, my Lord, if that this Buſineſs that is mentioned, be above ſix Months before my Commitment, or above three before the Indictment, I think, under favour, I ought not to anſwer to theſe Matters.

L. C. J. You are miſtaken in the Law. That will be ſaved when the Fact comes to appear. If they alledge the thing to be at a time, which, according to that Allegation would maintain the Indictment, if upon the Tryal it appear otherwiſe, the Court is bound to take notice of it when you come to your Tryal, but we are not bound to examine that before you have pleaded.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, Every body will acknowledge, that there have been, or may be, vitious Indictments. Now if I plead to an erroneous Indictment, and am acquitted, I may be indicted again. Bills of Attainder have been upon Errors in Original Indictments, as that of the Duke of Somerſet. Now if there be here ſeveral things diſtinct in Nature, diſtinguiſhed by Law that are put together, 'tis impoſſible to make a poſitive Anſwer to any one. If any one ſhould tell me, that I by my ſelf, or by other

others, by Sword or by Piſtol conſpired to kill the King, I can ſay, I did it, or I did it not. If any one ſay, I have levyed War, and by ſeveral Acts undertake to prove I have done it, I can ſay I have done it, or I have not. But here I don't find any thing ſpecify'd, or can tell upon what Statute I am indicted. I pray I may ſee the Record.

L. C. J. That we can't do. You ſhall hear it read again if you will, If you think it to be a void Indictment, Demur to it if you will.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I deſire you to accept of this. (Shewing a Parchment.)

L. C. J. What is it? Put in what Plea you ſhall be adviſed; but if you put in a ſpecial Plea, and Mr. Attorney demurs, you may have Judgment of Death, and by that you wave the Fact.

Col. Sidney. I can't make any Objection to the Bill after I have pleaded, Not Guilty, for I accept the Bill thereby to be good.

L. C. J. If you can aſſign any Matter of Law, do. But otherwiſe what a kind of thing would it be? All Criminals would ſay in all Caſes, I doubt whether the Bill be good or bad. And after I have thus conſidered of it, I will Plead. You are miſ-informed, and this the Court tells you, as a Duty incumbent on them.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If you Demur, and ſhew what your Cauſes are, We will aſſign you Counſel.

Col. Sidney. I deſire you would not try me, and make me to run on dark and ſlippery Places, I don't ſee my way.

L. C. J. Don't apprehend your ſelf to be ſo, as if the Court would run you on any Inconvenience. But they are bound to ſee the Methods of Juſtice preſerved, they are thoſe that you, and all the King's Subjects are bound to conform to. If any one of us were in the ſame Condition, we muſt obſerve the ſame Methods of Law.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. Then pray, my Lord, will you tell me this, Is it true, That a Man, how vitious ſoever an Indictment is, muſt Anſwer or Demur to it?

L. C. J. He muſt either Anſwer or Demur.

Col. Sidney. Are there no Exceptions to be admitted?

L. C. J. None: And if you don't do the one, or the other, Judgment paſſes, as if you had pleaded.

Col. Sidney. This is a Plea.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Will you ſtand by it? Conſider your ſelf, and your Life, If you put in that Plea, and Mr. Attorney Demurs, if your Plea be not good, your Life is gone.

Col. Sidney. Pray, my Lord, give me a Day to conſider of it.

L. C. J. No, We muſt not introduce new Methods or Forms for any body. The ſame Caſe that is with you, may be with other People.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I do not pretend to any thing but what is Law, and due to every Man upon Engliſh Ground. I would be very ſorry to do that which may be hurtful.

L. C. J. You have the Rule of the Court. You muſt do one or the other. Call him to it.

Col. Sidney. I deſire this may be read. (Shewing the ſame Parchment.)

L. C. J. It ſhall not be read, unleſs you put it in as a Plea.

Mr. At. Gen. I muſt do my Duty, Mr. Williams exceeds his Liberty, he informs the Priſoner ſeveral things.

Mr. Williams. I only ſaid, if it was a Plea, put it in, Mr. Attorney can hear all I ſay. (Whereupon Mr. Williams was reproved by the Lord Chief Juſtice.)

Col. Sidney. I only give it as Exceptions to the Bill.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. If any one ſhould ask me any particular thing, I could tell how to anſwer.

L. C. J. He asks you a particular thing. 'Tis the Duty of the Court to pronounce Judgment, if you do not plead.

Col. Sidney. Why then, if you drive me upon it, I muſt plead.

L. C. J. I am ſure there is no Gentleman of the Long Robe would put any ſuch thing into your Head. There was never any ſuch thing done in Capital Matters.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I am there indicted for Conſpiring the Death of the King; I have not Conſpired the Death of the King; I am there Indicted for Levying of War, I have not done that. I am indicted for having invited in others, of another Nation, I have not done that neither. I am there indicted to have written a ſeditious Libel to ſtir up the Spirits of the People againſt the King, I have not written any thing to ſtir up the People againſt the King. ——

L. C. J. We are not to hear all this, you muſt Plead as other People, or elſe in plain Engliſh we will pronounce Sentence. We ought to give all Men ſatisfaction that will be ſatisfied; but if they won't be directed, we can't help that.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, If you put me upon this inevitable neceſſity, it lies upon you; I muſt plead then.

Cl. of Cr. Art thou Guilty, or not Guilty?

Col. Sidney. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Cr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tryed?

Col. Sidney. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Cr. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. If you be not Guilty, I pray God you may eſcape.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Will you pleaſe to appoint a Day for his Tryal, that he may take notice of it now?

L. C. J. What time would you have?

Mr. At. Gen. A Week's time, do you think that will be enough?

Col. Sidney. No, Pray, my Lord, give me a Fortnight's time.

Mr. At. Gen. I won't oppoſe it.

Col. Sidney. In the next place I deſire a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. We can't grant it by Law.

Col. Sidney. I deſire you would pleaſe to give me Counſel.

L. C. J. We can't do it, If you aſſign us any particular Point of Law, if the Court think it ſuch a Point as may be worth the debating, you ſhall have Counſel. But if you ask for Counſel for no other reaſon than becauſe you ask it, we muſt not grant it. The Court is bound to ſee that nothing be done againſt you, but what is according to the Rules of Law. I would be very loth to draw the Guilt of any Man's Blood upon me.

Col.

Col. Sidney. Has not every body Counsel?

L. C. J. No.

Col. Sidney. I have several Points of Law.

L. C. J. Tell us them.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, Will you oblige me that am an ignorant Man, and confess my self so, upon hearing my Indictment for things I know not of, a long thing, presently to raise a Point of Law.

L. C. J. 'Tis not we oblige you, Mr. Sidney, 'tis the Law obliges you. We are the Ministers of the Law, 'tis the Law says we are not to allow you Counsel without making your Objections, that the Court may understand whether it be fit; 'Tis the Law says we may not allow you a Copy of the Indictment. Therefore don't go away and say that we as Men sitting here impose upon you, we sit here only to administer the Justice of the Nation.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir, You will have a Fortnight's time to consider of Objections in Law.

L. C. J. If you will have it read, you shall. Those things that you may have by Law, God forbid but you should have the Benefit of them.

Col. Sidney. I desire, my Lord, to hear it read again.

Mr. At. Gen. Would you have it read in Latin.

Col. Sidney. Yes, if you please, I do understand a little Latin.

Then the Indictment was read in Latin.

Col. Sidney. What is that Statute?

L. C. J. When you come to your Tryal, Mr. Attorney will tell you what Statute he goes upon. And he may give in Evidence, any Act of Parliament that comprehends Treason.

Col. Sidney. Methinks he should say what Statute he goes upon.

Mr. Just. Withins. Sir, Would you have a new Indictment for you?

L. C. J. He must take notice of his Tryal this Day Fortnight. Lieutenant of the Tower, you may take the Prisoner back again.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower took away his Prisoner.

The Tryal of Algernone Sidney Esquire, November the 21*st*, 1683.

Algernone Sidney, Esq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench by Habeas Corpus, and Proclamation for Information being made, he desired Pen, Ink and Paper, which were granted him. And he also desired, that two Persons, (viz.) Mr. Wynn and Mr. Gibbs, might write for him, which was also allowed by the Court.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, When I was last here before your Lordship, I did desire a Copy of my Indictment, and I thought the Law did allow it me. But being in an hurry, carried first to a Tavern, then led through Soldiers, and surprized absolutely, I could not give that Reason why I thought the Law allowed me a Copy. My Lord, I was denyed a Copy, and thereby I was deprived of the Benefit of a special Plea I designed to have put in. This would have been a great Help to your Lordship, and to me; the Denial of which hath been a great Prejudice. Now, my Lord, that which I thought was Law then, I think I can give a better Testimony that 'tis so now upon the Statute of 46 E. 3. wherein 'tis expressed, that tout partes & tout gents, that is, all People shall have a Copy of every Record; and it enumerates several Matters, as well that against the King as other People. This is a General Law still in force: My Lord Strafford had a Copy, and my Lord Stafford, and the Lords in the Tower had Copies of their Indictments. And, under favour, I think it was never more necessary than to me, there never having been, perhaps, a Charge so long, and so confused. Now, my Lord, I have a Copy transcribed of this Statute.

[Shewing a Paper.

Sir George Jefferies.

L. C. J. We remember the Law very well. Mr. Sidney did move for a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court denied him then, and so shall now. And yet all this while we shall deny you nothing that is Law. You shall have the Right that becomes a Subject in your Condition. And we must tell you, that notwithstanding all that Case we ought not to have given you so much Favour (perhaps in strictness) as we did. And because you did particularly take notice of the Case of Sir Henry Vane last time, I will shew you the Court did indulge more to you than was done to that Person. In Sir Henry Vane's Case, by the Opinion of all the Judges, it was declared, that no Copy ought to be given, neither of the whole, nor any part of the Indictment, except they shew Matter of Law. But your Counsel, since you went away, moved for the Copy of the Indictment; and to satisfy them, I directed the Case that you took notice of to be read in the Court. And I thought they had been sufficiently satisfied. You had the Indictment read to you in Latin, which was denied in the Case of Sir Henry Vane. And there is a later Case known to most Persons here. By the Opinion of all the Judges of England, a Copy of the Indictment was denied to my Lord Russel. Therefore arraign him upon the Indictment; we must not spend our time in Discourses to captivate the People.

Col. Sidney. Is not this a good Law, my Lord?

[Holding out the Paper.

L. C. J. You have the Rule of the Court.

Mr. Just. Withins. Any thing the Law will allow you, you shall have; but I am sure if you did advise with your Counsel, they must tell you the same thing.

So

So the Clerk of the Crown called the Jury, and after ſeveral Challenges, the Names of the Jury were as follow,

John Amger, Richard White, William Linn, Lawrence Wood, Adam Andrews, Emery Arguiſe, Jur' ~ Joſias Clerke, George Glisby, Nicholas Baxter, William Reeves, William Grove, and John Burt.

L. C. J. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, There are ſome Gentlemen at the Bar, as we are informed, are apt to whiſper to the Jury; 'tis no part of their Duty; nay 'tis againſt their Duty: And therefore, Gentlemen, if you hear any of them by you that offer to whiſper, or make Comments in this Cauſe, as you are upon your Oaths, and I doubt not but will do your Duty between the King and the Priſoner; ſo I expect if you hear the Counſel ſay any thing, you will inform the Court. Let us have no Remarks, but a fair Tryal in God's Name.

Cl. of Cr. You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to his Cauſe. He ſtands Indicted by the Name of Algernone Sidney, of, &c. (as in the Indictment) your Charge is to inquire, &c.

Then Proclamation for Evidence was made.

Mr. Dolben. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn. This is an Indictment of High Treaſon, preferred againſt Algernone Sidney, the Priſoner at the Bar. The Indictment ſets forth, That he, as a falſe Traitor againſt our moſt Illuſtrious Prince, Charles the Second, his natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, &c. On the Thirtieth of June, in the Thirty Fifth Year of the King, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, in the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, traiterouſly, with divers Traitors unknown, did conſpire the Death of the King, and to levy War within this Kingdom. And to complete theſe Traiterous Purpoſes, did then, and there maliciouſly, adviſedly and traiterouſly, ſend one Aaron Smith into Scotland, to excite ſome ill diſpoſed Perſons of that Kingdom to come into this, and to conſult with the ſaid Algernone Sidney, and other Traitors, of and upon Aſſiſtance from the Kingdom of Scotland, to carry on thoſe Deſigns. And the Indictment ſets forth further, that to perſwade the People of England it was lawful to raiſe Rebellion, the ſaid Algernone Sidney did cauſe to be written a falſe Seditious Libel, in which are contained theſe Engliſh Words, The Power originally in the People of England is delegated unto the Parliament. The King is ſubject to the Law of God, as he is a Man to the People that makes him a King. In as much as he is a King, the Law ſets a meaſure unto that Subjection, &c. (as in the Indictment.) This is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. If we prove him Guilty, we doubt not but you will find it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted of the higheſt Crimes, the conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Overthrow of the Engliſh Monarchy. Gentlemen, we ſhall uſe this Method in our Evidence. We ſhall ſhew by many Witneſſes, that there was a Deſign of raiſing and making a Rebellion within this Kingdom. For, Gentlemen, you muſt take notice, and I think there is no Engliſhman but does believe, that for ſeveral Years laſt paſt a Deſign was laid, and for that purpoſe ſeveral ſecret Inſinuations were made uſe of, and publick Libels ſpread Abroad to perſwade the People, that the King was introducing Arbitrary Power, that he ſubverted all their Rights, Liberties, Properties, and whatever was dear to them. They endeavoured to make the World believe the King was a Papiſt. And when, Gentlemen, by ſuch Stratagems they had worked upon many incautelous Perſons, when they thought they had gotten a ſufficient Party, then there was a Deſign of an open Riſing (for they thought all Things were ripened) and that was to be in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom. Some Perſons to effect this Deſign, were for a preſent Aſſaſſination of the King. Others would do it in a more fair and gentle way. They thought it below Perſons of that great Quality as the Priſoner is, and therefore were for doing it by open Force.

When we have given that general Evidence, we ſhall then come to ſhew you what Share and Part the Priſoner had in this Deſign. For certainly he was looked upon as a very eminent Perſon, whoſe Education Abroad, and former Practices at Home had rendered him fit to adviſe and proceed in ſuch Affairs. We ſhall prove when theſe Matters were ripe, this Gentleman was of the Council of State, of the Six that were to manage this Matter of the Riſing. We ſhall ſhew the ſeveral Conſultations they held: One at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, another at the Houſe of my Lord Ruſſel. There we ſhall acquaint you what Debates they had; for they acted like very ſubtile Men; and there they debated, whether the Riſing ſhould be firſt in the Countrey or City, or both together. They came to a Reſolution it ſhould be in both Places at once. Then when they had aſſerted that Point, they come to conſider the Time of Riſing; and upon that they thought fit to call in Aid of Scotland firſt; and that was this Gentleman's particular Province. For he being a Man of great Secrecy, was to ſend an Emiſſary into that Kingdom, and invite ſome Perſons over to treat with them about it. We ſhall prove that an Emiſſary was ſent, and this Gentleman gave him a conſiderable Sum to bear his Charges. We ſhall prove that ſeveral Scotch Gentlemen, in purſuance of this Reſolve, came here to treat with this great Council of State, about this Affair: And ſhall make it appear to you, that as ſoon as ever the leaſt Diſcovery of this Plot was, Theſe Perſons concealed themſelves and withdrew, as the reſt of the Plotters that have fled from Juſtice.

Gentlemen, this was not enough for this Gentleman to conſult on theſe ſeveral Paſſages, but to demonſtrate to the World, That his Head and Heart was intire in this Service, and that he might carry it on the more effectually, he was at this very time, when this Emiſſary was gone into Scotland, preparing a moſt Seditious and Traiterous Libel, we inſtance in ſome particular Words of it. But we ſhall ſhew you, that the whole Deſign of this Treatiſe is to perſwade the People of England, that it is lawful, nay,

nay, that they have a right to ſet aſide their Prince, in caſe it appear to them, that he hath broken the Truſt laid upon him by the People. Gentlemen, he does uſe in that Treatiſe ſeveral Arguments drawn from the moſt Rebellious Times that ever were in England, from the late Rebellion (I muſt needs uſe that Word notwithſtanding the Act of Oblivion, when a Gentleman ſhall now attempt to do thoſe Things for which he was pardoned then) and from other Kingdoms, where Rebellion hath been proſperous againſt Princes. Then he falls to Reaſoning, and uſes great Reaſon in the Caſe, That all the Power of the Prince is originally in the People, and applies that Diſcourſe, that the Power of the King was derived from the People upon Truſt, and they had already declared the King had invaded their Rights, and therefore he comes to argue, they might aſſume that Original Power they had conferred. And he tells the King, that is no hard Condition; if he thinks it ſo, he ſhould lay down his Crown, if not, he threatens the Condition would be exacted, or otherwiſe ſhould be revenged by thoſe he had betrayed; and who but this Gentleman and his Confederates, that thought himſelf not only able to govern this Nation, but many Monarchies, ſhould call him to Account for it? For he lays down this Principle, That tho' all the People do riſe againſt their Prince, it is no Rebellion. The whole Book is an Argument for the People to riſe in Arms, and vindicate their Wrongs. He lays it down, That the King has no Authority to diſſolve the Parliament; but 'tis apparent the King hath diſſolved many; therefore he hath broken his Truſt, and invaded our Rights. And at laſt concludes with that Paſſage laid in the Indictment, We may therefore ſhake off our Yoke; for 'tis not a Yoke we ſubmitted to, but a Yoke by Tyranny (that muſt be the meaning of it) they have impoſed on us.

Gentlemen, if we prove all theſe Matters to you, I doubt not you will do right to the King and Kingdom, and ſhew your Abhorrence of thoſe Republican Principles; which, if put in Practice, will not only deſtroy the King, but the beſt Monarchy in the World.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call Mr. Weſt.

Mr. Finch. [Who appeared.

Col. Sidney. I pray one Word, my Lord, before Mr. Weſt be ſworn, I have heard, my Lord, Mr. Weſt hath confeſſed many Treaſons, I deſire to know whether he is pardoned, or no?

L. C. J. I don't know that.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, how can he be a Witneſs then?

L. C. J. Swear him: For I know no Legal Objection againſt him. He was a good Witneſs in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if another did not except againſt him, 'tis nothing to me.

Mr. North. Pray give an Account to the Court of what you know of a general Inſurrection intended in England.

Col. Sidney. What he knows concerning me.

L. C. J. We will take care of that, that no Evidence be given but what ought to be.

Col. Sidney. Is it ordinary that he ſhould ſay any thing, unleſs it be to me and my Indictment?

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, You remember in all the Tryals about the late Popiſh Plot, how there was firſt a general Account given of the Plot in Coleman's Tryal, and ſo in Plunket's, and others: I don't doubt but you remember it. And Sir William Jones, againſt whoſe Judgment, I believe you won't object, was Attorney at that time.

Mr. North. Mr. Weſt, What do you know of the general Inſurrection lately deſign'd?

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, I have had the Honour to to know Colonel Sidney ſeveral Years; but I don't remember that I ever ſaw him from the time I came acquainted with any part of the Conſpiracy, till the Diſcovery that was at the Council.

Mr. North. Pray give an Account of what you know of the Plot in general.

Mr. Weſt. My Lord, in October laſt, Captain Walcot came to me, and told me that my Lord Shaftsbury had deſigned an Inſurrection in November; I uſed ſome Arguments to diſſwade him from it. But a little afterwards he came and told me, the Thing was wholly diſappointed, and then it went off, and my Lord Shaftsbury went for Holland. Colonel Rumſey afterwards about Chriſtmas, ſaid there were ſome Lords and Gentlemen intended to make an Inſurrection, the Perſons were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Eſſex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Ruſſel, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Mr. Hambden, Jun. After ſome time he told me they had altered their Meaſures, and were reſolved not to venture upon an Inſurrection in England, till they had a Concurrency in Scotland. Afterwards I was not privy to any thing elſe, but what I had the Report of from Mr. Nelthorp and Mr. Ferguſon. Mr. Nelthorp told me the Priſoner had ſaid——

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I am very unwilling to interrupt the Gentleman——

L. C. J. You muſt not interrupt the Witneſs. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Weſt. Mr. Nelthorp told me, the Priſoner at the Bar had ſent Aaron Smith into Scotland, and given him a Sum of Money to bear his Charges, and ſent Letters to ſome Scotch Gentlemen to invite them to Town. The Letter bore a Cant of ſettling ſome Buſineſs in Carolina; but the Buſineſs was coming up about the Inſurrection. After this Mr. Smith returned, and ſome Scotch Gentlemen with him; and ſoon after Mr. Ferguſon gave an Account of that Affair, and ſaid, the Scotch propoſed, if they might have thirty Thouſand Pounds in ready Money, they would undertake to make an Inſurrection in Scotland, without the Concurrence of England. He ſaid this Propoſal was agreed to, and Money would be ſoon ready; and he ſaid that Sheppard would return the Money. That the Arms were ready bought, and my Lord of Argyle would go into Scotland, and head the Scots. He told me when Things were thus ſettled, ſome difference aroſe about raiſing the Money; and at laſt he told me, my Lord Grey did offer to raiſe ten Thouſand Pounds out of his own Eſtate, if the reſt would pay their Proportion. Then the Scots came down to leſs, but that would not be complied with. The Places for the Riſing were Briſtol, Taunton, York, Cheſter, Exeter, London. That there had been ſome Debates, whether they ſhould begin at London, or the other Places, and at laſt it was reſolved they ſhou'd begin at London with the reſt of the Places.

My Lord, This was the Account I had of the Matter in general of Mr. Ferguſon; but he ſaid they were diſappointed. Afterwards he told me, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Major Wildman, were very inſtrumental in working of it off, becauſe they could not agree upon the Declaration to be made upon the Inſurrection. The Engliſh were for a Common-wealth ; but the Scotch Gentlemen anſwered fairly, it might come to it in time, but the Noblemen there would not agree to it at preſent. As to the Priſoner in particular, I know nothing, and did never ſpeak with him till ſince the Diſcovery.

Mr. At. Gen. Colonel Rumſey. [Sworn.

Mr. North. Pray Sir, will you give the Court an Account of what you know of any Inſurrection intended, and how they deſigned to carry it on.

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, the latter end of October, or beginning of November, I was deſired by my Lord Shaftsbury to go to Mr. Sheppard's, to know of the Gentlemen that were met there, what was done about the Riſing intended at Taunton ; and I had their Anſwer, that Mr. Trenchard had failed them, and that it muſt ceaſe for that time. That was all at that time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What elſe do you know of any Inſurrection afterwards ?

Col. Rumſey. After that we had ſeveral Meetings at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, where we had divided the City into twenty Parts, and ſeven Parts Mr. Goodenough had brought an Account of ; the other thirteen he ſaid nothing of ; for he had not ſpoke with thoſe that were to tell him how many Men they would afford. There was there Captain Walcot, Mr. Weſt, the two Goodenoughs, Mr. Borne, Mr. Wade, and my ſelf.

L. C. J. What was the Reſult of thoſe Debates ?

Col. Rumſey. To ſee what Number of Men they could produce in the City for the Inſurrection.

L. C. J. Was there a Riſing deſigned ?

Col. Rumſey. Yes.

L. C. J. And did theſe People meet ?

Col. Rumſey. There was no time ſet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the meeting ?

Col. Rumſey. There were ſeveral meetings in March, and April, and May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. After the meeting at Sheppard's ?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, a great while. It ceaſed, I think, ſix Weeks or three Months.

L. C. J. Who did you meet with at Mr. Sheppard's ?

Col. Rumſey. There was the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Sheppard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you expect ſhould head this Army ?

Col. Rumſey. That was never ſaid any thing of.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were to manage the Riſing ?

Col. Rumſey. We that met there.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you no expectation of great Men ?

Col. Rumſey. Mr. Weſt told me, and Mr. Goodenough, that there was a Council, which were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Eſſex, my Lord Howard, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hambden, and my Lord Ruſſel, there were Six.

L. C. J. What did he tell you of them Six ?

Col. Rumſey. He told me they were managing a Buſineſs with Scotland.

L. C. J. A Buſineſs, pray ſpeak plain, tell all you know.

Col. Rumſey. For the Inſurrection.

L. C. J. Say ſo then, we know nothing of the Buſineſs you were about.

Col. Rumſey. My Lord, Mr. Weſt had that Diſcourſe with my Lord Howard I never had ; he is more fit to ſpeak to that than me.

L. C. J. Speak your own Knowledge and no more.

Mr. Jones. After the death of my Lord Shafſbury, who were the Managers, and were to carry it on ?

Col. Rumſey. I told you, Mr. Weſt and Mr. Goodenough did tell me the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Eſſex——

Mr. At. Gen. He told you ſo before. Do you know there was an Inſurrection then intended ?

Col. Rumſey. Yes, becauſe we met towards the management of it, the Company that met at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, and other Places.

Mr. At. Gen. What Diſcourſe had you with Mr. Ferguſon about it ?

Col. Rumſey. Not about thoſe Gentlemen.

Mr. North. The next Thing we ſhall ſhew, ſhall be that the Scotchmen came to Town.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I muſt ever put you in Mind, whether it be ordinary to examine Men upon Indictments of Treaſon concerning me that I never ſaw, nor heard of in my Life.

L. C. J. I tell you, all this Evidence does not affect you, and I tell the Jury ſo.

Col. Sidney. But it prepoſſes the Jury.

Mr. Keiling called and ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. I ask you in general, what you know of the Riſing to have been laſt Spring ?

Mr. Keiling. My Lord, It was ſome time laſt Summer, Mr. Goodenough came to me, and brought me three Papers numbered on the back-ſide ; I asked him to what end he delivered them me ? He told me, One was for my ſelf, and I was to deliver the other Two to whom I could truſt in the two Diviſions. I asked him, What was the Deſign ? He ſaid, to raiſe Men ; ſays I, Do you deſign a general Inſurrection ? He ſaid, if he did not, if the King was taken off this would do well ; for then People would know how to have recourſe to a formidable Body. And I have heard him ſay, that Colonel Sidney, whom I don't know, had a conſiderable Part in the Management of that Affair.

Mr. At. Gen. We charge him with Conſpiring, and there muſt be Confederates in the Caſe. Now then we come to the Priſoner, We will call my Lord Howard, that was one of the Perſons that did Conſult.

The Lord Howard Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury of your Knowledge, of what Tranſactions there have been with the Priſoner about this Affair of the general Riſing.

Lord Howard. Truly my Lord, In the entering of the Evidence I am about to give, I cannot but obſerve, what a natural Uniformity there is in Truth. For the Gentlemen that have been before, have ſo exactly inſtanced, in every Particular, with what I have to ſay, that two Tallies could not more exactly fall into one another, though I confeſs I had not ſeen their Faces, till the Plot brake out, for ſome Months before.

My

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, About the middle of January laſt, it was conſidered by ſome of us that met together, That it was very neceſſary and expedient to an Enterpriſe that had been long in Hand, and fallen flat then, that it ſhould be revived by ſome Conſult or Cabal that ſhould be ſet up to give Life to it, and Governance to the Motions of it. The firſt (for ought I know) Movers of this, were the Duke of Monmouth, the Gentleman at the Bar, and my Self: And there we did agree, That we ſhould bethink our ſelves of ſome few, we were willing it ſhould not exceed Five, at the moſt Seven. This Agreement being at firſt between us Three; I remember the Duke of Monmouth undertook to ingage my Lord Ruſſel, and my Lord Salisbury; and this Gentleman Colonel Sidney for my Lord of Eſſex, and Mr. Hambden; and theſe being put together, did preſently conſtitute a little Cabal, of as great a Number as was intended. This being ſetled among them, it was within a few Days after, I can't certainly tell when, but between the middle and latter end of January, that I was told, That the Perſons had agreed to enter into this Conjunction of Councils; and in order to that, they had appointed a Meeting at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, to which I was invited. This in time was between the middle and latter end of January, but I can't tell exactly. When we came there, there were all thoſe Gentlemen I before-named, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Eſſex, my Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hambden, and my Self. It was at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, which ranges on the ſame Row with Southampton Houſe: And being met, Mr. Hambden, I ſuppoſe, did think it moſt properly belonged to him to take upon him the Part as it were to open the Seſſions, that was, to give us a little Account of the Reaſon, End, and Intention of that Meeting: In which Diſcourſe, he took Occaſion to recapitulate ſome Deſign, that had been before chiefly carried on by my Lord Shaftsbury, before this time Dead; and alſo took Notice of the ready Diſpoſition and Inclination of the Minds of Men to go on with it; and did give one Inſtance of his Judgment of it, That it being a Deſign communicated to ſo many, it had not been ſo much as Revealed, or a Murmur or Whiſper gone about it: From whence he took occaſion to tell us, That it was abſolutely neceſſary for the future, there ſhould be ſome Council, that ſhould be as a Spring, a little to guide and govern the Motions of the reſt, for that there were divers Things to be taken care of, which if not taken care of by particular Perſons, would all miſcarry. This was the Subſtance of the Prologue and Introduction he made. From hence he made a Tranſition to ſome particular Things, that he thought were moſt principally to be taken Care of. And though it is impoſſible for me to remember the Order and Method in which we diſcourſed, or who ſaid this or that, but that which the Senſe of all reſulted to was this: That ſince we did not come prepared for it, we ſhould conſider what were the Things that would hereafter challenge our particular Care, that was, The time when, the Places where, and the Perſons by whom theſe Things ſhould be carried on. This led into ſome particular Diſcourſe, concerning ſome of theſe Heads: For the Time; that it ſhould be ſhortly, leſt the Minds of Men ſhould chill; and then as to the Place where, whether in City or Countrey, or both jointly. In all theſe, ſome Opinions were given, but not ſetled to any Reſolution, but they were committed to our Thoughts to be digeſted afterwards. But theſe being the Things that every one was to take upon his Thoughts, there was this Prerequiſite to the Undertaking, and that was to conſider what Magazines were to be got; and that led to another Particular, which was, With what they ſhould be gotten, and that was Money; and thereupon was propounded a conſiderable Sum to be raiſed: and as I remember, the Sum propounded by the Duke of Monmouth was Twenty-Five Thouſand Pounds, or Thirty Thouſand Pounds. And then it was conſidered, how it ſhould be raiſed without drawing Obſervation or Jealouſy. Theſe are only the Heads that were then agreed on, hereafter to be better conſidered. But the preſent Reſolution that was taken, was, That before any Procedure was made in any of theſe Things, or any Advance towards the Undertaking; the firſt Thing to be conſidered, was, How to make a Coalition of Councils between Scotland, and what we were doing here; and for that Purpoſe, we ſhould bethink our ſelves of ſome fit Perſon to be ſent thither, to Unite us into one Senſe and Care. This is as much as occurs to my Memory upon that Meeting. About a Fortnight or three Weeks after, which I ſuppoſe carried it to the middle of February next, we had another Meeting, and that was at Southampton Houſe at my Lord Ruſſel's, and there were every one of the ſame Perſons; and when we came there, there happen'd to fall in a Diſcourſe which I know not how it came in, but it was a little warmly urged, and thought to be untimely, and unſeaſonable; and that I remember was by Mr. Hambden, who did tell us, That having now united our ſelves into ſuch an Undertaking as this was, it could not but be expected, that it would be a Queſtion put to many of us; To what End all this was? Where it was we intended to Terminate? Into what we intended to Reſolve? That theſe were Queſtions he met with; and it was probable, every one had or would meet with from thoſe Perſons whoſe Aſſiſtance we expected; and that if there was any thing of a Perſonal Intereſt deſigned or intended, that there were but very few of thoſe, whoſe Hearts were now with us, but would fall off: And therefore, ſince we were upon ſuch an Undertaking, we ſhould reſolve our ſelves into ſuch Principles, as ſhould put the Properties and Liberties of the People into ſuch Hands, as it ſhould not be eaſily invaded by any that were truſted with the Supream Authority of the Land; and it was mentioned to Reſolve all into the Authority of the Parliament. This was moved by him, and had a little harſhneſs to ſome that were there; but yet upon the whole Matter we generally conſented to it, That it was nothing but a Publick Good that we all intended. But then after that, we fell to that which we charged our ſelves with at the firſt Meeting, and that was concerning ſending into Scotland, and of ſetling an Underſtanding with my Lord of Argyle: And in order to this, it was neceſſary to ſend a Meſſenger thither to ſome Perſons, whom we thought were the moſt leading Men of the Intereſt in Scotland: This led us to the inſiſting on ſome particular Perſons; the Gentlemen named, were my Lord

Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and the Campbels; I am ſure it was ſome of the Alliance of my Lord of Argyle, and I think of the Name. As ſoon as this was propounded, it was offered by this Gentleman Colonel Sidney, that he would take the Care of the Perſon; and he had a Perſon in his Thoughts, that he thought a very fit Man to be intruſted; one or two, but one in ſpecial, and he named Aaron Smith to be the Man, who was known to ſome of us, to others not; I was one that did know him, and as many as knew him, thought him a proper Perſon. This is all that occurs to me that was at the ſecond Meeting, and they are the only Conſults that I was at.

Mr. At. Gen. What was he to do?

Lord Howard. There was no particular Deed for him, more than to carry a Letter. The Duke of Monmouth undertook to bring my Lord Melvin hither, becauſe he had a particular Dependance upon him, and I think ſome Relation to his Lady: But to Sir John Cockram there was a Letter to be ſent under the diſguiſe of carrying on ſome Buſineſs of the Plantation in Carolina. This Letter I ſuppoſe was writ by my Lord Ruſſel (tho' I know it not) for he was perſonally known to my Lord Ruſſel, and I don't know that he was known to any of us. About three Weeks after this, then he was diſpatched I ſuppoſe.

Mr. At. Gen. To what purpoſe were theſe Gentlemen to come up?

Lord Howard. Theſe were to acquaint us how they found Scotland tempered, and what Opportunities or Advantages there were or might be of putting them into a Commotion, and how Men might be Raiſed, and how they would fall under Argyle, and alſo to keep Time and Place with us. After this, I was with Colonel Sidney, when he was going into London, and he did take out ſeveral Guineas, I can't tell how much it was, I ſuppoſe they might be about ſixty, and put them into his Pocket (and ſet me down at my Lodging) which he ſaid were to give Aaron Smith; whether he gave it or no, I don't know; and after that he was ſent.

Mr. At. Gen. Who told you ſo?

Lord Howard. Col. Sidney, For I was inquiring of him; and he ſaid, he had not heard of him in three Weeks, or but once, when he was about New Caſtle. After this, I had Occaſions that called me into the Country, and there I was. Some time after that I went to the Bath: And this is all the Account I can give.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know that Aaron Smith did go?

Lord Howard. I know nothing but by hear-ſay. Col. Sidney told me he was gone, and was upon the Road, and he heard from him about New-Caſtle.

L. C. J. Did you underſtand by the Diſcourſe after he was gone, that he went in purſuance of that Debate?

Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord, That was the whole end of his going.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I think you ſay, that Gentleman (ſpeaking of Col. Sidney) undertook to ſend him?

Lord Howard. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Col. Sidney. I have no Queſtions to ask him.

Mr. At. Gen. Silence——You know the Proverb. The next Step is to ſhew you, my Lord, that theſe Perſons came up immediately after Aaron Smith went down thither; and according to that which was ſaid to be the ſhadow and pretence of their coming hither, they pretended they came about Carolina Buſineſs. Sir Andrew Foſter and Mr. Blathwaite.

Sir Andrew Foſter ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, give an account what Scotch Gentlemen came up lately.

Sir Andrew Foſter. My Lord, About the end of the Spring, or beginning of Summer, as I remember, theſe Gentlemen, Sir John Cockram, and Commiſſary Monro, and the two Campbels Father and Son, came up hither. I did not ſee the Father at all, but I ſaw the Son the day of the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal; but the other two, I think, I ſaw a little before the Diſcovery of the Plot.

Mr. At. Gen. What did they pretend they came about?

Sir Andrew Foſter. They pretended they came to make a Purchaſe in Carolina, and I ſaw their Commiſſion from the Perſons ſaid to be concerned in that Deſign.

L. C. J. Who do you ſpeak of?

Sir Andrew Foſter. Sir John Cockram and Commiſſary Monro.

Mr. At. Gen. As ſoon as the Rumour came of the Plot, what became of thoſe Gentlemen?

Sir Andrew Foſter. Sir John Cockram abſconded, but Commiſſary Monro never abſconded, and the Campbels I heard were ſeized changing their Lodging from place to place.

Mr. Atterbury ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Atterbury, Will you give my Lord and the Jury an account what you know of theſe Scotch-men, their abſconding and lying hid.

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, Upon the latter end of June, or the beginning of July; the beginning of July it was, I was ſent for into London upon a Diſcovery of ſome Scotch Gentlemen that lay about Black-Fryars; and when I came down there, there was the Common Serjeant and ſome others, had been before me, and found them making an Eſcape into a Boat.

Mr. At. Gen. Who were they?

Mr. Atterbury. Sir Hugh Campbel, and Sir John Cockram, and one that was committed to the Gate-houſe by the Council as ſoon as brought thither.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall end here, my Lord: How long had they been in Town?

Mr. Atterbury. They had been in Town ſome little time.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done with this piece of our Evidence. Now, to ſhew that while this Emiſſary was in Scotland, at the ſame time the Colonel (which will be another Overt Act of the Treaſon) was, writing a Treaſonable Pamphlet. I will call you the Witneſſes. It is all of his own Writings. Sir Philip Lloyd.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Philip Lloyd, Pray will you look upon thoſe Papers, and give my Lord and the Jury an account where you found them.

Sir Philip Lloyd. I had a Warrant, my Lord, from the Secretary by the King and Council, to ſeize Mr. Algernon Sidney's Papers, and purſuant to it, I did go to his Houſe, and ſuch as I found there I put up. I found a great many upon

upon the Table, amongſt which were theſe, I ſuppoſe it is where he uſually writes, I put them in a Pillowbear I borrowed in the Houſe, and that in a Trunk; I deſired Col. Sidney would put his Seal upon them, that there ſhould be no Miſtake; he refuſed, ſo I took my Seal, and ſealed up the Trunk, and it was carried before me to Mr. Secretary Jenkins's Office. When the Committee ſate, I was commanded to undo the Trunk, and I did ſo, and found my own Seal upon it. And I took the Papers out of the Bag I put them into before.

L. C. J. Was Col. Sidney preſent when you ſeized theſe Papers?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Are theſe ſome of thoſe Papers?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Yes, I verily believe it.

Mr. At. Gen. In the next place, I think we have ſome Papers of his particular Affairs which will prove his Hand. Call Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Cooke and Mr. Cary.

Mr. North. Sir Philip Lloyd, When were they ſeized?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Towards the latter end of June, my Lord.

Jury-man. Which June?

Sir Phil. Lloyd. Laſt June.

Mr. Sheppard ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you look upon thoſe Writings. (Shewing the Libel.) Are you acquainted with Col. Sidney's Hand?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, I believe ſo. I believe all theſe Sheets to be his Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. How come you to be acquainted with his Hand?

Mr. Sheppard. I have ſeen him write the Indorſement upon ſeveral Bills of Exchange.

Mr. Cary ſworn.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I deſire you would pleaſe to conſider this, That Similitude of Hands can be no Evidence.

L. C. J. Reſerve your ſelf till anon, and make all the advantageous Remarks you can.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you had any dealing with him?

Mr. Cary. I never ſaw him write, to my knowledge, more than once in my life, but I have ſeen his Indorſement upon Bills, and 'tis very like that.

L. C. J. Do you believe it is his Hand, as far as you can gueſs?

Mr. Cary. My Lord, It is like what came to me for his Hand-writing.

L. C. J. And you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Cary. Yes.

Mr. Cooke ſworn, and the Papers ſhewn him.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Cooke?

Mr. Cooke. My Lord, I did never ſee Col. Sidney write, but I have ſeen ſeveral Notes that have come to me with Indorſement of his Name, and we have paid them, and 'tis like to this.

L. C. J. And you were never called to account for Miſpayment?

Mr. Cooke. No, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. I pray it may be read. We will read as much as is neceſſary to prove the Indictment.

Col. Sidney. I pray it may be all read.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney muſt have what part he deſires read, and you ſhall have what part you will have read afterwards.

Col. Sidney. I deſire it may all be read.

Mr. At. Gen. Begin there. Secondly, There was no Abſurdity in this, becauſe it was their own Caſe.

Clerk reads.

Secondly, There was no Abſurdity in this, tho' it was their own Caſe; but to the contrary, becauſe it was their own Caſe; that is, concerning Themſelves only, and they had no Superior. They only were the competent Judges, they decided their Controverſies, as every Man in his own Family doth, ſuch as ariſe between Him and his Children, and his Servants. This Power hath no other Reſtriction, than what is put upon it by the municipal Law of the Country, where any Man, and that hath no other Force, than as he is underſtood to have conſented unto it. Thus in England every Man (in a degree) hath a Right of chaſtiſing them; and in many places (even by the Law of God) the Maſter hath a Power of Life and Death over his Servant: It were a moſt abſurd Folly, to ſay, that a Man might not put away, or in ſome places kill an Adulterous Wife, a Diſobedient Son, or an Unlawful Servant, becauſe he is Party and Judge, for the Caſe doth admit of no other, unleſs he hath abridged his own Right by entering into a Society where other Rules are agreed upon, and a ſuperior Judge conſtituted, there being none ſuch between King and People: That People muſt needs be the Judge of things happening between Them and Him whom they did not conſtitute, that they might be Great, Glorious, and Rich; but that they might judge them, and fight their Battles; or otherwiſe do good unto them as they ſhould direct. In this Senſe, he that is ſingulis Major, and ought to be obliged by every Man, in his juſt and lawful Commands, tending to the Publick Good: And muſt be ſuffered to do nothing againſt it, nor in any reſpect more than the Law doth allow.

For this Reaſon Bracton ſaith, that the King hath Three Superiors, to wit, Deum, Legem, & Parliament'; that is, the Power, Originally in the People of England, is delegated unto the Parliament. He is ſubject unto the Law of God as he is a Man, to the People that makes him a King, in as much as he is a King: The Law ſets a meaſure unto that Subjection, and the Parliament judges of the particular Caſes thereupon ariſing: He muſt be content to ſubmit his Intereſt unto Theirs, ſince he is no more than any one of them, in any other reſpect, than that He is, by the Conſent of all, raiſed above any other.

If he doth not like this Condition, he may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon that Condition, (as all Magiſtrates do the Power they receive) and ſwear to perform it, He muſt expect that the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by thoſe that he hath betrayed.

If this be not ſo, I deſire to know of our Author, how one or more Men can come to be guilty of Treaſon againſt the KING, As Lex facit facit ut ſit Rex. No Man can owe more unto him than unto any other; or he unto every other Man by any Rule but the Law; and if he muſt not be Judge in his own Caſe, neither he nor any other by Power received from him, would ever try any Man for an Offence againſt him, or the Law.

If the King, or ſuch as he appoints, cannot judge him, he cannot be judged by the ways ordinarily known amongſt us. If he, or other by Authority from him, may judge, he is Judge in his own Caſe, and we fall under that which he accounts the utmoſt of all Abſurdities: If a Remedy be found for this, he muſt ſay that the King in his own Caſe may judge the People, but the People muſt not judge the King, becauſe it is theirs; that is to ſay, the Servant entertained by the Maſter may judge him, but the Maſter muſt not judge the Servant, whom he took only for his own Uſe. The Magiſtrate is bound by no Oath or Contract to the People that created him, but the People is bound to its own Creature, the Magiſtrate.

This ſeems to be the ground of all our Author's Follies; he cannot comprehend that Magiſtrates are for or by the People, but makes this Concluſion, as if Nations were created by or for the Glory or Pleaſure of Magiſtrates, and affect ſuch a piece of Nonſenſe; it ought not to be thought ſtrange, if he repreſent, as an abſurd thing that the Headleſs Multitude may ſhake off the Yoke when they pleaſe. But I would know how the Multitude comes under the Yoke, it is a Badge of Slavery. He ſays, that the Power of Kings is for the Preſervation of Liberty and Property. We may therefore change or take away Kings without breaking any Yoke, or that made a Yoke which ought not to be one; the Injury is therefore in Making or Impoſing, and there can be none in breaking it.

That if there be not an Injury, there may perhaps be an Inconvenience; if the headleſs Multitude may ſhake off the Yoke, I know not why the Multitude ſhould be concluded to be headleſs; it is not always ſo. Moſes was Head of the Multitude that went out of Egypt, Othniel led them againſt the King of Meſopotamia, under the Conduct of Phœbidas; they obtain'd a Victory againſt the Moabites, they had the like Succeſs under Shamger, Barac, Gideon, Jeptha, Samuel, Sampſon, and others againſt the Canaanites, Midianites, Philiſtines and others; the Multitude that oppoſed Saul and Iſhboſheth had David for its Head; and the Ten Tribes that rejected Reoboam choſe unto themſelves Reoboam; the Athenians riſing againſt the Thirty Tyrants had Thraſybulus; thoſe that drave —— from Thebes were conducted by Pelopidas: When the Romans drave out the Tarquins, they choſe Brutus and Publicola, and they deſtroyed the Decemviri under Horatius and Valerius. All the Multitudes that afterwards revolted from them under Mauritius, Telerius, Spartanus and others, were not headleſs; and we know of none that were, but all either found Heads, or made them. The Germans ſet up Arminius; the Britains, and others in later Times, the Cartinians, that roſe againſt Peter the Cruel, had the Lord Detracta Mara.

The French, when they grew weary of the corrupted Races of Pharamond and Pepin, and the ſame Pepin and Hugh Capet: The Scots, when they ſlew James III, had his Son to be their Head; and when they depoſed and impriſoned Queen Mary, the Earl of Murray and others ſupplied the want of Age that was in her Son: And in all the Revolutions we have had in England, the People have been headed by the Parliament, or the Nobility and Gentry that compoſed it; and when the Kings failed of their Duties; by their own Authority called it. The Multitude therefore is not ever headleſs, but doth either find or create Heads unto it ſelf, as occaſion doth require; and whether it be one Man, or a few or more, for a ſhort or a longer time, we ſee nothing more regular than its Motions. But they may, ſaith our Author, ſhake off the Yoke; and why may they not, if it prove uneaſy or hurtful unto them? Why ſhould not the Iſraelites ſhake off the Yoke of Pharaoh, Jabin, Siſera, and others that oppreſſed them?

When Pride had changed Nebuchadnezzar into a Beaſt, what ſhould perſwade the Aſſyrians not to drive him out amongſt Beaſts, until God had reſtored unto him the Heart of a Man? When Tarquin had turned the Regal Monarchy of Rome into a moſt abominable Tyranny, why ſhould they not aboliſh it? And when the Proteſtants of the Low Countries were ſo grievouſly oppreſſed by the Power of Spain, under the proud, cruel and ſavage Conduct of the Duke of Alva, why ſhould they not make uſe of all the means that God had put into their Hands for their Deliverance? Let any Man who ſees the preſent State of the Provinces that then united themſelves, judge whether it is better for them to be as they are, or in the Condition unto which his Fury would have reduced them, unleſs they had, to pleaſe him, renounced God and their Religion: Our Author may ſay, they ought to have ſuffered: The King of Spain by their Reſiſtance loſt thoſe Countries; and that they ought not to have been Judges in their own Caſe. To which I anſwer, That by reſiſting they laid the Foundation of many Churches, that have produced multitudes of Men, eminent in Gifts and Graces; and eſtabliſhed a moſt glorious and happy Commonwealth, that hath been ſince its firſt beginning, the ſtrongeſt Pillar of the Proteſtant Cauſe now in the World, and a Place or Refuge unto thoſe who in all Parts of Europe have been oppreſſed for the Name of Chriſt: Whereas they had ſlaviſhly, and, I think I may ſay, wickedly as well as fooliſhly, ſuffered themſelves to be butchered, if they had left thoſe empty Provinces under the Power of Antichriſt, where the Name of God is no otherwiſe known than to be blaſphemed.

If the King of Spain deſired to keep his Subjects, he ſhould have governed them with more Juſtice and Mercy; when, contrary unto all Laws both Human and Divine, he ſeeks to deſtroy thoſe he ought to have preſerved, he can blame none but himſelf, if they deliver themſelves from his Tyranny: And when the Matter is brought to that, That he muſt not reign, or they over whom he would reign, muſt periſh; the Matter is eaſily decided, as if the queſtion had been asked in the Time of Nero or Domitian, Whether they ſhould be left at liberty to deſtroy the beſt part of the World, as they endeavoured to do, or it ſhould be reſcued by their Deſtruction? And as for the People's being Judges in their own Caſe, it is plain, they ought ought to be the only Judges, becauſe it is their own, and only concerns themſelves.

Mr. At. Gen. The latter end, the laſt Sheet of all, §. 35.

L. C. J. The Argument runs through the Book, fixing the Power in the People.

Cl. of Cr. The general Revolt of a Nation from its own Magiſtrates, can never be called Rebellion.

Mr. At. Gen. §. 37.

Cl. of Cr. The Power of calling and diſſolving Parliaments is not in the King.

Mr. At. Gen. So much we ſhall make uſe of; if the Colonel pleaſe to have any other part read to explain it, he may.

Then the Sheets were ſhewn to Col. Sidney.

Col. Sidney. I do not know what to make of it, I can read it.

L. C. J. Ay, no doubt of it, better than any Man here. Fix on any part you have a mind to have read.

Col. Sidney. I do not know what to ſay to it, to read it in pieces thus.

L. C. J. I perceive you have diſpoſed them under certain Heads: To what Heads will you have read?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, Let him give an account of it that did it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We will not delay Col. Sidney from entering on his Defence, only we have this piece of Evidence to give further. One of his Complices was my Lord Ruſſel, we will give in Evidence his Conviction. We will only ask my Lord Howard, Was your Lordſhip ſworn as a Witneſs at the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel?

Lord Howard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Whether or no, when you met, were there in thoſe Debates any Reflections upon the King, that he had broken his Duty?

Lord Howard. Not that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Why would you riſe?

Lord Howard. If you mean upon the Miſgovernment, not perſonally upon the King?

Mr. At. Gen. Ay.

Lord Howard. Yes, and principally and chiefly that, which we thought was the general Diſguſt of the Nation, the impoſing upon the City at that time.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That was complained of at that time?

Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord, We took it all along to be the chief Grievance.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. At. Gen. Only the Record.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know there is no time miſpent to make things clear. If the Jury have a mind to have the Words read again ——

L. C. J. If they have a mind, let it.

Then Mr. Trinder was ſworn, and teſtified it to be a true Copy of the Record, and ſaid he examined it at Fiſhmongers-hall with Mr. Tanner.

Then the Record of the Conviction of the Lord Ruſſel was read.

L. C. J. What will you go to next, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done, unleſs the Jury deſire to have the Words of the Libel read again. [But they did not.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I deſire to know upon what Statute I am indicted.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I will give as plain an Anſwer, You are Indicted upon the old Statute of 25 Edw. 3.

Col. Sidney. Then I deſire to know upon what Branch of that Statute?

Mr. At. Gen. Why, I will acquaint you, 'Tis upon the firſt Branch of that Statute, for Conſpiring and Compaſſing the Death of the King.

Col. Sidney. Then I conceive, what does not come within that, does not touch me.

Mr. At. Gen. Make what Inferences you pleaſe, Colonel, we will anſwer you.

Col. Sidney. I deſire to know what the Witneſſes have ſworn againſt me upon that point?

Mr. At. Gen. Go on, You have heard the Witneſſes as well as we.

L. C. J. He ſays, You are indicted upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. which Statute makes it High Treaſon to Conſpire the Death of the King, and the Overt Act is ſufficiently ſet forth in the Indictment; now the Queſtion is, whether 'tis proved?

Col. Sidney. They have proved a Paper found in my Study of Caligula and Nero, that is Compaſſing the Death of the King, is it?

L. C. J. That I ſhall tell the Jury. The Point in Law you are to take from the Court, Gentlemen: Whether there be Fact ſufficient, that is your Duty to conſider.

Col. Sidney. I ſay, my Lord, that ſince I am indicted upon that Statute, I am not to take notice of any other. I am indicted for Conſpiring the Death of the King, becauſe ſuch a Paper, is found in my Houſe; Under favour, I think that can be nothing at all to me. For tho' Sir Philip Lloyd did ask me, whether I would put my Seal to it, he did not ask me till he had been in my Cloſet, and I knew not what he had put in, and ſo I told him I would not do it. Then come theſe Gentlemen upon Similitude of Hands. My Lord, We know what Similitude of Hands is in this Age. One told me within theſe two days, that one came to him, and offered to counterfeit any Hand he ſhould ſhew him in half an hour. So then, my Lord, I have nothing to ſay to theſe Papers. Then for Point of Witneſs, I cannot be indicted, much leſs tryed or condemned on 25 Edw. 3. for by that Act there muſt be two Witneſſes to that very Branch unto which the Treaſon does relate, which muſt be diſtinguiſhed. For the Levying of War, and Conſpiring the Death of the King, are two diſtinct things, diſtinct in Nature and Reaſon, and ſo diſtinguiſhed in the Statute. And therefore the Conſpiring the Death of the King is Treaſon, and the other not. 1 Edw. 6. 12. 5 Edw. 6. 11. does expreſsly ſay, there muſt be two Witneſſes to either of theſe Acts. Now here is my Lord Howard, (I have enough to ſay of him by and by) 'Tis he only who ſpeaks of ſix Men, whom he calls a ſelect Council, and yet ſelected by no Man in the World. I deſire to know who ſelected my Lord Howard? Who ſelected me? If they were ſelected by no body, 'tis a Bull to ſay they were a ſelect Council. If they were not ſelected, but erected themſelves into a Cabal, then they have have either Confidence in one another, or find they are near equally able to aſſiſt in the Deſign. Here is nothing of all this, ——These ſix Men were Strangers to one another. For my own Part, I never ſpake with the Duke of Monmouth above three times in my life, and one time was when my Lord Howard brought him to my Houſe and cozened us both. He told the Duke I invited him, and he told me the Duke invited himſelf, and neither of them was true. Now that ſuch Men as theſe are, not hardly knowing one another, ſhould preſently fall into a great and intimate friendſhip, and truſt and management of ſuch a Buſineſs as this is, is a thing utterly improbable, unleſs they were mad. Now I do find in my Lord Howard's Depoſition againſt my Lord Ruſſel, that they were in Proſecution of my Lord Shaftsbury's Deſign; and yet he acknowledges the Duke of Monmouth ſaid he was mad, and he himſelf ſaid ſo too. Now that they ſhould join with four more in the Proſecution of the Deſign of a mad Man, they muſt be mad too. Now whether my Lord Howard would have you think he was mad, becauſe a mad Man cannot be guilty of Treaſon, I cannot tell. My Lord Howard in his laſt Depoſition at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, fixes the two Meetings, one about the middle of January, the other ten Days after: Now he fixes one to be the latter end of January, the other the middle of February. Then he makes it to be the Proſecution of my Lord Shaftsbury's Deſign. I do not find that any one there had any thing to do with my Lord Shaftsbury, for my Part I had not. I had not ſeen his Face in two Years. Then, my Lord, that I go upon is, whatever my Lord Howard is, he is but one Witneſs. The Law of God, and the Law of Man, underſtood and taken by all Men, does require two Witneſſes; Moſes ſays ſo, ſo the Apoſtles the ſame after him, and Chriſt ſays the ſame, That every Matter is to be eſtabliſhed by two Witneſſes. There ought to be two Witneſſes to the ſame Thing. Now for one to come and tell a Tale of a Tub, of an imaginary Council, and another of a Libel, a Paper written no body knows when, is ſuch a Thing, you can never go over it. But if the Law of God be, that there muſt be two Witneſſes to the ſame Fact, there is an end of this Matter. And under the Judicial Law, the Penalty would be in this Caſe, to put a Man to death. Now here there are but two Things, which if allowed of, no body will be ſafe for Perjury. The one is to ſuffer Men to give their Teſtimony, one to one thing, and another to another, that the Fraud cannot be diſcovered; and the other is to take away the Puniſhment. Now the Puniſhment is taken away in ſome meaſure: And do but take away the other Point, whereby the Fraud cannot be diſcovered; and then there is no Defence can be made. That both Witneſſes ſhould be to the ſame Point; ſee the Story of Suſanna. Two Elders teſtified they ſaw her in the Act of Adultery: They were carrying of her to death; both of them ſaid the ſame thing; until they were taken aſunder and examined, the Fraud was not diſcovered; and then one ſaid, ſhe was under a Tree of the right hand, and the other, under the Tree on the left; and ſhe eſcaped, and they were puniſhed. But now if you apply it to ſeveral Facts, my Lord Howard may ſay what he pleaſes, and if another ſhall come with a ſupplemental Proof, no Juſtice can be had. But, my Lord, I deſire this, If there be two Witneſſes to prove the Conſpiracy, and in that there were thoſe Matters done that are Treaſon, I muſt anſwer to it; but if there be not, I preſume, I need ſay nothing to it. If you do not allow it me, I deſire Counſel to argue it.

L. C. J. That is a Point of Fact, Whether there be two Witneſſes? I tell you before-hand, one Witneſs is not ſufficient.

Col. Sidney. Why then there is my Lord Howard, and never another.

L. C. J. Nay, do not make thoſe Inferences; I will tell the Jury, if there be not two Witneſſes as the Law requires in this Caſe, they ought to acquit you.

Col. Sidney. You confound me, I cannot ſtir. You talk of a Conſpiracy; What is a Conſpiracy to kill the King? Is there any more Witneſſes than one for Levying of War?

L. C. J. Pray do not deceive your ſelf; You muſt not think the Court and you intend to enter into a Dialogue. Anſwer to the Fact; if there be not ſufficient Fact, the Jury will acquit you. Make what Anſwer you can to it.

Col. Sidney. Then I ſay, There being but one Witneſs, I am not to anſwer to it at all.

L. C. J. If you rely upon that, we will direct the Jury preſently.

Col. Sidney. Then for Levying War, what does any one ſay? My Lord Howard, let him if he pleaſe, reconcile what he hath ſaid now, with what he ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal. There he ſaid, he ſaid all he could; and now he has got I do not know how many Things that were never ſpoken of there. I appeal to the Court, whether he did then ſpeak one Word of that, that he now ſays of Mr. Hambden. He ſets forth his Evidence very Rhetorically, but it does not become a Witneſs, for he is only to tell what is done and ſaid, but he does not tell what was done and ſaid. He ſays, they took upon them to conſider, but does not ſay what one Man ſaid, or what one Man reſolved, much leſs what I did. My Lord, If theſe Things are not to be diſtinguiſhed, but ſhall be jumbled all up together, I confeſs I do not know what to ſay.

L. C. J. Take what liberty you pleaſe. If you will make no Defence, then we will direct the Jury preſently. We will direct them in the Law, and recollect Matter of Fact as well as we can.

Col. Sidney. Why then my Lord, I deſire the Law may be reſerved to me, I deſire I may have Counſel to that Point of there being but one Witneſs.

L. C. J. That is a Point of Fact. If you can give any Teſtimony to diſparage the Witneſs, do it.

Col. Sidney. I have a great deal to that.

L. C. J. Go on to it then.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, was there a War levied? Or was it prevented? Why then, if it be prevented, 'tis not levied; if it be not levied, 'tis not within the Statute; ſo this is nothing to me.

L. C. J. The Court will have Patience to hear you; but at the ſame time I think it is my Duty to advertiſe you, That this is but miſpend-ing

ing of your Time. If you can anſwer the Fact, or if you have any Mind to put any Diſparagement upon the Witneſſes, that they are not Perſons to be believed, do it, but do not ask us Queſtions this way or t'other.

Col. Sidney. I have this to ſay concerning my Lord Howard: He hath accuſed himſelf of divers Treaſons, and I do not hear that he has his Pardon of any: He is under the Terror of thoſe Treaſons, and the Puniſhment for them: He hath ſhewn himſelf to be under that Terror: He hath ſaid, That he could not get his Pardon, until he had done ſome other Jobbs, till he was paſt this Drudgery of Swearing: That is, my Lord, that he having incurred the Penalty of High-Treaſon, he would get his own Indempnity by deſtroying others. This by the Law of God and Man, I think, deſtroys a Man's Teſtimony. Beſides, my Lord, he is my Debter, he owes me a conſiderable Sum of Money I lent him in time of his great Neceſſity; he made ſome Covenants with me for the Payment of that Money, which he hath broken; and when his Mortgage was forfeited, and I ſhould take the Advantage the Law gives me, he finds out a way to have me laid up in the Tower: He is a very ſubtle Man: At my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, he carried his Knife, he ſaid, between the Paring and the Apple; and ſo this is a Point of great nicety and cunning, at one time to get his own Pardon, and at the ſame time to ſave his Money. Another thing, my Lord, is, when I was Priſoner, he comes to my Houſe, and ſpeaks with my Servant, and ſays, how ſorry he was that I ſhould be brought in Danger upon this Account of the Plot, and there he did in the Preſence of God, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, ſwear he did not believe any Plot, and that it was but a Sham; and that he was confident if I had known any thing, I would have told it him. He hath ſaid ſomewhat of this before, I have ſeveral Witneſſes to prove both. He was deſirous to go further, and he would not only pay my Debt by his Teſtimony againſt me, but he would have got my Plate and other Goods in my Hands into his Hands, and he deſired my Men, as a Place of Truſt, to put them into his Hands. And the next News was, that there was a Warrant againſt my Lord Ruſſel and me. But then, my Lord, he made other Affirmations in the ſame Preſence of God, that I was innocent in his Opinion, and he was confident of it; for if he had known any thing of it, he would have told it. Now I know, in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, there was Dr. Burnet ſaid ſomething like it. And when he came to anſwer it, he ſaid he was to face it out, and make the beſt of it he could. Now he did face it out bravely againſt God, but he was very timorous of Man. So that my Lord, he does ſay at the ſame time, at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, upon his Oath, That he did believe that the Religious Obligation of an Oath, did not conſiſt in the formality of applying it to the Place, &c. but in calling God to witneſs. So that when he did call God to witneſs before Doctor Burnet and my Servant, and others, and this is not conſiſtent with the Oath he has taken here, as the Gentleman ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, unleſs he has one Soul in Court, and had another at my Houſe, theſe Things are inconſiſtent, and cannot be true; and if he ſwear both under the Religion of an Oath, he ſwears himſelf perjured. Then my Lord, he talks of Aaron Smith, What have I to do with Aaron Smith? He ſays, I ſent him; my Lord, there is no body elſe ſpeaks a Word of it. Then by a ſtrange kind of Conſtruction and Imagination, they will have it, that ſome Papers here, which are ſaid to be found in my Study, have relation to this Plot, as they call it; I know of none, nor am in none. Now, my Lord, I am not to give an account of theſe Papers, I do not think they are before you, for there is nothing but the ſimilitude of Hands offered for Proof. There is the like Caſe of my Lady Carr ſome few Years ago: She was indicted of Perjury, and as Evidence againſt her, ſome Letters of hers were produced, that were contrary to what ſhe ſwore in Chancery, and her Hand was proved; that is to ſay, it was like it: But my Lord Chief Juſtice Keiling directs the Jury, that though in Civil Cauſes it is a Proof, yet it is the ſmalleſt and leaſt of Proofs; but in Criminal Caſes it was none at all. So that my Lord Howard's Teſtimony is ſingle; and what he talks of thoſe two Buſineſſes that he calls a Conſult, and Aaron Smith, is deſtroyed by want of Proof. What could ſix Men do? Can my Lord Howard raiſe five Men by his Credit? By his Purſe? Let him ſay as much for me, with all my Heart; for my Part I do not know where to raiſe five Men. That ſuch Men as we are, that have no Followers, ſhould undertake ſo vaſt a Deſign, is very unlikely: And this great Deſign that was carried on thus, it had neither Officers nor Soldiers, no Place, no Time, no Money for it. That which he ſaid laſt time, which he forgot now, he talked of twenty five, or thirty thouſand Pound, but no Man knew where it was to be had, but laſt time he ſaid, it was ſpoken in jeſt. Now this is a pretty Cabal, that ſix Men ſhould meet about a Buſineſs, and they neglect every one of the Points relating to the Thing they met about, make no ſtep about the Buſineſs, and if any one did ſpeak of it, it was but in jeſt. This is a very deep maintaining of the Plot. Then my Lord, as to theſe Papers, I do not think, I am to give any Account of them, I would ſay nothing to the diſparagement of Sir Philip Lloyd, I never ſaw him till he came to my Houſe, but yet I ſay he is the King's Officer, and when I am proſecuted at the King's Suit, I think he ought to be no Witneſs. The Government of France is violent and abſolute, but yet a few Years ago, a Miniſter of State had his Papers taken from him, and abundance of them had dangerous Plots againſt the King in them; but becauſe they were inventoried in his Officers preſence, or thoſe deputed by him, there was no uſe could be made of them, it was an irreparable Fault in the Proceſs, and that ſaved him. The ſimilitude of Hands is nothing: We know that Hands will be counterfeited, ſo that no Man ſhall know his own Hand. A Gentleman that is now dead, told me, that my Lord Arlington about five Years ago, deſired him to write a Letter, and ſeal it as well as he could; he writ it with care, and ſealed it with a Wafer and Wax upon it, and within a few Days, my Lord Arlington brought him five Letters, and he did not know which was his own. The Attorney ſhews theſe Papers to me, I do not know whether they are my own or no; but theſe very Papers, ſuch as they are, do abhor as much as any one can, ſuch a Deſign. Look upon them, you ſee they are all old Ink. Theſe Papers may be writ perhaps, these twenty Years, the Ink is so old. But my Lord, it is a polemical Discourse, it seems to be an Answer to Filmar, which is not calculated for any particular Government in the World: It goes only upon these general Principles, That according to the universal Law of God and Nature, there is but one Government in the World, and that is Intire and Absolute; and that the King can be bound by no Law, by no Oath, but he may make all Laws, and abolish them as he pleases: And this whether of Age or no, a Man, or a Child of Sense, or out of his Sense. Now, my Lord, what if any Man in his Cabinet should have written this Book? Then he has another Principle, he says, 'Tis the same thing whether a King come in by Election, by Donation, by Inheritance, or Usurpation, or any other way; than which, I think, never was a thing more desperately said. Cromwell, when one White a Priest wrote a Book, wherein he undertook to prove, That Possession was the only Right to Power, though he was a Tyrant, and a violent one, (you need not wonder I call him Tyrant, I did so every Day in his Life, and acted against him too) it would be so odious a Principle, he would not endure it, and he used him very slightly for it. Now this Filmar, that no Man must write against, is the Man that does assert it, That 'tis no matter how they come by their Power, and gives the same Power to the worst Usurpers, as they that most righly come to the Crown. By the same Argument, if the erranteſt Rascal of Israel had killed Moses, David, &c. and seized upon the Power, he had been possessed of that Power, and been Father of the People. If this be Doctrine, my Lord, that is just and good, then I confess it may be dangerous for any thing to be found in a Man's House contrary to it; but if a Commoner of England write his present Thoughts, and another Man looking on his Book writes his present Thoughts of it, what great hurt is there in it? And I ask Mr. Attorney how many Years ago that was written?

L. C. J. I don't know what the Book was in answer to. We are not to speak of any Book that Sir Robert Filmar wrote, but you are to make your Defence, touching a Book that was found in your Study, and spend not your time, and the Court's time, in that which serves to no other Purpose, than to gratify a luxuriant way of Talking that you have. We have nothing to do with his Book, you had as good tell me again, That there was a parcel of People rambling about, pretending to my Lord Russel's Ghost, and so we may answer all the Comedies in England. Answer to the Matter you are indicted for. Do you own that Paper?

Col. Sidney. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Go on then, it does not become us to be impatient to hear you, but we ought to advertise you, that you spend not your time to no Purpose, and do your self an Injury.

Col. Sidney. I say first, 'tis not proved upon me: And secondly, 'Tis not a Crime if it be proved ——

L. C. J. You began very materially in one Thing; it is material for you to apply your self to take off the Credibility of my Lord Howard that is a Witness; call your Witnesses to that purpose, or if you have any other Point to take away the Credibility of any other Witness.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I have seven or eight Points of Law.

L. C. J. I hear not one yet.

Col. Sidney. Why, my Lord, Conspiring to levy War is not Treason, and I desire to have Counsel upon that.

L. C. J. 'Tis not a Question. You had as good ask me, whether the first Chapter in Littleton be Law?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I have neither made War, nor conspir'd to levy War.

L. C. J. You are still in a Mistake, you shall not think that we intend to dialogue with you, to let you know how far the Proof hath been given or not given, but when we come to direct the Jury, then we shall observe how far the Law requires there should be two Witnesses. But whether there be such a Proof, that must be left to the Jury.

Mr. Just. Withens. If you agree the Conspiracy, I will tell you my mind of it; I cannot give you my Opinion in Law, till the Fact be stated.

L. C. J. The Law always arises upon a Point of Fact; there can be no doubt in Point of Law, till there be a settlement in Point of Fact.

Mr. Just. Holloway. My Lord has put you in a right way: The Conspiracy is proved but by one Witness, if you have any thing to take off his Credibility, 'tis to the purpose.

Col. Sidney. Truly, my Lord, I do as little intend to mis-spend my own Spirit, and your Time, as ever any Man that came before you. Now, my Lord, if you will make a Concatenation of one thing, a Supposition upon Supposition, I would take all this asunder, and shew, if none of these Things are any thing in themselves, there can be nothing joined together.

L. C. J. Take your own Method, Mr. Sidney; but I say, if you are a Man of low Spirits and weak Body, 'tis a Duty incumbent upon the Court, to exhort you not to spend your time upon Things that are not material.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I think 'tis very material, that a whimsical imagination of a Conspiracy, should not pass for a real Conspiracy of the Death of the King; besides, if these Papers were found in my House, 'tis a Crime created since my Imprisonment, and that cannot come in, for they were found since. My Lord, if these Papers are right, it mentions 200 and odd Sheets, and these show neither Beginning nor Ending; and will you my Lord, indict a Man for Treason for scraps of Paper found in his House, relating to an ancient Paper, intended as innocently as any thing in the World, and piece and patch this to my Lord Howard's Discourse, to make this a Contrivance to kill the King? Then my Lord, I think 'tis a Right of Mankind, and 'tis exercised by all studious Men, that they write in their own Closets what they please for their own Memory, and no Man can be answerable for it, unless they publish it.

L. C. J. Pray don't go away with that right of Mankind, that it is lawful for me to write what I will in my own Closet, unless I publish it; I have been told, Curse not the King, not in thy Thoughts, not in thy Bed-Chamber, the Birds of the Air will carry it. I took it to be the Duty of Mankind, to observe that.

Col. Sidney. I have lived under the Inquisition ——

L. C. J. God be thanked we are governed by Law.

Col. Sid-

Col. Sidney. I have lived under the Inquiſition, and there is no Man in Spain can be tried for Hereſy——

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Draw no Preſidents from the Inquiſition, here, I beſeech you, Sir.

L. C. J. We muſt not endure Men to talk, that by the right of Nature every Man may contrive Miſchief in his own Chamber, and he is not to be puniſhed, till he thinks fit to be called to it.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, if you will take Scripture by pieces, you will make all the Penmen of the Scripture blaſphemous; you may accuſe David of ſaying, There is no God; and accuſe the Evangeliſts of ſaying, Chriſt was a Blaſphemer and a Seducer; and the Apoſtles, That they were drunk.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Sidney, if there be any Part of it that explains the Senſe of it, you ſhall have it read; indeed we are trifled with a little. 'Tis true, in Scripture 'tis ſaid, there is no God, and you muſt not take that alone, but you muſt ſay, the Fool hath ſaid in his Heart, there is no God. Now here is a thing imputed to you in the Libel; if you can ſay, there is any Part that is in excuſe of it, call for it. As for the Purpoſe, whoever does publiſh, that the King may be put in Chains or depoſed, is a Traytor; but whoſoever ſays, that none but Traytors would put the King in Chains, or depoſe him, is an honeſt Man; therefore apply ad idem, but don't let us make Excurſions.

Col. Sidney. If they will produce the whole, my Lord, then I can ſee whether one Part contradicts another.

L. C. J. Well, if you have any Witneſſes call them.

Col. Sidney. The Earl of Angleſey.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name, ſtay till to Morrow in Things that are pertinent.

Col. Sidney. I deſire to know of my Lord Angleſey, what my Lord Howard ſaid to him concerning the Plot that was broken out.

Lord Angleſey. Concerning this Plot you are now queſtioned for?

Col. Sidney. The Plot for which my Lord Ruſſel and I was in Priſon.

Lord Angleſey. The Queſtion I am asked, is, What my Lord Howard ſaid before the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel, concerning the Plot; I ſuppoſe, this goes as a Branch of that he was accuſed for. I was then in the Countrey, when the Buſineſs was on foot, and uſed to come to Town a Day or two in the Week, living near in Hertfordſhire, and I underſtanding the Affliction my Lord of Bedford was in, I went to give my Lord a Viſit, we having been Acquaintance of above fifty Years ſtanding, and bred together in Maudlin Colledge in Oxford. When I came to my Lord of Bedford, and had adminiſtred that Comfort that was fit for one Chriſtian to give another in that Diſtreſs, I was ready to leave him, and my Lord Howard came in. It was upon the Friday before my Lord Howard was taken, he was taken (as I take it) upon Sunday or Munday, my Lord Howard fell into the ſame Chriſtian Office that I had been juſt diſcharging, to compaſſionate my Lord's Affliction, to uſe Arguments to comfort and ſupport him under it, and told him, he was not to be troubled, for he had a diſcreet, a wiſe, and a vertuous Son, and he could not be in any ſuch Plot (I think that was the Word he uſed at firſt, though he gave another name to it afterward) and his Lordſhip might therefore well expect a good Iſſue of that Buſineſs, and he might believe his Son ſecure, for he believed he was neither guilty, nor ſo much as to be ſuſpected. My Lord proceeded further, and did ſay, that he knew of no ſuch barbarous Deſign (I think he called it ſo in the ſecond Place) and could not charge my Lord Ruſſel with it, nor any body elſe. This was the effect of what my Lord Howard ſaid at that Time, and I have nothing to ſay of my own Knowledge more than this; but to obſerve that I was preſent when the Jury did put my Lord Howard particularly to it; what have you to ſay to what my Lord Angleſey teſtifies againſt you? My Lord, I think, did in three ſeveral Places give a ſhort Account of himſelf, and ſaid it was very true, and gave them ſome further account why he ſaid it, and ſaid, he ſhould be very glad it might have been advantageous to my Lord Ruſſel.

Col. Sidney. My Lord of Clare, I deſire to know of my Lord of Clare, what my Lord Howard ſaid concerning this Plot and me.

Lord Clare. My Lord, A little after Colonel Sidney was taken, ſpeaking of the Times, he ſaid, That if ever he was queſtion'd again, he would never plead, the quickeſt diſpatch was the beſt, he was ſure they would have his Life, though he was never ſo innocent, and diſcourſing of the late Primate of Armagh's Prophecy; for my Part, ſays he, I think the Perſecution is begun, and I believe it will be very ſharp, but I hope it will be ſhort, and I ſaid, I hoped ſo too.

Mr. At. Gen. What anſwer did your Lordſhip give to it?

Lord Clare. I have told you what I know, my Lord is too full of Diſcourſe for me to anſwer all he ſays; but for Colonel Sidney, he did with great Aſſeverations aſſert, that he was as innocent as any Man breathing, and uſed great Encomiums in his Praiſe, and then he ſeemed to bemoan his Misfortune, which I thought real; for never was any Man more ingaged to another, than he was to Colonel Sidney, I believe. Then I told, they talked of Papers that were found, I am ſure, ſays he, they can make nothing of any Papers of his.

Mr. At. Gen. When was this?

Lord Clare. This was at my Houſe the beginning of July.

Mr. At. Gen. How long before my Lord Howard was taken?

Lord Clare. About a Week before.

Mr. At. Gen. I would ask you, my Lord, upon your Honour, would not any Man have ſaid as much, that had been in the Plot?

Lord Clare. I can't tell, I know of no Plot.

Col. Sidney. Mr. Philip Howard.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What do you ask him?

Col. Sidney. What you heard my Lord Howard ſay concerning this pretended Plot, or my being in it?

Mr. Phil. Howard. My Lord, when the Plot firſt brake out, I uſed to meet my Lord Howard very often at my Brother's Houſe, and coming one Day from Whiteball, he asked me, what News? I told him, my Lord, ſays I, there are abundance of People that have confeſſed the horrid Deſign of murthering the King, and the Duke. How, ſays he, is ſuch a thing poſſible? Says I, 'tis ſo, they have all confeſſed it. Says he, do you know any of their Names? Yes, ſays I, I have heard their Names. What are their Names? Says he, why; says I, Col. Rumsey, and Mr. West, and one Walcot and others, that are in the Proclamation (I can't tell whether Walcot was in Hold) says he, 'tis impossible such a thing can be; says he, there are in all Countries People that wish ill to the Government, and, says he, I believe there are some here; but, says he, for any Man of Honour, Interest or Estate to go about it, is wholly impossible. Says I, my Lord, so it is, and I believe it. Says I, my Lord, do you know any of these People? No, says he, none of them; only one day, says he, passing thro' the Exchange, a Man saluted me, with a Blemish upon his Eye, and he embraced me, and wished me all Happiness; says he, I could not call to mind who this Man was; but afterwards, I recollected my self that I met him at my Lord Shaftsbury's, and heard afterwards, and concluded his Name to be —— his at whose House the King was to be assassinated ——

Mr. At. Gen. Rumbold?

Mr. Howard. Ay, Rumbold. My Lord, May I ask if my Lord Howard be here?

L. C. J. He is there behind you.

Mr. Howard. Then he will hear me. My Lord, says I, what does your Lordship think of this Business? Says he, I am in a Maze; says I, if you will be ruled by me, you have a good opportunity to address to the King, and all the discontented Lords, as they are called; and to shew your Detestation and Abhorrence of this thing; for, says I, this will be a good means to reconcile all things. Says he, you have put one of the best Notions in my Head that ever was put. Says I, You are a very good Pen-man, draw up the first Address (and I believe I was the first that mentioned an Address, you have had many an one since, God send them good Success) Says he, I am sorry my Lord of Essex is out of Town, he should present it. But, says I, here is my Lord Russel, my Lord of Bedford, my Lord of Clare, all of you that are disaffected, and so accounted, go about this Business, and make the Nation happy, and King happy. Says he, Will you stay till I come back? Ay, says I, if you will come in any time; but he never came back while I was there. The next Day, I think, my Lord Russel was taken, and I came and found him at my Brother's House again (for there he was Day and Night) says he, Cousin, What News? Says I, my Lord Russel is sent to the Tower. We are all undone then, says he. Pray, says he, go to my Lord Privy-Seal, and see if you can find I am to be taken up; says he, I doubt 'tis a Sham-Plot, if it was a true Plot, I should fear nothing; says I, What do you put me to go to my Lord Privy-Seal for? He is one of the King's Cabinet Council, do you think he will tell me? I won't go; but, says I, if you are not guilty, why would you have me go to inquire? Why, says he, because I fear 'tis not a true Plot, but a Plot made upon us, and therefore, says he, there is no Man free. My Lord, I can say no more as to that time, (and there is no Man that sits here, that wishes the King better than I do.) The next thing I come to, is this, I came the third Day, and he was mighty sad and melancholy, that was when Col. Sidney was taken; says I, Why are you melancholy, because Col. Sidney is taken? Says I, Col. Sidney was a Man talked of before, why were you not troubled for my Lord Russel, that is of your Blood? Says he, I have that particular Obligation from Col. Sidney, that no one Man had from another. I have one thing to say farther, I pray I may be rightly understood in what I have said.

L. C. J. What, you would have us undertake for all the People that hear you? I think you have spoken very materially, and I will observe it by and by to the Jury.

Col. Sidney. Pray call Dr. Burnet.

Mr. Just Walcot. What do you ask Dr. Burnet?

Col. Sidney. I have only to ask Dr. Burnet, whether after the News of this pretended Plot, my Lord Howard came to him? And what he said to him?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, the Day after this Plot brake out, my Lord Howard came to see me, and upon some Discourse of the Plot, with Hands and Eyes lifted up to Heaven, he protested he knew nothing of any Plot, and believed nothing of it, and said, that he looked upon it as a ridiculous thing.

My Lord Paget was sent for at the Prisoner's Request, being in the Hall.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire Joseph Ducas may be called, (who appeared, being a Frenchman.)

Col. Sidney. I desire to know, whether he was not in my House when my Lord Howard came thither, a little after I was made a Prisoner, and what he said upon it?

Ducas. Yes, my Lord, my Lord Howard came the day after the Colonel Sidney was taken, and he asked me, where was the Colonel Sidney? And I said, he was taken by an Order of the King; and he said, oh Lord! what is that for? I said, They have taken Papers; he said, Are some Papers left? Yes. Have they taken something more? No, well you must take all the things out of the House, and carry them to some you can trust: I dare trust no body, says he; I will lend my Coach and Coach man I said, if the Colonel Sidney will save his Goods; he save them, if not, 'tis no matter. A little after the Lord Howard came in the House of Col. Sidney about eleven a Clock at Night. When he was in, I told him, What is this? They talk of a Plot to kill the King and the Duke, and I told him, they spake of one general Insurrection; and I told him more, that I understood that Col. Sidney was sent into Scotland: When my Lord Howard understood that, he said, God knows, I know nothing of this, and I am sure if the Colonel Sidney was concerned in the matter, he would tell me something, but I know nothing. Well, my Lord, I told him, I believe you are not safe in this House, there is more Danger here than in another place. Says he, I have been a Prisoner, and I had rather do any thing in the World than be a Prisoner again.

Then my Lord Paget came into the Court.

Col. Sidney. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to tell the Court, if my Lord Howard has said any thing to you concerning this late pretended Plot, or my being any Party in it.

Lord Paget. My Lord, I was subpœna'd to come hither, and did not know upon what account, I am obliged to say, my Lord Howard

was

was with me presently after the breaking out of this Plot, and before his appearing in that Part which he now acts, he came to me; and I told him, That I was glad to see him abroad, and that he was not concerned in this Disorder. He said, he had Joy from several concerning it, and he took it as an Injury to him, for that it looked as if he were Guilty. He said, he knew nothing of himself, nor any body else. And tho' he was free in Discourse, and free to go into any Company indifferently; yet he said, he had not seen any body that could say any thing of him, or give him occasion to say any thing of any body else.

Col. Sidney. Mr. Edward Howard.

Mr. Ed. Howard. Mr. Sidney, What have you to say to me?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I desire you would ask Mr. Ed. Howard the same thing, what Discourse he had with my Lord Howard about this Plot?

L. C. J. Mr. Howard, Mr. Sidney desires you to tell what Discourse you had with my Lord Howard about this Plot.

Mr. Ed. Howard. My Lord, I have been for some time very intimate with my Lord, not only upon the account of our Alliance, but upon a strict Intimacy and Correspondence of Friendship, and I think I was as much his as he could expect from that Alliance. I did move him during this time, to serve the King upon the most honourable account I could, but that proved ineffectual: I pass that, and come to the Business here. Assoon as the Plot brake out, my Lord having a great Intimacy with me, expressed a great Detestation and Surprizing in himself to hear of it, wherein my Lord Howard assured me under very great Asseverations, that he could neither accuse himself, nor no Man living. He told me moreover, That there were certain Persons of Quality, whom he was very much concerned for, that they should be so much reflected upon or troubled, and he condoled very much their Condition both before and after they were taken. My Lord, I believe in my Conscience, he did this without any Mental Reservation, or Equivocation, for he had no reason to do it with me. I add moreover, if I have any sense of my Lord's Disposition, I think if he had known any such thing, he would not have stood his being taken, or made his Application to the King in this manner, I am afraid not so suitable to his Quality.

L. C. J. No Reflections upon any body.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I reflect upon no body, I understand where I am, and have a Respect for the Place; but since your Lordship has given me this occasion, I must needs say, That that Reproof that was accidentally given me at the Tryal of my Lord Russel, by reason of a weak Memory, made me omit some Particulars I will speak now, which are these, and I think they are material: My Lord, upon the Discourse of this Plot, did further assure me, that it was certainly a Sham, even to his Knowledge; how, my Lord, says I, do you mean a Sham? Why, says he, such an one, Cousin, as is too black for any Minister of publick Employment to have devised, but, says he, it was forged by People in the dark, such as Jesuits and Papists, and, says he, this is my Conscience; says I, my Lord, if you are sure of this thing, then pray, my Lord, do that honourable thing that becomes your Quality, that is, give the King satisfaction as becomes you; pray make an Address under your Hand to the King, whereby you express your Detestation and Abhorrence of this thing; says he, I thank you for your Counsel; to what Minister, says he, shall I apply my self? I pitched upon my Lord Hallifax, and I told him of my Lord's Desire, and I remember my Lord Howard named the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Bedford, the Earl of Clare, and he said he was sure they would do it; that he was sure of their Innocence, and would be glad of the Occasion: And I went to my Lord Hallifax, and told him that my Lord was willing to set it under his Hand, his Detestation of this Plot, and that there was no such thing to his Knowledge. My Lord Hallifax very worthily received me; says he, I will introduce it; but my Lord Russel being taken, this was laid aside, and my Lord gave this Reason. For, says he, there will be so many People taken, they will be hinder'd. I must needs add from my Conscience, and from my Heart before God and Man, that if my Lord had spoken before the King, sitting upon his Throne, abating for the Solemnity of the Presence I could not have more believed him, from that Assurance he had in me. And I am sure from what I have said, if I had the Honour to be of this Gentleman's Jury I would not believe him.

L. C. J. That must not be suffered.

Mr. At. Gen. You ought to be bound to your good Behaviour for that.

L. C. J. The Jury are bound by their Oaths to go according to their Evidence, they are not to go by Men's Conjectures.

Mr. Howard. May I go, my Lord?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Howard desires he may stay, we shall make use of him.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I spake of a Mortgage that I had of my Lord Howard, I don't know whether it is needful to be proved; but it is so.

Lord Howard. I confess it.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, here is the other Point, He is under the Fear, that he dare not but say what he thinks will conduce towards the gaining his Pardon; and that he hath expressed, that he could not have his Pardon, but he must first do this drudgery of Swearing. I need not say, that his Son should say, That he was sorry his Father could not get his Pardon unless he did swear against some others.

Col. Sidney. Call Mr. Blake. (Who appeared.) My Lord, I desire he may be asked, whether my Lord Howard did not tell him that he could not get his Pardon yet, and he could ascribe it to nothing, but that the drudgery of Swearing must be over first.

Then my Lord Chief Justice asked the Question.

Mr. Blake. My Lord, I am very sorry I should be called to give a publick Account of a private Conversation, how it comes about I don't know. My Lord sent for me about six Weeks ago, to come and see him. I went, and we talked of News, I told him I heard no body had their Pardon, but he that first discovered the Plot; he told me, no; but he had his Warrant for it. And, says he, I have their Word and Honour for it; but, says he, I will do nothing thing in it till I have further Order, and, ſays he, I hear nothing of it, and I can aſcribe it to no other Reaſon, but I muſt not have my Pardon till the drudgery of Swearing is over. Theſe Words my Lord ſaid, I believe my Lord won't deny it.

Then Col. Sidney called Mr. Hunt and Burroughs, but they did not appear.

Col. Sidney. 'Tis a hard Caſe they don't appear, One of them was to prove that my Lord Howard ſaid he could not have his Pardon till he had done ſome other Jobs.

L. C. J. I can't help it, If you had come for Aſſiſtance from the Court, I would willingly have done what I could.

Then Col. Sidney mentioned the Duke of Buckingham, but he was informed he was not ſubpœna'd.

Col. Sidney. Call Grace Tracy and Elizabeth Penwick. (Who appeared.) I ask you only, what my Lord Howard ſaid to you at my Houſe concerning the Plot, and my being in it?

Tracy. Sir, He ſaid, that he knew nothing of a Plot he proteſted, and he was ſure Col. Sidney knew nothing of it. And he ſaid, If you knew any thing of it, he muſt needs know of it, for he knew as much of your Concerns as any one in the World.

Col. Sidney. Did he take God to Witneſs upon it?

Tracy. Yes.

Col. Sidney. Did he deſire my Plate at my Houſe?

Tracy. I can't tell that, he ſaid the Goods might be ſent to his Houſe.

Col. Sidney. Penwick, What did my Lord Howard ſay in your Hearing concerning the pretended Plot, or my Plate carrying away?

Penwick. When he came, he asked for your Honour; and they ſaid your Honour was taken away by a Man to the Tower for the Plot, and then he took God to Witneſs he knew nothing of it, and believed your Honour did not neither. He ſaid, he was in the Tower two Years ago, and your Honour, he believed, ſaved his Life.

Col. Sidney. Did he deſire the Plate?

Penwick. Yes, and ſaid it ſhould be ſent to his Houſe to be ſecured. He ſaid it was only Malice.

Mr. Wharton ſtood up.

Mr. Wharton. 'Tis only this I have to ſay, That if your Lordſhip pleaſes to ſhew me any of theſe Sheets of Paper, I will undertake to imitate them in a little time that you ſhan't know which is which. 'Tis the eaſieſt Hand that ever I ſaw in my Life.

Mr. At. Gen. You did not write theſe, Mr. Wharton?

Mr. Wharton. No; but I will do this in a very little time, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes?

Col. Sidney. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then apply your ſelf to the Jury.

Col. Sidney. Then this is that I have to ſay. Here is a huge Complication of Crimes laid to my Charge: I did not know at firſt under what Statute they were, now I find 'tis the Statute of 25 of Edw. 3. This Statute hath two Branches; one relating to War, the other to the Perſon of the King. That relating to the Perſon of the King, makes the Conſpiring, Imagining, and Compaſſing his Death, criminal. That concerning War is not, unleſs it be Levied: Now, my Lord, I cannot imagine to which of theſe they refer my Crime, and I did deſire your Lordſhip to explain it. For to ſay that a Man did meet to Conſpire the King's Death, and he that gives you the account of the Buſineſs does not ſpeak one Word of it, ſeems extravagant; for Conſpiracies have ever their Denomination from that Point to which they tend; as a Conſpiracy to make falſe Coin infers Inſtruments and the like. A Conſpiracy to take away a Woman, to kill, or rob, are all directed to that end. So Conſpiring to kill the King, muſt immediately aim at killing the King. The King hath two Capacities, Natural and Politick, that which is the Politick can't be within the Statute, in that Senſe he never dies, and 'tis abſurd to ſay it ſhould be a Fault to kill the King that can't die: So then it muſt be the Natural Senſe it muſt be underſtood in, which muſt be done by Sword, by Piſtol, or any other way. Now if there be not one Word of this, then that is utterly at an end, tho' the Witneſs had been good. The next point is concerning Levying of War. Levying of War is made Treaſon there, ſo it be proved by Overt Act, but an Overt Act of that never was, or can be pretended here. If the War be not Levied, 'tis not within the Act; for Conſpiring to Levy War is not in the Act. My Lord, There is no Man that thinks that I would kill the King that knows me, I am not a Man to have ſuch a Deſign, perhaps I may ſay I have ſaved his Life once. So that it muſt be by Implication, that is, it is firſt imagined, that I intended to raiſe a War, and then 'tis imagined that War ſhould tend to the Deſtruction of the King. Now I know that may follow, but that is not Natural or Neceſſary, and being not Natural or Neceſſary, it can't be ſo underſtood by the Law. That it is not is plain, for many Wars have been made, and the Death of the King has not followed. David made War upon Saul, yet no body will ſay he ſought his Death, he had him under his Power and did not kill him, David made War upon Iſhboſheth, yet did not deſign his Death; and ſo in England and France Kings have been taken Priſoners, but they did not kill them. King Stephen was taken Priſoner, but they did not kill him. So that 'tis two diſtinct things, to make War and to endeavour to kill the King. Now as there is no manner of pretence that I ſhould endeavour to kill the King directly, ſo it can't be by Inference, becauſe 'tis Treaſon under another ſpecies. I confeſs I am not fit to argue theſe Points, I think I ought to have Counſel, but if you won't allow it me, I can't help it; but theſe things are impoſſible to be jumbled up together. Now I ſay this, If I am not under the firſt Branch, if not directly, I can't be by Implication; tho' I did make War, I can't be ſaid to Conſpire the Death of the King, becauſe 'tis a diſtinct ſpecies of Treaſon, and my Lord Coke ſays, 'Tis the Overthrow of all Juſtice to confound Membra dividentia; now if the making of War can't be underſtood to be a Conſpiring

the

the Death of the King, then I am not guilty of this Indictment, but here, my Lord, is neither Conſpiring the Death of the King, nor making War, nor Conſpiring to make War. Beſides, I ſay, 'tis not the beſt Man's Evidence here would be good in this Caſe, becauſe the Law requires two. The next thing is the Buſineſs of Aaron Smith, which my Lord tells ſo imperfectly, and ſo meerly conjectural, that there is nothing in it, but his Rhetorick in ſetting it out. He tells you of a Letter ſent with him, but he does not tell you by whom writ, what was in it, or whether it was delivered or no: So that I think we may lay that aſide as the other, as things nothing in them at all. Then ſays Mr. Attorney, Theſe Scotch Gentlemen are come to Town, I profeſs I never heard the Names of one of them till he named them to me in the Tower. I have not ſent my ſelf, nor writ a Letter into Scotland never ſince the Year 59, nor do I know one Man in Scotland to whom I can write, or from whom I ever received one. I returned into England in the Year 77. and ſince that time have not writ nor received a Letter from Scotland. Then ſome Gentlemen came hither, What is that to me? I never ſaw one of the Campbells in my Life, nor Monro; if any one can prove I have had Communication with them, I will be glad to ſuffer. Then here are Papers; If any thing is to be made of them you muſt produce the whole, for 'tis impoſſible to make any thing of a part of them. You ask me, What other Paſſage I would have read, I don't know a Paſſage in them, I can't tell whether it be good or bad. But if there are any Papers found ('tis a great doubt whether they were found in my Study or no, or whether they be not counterfeit; but tho' that be admitted that they were found in my Houſe) the Hand is ſuch, that it ſhews they have been writ very many Years. Then that which ſeems to be an account of the Sections and Chapters, that is but a ſcrap, and what if any body had, my Lord, either in my own Hand or another's, found Papers that are not well juſtifiable, Is this Treaſon? Does this imagine the Death of the King? Does this reach the Life of the King? If any Man can can ſay I ever printed a Sheet in my Life, I will ſubmit to any Puniſhment. Many others, my Lord, they write, and they write what comes into their Heads. I believe there is a Brother of mine here has forty Quires of Paper written by my Father, and never one Sheet of them was publiſhed, but he writ his own Mind to ſee what he could think of it another time, and blot it out again, may be. And I my ſelf, I believe, have burned more Papers of my own writing than a Horſe can carry. So that for theſe Papers I can't anſwer for them. There is nothing in it, and what Concatenation can this have with the other Deſign that is in it ſelf nothing, with my Lord's Select Council ſelected by no body to purſue the Deſign of my Lord Shaftsbury? And this Council that he pretends to be ſet up for ſo great a Buſineſs, was to be adjuſted with ſo much Fineneſs ſo as to bring things together, What was this Fineneſs to do? (taking it for granted, which I don't) This was nothing (if he was a credible Witneſs) but a few Men talking at large of what might be or not be, what was like to fall out without any manner of Intention or doing any thing. They did not ſo much as inquire. Whether there were Men in the Country, Arms, or Ammunition. A War to be made by five or ſix Men, not knowing one another, not truſting one another. What ſaid Dr. Coxe in his Evidence at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, of my Lord Ruſſel's truſting my Lord Howard? He might ſay the ſame of ſome others. So that, my Lord, I ſay, theſe Papers have no manner of Coherence, no Dependance upon any ſuch Deſign. You muſt go upon Conjecture upon Conjecture; and after all, you find nothing but only Papers, never perfect, only ſcraps, written many Years ago, and that could not be calculated for the raiſing of the People. Now, pray what Imagination can be more vain than that? And what Man can be ſafe, if the King's Counſel may make ſuch (whimſical I won't ſay, but) groundleſs Conſtructions? Mr. Attorney ſays, the Plot was broken to the Scots (God knows we were neither broken nor joined) and that the Campbels came to Town about that time I was taken, and in the mean time my Lord Howard, the great Contriver of all this Plot, who was moſt active; and adviſed the Buſineſs that conſiſted of ſo much Fineneſs; he goes there and agrees of nothing; and then goes into Eſſex upon great important Buſineſs, greater than the War of England and Scotland, to what purpoſe? To look after a little pimping Mannour, and what then? Why then it muſt be laid aſide, and he muſt be idle five Weeks at the Bath, and there is no inquiring after it. Now, I deſire your Lordſhip to conſider, whether there be a poſſibility for any Men, that have the Senſe of Porters and Grooms, to do ſuch things as he would put upon us. I would only ſay this, If Mr. Attorney be in the right, there was a Combination with the Scots, and then this Paper was writ; for thoſe that ſay I did it, ſay I was doing of it then, and by the Notes, there is work enough for four or five Years, to make out what is mentioned in thoſe ſcraps of Paper, and this muſt be to kill the King. And I ſay this, my Lord, that, under favour, for all Conſtructive Treaſons you are to make none, but to go according to plain Proof, and that theſe Conſtructive Treaſons belong only to Parliament, and by the immediate Proviſo in that Act. Now, my Lord, I leave it to your Lordſhip, to ſee whether there is in this any thing that you can ſay is an Overt Act of Treaſon mentioned in 25 Edw. 3. If it be not plainly under one of the two Branches, That I have endeavoured to Kill the King, or Levied War, then 'tis matter of Conſtruction, and that belongs to no Court but the Parliament. Then, my Lord, this hath been adjudged already in Throgmorton's Caſe. There are twenty Judgments of Parliament, the Act of 13 Eliz. that ſays —— I ſhould have ſomebody to ſpeak for me, my Lord.

L. C. J. We are of another Opinion.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If you acknowledge the Matter of Fact, you ſay well.

Col. Sidney. I ſay there are ſeveral Judgments of Parliament, that do ſhew whatever is Conſtructive Treaſon does not belong to any private Court, that of 1 Mary, 1 Edw. 6. 1 Eliz. 5 Eliz. 18. another 13 Car. ſhews this. Now, my Lord, I ſay that the Buſineſs concerning the Papers, 'tis only a Similitude of Hands, which is juſt nothing.

nothing. In my Lady Carr's Caſe, it was reſolved to extend to no Criminal Cauſe, if not to any, then not to the greateſt, the moſt Capital. So that I have only this to ſay, That I think 'tis impoſſible for the Jury to find this Matter, for the firſt Point you proved by my Lord Howard, that I think is no body, and the laſt concerning the Papers, is only Imagination from the ſimilitude of Hands. If I had publiſhed it, I muſt have anſwered for it, or if the Thing had been whole and mine, I muſt have anſwered for it; but for theſe Scraps never ſhewed any body, that I think does not at all concern me. And I ſay, if the Jury ſhould find it (which is impoſſible they can) I deſire to have the Law reſerved unto me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury. The Evidence hath been long; but I will endeavour to repeat it as faithfully as I can. The Crime the Priſoner ſtands accuſed for, is compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. That which we go about to prove That Compaſſing and Imagining by, is by his meeting and conſulting how to raiſe Arms againſt the King, and by plain matter in writing under his own Hand, where he does affirm, it is lawful to take away and deſtroy the King. Gentlemen, I will begin with the firſt Part of it, the Meeting and Conſultation to raiſe Arms againſt the King. The Priſoner, Gentlemen, hath endeavoured to avoid the whole Force of this Evidence, by ſaying, that this in Point of Law can't affect him, if it were all proved; for this does not amount to a Proof of his compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and he is very long in interpreting the Act of Parliament to you of 25 Ed. 3. and dividing of it into ſeveral Members or Branches of Treaſon, and does inſiſt upon it, that though this ſhould be an Offence within one Branch of that Statute, yet that is not a Proof of the other, which is the Branch he is proceeded upon, that is the firſt Clauſe againſt the compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. And, ſays he, conſpiring to Levy War, is not ſo much as one Branch of that Statute, but it muſt be War actually levied. This is a Matter he is wholly miſtaken in, in Point of Law. It hath been adjudged over and over again, That an Act which is in one Branch of that Statute, may be an Overt Act to prove a Man Guilty of another Branch of it. A levying War is an Overt Act to prove a Man Guilty of Conſpiring the Death of the King. And this was adjudged in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane, ſo is meeting and conſulting to raiſe Arms. And Reaſon does plainly ſpeak it to be ſo; for they that conſpire to raiſe War againſt the King, can't be preſumed to ſtop any where; till they have Dethroned or Murdered the King. Gentlemen, I won't be long in citing Authorities, it hath been ſetled lately by all the Judges of England, in the Caſe of my Lord Ruſſel, who hath ſuffered for this Conſpiracy. Therefore that Point of Law will be very plain againſt the Priſoner. He hath mentioned ſome other Things, as that there muſt be two Witneſſes to every particular Fact, and one Witneſs to one Fact, and another to another, is not ſufficient; it hath been very often objected, and as often over-ruled: It was over-ruled Solemnly in the Caſe of my Lord Stafford. Therefore if we have one Witneſs to one Overt Act, and another to another, they will be two Witneſſes in Law to convict this Priſoner. In the firſt part of our Evidence, we give you an Account of the general Deſign of an Inſurrection that was to have been, that this was contrived firſt, when my Lord Shaftsbury was in England, that after my Lord Shaftsbury was gone, the Buſineſs did not fall; but they thought fit to revive it again, and that they might carry it on the more ſteadily, they did contrive a Council among themſelves of Six, whereof the Priſoner at the Bar was one. They were the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord of Eſſex, my Lord Howard, my Lord Ruſſel, the Priſoner at the Bar, and Mr. Hambden. This Council they contrived to manage this Affair, and to carry on that Deſign, that ſeemed to fall by the Death of my Lord of Shaftsbury, and they met; this we give you an Account of, firſt by Witneſſes, that gave you an account in general of it. And though they were not privy to it, yet they heard of this Council, and that Colonel Sidney was to be one of this Council. This, Gentlemen, if it had ſtood alone by it ſelf, had been nothing to affect the Priſoner at all. But this will ſhew you, that it was diſcours'd among them that were in this Conſpiracy. Then my Lord Howard gives you an Account, that firſt the Duke of Monmouth, and he, and Colonel Sidney met, and it was agreed to be neceſſary to have a Council, that ſhould conſiſt of ſix or ſeven, and they were to carry it on. That the Duke of Monmouth undertook to diſpoſe my Lord Ruſſel to it, and Colonel Sidney to diſpoſe the Earl of Eſſex, and Mr. Hambden; that theſe Gentlemen did meet accordingly, and the Subſtance of their Diſcourſe was, taking notice how the Deſign had fallen upon the Death of my Lord Shaftsbury, that it was fit to carry it on before Men's Inclinations were cool, for they found they were ready to it, and had great reaſon to believe it, becauſe this being a Buſineſs communicated to ſo many, yet for all that it was kept very ſecret, and no body had made any mention of it, which they looked upon as a certain Argument that Men were ready to ingage in it. This incouraged them to go on in this Conſpiracy. Then when the Six met at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, they debated concerning the Place of Riſing, and the Time, the Time they conceived muſt be ſuddenly, before Men's Minds were cool, for now they thought they were ready and very much diſpoſed to it, and for Place, they had in Debate, whether they ſhould riſe firſt in the Town, or in the Countrey, or both together. And for the Perſons, they thought it abſolutely neceſſary for them to have the United Counſels of Scotland to join with them, and therefore they did refer this Matter to be better conſidered of another time, and they met afterwards at my Lord Ruſſel's Houſe in February, and there they had Diſcourſe to the ſame purpoſe. But there they began to conſider with themſelves, being they were to deſtroy this Government, what they ſhould ſet up in the room of it; to what purpoſe they ingaged. For they did very wiſely conſider, if this be only to ſerve a Turn, and to make one Man great, this will be a great hinderance in their Affair, therefore they thought it was neceſſary to ingage upon a publick account, and to reſolve all into the Authority of a Parliament, which ſurely they either ther thought to force the King to call, or otherwiſe that the People might call a Parliament, if the King refuſed, and ſo they to chooſe their own Heads. But ſtill they were upon this Point, That it was neceſſary for their Friends in Scotland to have their Councils united with them, and in order to that, it was neceſſary to contrive ſome way to ſend a Meſſenger into Scotland, to bring ſome Men here to treat and conſult about it, and Colonel Sidney is the Man that does engage to ſend this Meſſenger, and he had a Man very fit for his Turn, that is, Aron Smith, whom he could confide in, and him he undertook to ſend into Scotland. This Meſſenger was to fetch my Lord Melvin, the two Campbell's, and Sir John Cockram; Colonel Sidney as he ingaged to do this, ſo afterwards he did ſhew to my Lord Howard Money, which he affirmed was for that Buſineſs; he ſays it was a Sum of about ſixty Guineas, and he believes he gave it him, for that Colonel Sidney told him, Aaron Smith was gone into Scotland, That the Pretence was not bare-faced to invite them over, to conſult of a Rebellion, but to conſult about the Buſineſs of Carolina, being a Plantation for the perſecuted Brethren, as they pretended in Scotland. Gentlemen, theſe Scotchmen that were thus ſent for over, they came accordingly, that is, the two Campbells, and Sir John Cockram, and the Diſcourſe with Sir Andrew Foſter was according to this Cant that was agreed on beforehand, concerning a Plantation in Carolina. This was that that was pretended for their coming hither; but the true Errand was, the Buſineſs of the Inſurrection intended. Gentlemen, that they came upon ſuch a Deſign, is evident from the Circumſtances; they came about the Time the Buſineſs brake out, and in that time ſuſpiciouſly changing their Lodging, they were taken making their eſcape, and this at a time before it was probable to be known Abroad that theſe Men were named as part of the Conſpirators. Theſe Things do very much verify the Evidence my Lord Howard hath given, and there is nothing has been ſaid, does at all invalidate it. The ſending of Aaron Smith into Scotland, and his going, and the coming of theſe Men, and their endeavouring to make their eſcape, are mighty concurrent Evidences with the whole Evidence my Lord Howard has given. Now, What Objections are made againſt this Evidence? Truly none at all. Here are Perſons of great Quality have given their Teſtimony, and they do not impeach my Lord Howard in the leaſt; but ſome do extremely confirm the Truth of my Lord Howard. My Lord Angleſey gives you an Account of a Diſcourſe at my Lord of Bedford's, That my Lord Howard came in, and that my Lord Howard ſhould there comfort my Lord of Bedford, and enlarge in the Commendations of his Son, and ſay he was confident he knew nothing of the Deſign, and he muſt be innocent. Gentlemen, This is the nature of the moſt part of the Evidence. My Lord of Clare, his Evidence is much the like, that is, his denying that he knew of any Plot. Now here is my Lord Howard under a Guilt of High-Treaſon; for he was one of thoſe Conſpirators not yet diſcovered, nor no Evidence of any Diſcourſe leading to any thing that ſhould give Occaſion to him to proteſt his Innocency: And, ſays he, I know nothing of the Plot. You would have wondered if he ſhould have been talking in all Places his Knowledge, and declaring himſelf: His denying of it under the Guilt, when he was not accuſed, is nothing to his Confeſſion when he comes to be apprehended and taken for it. Here Mr. Philip Howard ſays, he had ſeveral Diſcourſes with him about this Buſineſs, upon the breaking out of the Plot, and that he adviſed him to make an Addreſs, and that this was a Thing that would be very acceptable, and very much for their Vindication; and my Lord Howard (he ſays) thanked him for his very good Advice, and ſaid, he would follow it: And preſently after when my Lord Ruſſel was apprehended, Mr. Howard tells him the News, that my Lord Ruſſel was apprehended; this was ſudden to him. And what ſays he? We are all undone. When my Lord Ruſſel that was one of this Council, that was a ſecret Council, and could not be traced but by ſome of themſelves, when He is apprehended, then he falls out into this Expreſſion, We are all undone. This is an Argument my Lord Howard had a Guilt upon him. For, why were they all undone, that my Lord Ruſſel was apprehended, any more than upon the apprehending the reſt? Yes, becauſe my Lord was one of the Six, and now 'twas come to the knowing of that Part of the Conſpiracy. It was traced to the Council of Six, which in all likelyhood would break the Neck of the Deſign. Now though he put it off afterwards, ſaying, I believe it is a Sham Plot, yet this was but a trivial Put-off. And then, when Colonel Sidney is taken, the ſame Witneſs Mr. Howard tells you, my Lord was very ſad and melancholy; for then he had greater reaſon to lie under an apprehenſion of being detected. Therefore, Gentlemen, this will rather confirm the Truth of the Evidence, than any way impeach it. Then (for I would repeat it all, though I think it had no great Weight in it) Doctor Burnet ſays, That after the Plot my Lord Howard pretended he knew of no Plot. This is no more than was teſtified by the other Lords before; and all it imports, is, that my Lord did not diſcover himſelf to Doctor Burnet. But I would fain know, if my Lord had told Doctor Burnet, had it not argued that he had great Confidence in him, that he thought him a Man fit to be intruſted with ſuch a Secret? And unleſs the Doctor deſires to be thought ſuch a Man, himſelf muſt own, 'tis no Objection, That my Lord Howard did not tell him. Ducas's Teſtimony is no more neither, That he proteſted he was innocent, and believed Colonel Sidney was innocent; and this was before my Lord Howard diſcovered any thing of this Plot. Then Colonel Sidney objects, This is by Malice, my Lord Howard owes him Money, and ſeeks to pay his Debts by taking away his Life; and in further Proſecution of this Malice, would have ſeized upon his Goods. But the Evidence does not receive ſuch Conſtruction, for my Lord Howard only offered Colonel Sidney the Civility of his Houſe to protect his Plate and Goods. Now, Gentlemen, there were two other Witneſſes, my Lord Paget, and Mr. Edward Howard; but they ſay no more than the reſt of them, that he did proteſt his Innocency, and Mr. Howard ſays, he adviſed him to make an Addreſs to the King. This, Gentlemen, I repeat, not that it is material, but for no other reaſon, than becauſe Colonel Sidney had produced it; and ſo we are to think, he intended to make ſome uſe of it; but I can't ſee any Inference to be drawn from it. There is one Witneſs more, and that is Mr. Blake, to the Credit of my Lord Howard, who comes here, and ſays, that when he diſcourſed about a Pardon, my Lord ſhould ſay, That he had a Warrant for his Pardon, but that he had not yet paſſed it, and could not yet; and he apprehended the Reaſon was, Becauſe the drudgery of Swearing was not over. But this is but what my Lord Howard had conjectured: Firſt, It does not appear, that there is any Promiſe of Pardon at all to my Lord Howard, on any Terms impoſed on him. In the next place, Whatever Expectation he has of a Pardon, he can't reaſonably hope for it without making a clear Diſcovery of all he knows: For to ſtifle the Evidence he has given, is not a way to deſerve a Pardon of his Prince. Therefore, Gentlemen, whatever Expreſſions were uſed, tho' he called it the drudgery of Swearing, however unwilling he is to come to it, and tho' he gives it very many hard Names, and might think it very harſh to come and own himſelf to be one of the Conſpirators, it might be irkſome, and very irkſome; yet none of them tell you, That my Lord Howard ſhould ſay, that what he had ſaid was not true. Now he has come and given his Evidence, and you have heard all theſe Objections againſt it, and not one of them touch it in the leaſt.

I come in the next place to the other part of the Evidence, The Papers found in Colonel Sidney's Houſe, And in the firſt place he objects, They can't affect him; for, ſays he, there is no Proof they were found in my Houſe, no Proof they were written by me; for Compariſon of Hands, that is nothing; and if they were proved to be mine, 'tis nothing at all to the purpoſe; they are an Anſwer to a Polemical Diſcourſe, wherewith he entertained himſelf privately in his Study. Why, you have obſerved, I know, that Sir Philip Lloyd in the firſt place ſwears, that by Warrant from the Secretary he ſearched his Houſe, and he found the Papers lying upon Colonel Sidney's Table in his Study, when he came in there; and there is no ground nor colour for you to ſuſpect otherwiſe than that they were there, and he found them there. For the ſurmiſe of the Priſoner at the Bar, that they might be laid there, 'tis ſo foreign and without ground, that by and by you will think there is nothing at all in it. In the next place, We prove Col. Sidney's Hand, and that by as much Proof as the thing is capable of; ſuch a Proof as in all Caſes hath been allowed; and that is, for Men to come that know and are acquainted with the Hand-writing, and ſwear they know his Hand-writing, and they believe this to be his Hand. You have heard from Mr. Sheppard, a Man that uſed to tranſact Buſineſs for him, pay Money for him; and Mr. Cooke, and Mr. Cary, Men of known Credit in the City of London, that have had the like Dealings with Col. Sidney, and they ſwear this is his Hand-writing, as they verily believe. So that, Gentlemen, this Proof to you of Colonel Sidney's Hand-writing does verify Sir Philip Lloyd, That theſe Papers muſt be found there, if Col. Sidney writ them; and then this being found that they were writ by him, the next thing will be, How far this will be an Evidence to prove his Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King. Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, is the Act of the Mind, and is Treaſon whilſt it remains ſecret in the Heart, tho' no ſuch Treaſon can be puniſh'd, becauſe there is no way to prove it; but when once there is any Overt Act, that is, any thing that does manifeſt and declare ſuch Intention, then the Law takes hold of it, and puniſhes it as High-Treaſon.

Now after this Evidence, I think no Man will doubt, whether it was in the Heart of the Priſoner at the Bar to deſtroy the King. But firſt he objects, That this is a part of a Book, and unleſs you take the whole, nothing can be made of it: As it is in wreſting of Texts of Scripture, ſays he, you may as well ſay, That David ſays there is no God, becauſe David hath ſaid, The fool hath ſaid in his Heart, there is no God. But, Gentlemen, the Application won't hold; for you ſee a long Diſcourſe hath been read to you, a continued Thread of Argument; 'tis not one Propoſition, but an whole Series of Argument: Theſe are the Poſitions, "That the "King derives all his Power from the People; "That 'tis originally in the People, and that "the meaſure of Subjection muſt be adjudged "by the Parliament; and if the King does fall "from doing his Duty, he muſt expect the Peo-"ple will exact it. And this he has laid down as no way prejudicial to him; for, ſays he, The King may refuſe the Crown, if he does not like it upon theſe Terms. But, ſays he, if he does accept it, he muſt expect the Performance will be exacted, or Revenge taken by thoſe he hath betray'd. Then next, he ſets up an Objection, and then argues againſt it: Ay, but ſhall the People be Judge in their own Cauſe? And thus he anſwers it, It muſt be ſo; for is not the King a Judge in his own Cauſe? How can any Man elſe be Tryed, or Convicted of any Offence, if the King may not be Judge in his own Cauſe; for to a judge by a Man's ſelf, or by his Deputy, is the ſame thing; and ſo a Crime againſt the King can't be puniſhed? And then he takes notice of it as a very abſurd Poſition, "That the King ſhall judge in "his own Cauſe, and not the People. That would be to ſay, The Servant entertained by the Maſter ſhall judge the Maſter, but the Maſter ſhall not judge the Servant. Gentlemen, after this ſort of Argument he comes to this ſettled Poſition, "We may therefore, ſays he, "change, or take away Kings, (without break-"ing any Yoke, or that is made a Yoke;) the "Injury is therefore in impoſing the Yoke, and "there can be none at all in breaking of it. But he goes on in his Book, and that is by way of Anſwer to an Objection, That if there be no Injury, yet there may be Inconvenience, if the headleſs Multitude ſhould ſhake off the Yoke. But, ſays he, I would fain know how the Multitude comes to be headleſs; and there he gives you many Inſtances in Story, and from Foreign Nations he comes home to the Engliſh, and tells you how all Rebellions in later Ages have been headed; and tells you the Parliament is the Head, or the Nobility and Gentry that compoſe it; and when the King fails in his Duty, the People may call it. The Multitude therefore is never headleſs, but they either find or create

create an Head, ſo that here is a plain and avowed Principle of Rebellion Eſtabliſhed upon the ſtrongeſt Reaſon he has to back it. Gentlemen, This, with the other Evidence that has been given, will be ſufficient to prove his Compaſſing the Death of the King. You ſee the Affirmations he makes; when Kings do break their Truſt they may be called to Account by the People. This is the Doctrine he broaches and argues for: He ſays in his Book in another Part, that the Calling and Diſſolving of Parliaments is not in the King's Power. Gentlemen, You all know how many Parliaments the King hath Called and Diſſolved; if it be not in his Power, he hath done that that was not in his Power, and ſo contrary to his Truſt. Gentlemen, At the Entrance into this Conſpiracy, they were under an Apprehenſion that their Liberties were invaded, as you hear in the Evidence from my Lord Howard, that they were juſt making the Inſurrection upon that Tumultuous Oppoſition of Electing of Sheriffs in London. They enter into a Conſultation to raiſe Arms againſt the King; and it is proved by my Lord Howard, that the Priſoner at the Bar was one. Gentlemen, Words ſpoken upon a ſuppoſition will be High-Treaſon, as was held in King James's Time, in the Caſe of Collins in *Rol*l's Reports, The King being Excommunicate may be Depoſed and Murdered, without affirming he was Excommunicated; and this was enough to convict him of High-Treaſon. Now according to that Caſe, to ſay the King having broken his Truſt may be Depoſed by his People, would be High-Treaſon, but here he does as good as affirm the King had broke his Truſt. When every one ſees the King hath Diſſolved Parliaments; this reduces it to an Affirmation. And tho' this Book be not brought to that Council to be peruſed, and there debated, yet it will be another, and more than two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner: For I would ask any Man, ſuppoſe a Man was in a Room, and there were two Men, and he talks with both apart, and he comes to one and endeavours to perſwade him that it is lawful to Riſe in Arms againſt the King, if ſo be he break his Truſt; and he ſhould go to another Man, and tell him the King hath broken his Truſt, and we muſt ſeek ſome way to redreſs our ſelves, and perſwade the People to Riſe; theſe two Witneſſes do ſo tack this Treaſon together, that they will be two Witneſſes to prove him Guilty of High-Treaſon. And you have heard one Witneſs prove it poſitively to you, That he conſulted to Riſe in Arms againſt the King, and here is his own Book ſays, it is lawful for a Man to Riſe in Arms againſt the King, if he break his Truſt, and in effect he hath ſaid, the King hath broken his Truſt: Therefore this will be a ſufficient Demonſtration what the Imagination of the Heart of this Man was, that it was nothing but the Deſtruction of the King and the Government, and indeed of all Governments. There can be no ſuch thing as Government if the People ſhall be Judge in the Caſe: For what ſo uncertain as the heady and giddy Multitude? Gentlemen, I think this will be a ſufficient Evidence of his Conſulting the Death of the King. You have here the Priſoner at the Bar that is very deep in it. Indeed ſome Men may by Paſſion be tranſported into ſuch an Offence, and tho' the Offence be never the leſs, whatever the Motives are, yet in ſome it is leſs dangerous, for thoſe that venture upon Paſſion to raiſe Commotions and Rebellion, are not always ſo much upon their Guard, but that they may make ſome falſe Steps to intrap themſelves. But this Gentleman proceeds upon a ſurer Foundation, it is his Reaſon, it is his Principle, it is the Guide of all his Actions, it is that by which he leads and directs the ſteady Courſe of his Life. A Man convinced of theſe Principles, and that walks accordingly, what won't he do to accompliſh his Deſigns? How wary will he be in all his Actions? Still reaſoning with himſelf, which way to bring it moſt ſecurely about. Gentlemen, This is the more dangerous Conſpiracy in this Man, by how much the more it is rooted in him; and how deep it is, you hear, when a Man ſhall write as his Principle, that it is lawful for to Depoſe Kings, they breaking their Truſt, and that the Revolt of the whole Nation cannot be called Rebellion. It will be a very ſad Caſe when People act this according to their Conſciences, and do all this for the Good of the People, as they would have it thought; but this is the Principle of this Man. Gentlemen, We think we have plainly made it out to you, and proved it ſufficiently, that it was the Imagination of his Heart to deſtroy the King, and made ſufficient Proof of High-Treaſon.

Col. Sidney. Give me leave, my Lord, to ſay a very few Words. I deſire Mr. Sollicitor would not think it his Duty to take away Men's Lives any how: Firſt, We have had a long Story ——

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Sidney, We muſt not have vying and revying, I asked you before what you had to ſay; the Courſe of Evidence is, after the King's Counſel have concluded, we never admit the Priſoner to ſay any thing.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, It was a wiſe Man ſaid, There never could be too much Delay in the Life of a Man: I know the King's Counſel may conclude, if they pleaſe. Mr. Sollicitor, I would not have him think that it is enough by one way or another to bring a Man to Death: My Lord, This Matter of Sir Henry Vane is utterly miſrepreſented. ——

L. C. J. I muſt tell you, Gentlemen of the Jury, that what the Priſoner ſays that is not proved, and what the King's Counſel have ſaid, of which there is no Proof to make it out, muſt not be taken into any Conſideration.

Col. Sidney. Then, my Lord, here is a Place or two in Old Hales, (turning over my Lord Hales Book) for the Overt Act of one Treaſon, not being an Overt Act of another, your Lordſhip knows Coke and Hales were both againſt it. (He reads.) Compaſſing by bare Words is not an Overt Act, Conſpiring to Levy War is no Overt Act.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I deſire but one Word more for my own ſake as well as the Priſoner's, and that is, that if I have ſaid any thing that is not Law, or miſrepeated, or miſapplied the Evidence which hath been given, I do make it my humble Requeſt to your Lordſhip to rectify thoſe Miſtakes as well in point of Fact as point of Law; for God forbid the Priſoner ſhould ſuffer by any Miſtake.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, The Evidence has been been long, and it is a Cauſe of great Concernment, and it is far from the Thoughts of the King, or from the Thoughts, or Deſire of any of his Judges here to be inſtrumental to take away the Life of any Man, that by Law his Life ought not to be taken away. For I had rather many guilty Men ſhould eſcape, than one innocent Man ſuffer. The Queſtion is, Whether upon all the Evidence you have heard againſt the Priſoner, and the Evidence on his behalf, there is Evidence ſufficient to Convict the Priſoner of the High-Treaſon he ſtands charged with. And as you muſt not be moved by the Denial of the Priſoner further than as it is backed with Proof; ſo you are not to be inveigled by any Inſinuations made againſt the Priſoner at the Bar, further or otherwiſe than as the Proof is made out to you. But it is uſual, and it is a Duty incumbent on the King's Counſel, to urge againſt all ſuch Criminals, whatſoever they obſerve in the Evidence againſt them, and likewiſe to endeavour to give Anſwers to the Objections that are made on their behalf. And, therefore, ſince we have been kept ſo long in this Cauſe, it won't be amiſs for me (and my Brothers, as they ſhall think fit,) to help your Memory in the Fact, and diſcharge that Duty that is incumbent upon the Court as to the points of Law. This Indictment is for High-Treaſon, and is grounded upon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. By which Statute, the Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King, and declaring the ſame by an Overt Act is made High-Treaſon. The reaſon of that Law was, becauſe at Common Law there was great Doubt what was Treaſon; wherefore to reduce that High Crime to a Certainty was that Law made, that thoſe that were guilty might know what to expect. And there are ſeveral Acts of Parliament made between the Time of Edward III, and that of 1 M. but by that Statute all Treaſons that are not enumerated by After-Acts of Parliament remain as they were declared by that Statute of 25 Edw. 3. And ſo are Challenges and other Matters, inſiſted upon by the Priſoner, left as they were at the Time of that Act: I am alſo to tell you that in point of Law, it is not only the Opinion of us here, but the Opinion of them that ſate before us, and the Opinion of all the Judges of England, and within the Memory of many of you, That tho' there be two Witneſſes required to prove a Man guilty of High-Treaſon; yet it is not neceſſary there ſhould be two Witneſſes to the ſame thing at one time. But if two Witneſſes prove two ſeveral Facts, that have a tendency to the ſame Treaſon, they are two Witneſſes ſufficient to Convict any Man of High-Treaſon. In the Caſe of my Lord Stafford in Parliament, all the Judges aſſiſting, it is notoriouſly known, That one Witneſs to a Conſpiracy in England, and another to a Conſpiracy in France, were held two Witneſſes ſufficient to Convict him of High-Treaſon. In the next place, I am to tell you, That tho' ſome Judges have been of Opinion that Words of themſelves were not an Overt Act; but my Lord Hales, nor my Lord Coke, nor any other of the Sages of the Law, ever queſtioned but that a Letter would be an Overt Act, ſufficient to prove a Man guilty of High-Treaſon; For ſcribere eſt agere, Mr. Sidney ſays, The King is a Politick Perſon; but you muſt deſtroy him in his Natural Capacity, or it is not Treaſon; but I muſt tell you, If any Man Compaſs to Impriſon the King, it is High-Treaſon; So was the Caſe of my Lord Cobham. And my Lord Coke, when he ſays, If a Man do attempt to make the King do any thing by Force and Compulſion, otherwiſe than he ought to do, that it is High-Treaſon within that Act of 25 Eliz. 3. But if it were an Indictment only for the Levying of War, there muſt be an actual War Levied; but this is an Indictment for Compaſſing the Death of the King; and the other Treaſon, mentioned in that Act of Parliament for the Levying War, may be given in Evidence to prove the Conſpiracy of the King's Death: For 'tis rightly told you by the King's Counſel, That the Imagination of a Man's Heart is not to be diſcerned; but if I declare ſuch my Imagination by an Overt Act, which Overt Act does naturally evince, that the King muſt be Depoſed, Deſtroyed, Impriſoned, or the like, it will be ſufficient Evidence of Treaſon within that Act. In the next place, having told you what the Law is, for, Gentlemen, 'tis our Duty upon our Oaths, to declare the Law to you, and you are bound to receive our Declaration of the Law, and upon this Declaration, to inquire whether there be a Fact, ſufficiently proved, to find the Priſoner guilty of the High-Treaſon of which he ſtands indicted: And for that, I muſt tell you, whatever happens to be hear-ſay from others, it is not to be applied immediately to the Priſoner; but however thoſe Matters that are remote at firſt may ſerve for this purpoſe, To prove there was generally a Conſpiracy to Deſtroy the King and Government: And for that matter, you all remember it was the conſtant Rule and Method obſerved about the Popiſh Plot, firſt to produce the Evidence of the Plot in general: This was done in that famous Caſe of my Lord Stafford in Parliament. Gentlemen, I am alſo to tell you, This alone does not at all affect the Priſoner at the Bar, but is made uſe of as a Circumſtance to ſupport the Credibility of the Witneſſes; and is thus far applicable to the Buſineſs before you, That 'tis plain, by Perſons that don't touch the Priſoner at the Bar, (and I am ſorry any Man makes a Doubt of it at this time of day) that there was a Conſpiracy to kill the King; for after ſo full a Proof in this Place, and in others, and the Execution and Confeſſion of ſeveral of the Offenders, I am ſurprized to obſerve that the Priſoner at the Bar, and ſome others preſent, ſeem not to believe it.

But, Gentlemen, you hear the firſt Witneſs; I ſpeak of Weſt: He tells you he had the Honour to be acquainted with Mr. Sidney, and that he had Diſcourſe with Walcot, a Perſon Convicted and Executed for this horrid Conſpiracy. Why, ſays he, he told me at my Chamber, That they were not the only Perſons concerned, but that there were other Perſons of great Quality that had their Meetings for the carrying on the Buſineſs in other Places. And Ferguſon, that was the Ring-leader in this Conſpiracy, told him there was a Deſign of a general Inſurrection; it was once laid down, but it is now taken up again. There are other Counſellors of great importance; and he names, among the reſt, the Priſoner at the Bar. Mr. Weſt goes a little further, and he tells you this:

Says

Says he, He did not only tell me so, but that there was a Design to conciliate a Correspondence with some Persons in Scotland, and they were to do it under the Cant of having Business in Carolina. There is Mr. Keeling, he tells you too, There was a Design for a general and publick Insurrection; That he was present with the Goodenoughs, one and t'other, and that they had taken upon them to divide, and did divide the City into such and such Districts: And what was the Business? It was, that there might be a general Insurrection; might be an Insurrection, not only to Destroy the King and the Duke, but to Destroy all the King's Loyal Subjects; and in taking away their Lives, to take away the Life of Monarchy it self, and to subvert the Religion Established by Law. Then comes in Col. Rumsey, and he gives you an account that he had heard of such things in Mr. West's Chamber; and tells you he had received such Intelligence. And all these give you an Account, that there was such a Design to kill the King: And this is the Substance of the general Evidence produced to prove the Conspiracy. Then to make this Matter come home to the Prisoner at the Bar, first my Lord Howard gives you an Account, and does directly swear, That about the middle or latter end of January last, he happened to meet with Colonel Sidney, the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Duke of Monmouth (they were the Persons first began to have Discourse about this Matter) and how they met with a Disappointment; the thing had slept a great while, and that it was fit it should be revived again; and that Persons of Quality were mentioned, who were to have an immediate Care in the carrying on of the Business, and that it should not be divulged to too many; accordingly there was my Lord Russel, my Lord of Essex, my Lord of Salisbury, and Mr. Hambden named. He tells you, the Prisoner at the Bar undertook for my Lord of Essex, and Mr. Hambden, and he tells you, the Duke of Monmouth undertook for my Lord Russel, and the rest; and that this was the Result of one Meeting: He goes yet further, That pursuant to this it was communicated to those Persons so to be engaged, and the Place and Time was appointed; the Place, Mr. Hambden's House; but is not so positive to the Time, but only to the Place and Persons. He says, all these Persons met, and he gives you an Account, That Mr. Hambden (because it was necessary for some Person to break Silence) gave some short Account of the Design of their Meeting, and made some Reflections upon the Mischiefs that attended the Government, and what Apprehensions many People had upon the late Choice of Sheriffs, and that there had been a Male-Administration of Publick Justice; That it was fit some means should be used to redress these Grievances. He can't tell you positively, what this Man, or that Man, said there; but says, that all did unanimously consent to what was then debated about an Insurrection; and in order to it, they discoursed about the Time, when it should be, and that they thought fit it should be done suddenly, while Men's Minds were wound up to that height, as they then were; and as the first Witness tells you, There was a Consideration, whether it should be at one Place, or at several Places together: He says, then it was taken into Consideration, that this could not be carried on, but there must be Arms and Ammunition provided. The next Step is, about a necessary Concern, the Concern of Money, and therefore our Law calls Money, The Sinews of War. My Lord Howard tells you, That the Duke of Monmouth proposed 25 or 30000 l. That my Lord Grey was to advance 10000 l. out of his own Estate; but then they thought to make their Party more strong by the Assistance of a Discontented People in Scotland, my Lord of Argyle, and Sir John Cockram, and several other People there to joyn with them. That pursuant to this, they all after met at my Lord Russel's, and the same Debate is re-assumed, and among the rest, this particular thing of conciliating a Friendship with the Scotch; the Campbels, my Lord of Argyle, and my Lord Melvin were particularly mentioned. That Col. Sidney took upon himself to find out a Messenger, but it was my Lord Russel's Part to write the Letter; One of the Messengers named to convey the same, was Aaron Smith, he was known, says my Lord Howard, to some of us; and then we all agreed, that Aaron Smith was the most proper Man: Upon this they brake up that very Time. Afterwards comes my Lord Howard to Col. Sidney at some distance of time, and he comes to him, and shews him threescore Guineas, and told him, he was going into the City, and that they were to be given to Aaron Smith. He tells you after this, That he had some other Discourse about a Fortnight or three Weeks after, with Col. Sidney; and that Colonel Sidney did take notice, that he had sent him, and that he had an Account of him, as far as Newcastle. So that 'tis very plain, That it was not sudden and rash Thoughts, it is a little more than, according to the Language we meet with in some Pamphlets of late, more than Heats and Stirs. Gentlemen, Then I must tell you here are Circumstances proved in pursuance of this Design, for Sir Andrew Foster informs you, how that Sir John Cockram and the Campbels, and one Monro, as I take it, came to Town, and that he had Discourse with some of them about their Business of coming out of Scotland; and he says, they pretended it was about Business of some Trade to Carolina, which does still corroborate the Evidence. He tells you likewise, That there being a Noise of discovering the Plot, they begun to hide; Sir John Cockram began to hide, and sculk from place to place; they come first with that Cant in their Mouths, about Carolina; The Messenger Atterbury tells you, When they came to take these Men, how they shuffled from place to place. So, Gentlemen, I must tell you, That if in case there be but one Witness to prove a direct Treason, and another Witness to a Circumstance that contributes to that Treason, that will make two Witnesses to prove the Treason: Because I would explain my Mind, Not long ago all the Judges of England were commanded to meet together, and one that is the Senior of the King's Counsel was pleased to put this Case. If I buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King, and it be proved by one Witness I bought a Knife for this purpose, and another comes and proves, I bought such a Knife of J. S. they are two Witnesses sufficient to prove a Man guilty of High-Treason; and so it was held by all all the Judges of England then preſent, in the preſence of all the King's Counſel. And therefore, Mr. Sidney is mightily miſtaken in the Law: For in caſe of any Treaſon (except the Treaſon at the Bar) or in Treaſon for Clipping and Coining, one Witneſs is ſufficient at this Day. Now, Gentlemen, Suppoſing all this ſhould not be ſufficient, here is a Libel, and it is a moſt Traiterous and Seditious Libel. If you believe, that that was Colonel Sidney's Book, writ by him, no Man can doubt, but it is a ſufficient Evidence, that he is guilty of Compaſſing and Imagining the Death of the King; and let us conſider, what Proof can be greater, than what has been given of it. Mr. Sheppard, an intimate Acquaintance of his, that has ſeen him write, he looks upon the Hand, and ſays, He is extreamly acquainted with the Hand, and ſays he, I believe in my Conſcience, this Book is Colonel Sidney's Hand. Gentlemen, Do you expect Mr. Sidney would call a Witneſs to be by to ſee him write that Book?

In the next Place, you have two Trades-men, Coke and Cary, and they tell you, one had ſeen him write once, the other had ſeen his Hand-writing, and they both believe it his Hand-writing, and they have good reaſon, for they have paid ſeveral Sums of Money, upon Notes which they took, as well as this, to be his Hand-writing. Gentlemen, Beſides that, give me leave to tell you, here is another thing, that makes it more plain. This very Book is found in Colonel Sidney's Houſe, on the Table in his Study, where he uſed to write, by a Gentleman, againſt whom Colonel Sidney can't make the leaſt Objection; and that there was that fairneſs offered by the Gentleman, Pray Colonel put your Seal upon it, that you may ſee, that no Injury be done you; but Mr. Sidney would not do it. Therefore he ſeals them with his own Seal, and carries them to White-Hall, where they were broken open, and ſwears that thoſe Papers were found in his Cloſet, whereof this was one. Another thing which I muſt take notice of to you in this Caſe, is, to mind you, how this Book contains all the Malice, and Revenge, and Treaſon, that Mankind can be guilty of: It fixes the ſole Power in the Parliament and the People; ſo that he carries on the Deſign ſtill, for their Debates at their Meetings were to that purpoſe. And ſuch Doctrines as theſe ſuit with their Debates; for there, a general Inſurrection was deſigned, and that was diſcourſed of in this Book, and incouraged: They muſt not give it an ill Name: It muſt not be called a Rebellion, it being the general Act of the People. The King, it ſays, is reſponſible to them, the King is but their Truſtee; That he had betrayed his Truſt, he had miſgoverned, and now he is to give it up, that they may be all Kings themſelves. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, I think I ought more than ordinarily to preſs this upon you, becauſe I know the Misfortune of the late unhappy Rebellion, and the bringing the late bleſſed King to the Scaffold, was firſt begun by ſuch kind of Principles: They cried, He had betrayed the Truſt that was delegated to him from the People. Gentlemen, in the next Place, becauſe he is afraid their Power alone won't do it, he endeavours to poiſon Men's Judgments; and the way he makes uſe of, he colours it with Religion, and quotes Scripture for it too; and you know, how far that went in the late Times; How we were for binding our King in Chains, and our Nobles in Fetters of Iron. Gentlemen, this is likewiſe made uſe of by him to ſtir up the People to Rebellion. Gentlemen, if in caſe the Priſoner did deſign the Depoſing the King, the removing the King, and if in order thereunto he be guilty of Conſpiring to Levy War; or, as to the Letter writ by my Lord Ruſſel, if he was privy to it, theſe will be Evidences againſt him. So that 'tis not upon two, but 'tis upon greater Evidence than 22, if you believe this Book was writ by him. Next I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, upon, I think, a leſs Teſtimony, an Indictment was preferred againſt the late Lord Ruſſel, and he was thereupon Convicted and Executed; of which they have brought the Record. Theſe are the Evidences for the King.

For the Priſoner, he hath made ſeveral Objections; As that there was no War levied: For that, Gentlemen, at the beginning of the Cauſe, I told you, what I took the Law to be, and I take it to be ſo very plainly. But, Gentlemen, as to the Credibility of my Lord Howard, he offers you ſeveral Circumſtances. Firſt, He offers you a Noble Lord, my Lord Angleſey, who ſays, That he attending my Lord of Bedford, upon the Misfortune of the Impriſonment of his Son; after he had done, my Lord Howard came to ſecond that Part of a Chriſtian's Office, which he had performed, and told him, he had a very good Son, and he knew no harm of him; and as to the Plot, he knew nothing of it. Another Noble Lord, my Lord Clare tells you, That he had ſome Diſcourſe with my Lord Howard, and he ſaid, that if he were accuſed, he thought they would but tell Noſes, and his Buſineſs was done. Then Mr. Philip Howard, he tells you, how he was not ſo intimate with him as others, but he often came to his Brother's; and that he ſhould ſay, he knew nothing of a Plot, nor did he believe any; but at the ſame time, he ſaid, he believed there was a Sham Plot; and then he preſſed him about the Buſineſs of the Addreſs; but that now my Lord of Eſſex was out of Town, and ſo it went off. Another Thing Mr. Sidney took notice of, ſays he 'tis an Act of Revenge in my Lord Howard, for he owes him a Debt, that he does (beſides by his Allegation) does not appear.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, he hath confeſſed it.

L. C. J. Admit it; yet in caſe Colonel Sidney ſhould be Convicted of this Treaſon, the Debt accrues to the King, and he can't be a Farthing the better for it. But how does it look like Revenge? I find my Lord Howard, when he ſpeaks of Colonel Sidney, ſays, he was more beholding to him than any body, and was more ſorry for him; ſo ſays my Lord Clare. Gentlemen, You have it likewiſe offered, that he came to Colonel Sidney's Houſe, and there he was deſirous to have the Plate and Goods removed to his Houſe, and that he would aſſiſt them with his Coach and Coachman to carry them thither; and did affirm, that he knew nothing of the Plot; and did not believe Colonel Sidney knew any thing: And this is likewiſe proved by a couple of Maid-Servants, as well as the Frenchman. You have likewiſe ſomething to the ſame purpoſe ſaid by my Lord Paget, and this is offered to take off the Credibility of my Lord Howard. Do you believe, becauſe my Lord Howard did not tell them, I am in a Conſpiracy to kill the King; therefore he knew nothing of it; he knew theſe Perſons were Men of Honour, and would not be concerned in any ſuch thing. But do you think, becauſe a Man goes about and denies his being in a Plot, therefore he was not in it: Nay, it ſeems ſo far from being an Evidence of his Innocence, that it is an Evidence of his Guilt. What ſhould provoke a Man to diſcourſe after this manner, if he had not apprehenſions of Guilt within himſelf? This is the Teſtimony offered againſt my Lord Howard, in diſparagement of his Evidence. Ay, but further its objected, he is in expectation of a Pardon: And he did ſay, he thought he ſhould not have the King's Pardon till ſuch time as the drudgery of Swearing was over. Why, Gentlemen, I take notice, before this Diſcourſe happened, he Swore the ſame Thing at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal. And I muſt tell you, though it is the Duty of every Man to diſcover all Treaſons; yet I tell you, for a Man to come and Swear himſelf over and over Guilty, in the Face of a Court of Juſtice, may ſeem irkſome, and provoke a Man to give it ſuch an Epithet. 'Tis therefore for his Credit, that he is an unwilling Witneſs: But, Gentlemen, conſider, if theſe things ſhould have been allowed to take away the Credibility of a Witneſs, what would have become of the Teſtimonies that have been given of late Days? What would become of the Evidence of all thoſe that have been ſo profligate in their Lives? Would you have the King's Counſel to call none but Men that were not concerned in this Plot, to prove that they were Plotting? Ay, but Gentlemen, it is further objected, This Hand looks like an old Hand, and it may not be the Priſoner's Hand, but be Counterfeited; and for that there is a Gentleman, who tells you what a dexterous Man he is. He ſays, he believes he could Counterfeit any Hand in half an Hour; 'tis an ugly temptation, but I hope he hath more Honour than to make uſe of that Art, he ſo much glories in. But what time could there be for the Counterfeiting of this Book? Can you imagine that Sir Philip Lloyd through the Bag Sealed up did it? Or who elſe can you imagine ſhould, or, does the Priſoner pretend, did write this Book? So that as on one Side, God forbid, but we ſhould be careful of Men's Lives, ſo on the other Side, God forbid, that Flouriſhes and Varniſh ſhould come to indanger the Life of the King, and the Deſtruction of the Government. But, Gentlemen, We are not to anticipate you in Point of Fact, I have according to my Memory recapitulated the Matters given in Evidence. It remains purely in you now, whether you do believe upon the whole Matter, that the Priſoner is Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof he is Indicted.

is

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Gentlemen, 'Tis fit you ſhould have our Opinions; in all the Points of Law we concur with my Lord Chief Juſtice: Says Colonel Sidney, here is a mighty Conſpiracy, but there is nothing comes of it, who muſt we thank for that? None but the Almighty Providence: One of themſelves was troubled in Conſcience, and comes and diſcovers it; had not Keeling diſcovered it, God knows whether we might have been alive at this Day.

Then the Jury withdrew, and in about half an Hour's time returned, and brought the Priſoner in, Guilty.

And the Lieutenant of the Tower took away his Priſoner.

Monday 26. Nov. 1683. Algernone Sidney Eſquire was brought up to the Bar of the Court of King's-bench, to receive his Sentence.

L. C. J. MR. Attorney, will you move any thing?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar is convicted of High Treaſon, I demand Judgment againſt him.

Cl. of Crown. Algernone Sidney, Hold up thy Hand (which he did) Thou haſt been Indicted of High Treaſon, and thereupon arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not Guilty, and for thy Tryal, put thy ſelf upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey has found thee Guilty, What can'ſt thou ſay for thy ſelf, Why Judgment of Death ſhould not be given againſt thee, and Execution awarded according to Law?

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I humbly conceive, I have had no Tryal, I was to be try'd by my Countrey, I do not find my Countrey in the Jury that did try me, There were ſome of them that were not Freeholders, I think, my Lord, there is neither Law nor Preſident of any Man that has been tried by a Jury, upon an Indictment laid in a Countrey, that were not Freeholders. So I do humbly conceive, That I have had no Tryal at all, and if I have had no Tryal, there can be no Judgment.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, You had the Opinion of the Court in that Matter before: We were unanimous in it, for it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, in the Caſe next preceeding yours, though that was a Caſe relating to Corporations, but they were of Opinion, That by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Tryal of Treaſon was put as it was at Common-Law, and that there was no ſuch Challenge at Common-Law.

Col. Sidney. Under favour, my Lord, I preſume in ſuch a Caſe as this, of Life, and for what I know concerns every Man in England, you will give me a Day and Counſel to argue it.

L. C. J. 'Tis not in the Power of the Court to do it.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I deſire the Indictment againſt me may be read.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. To what purpoſe?

Col. Sidney. I have ſomewhat to ſay to it.

L. C. J. Well, read the Indictment.

Then the Clerk of the Crown read the Indictment.

Col. Sidney. Pray Sir, will you give me leave to ſee it, if it pleaſe you.

L. C. J. No, that we cannot do.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, there is one thing then that makes this abſolutely void, it deprives the King of his Title, which is Treaſon by Law, Defenſor Fidei. There is no ſuch thing there, if I heard right.

L. C. J. In that you would deprive the King of his Life, that is in very full I think.

Col. Sidney. If no body would deprive the King no more than I, he would be in no danger. Under favour theſe are Things not to be over-ruled in Point of Life ſo eaſily.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, We very well underſtand our Duty, we don't need to be told by you what our Duty is, we tell you nothing but what is Law, and if you make Objections that are immaterial, we muſt overrule them. Don't think that we overrule in your Caſe that we would not over-rule in all Mens Caſes in your Condition. The Treaſon is ſufficiently lay'd.

Col. Sidney. My Lord I conceive this too, that thoſe Words, that are ſaid to be written in the Paper, that there is nothing of Treaſon in them; Beſides, that there was nothing at all proved of them, only by ſimilitude of hands, which upon the Caſe I alledge to your Lordſhip, was not to be admitted in a Criminal Caſe. Now 'tis eaſy to call a thing Proditorie; but yet let the nature of the things be examined, I put my ſelf upon it, that there is no Treaſon in it.

L. C. J. There is not a Line in the Book ſcarce, but what is Treaſon.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I believe you don't believe it Treaſon.

L. C. J. That is the worſt part of your Caſe; When Men are riveted in Opinion, that Kings may be depoſed, that they are accountable to their People, that a general Inſurrection is no Rebellion, and juſtify it, 'tis high time, upon my Word, to call them to Account.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, the other Day I had a Book, wherein I had King James's Speech, upon which all that is there, is grounded in his own Speech to the Parliament in 1603. and there is nothing in theſe Papers, which is called a Book, though it never appeared, for if it were true, it was only Papers found in a private Man's Study, never ſhewed to any body; and Mr. Attorney takes this to bring it to a Crime, in order to ſome other Counſel, and this was to come out ſuch a time, when the Inſurrection brake out. My Lord, There is one Perſon I did not know where to find then, but every body knows where to find now, that is the Duke of Monmouth; if there had been any thing in Conſultation, by this means to bring any thing about, he muſt have known of it, for it muſt be taken to be in Proſecution of thoſe Deſigns of his: And if he will ſay there ever was any ſuch thing, or knew any thing of it, I will acknowledge whatever you pleaſe.

L. C. J. That is over; you were Tried for this Fact: We muſt not ſend for the Duke of Monmouth.

Col. Sidney. I humbly think I ought, and deſire to be heard upon it.

L. C. J. Upon what?

Col. Sidney. If you will call it a Tryal——

L. C. J. I do. The Law calls it ſo.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. We muſt not hear ſuch Diſcourſes, after you have been Tried here, and the Jury have given their Verdict; as if you had not Juſtice done you.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. I think it was a very fair Tryal.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I deſire, That you would hear my Reaſons; why I ſhould be brought to a new Tryal.

L. C. J. That can't be.

Col. Sidney. Be the Tryal what it will?

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make an Oyes.

Col. Sidney. Can't I be heard, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, If you will ſpeak that which is proper; 'tis a ſtrange thing. You ſeem to appeal as if you had ſome great Hardſhip upon you. I am ſure, I can as well appeal as you. I am ſure you had all the Favour ſhewed you, that ever any Priſoner had. The Court heard you with Patience, when you ſpake what was proper; but if you begin to Arraign the Juſtice of the Nation, it concerns the Juſtice of the Nation to prevent you: We are bound by our Conſciences and our Oaths to ſee Right done to you; and though we are Judges upon Earth, we are accountable to the Judge of Heaven and Earth; and we act according to our Conſciences, though we don't act according to your Opinion.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I ſay. In the firſt Place I was brought to Weſtminſter by Habeas Corpus, the 7*th* of this Month, granted the Day before I was to be Arraigned, when yet no Bill was exhibited againſt me; and my Proſecutors could not know it would be found, unleſs they had a Correſpondence with the Grand Jury, which under Favour ought not to have been had.

L. C. J. We know nothing of it: You had as good tell us of ſome bodies Ghoſt, as you did at the Tryal.

Col. Sidney. I told you of two infamous Perſons that had acted my Lord Ruſſel's Ghoſt.

L. C. J. Go on, if you have any thing elſe.

Col. Sidney. I prayed a Copy of the Indictment, making my Objections againſt it, and putting in a ſpecial Plea, which the Law I humbly conceive allowed me: The help of Counſel to frame it was denied.

L. C. J. For the Copy of the Indictment, it was denied in the Caſe you cited. This Favour ſhewed you to Day, was denied at any time to Sir Henry Vane, that is, to have the Indictment read in Latin. Don't ſay on the other Side, we refuſed your Plea. I told you, have a care of putting it in. If the Plea was ſuch as Mr. Attorney did demur to it: I told you, you were anſwerable for the Conſequences of it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. We told you, you might put it in, but you muſt put it in at your Peril.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, I would have put it in.

L. C. J. I did advertiſe you: If you put in a Plea, upon your Peril be it. I told you, We are bound by Law to give you that fair Advertiſement vertiſement of the great Danger you would fall under, if it were not a good Plea.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, my Plea was that could never hurt me.

L. C. J. We do not know that.

Col. Sidney. I deſire, my Lord, this, that it may be conſidered, That, being brought here to my Tryal, I did deſire a Copy of my Indictment, upon the Statute of 46 Edw. 3. which does allow it to all Men in all Caſes.

L. C. J. I tell you the Law is otherwiſe, and told you ſo then, and tell you ſo now.

Col. Sidney. Your Lordſhip did not tell me, That was not a Law.

L. C. J. Unleſs there be a Law particular for Col. Sidney. If you have any more to ſay——

Col. Sidney. I am probably informed, and, if your Lordſhip will give me time, ſhall be able to prove it, That the Jury was not ſummoned, as it ought to be: My Lord, if this Jury was not ſummoned by the Bayliff, according to the ordinary way, but they were agreed upon by the Under-Sheriff, Graham and Burton, I deſire to know whether that be a good Jury?

L. C. J. We can take notice of nothing, but what is upon the Record: Here is a Return by the Sheriff; if there had been any indirect means uſed with the Sheriff, or any elſe, you ſhould have mentioned it before they were ſworn.

Col. Sidney. Is there any thing in the World more irregular than that?

L. C. J. I know nothing of it. That time is paſt.

Col. Sidney. Now, my Lord, All Men are admitted on the Jury.

L. C. J. Why, You did not like Gentlemen, and now you don't like thoſe that you had. In plain Engliſh, if any Jury had found you Guilty, it had been the ſame thing. It had been a good Summons, if they had acquitted you.

Col. Sidney. When the Jury, thus compoſed, was ſworn, four Witneſſes, of whom three were under the Terror of Death for Treaſons, were produc'd againſt me. And they confeſſed themſelves guilty of Crimes of which I had no Knowledge, and told Stories by hear-ſay. And your Lordſhip did promiſe in ſumming up the Evidence, that the Jury ſhould be informed what did reach me, and what not, and I don't remember that was done.

L. C. J. I did it particularly, I think I was as careful of it as poſſible I could be.

Col. Sidney. My Lord Howard being the only Witneſs, that ſaid any thing againſt me; Papers, which were ſaid to be found in my Houſe were produced as another Witneſs, and no other Teſtimony given concerning them, but that the Hand was like unto mine. No Man can ſay, I read them, or ſhew'd them to any Man. None knew when they were written; The Ink ſhewed, they had been done many, and perhaps 20 or 30, Years. Yea, ſome Paſſages were read out of them, without examining what went before and after, when I deſired the whole might be read, it was refuſed, unleſs I ſpecified the Paſſage, which I could not do, knowing not one Word in them. When I alledged, that in Criminal Caſes Similitude of Hands could not be taken for Evidence, propoſed my Points of Law concerning Conſtructive Treaſon, &c. And I did conceive, that no Court under the Parliament could be Judges of it, and did deſire the Statute, which did ſo enact it, might be read, it could not be obtained: And I cited many Judgments in Parliament.

L. C. J. Mr. Sidney, If you arraign the Juſtice of the Nation ſo, as tho' we had denied you the Methods of Juſtice, I muſt tell you, you do what does not become you, for we denied you nothing that ought to have been granted. If we had granted you leſs, I think we had done more our Duty. What Points of Law do you mean?

Col. Sidney. That of Conſtructive Treaſon, my Lord.

L. C. J. We do not go upon Conſtructive Treaſon, 'tis plain Treaſon within 25 Edw. 3.

Col. Sidney. Is Writing an Act?

L. C. J. Yes, 'tis agere.

Proclamation made for Silence.

Mr. Bamfield. Sir, I pray you to hear me one Word as Amicus Curiæ, I humbly ſuppoſe that your Lordſhip will not give Judgment if there be a material Defect in the Indictment, as the Clerk did read it he left out Defenſor fidei, which is part of the Style of His Majeſty.

L. C. J. We have heard of it already, we thank you for your Friendſhip, and are ſatisfied. Mr. Sidney, there remains nothing for the Court, but to diſcharge their Duty, in pronouncing that Judgment the Law requires to be pronounced againſt all Perſons Convicted of High-Treaſon; and, I muſt tell you, that tho' you ſeem to arraign the Juſtice of the Court, and the Proceeding——

Col. Sidney. I muſt appeal to God and the World, I am not heard.

L. C. J. Appeal to whom you will. I could wiſh with all my Heart, inſtead of Appealing to the World, as tho' you had received ſomething extream hard in your Caſe, that you would Appeal to the Great God of Heaven, and conſider the Guilt you have contracted by the great Offence you have committed. I wiſh with all my heart, you would conſider your Condition, but if your own Ingenuity will not provoke you, nothing, I can ſay, will prevail with you to do it, if the King's General Pardon, in which you had ſo great a ſhare of the King's Mercy, will not. I could wiſh, that, as a Gentleman and as a Chriſtian, you would conſider, under what particular Obligations you lye to that Gracious King, that hath done much more for you. I ſhould have thought it would have wrought in you ſuch a Temper of Mind, as to have turned the reſt of your Life into a generous Acknowledgment of his Bounty and Mercy, and not into a State of conſtant Combining and Writing, not only to deſtroy Him, but to ſubvert the Government; and I am ſorry to ſee you ſo earneſt in the Juſtification of the Book, in which there is ſcarce a Line, but what contains the rankeſt Treaſon, ſuch as Depoſing the King: It not only encourages, but juſtifies all Rebellion. Mr. Sidney, you are a Gentleman of Quality, and need no Counſel from me: If I could give you any, my Charity to your Immortal Soul would provoke me to it. I pray God ſeaſon this Affliction to you. There remains nothing with the Court, but to Pronounce that Judgment that is expected, and the Law requires, and therefore the Judgment of the Court is,

That you be carried hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you ſhall be drawn upon an Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you ſhall be hanged by the Neck, and, being alive, cut down; your Privy Members ſhall be cut off, and burned before your Face, your Head ſevered from your Body, and your Body divided into four Quarters, and they to be diſpoſed at the Pleaſure of the King. And the God of infinite Mercy have mercy upon your Soul.

Col. Sidney. Then, O God, O God, I beſeech thee to ſanctify theſe Sufferings unto me, and impute not my Blood to the Country, nor the City, thro' which I am to be drawn; Let no Inquiſition be made for it, but if any, and the ſhedding of Blood that is innocent, muſt be revenged, Let the Weight of it fall only upon thoſe, that maliciouſly perſecute me for Righteouſneſs ſake.

L. C. J. I pray God work in you a Temper fit to go unto the other World, for I ſee you are not fit for this.

Col. Sidney. My Lord, feel my Pulſe, (holding out his Hand) and ſee if I am diſorder'd, I bleſs God, I never was in better Temper than I am now.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower carried back his Priſoner.

His Attainder was Reverſed in Parliament the 1*ſt* of W. and M.

The TRYAL of John Hambden, Eſq;

The 28*th Day of* November, 1683. Ann. 35 Car. 2. Reg. John Hambden, Eſq; being brought up by Writ of Habeas Corpus, from the Tower of London, and there being an Indictment preferred againſt him for Miſdemeanor, His Majeſty's Attorney General prayed that he might be Arraigned upon it, which was done in this manner.

Cl. of Cr. JOhn Hambden, You ſtand here Indicted by the Name of John Hambden, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. For that you being a pernicious and ſeditious Man, and a Perſon of a wicked Mind, and of an impious, unquiet, and turbulent Diſpoſition, and contriving, practiſing, and falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, maliciouſly, turbulently, and ſeditiouſly intending the Peace of our Sovereign Lord King Charles that now is, and the common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb, and, as much as in you lay, Sedition within this Kingdom of England to incite, ſtir up, and procure, and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King in this Kingdom of England into danger to bring: And that you the ſaid John Hambden, your moſt impious, wicked, and ſeditious Intentions aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect, and bring to effect, the laſt Day of June, in the Five and thirtieth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is; and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, with Force and Arms, &c. At the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, unlawfully, unjuſtly, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly did aſſemble your ſelf, meet, Conſult, Conſpire, and Confederate with divers evil diſpoſed Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King to the Jurors unknown, and with the ſaid Perſons did treat concerning your ſaid moſt wicked and ſeditious Compaſſings, Imaginations, and Purpoſes aforeſaid, to be executed, fulfilled, and brought to effect; and further that you the ſaid John Hambden, your moſt wicked, impious, and ſeditious Contrivances, Practices and Intentions aforeſaid to fulfil, perfect, and reduce to effect, then and there, viz. the laſt Day of June in the 35*th Year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, with Force and Arms,* &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly did Conſult, Conſent, Conſpire and Confederate of an Inſurrection within this Kingdom of England to be made, and of procuring and providing Arms and Armed Men to be prepared in divers Places within this Kingdom of England your ſame moſt wicked, impious and ſeditious Intentions and Compaſſings aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect: And that you the ſaid John Hambden, your moſt wicked, impious, and ſeditious Intentions aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect, and bring to effect afterwards, viz. the laſt Day of June, in the 35*th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, with Force and Arms,* &c. falſly, unlawfully, unjuſtly, wickedly, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly did Conſult, Agree, and Conſent that a certain Perſon to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, ſhould be ſent into Scotland to invite and incite divers evil diſpoſed Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, of his Kingdom of Scotland, to come into this Kingdom of England to Adviſe and Conſult with you the ſaid John Hambden, and others the aforeſaid evil diſpoſed Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King in this Kingdom of England, concerning Aid and Aſſiſtance to be expected and ſupplied out of the ſaid Kingdom of Scotland, your ſaid moſt wicked, impious, and ſeditious Intentions and Compaſſings aforeſaid to fulfil, effect, and promote, in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and moſt pernicious Example of all others in the like caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay'ſt thou, Art thou Guilty of this High Miſdemeanor whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraigned, or not Guilty?

Mr. Hambden. Not Guilty.

Upon which Plea Iſſue was joined between His Majeſty's Attorney General, on behalf of the King and Defendant, and Bail was then taken for the Defendant's Appearance the next Term.

Hillary Term 35 and 36 Car. 2*di* Reg. In the beginning of the Term, Sir Thomas Jenner, Knight, His Majeſty's Serjeant at Law, and Recorder of the City of London, moved for a Tryal at the Bar, in the Caſe between the King and Mr. Hambden, which was by the Court appointed to be on Wedneſday the 6th of February in the ſame Term.

Die Mercurii 6 Februarii, 1683. Anno Regni Regis Caroli Secundi 36.

Cl. of Cr. CALL the Defendant John Hambden.

Mr. Williams. He appears.

Cl. of Cr. Gardez votrez Challenges. Call Sir Charles Gerard.

Cryer. You ſhall well and truly try the Iſſue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and John Hambden, Gent. and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence, So help you God.

Sir Charles Gerard, Jur'

Cl. of Cr.

Roger Jennings, Eſq; Jur'
Henry Hodges, Eſq; Jur'
Joſhua Galliard, Eſq;

Mr. Williams. We challenge him for the Defendant.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. What is your Cauſe of Challenge?

Mr. Williams. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to let him go through the Pannel, we will ſhew Cauſe if there be not enough left without him.

L. C. J. No, Shew your Cauſe now, it being againſt the King.

Mr. Williams. He has an Employment under the King, he has an Office in the Foreſt, and that we ſay is our Cauſe of Challenge.

L C. J. What then if he have?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We ſuppoſe then he is not an indifferent Perſon to try this Cauſe.

L. C. J. Ay, Let me hear that now proved and defended by any Gentleman of the long Robe, that That is a good Cauſe of Challenge. Shew me what Law there is for it.

Mr. Williams. To be of the King's Robe, or Pay, or Salary, is an Exception in any Caſe wherein the King is concerned.

L. C. J. Shew me any Law for that if you can, Mr. Williams, I know you are a Lawyer.

Mr. Wallop. It is the Opinion of my Lord Coke in his Inſtitutes, that it is a good Cauſe of Challenge.

L. C. J. But there is the Opinion of all the Judges in Henry IV's Time againſt it.

Mr. Wallop. It is, my Lord, fol. 156.

L. C. J. But I can cite you three or four Books, and you have them all together in Roll's Abridgment, Title Challenge, where he ſets down four Books one after another, That it is no Cauſe of Challenge, even to be the King's Tenant, and there is a great deal of reaſon for it. For if that were a good Cauſe of Challenge, mark the Conſequence, then all Perſons that hold Lands in England hold them mediately or immediately of the King, and ſo the King could have no Freeholders to be Jury-men in his Cauſe.

Mr. Williams. This is a more ſpecial Cauſe of Challenge than that.

L. C. J. What can be greater than that of being the King's Tenant?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Eſpecially when all the Land of England was held of the Crown, as originally it was.

Mr. Trever. My Lord in 2d Rolls 646. Tit. Tryals, There is the expreſs Opinion of my Lord Rolls, that to be of the Livery, or a menial Servant of the Crown, is a good Cauſe of Challenge.

L. C J. And look you but in the 1ſt Caſe in the 1ſt Part of the Abridgment, Title Challenges, where he mentions three or four Books to the ſame purpoſe, and 'tis quite otherwiſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, In that of 1ſt Rolls, he only cites ſome Books, but the other is his own Opinion.

L. C. J. Well, make out your Fact if you have a mind to it; but it is well known, that neither Mr. Serjeant Rolls, nor my Lord Coke, when he delivered that Opinion, are to be reckoned ſuch Authorities in Crown-matters.

Mr. Williams. We will ask him, my Lord, if you pleaſe, I ſuppoſe he will not deny it.

L. C. J. No, make out your Fact if you will have any Benefit by it, 'tis only a Challenge to the Favour, which ought not to be in the King's Caſe. I am very glad that we are now to debate this Matter with Men of the Robe, becauſe we have had a ſtrange ſort of Notions and Reflections ſpread abroad of late, as tho' the the Judges now-a-days gave ſtrange ſort of Opinions, and as tho' Perſons that had been Blemiſhes at the Bar, were preferred to do ſtrange things when they came upon the Bench; but truly I wonder to hear that it ſhould be a Doubt, when at the ſame time that which we gave as our Opinion about one particular Challenge, that is as to Freeholders, it was the Judgment of all the Judges, that That was no Challenge, and all the Counſel that were concerned in that Caſe know it was the Opinion of all the Judges. But now if we meet with Lawyers, I ſhall be glad to have the Matter fairly argued and debated, and pray ſhew me what Law or Reaſon is for it.

Mr. Wallop. Certainly, my Lord, there is a great difference betwixt the general Allegiance of all Men, and ſo of a general Tenure, and the Dependance of any particular Perſon who is a menial Servant, and receives Wages of the King.

L. C. J. I would deſire to know of you, Mr. Wallop, which is the greater Challenge, to ſay ſuch a one is Tenant, or ſuch a one is immediate Servant to J. S?

Mr. Wallop. There is a great difference, my Lord, I think, between an immediate Tenant, and the general Tenure of all Subjects.

L. C. J. But certainly the Law is thus, if he were an immediate or a mediate Tenant to any but the King, if his Lord were Party to the Suit it would be a good Challenge, but the being Tenant to the King is no good Challenge in the King's Caſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I take it, the Act of Parliament that takes away the Court of Wards and Liveries hath altered the Law as to that Matter of Tenure; for now we hold in Socage, and that other Tenure is deſtroyed that was between the King and his Subjects.

L. C. J. But pray how comes it to be a Challenge now that was not one before? Does that Act of Parliament make it a good Cauſe of Challenge? If it does, ſhew it. I tell you the Old Books are againſt it.

Mr. Williams. I ſpeak, my Lord, to the Tenure, that That is nothing at all now to be objected, becauſe all is now in Socage.

L. C. J. I would not have Mr. Attorney inſiſt upon a Jury man, but yet with-all I would not have it gone away with as Law, that it is a good Cauſe of Challenge.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, We finding in ſome Caſes that are in our Books, that it is held to be a good Cauſe of Challenge, lay it before the Court.

Mr. At. Gen. How many hundred Errors do you find in my Lord Coke, notwithſtanding all his Learning?

L. C. J. I ſay, if I was Mr. Attorney, I would not conteſt for any particular Man to be a Jury-man, I ſpeak that as my Advice, but I would not have it taken for Law, nor would I have it broached abroad, that tho' the Judges now were of one Opinion, yet the Law truly was of another.

Mr. Jones. If all that receive Salary, or Wages from the King, are not to be Jury-men in the King's Cauſes, then all the Deputy Lieutenants and Militia Officers, which generally are the moſt ſubſtantially Freeholders, are excluded from being Jury-men.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Who will ſay ſo, Mr. Jones? No Lawyer in England ſurely will ſay ſo.

Mr. Williams. Offices where there is no Profit, will not be the ſame Exception.

Mr. At. Gen. But he is no menial Servant of the King's.

Mr. Williams. What is he then?

Mr. Wallop. We hear that he is Keeper of one of the King's Foreſts, and has a Fee for it.

Mr. Williams. Well, we will ask him upon a voyer dire.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, The Fact is quite otherwiſe, and I deſire they may make it out.

L. C. J. Truly, I think 'tis not tanti to inſiſt upon any particular Man, but I find we are in an Age that is ſo full of Cavils, that if we act but according to the Precedents that went before us, we are thought to act as Originals, and to make new Laws, when we only follow the Rules that we have received from our Predeceſſors. And I ſay there was no ſuch Challenge at Common Law, that ever I read of in any of our Books, nor is it any Challenge by the beſt Authorities extant.

Mr. Jones. I deſire them to ſhew me any ſuch Preſident, That any Man was challenged by one that was tried at the Suit of the King, for a Challenge to the Favour, but we muſt do unprecedented things, or elſe there will be no ſatisfying of ſome Men.

Mr. At. Gen. I would fain know, what one Opinion in a ſtragling Book is againſt the Current of all our Law?

Mr. Williams. Which do you call a ſtragling Book, Mr. Attorney? My Lord Coke's Inſtitutes, or my Lord Roll's Abridgment?

L. C. J. I ſay the better Opinion of the Books is on the other ſide, and the greater number too.

Mr. At. Gen. Firſt of all, I do know of my own Knowledge, he is no menial Servant.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I do debate it for Learning ſake, truly I know not the Man, nor whether he be the King's Servant, or not, but I ſpeak againſt allowing the Challenge, that if he be ſet aſide, it may not be taken as a Precedent, and ſo paſs for Law that the King's Servants can't be Jury-men. I would have you quit the Man by Conſent, but not as a Forceput, as tho' the Law were ſo, for the Law, I think, is otherwiſe.

Mr. At. Gen. He is none, my Lord, they miſtake.

L. C. J. Nay, I know nothing of the Man, I tell you only what I think.

Mr. Wallop. He receives Wages, or a Fee from the King for his Office.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I would never, for my part, while I live, nor never did, while I was a Practiſer, ſtand upon any particular Jury-man.

Mr. At. Gen. He may be a Jury-man by Law ſure.

L. C. J. There is no doubt of it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, If your Lordſhips have given your Opinion, I deſire he may ſtand by.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney waves him, Let him ſtand by.

Mr. At. Gen. But for no Reaſon that has been offered.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. No, No, I don't hear any thing of Reaſon offered for it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You know our Opinions already, Mr. Williams, unleſs Mr. Attorney conſent, we can't do it.

Mr. Williams. We only acquaint Mr. Attorney with it, we muſt ſubmit to your Rule, he is certainly Serjeant at Arms, he came in the Place of Dereham that let my Lord Grey eſcape.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray prove it, I don't know it for my ſhare.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, You that are ſworn, hearken to your Charge. The Defendant John Hambden ſtands indicted by the Name of John Hambden, of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) —— To this Indictment he has pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal puts himſelf upon the Country, and the King's Attorney General likewiſe, which Country you are, your Charge is to inquire whether the Defendant be guilty of the great Miſdemeanor whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to ſay ſo; and if you find him not guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence in uſual Form.

Mr. Holloway. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and Gentlemen, you that are ſworn, I am of Counſel for the King upon this Indictment. Gentlemen, the Indictment ſets forth, that the Defendant being a ſeditious, malicious, evil diſpoſed Perſon, and ſeditiouſly and maliciouſly intending to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, the laſt Day of June, in the 35th Year of his now Majeſty's Reign, and divers other Days and Times, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in your County, did unlawfully aſſemble, and confederate himſelf with divers evil diſpoſed Perſons, Subjects of our Lord the King, and then and there, with thoſe other Perſons did falſly, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly Conſult and Conſpire to make an Inſurrection in the Kingdom of England, and to provide Arms and Armed Men in divers Places of the ſaid Kingdom. And the better to compleat his evil Intentions, the ſaid laſt Day of June, did Conſult and Agree to ſend certain Perſons, to the Jurors unknown, into Scotland, to invite ſeveral evil diſpoſed Perſons there to joyn in this Conſpiracy. This is the Subſtance of the Charge, and to this he ſays, He is not Guilty; If we prove him ſo, we do not queſtion but you will find it.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Mr. Hambden ſtands indicted of an High Miſdemeanour, for Conſpiring with ſeveral others, to raiſe Rebellion within the Kingdom, and to crave the Aſſiſtance of the Brotherhood of Scotland. Upon the Face of the Indictment, Gentlemen, it appears to be a very High Crime, and the Matter of this indeed has been formerly in Examination in other Tryals, and yet the Party you may obſerve do not acquieſce in thoſe Tryals, but think the Perſons accuſed lay under very great Hardſhips, and that to a very great degree, as not having the Advantage of Counſel, nor to have their Witneſſes examined upon Oath; and therefore, Gentlemen, the King is pleaſed to go leſs in this Caſe than in the others, That this Gentleman, who is now before the Court, may clear his Innocence, if he has any Witneſſes to do it. And if there be any Advantage that the having of Counſel can contribute to his Cauſe he has that allowed him too.

The Courſe of our Evidence, Gentlemen, will be this.

We ſhall prove to you that Mr. Hambden, with five other Perſons (I ſhall name them) the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Sidney, my Lord of Eſſex, and my Lord Howard, they met ſeveral times (the Particulars we ſhall give you an Account of) one was at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, another was at my Lords Ruſſel's, where they did contrive together, and took upon them to be a Junto, or a Council of Six, collected out of the wiſeſt Men of the Kingdom, to conſider how they they might better the Affairs of the Nation, and how they might make a Stir: For they thought there was no way poſſible otherwiſe of doing it, but by their joint Counſels to carry on a Riſing. And that they might do it the better, they reſolved to crave the Aſſiſtance of Scotland. Gentlemen, We ſhall give you an Account of their Conſults and Debates, and ſhall ſhew you, that at length they came to a Reſolution, That the riſing was to be carried on jointly in London, and the ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom, in ſeveral Countries at once. Then they came to think, and conſider whether it were not beſt to ſend into Scotland, to draw them in too. And thereupon it was agreed by this Junćto, That they would ſend thither, and the Management of it was committed to Mr. Sidney, to ſend ſome fit Perſon into Scotland, to treat with the Male-Contents there; and the better to carry on this joint Deſign, ſome of them were to come up to London. And they were to have a Pretence to treat about going to Carolina, and the purchaſing ſome Shares in the Plantation there, of which my Lord Shaftsbury was a chief Governour. We ſhall prove to you, Gentlemen, beſides all that I have opened, That the Perſon to whom that Truſt was committed, Mr. Sidney, according to the Duty that he had taken upon him, does employ one Aaron Smith, which all that know him, do know him to be a fit Engine for ſuch Counſellors, and a fit Inſtrument for ſuch a Conſpiracy. We ſhall prove he actually was in Scotland, and that he went into Scotland upon this Errand. And then we ſhall prove, That thoſe Gentlemen that were ſent to, and were the Perſons named in their Conſults to be treated with, came here ſoon after to Town, and as ſoon as ever this Plot was diſcovered, they fled and abſconded themſelves. Gentlemen, If we ſhall prove all this Matter to you, I think it will be without any Queſtion clear, that this Gentleman is notoriouſly Guilty of this High Miſdemeanour. And indeed, if your obſerve it, one of the Perſons has given Judgment againſt himſelf, the Earl of Eſſex. But the Party have been ſo diligent and officious as to fling that upon the Government; but that Matter we ſhall have before the Court in Judgment to morrow. For two of the others they have received the Judgment of the Law; for two more of them the King has been pleaſed to take them into his Mercy; the one is my Lord Howard, who is ſummon'd to appear here to Day; the other is the Duke of Monmouth, who has confeſſed all this Matter, and has taken his Pardon, and we have Summoned him alſo to be here this Day; that the World, if they will have their Eyes opened (I mean the diſcontented World) may ſee there is nothing ſought, but the Peace and Quieting of the Kingdom.

Gentlemen, If we prove all this Matter to you, I ſhall be glad to hear the Defence of the Counſel, and the Defence made by Witneſſes upon Oath.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, and firſt we begin with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. At. Gen. Call James Duke of Monmouth.

Cryer. James Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. At. Gen. Call him again.

Cryer. James Duke of Monmouth.

L. C. J. Was he ſerved with a Subpœna?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will prove we have ſerved him in all Places where he was like to be met with; That we left Subpœna's with his Servants, who promiſed to deliver them to him.

L. C. J. Prove it.

Mr. At. Gen. Where is Mr. Atterbury? Swear him (which was done.) Pray will you give the Court an Account, whether you did ſerve the Duke of Monmouth with any Subpœna? In what Places you were to ſerve him, and who you left it with?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, On Friday laſt was Seven-night, I was commanded by Mr. Attorney General, to carry a Subpœna to ſerve upon the Duke of Monmouth, and to go to his Houſe at Moor Parke, where it was generally diſcourſed he was. I did go and take a Subpœna from Mr. Burton, by Mr. Attorney's Order, and went to the Duke's Houſe at Moor Parke. When I came there, the outward Gate was locked, and I went to an Houſe where the Keys are kept, and having got the Keys, I went down to the Houſe, and I ſaw there one of his Servants fothering of Cattle; and coming up to him, I asked him if the Duke of Monmouth was in the Houſe? He told me, he could not well tell, whether he was or not, but he thought he was gone to London, for he ſaw the Calaſh, and 5 or 6 Horſemen with it, and they ſaid in the Houſe, that it was the Duke that was gone to London. I asked if there were any Servants that were nearer to his Grace in the Houſe, that I might ſpeak with? They ſaid, Yes, there was the Houſe-keeper or Steward, one Mr. Rawkins, that attended upon the Duke. I deſired to ſpeak with him, and he came out to me; I asked him if the Duke was there? He ſeemed to be unwilling to give me an Anſwer. I asked him the ſecond time; but he did not ſay he was, or he was not. I told him then, I had a Subpœna, which I brought with me by Mr. Attorney General's Order, to ſerve upon his Grace, which was to require him to attend here this Day, to teſtify his Knowledge, in a Caſe between the King and Mr. Hambden. He told me, Sir, ſaid he, give me your Subpœna, and I will take care the Duke ſhall have it. He took it of me, and I came back to London preſently. As ſoon as I came to Town, I had a ſecond Subpœna given me to ſerve upon his Grace, with which I went to the Duke's Houſe at the Cockpit.

When I came there, I ſpake with the Porter, I think his Name is Johnſon (but the Porter he is, and I remember him a Servant there many Years) I asked him, if the Duke were there? He told me he did not lodge there. I told him I had a Subpœna to ſerve upon his Grace to appear as this Day, the ſame as I ſaid at Moor Park. Says he, Mr. Atterbury, I will take care the Duke have it to Night, or to morrow Morning early.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Atterbury. It was of the ſame Day, Friday was ſeven-night laſt. I was told afterwards by one that I met with, that the Duke did lodge at Mr. Row's Houſe, who is a Servant to the Duke, one of his Gentleman. He lives in the Pall-Mall, 'tis either his Houſe or his Lodging, but they call it his Houſe. I had a third Subpœna given me to the ſame effect. And when I came there, I asked for the Duke, and a Woman came to the Door, Mrs. Manley (I think they call her) ſhe ſeemed to make little Anſwer to what I ſaid. Said I, Pray will you give this Subpœna to the Duke, or to Mr. Row to give it the Duke. She took it of me, and ſaid, ſhe would give it Mr. Row certainly to give to the Duke. And yeſterday, or the Day before, I met Mr. Row at White-Hall, and ſays he to me, Mr. Atterbury, you brought a Subpœna to my Houſe a little while ago? Yes, Sir, ſaid I, I did, had you it? Yes I had the Subpœna, ſays he. Then ſays I, I hope you gave the Duke it? To that he made me no anſwer, but nodded his Head, and ſmiled, and went away.

to

L. C. J. Now call his Grace again.

Cryer. James Duke of Monmouth. [But he did not appear.

Mr. At. Gen. Call William Lord Howard. (Who was in the Court) Pray ſwear my Lord Howard. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Howard, Pray will you be pleaſed to give the Court and the Jury an Account, what you know of any Meeting by the Gentleman that is now accuſed, and the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, your ſelf and others, and when? Tell what you know?

Lord Howard. My Lord, in January laſt was 12 Month, about the midſt of January I was called out by Colonel Sidney, being then in my Lodgings in Southampton ſtreet, and carried by him to Mr. Hambden's Houſe, I do not know what they call the Street, but the ſame ſide of the way with the Fine Houſe that is in Bloomeſbury——

Mr. Jones. By my Lord Mountague's Houſe that now is, you mean?

Lord Howard. Yes, of the ſame ſide of the way. When I came there, there was my Lord Ruſſel, and the Duke of Monmouth, Colonel Sidney and I went together, Mr. Hambden was then in the Room where they were. Afterwards came in my Lord of Eſſex, this made up Six. When they were there, we fell into Diſcourſes——

Mr. At. Gen. Pray my Lord, before you come to tell the particular Diſcourſes, give an Account how, and upon what grounds you came to have this Junto of Six?

L. C. J. If you pleaſe, my Lord, Pray give an Account of the Preliminary Paſſages.

Lord Howard. My Lord, After the Diſappointment given to an Undertaking that was begun by my Lord Shaftsbury, which was in October or November before, in November he died. After that, truly I cannot ſay, but that Colonel Sidney and my ſelf might be, and were the two firſt that did give the Riſe to it. For being in Diſcourſe, We ſaid it was abſolutely neceſſary that there ſhould be ſome Council erected to give ſome ſteadineſs to the Motions——

L. C. J. My Lord, I would not willingly interrupt you. But you ſeem to ſpeak of a Diſappointment given to an Undertaking by my Lord Shaftsbury. Pray what was that Undertaking?

Lord Howard. Your Lordſhip has heard of that before, and know it very well.

L. C. J. Though we know it, the Jury do not. They have not heard it Judicially at leaſt.

Lord Howard. Becauſe it has been in the printed Books, every body I ſuppoſe knows it.

L. C. J. But that they cannot Judicially take notice of.

Lord Howard. That is ſomething a long Hiſtory, my Lord.

L. C. J. Though it be, we muſt hear it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray make it as ſhort as you can, my Lord.

Lord Howard. So much as I can give account of is this. It was about the Day after Michael's Day that I came to my own Houſe having been before in Eſſex, and that I think was Saturday. The Monday following Captain Walcot came to me and dined with me, and after Dinner told me, my Lord of Shaftsbury had left his Houſe, and had betaken himſelf to a private Lodging, and had hid himſelf from the reſt of his Friends; but had a great Kindneſs for me, (which Kindneſs truly I wiſh he had ſpared) and deſired to ſee me, I took time to conſider of it; but I bid him go back to my Lord Shaftsbury, and tell him, if he had any thing of an extraordinary Nature to acquaint me with, I would come and aſſiſt him all I could. He came the next Day again, and ſhewed me to my Lord Shaftsbury's Lodgings: He lodged then at one Watſon's Houſe, a Citizen, I know not what Street they call it; but it was in a little Street down by Woodſtreet. And when I came to him, I found my Lord Shaftsbury very much differing from what he uſed to be, which was more cautious, and preſently he fell to tell me, that he was forced to withdraw himſelf from his own Houſe, for fear of being attacked again by Sham-Charges and Plots, and falſe Evidence, as he had before: For now he ſaid, He ſaw they had the Poſſeſſion of all Juries, by having thoſe Sheriffs which were impoſed upon the City, as he ſaid, and he could not think his own Life or any Man's Life ſafe; for to be accuſed was ſufficient to bring his Life into very great danger, and for that reaſon he had withdrawn himſelf to that private retirement; and being there he was reſolved to make ſome ſpeedy Puſh, for recovering of the Liberties of England, that there was Preparation made in the City of ſeveral Thouſands of Men, that were all in readineſs to Riſe, and that for his part, he was reſolved to be ſet on Horſe-back; for get on Horſe-back he could not; and that there were great numbers that were ready, when he did but hold up his Finger, to be drawn together at any time: That divers had been drawn out of the Countrey to join with them by inſenſible Parties of Horſe, I think he named about Fourſcore or an Hundred. Which ſince I found were to be headed by Colonel Rumſey, upon the Day of making and declaring the Sheriffs; but finding there was nothing done, he withdrew himſelf and his Man thither; but there was ſuch a general Preparation in the City, that if ſome Lords did not unhandſomely deſert them, they ſhould be in readineſs for Action quickly. I asked him who he meant? He told me, the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Ruſſel had very unhandſomely deſerted him; for they had promiſed and undertaken to be in readineſs with Men out of ſeveral Countries in which they had an Intereſt, he named Somerſetſhire, Devonſhire, and Cheſhire, I think, and that my Lord Grey ſhould be diſpoſed of into Eſſex to do the ſame there, and if they had held on this Reſolution, it had been ſuch a ſure Game, that it could not have failed:

But

But ſays he, they are ſtarted, and ſay they cannot be in a readineſs to do it. My Lord, I very much wonder that thoſe Perſons you named ſhould ingage in any Deſign, and fail of performing what they promiſed! Says he, I'll aſſure you 'tis ſo. And ſo he proceeded to ſpeak ſeveral ſharp Things of the Duke of Monmouth, upon the account of his Ambition, that he thought to have all under his Command: Which was a ſecret lurking Ambition in him, that he ſaid, he always ſuſpected the Duke to be guilty of. And now he found his Suſpicions true. That unleſs he might command all, he would do nothing. But for his part, ſince he found the Matter ſo, he was reſolved to go on alone, rather than fail in his Deſign. Said I, my Lord, I ſhould be very forward to concur with you in any thing; but I wonder your Lordſhip ſhould ſtep into an Action of ſuch Danger, thus divided from thoſe that are moſt likely to aſſiſt you in it. I cannot help it, ſaid he, I have left my Houſe, and muſt go on. My Lord, ſaid I, pray give me leave to go to the Duke of Monmouth, and expoſtulate the Matter with him, and I will come and give you an Account again. Says he, 'tis to no purpoſe, I dare ſay. Said I, my Lord, pray let me go and try, for I would not have you divided, but I will promiſe you this, I will not tell him I came from you, but as from my ſelf diſcourſe it with the Duke. Well, ſaid he, if you will you may. This was upon Tueſday, I think the 3*d* of October, the 3*d* or 4*th*. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth the next Day, which was Wedneſday, and finding him not at home at his Houſe in Sohoe, and being told he was at Moor-Park, I took an Occaſion to go to Moor-Park, and I came there a little after Dinner, and took him aſide, and told him all this that I now have ſpoken about my Lord of Shaftsbury. Says he, I think the Man is mad, What does he mean? We did undertake to do this, 'tis true; but not by that time he ſpeaks of, and Things are not ready, I know not what his own Fears make him do; but he does act ſo prepoſterouſly that he will undo us all. Said I, my Lord, all that I ſhall deſire is, that there may be an interview betwixt you, and diſcourſe the Thing with one another, or elſe it may be a thing of very fatal Conſequence for him to ſtep into an Action of this Danger and Concern while you are thus divided. With all my Heart, ſays the Duke, I would have nothing more, I deſire to ſpeak with him. This made me recoil back again to my Lord of Shaftsbury the next Day, and I told him all this, and deſired he would give a Meeting, ſays he, I ſee they are falſe then to ſay they did not engage, they were engaged, and that againſt this time too, the Confirmation and Swearing of the Sheriffs; and now for me to meet with them, I know I ſhall run out into Paſſion and Anger, and therefore 'tis better omitted. Said I, my Lord, I muſt poſitively inſiſt upon it. I muſt have an interview between you, for 'tis a madneſs for you to go on thus divided in ſo great a Buſineſs. I could not prevail, he would not; but he told me, if I would I might go to them from him, and let them know I had been with him; (for before I pretended to have it from a third Hand, and not from my Lord himſelf,) and if they would be in a readineſs with what they promiſed from the Countrey, he would ask nothing from the City, he would take that Place upon himſelf, if they would perform their Engagement for other Parts; but he reſolved to go on. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth's again, and told him, what he ſaid, That I could not by any means get him to an interview. Says the Duke, he is a ſtrange Man, I know not what to do with him, we will all be in a Readineſs as ſoon as we can; but it is impoſſible to do it ſo ſoon. I went to my Lord of Shaftsbury again on the Saturday, and did then poſitively engage him that he would give a Meeting to me, and the Duke of Monmouth, and ſome others. And we appointed Time and Place, he appointed to come out in a Parſon's Habit, and a black Periwig to his own Houſe, which he thought the ſafeſt Place, becauſe he would not diſcover his Lodging to any of them, for fear it ſhould come to be known. With theſe Inſtructions I came to the Duke of Monmouth to prepare to about it, and proffered him to be ready the next Day at Evening with my Lord Ruſſel to go to him. All this while I had not ſpoken to my Lord Ruſſel, but only to the Duke of Monmouth. And the next Day when I came from Church to my own Houſe, there met me a Meſſage from Colonel Rumſey, who I underſtood by my Servants had been there, and left his Name. With this Meſſage, that he came to tell me, the Gentleman that was to meet could not meet. This was ſo confuſed a Matter, that I was impatient till I knew the meaning of it. I took my Coach and went directly to the Duke of Monmouth's again, and he told me, Colonel Rumſey had been with him, and told him, my Lord of Shaftsbury was apprehenſive there were a great many Tories about his Houſe, and he feared being diſcovered, and therefore had removed his Lodging, and ſo could not meet; but we ſhould hear from him in two or three Days. So that was the laſt time that I ſaw my Lord of Shaftsbury, or indeed in a direct Line did hear from him; collaterally by Walcot I did afterwards hear; but by this means we were at a loſs. After this the Duke of Monmouth did tell me (for he did not own to me that he ſaw him, but indeed ſwore to me he did not ſee him; but I find ſince he did.) That he would do what he could, to prevent an untimely dangerous Undertaking. But after this it ſeems they had a Meeting at Mr. Shephard's Houſe, where my Lord Shaftsbury ſent a Meſſage to him and my Lord Ruſſel; but the Duke of Monmouth only told me, that my Lord Ruſſel had met with him, and ſeen him; but he never owned that he had met him himſelf or ſeen him. About four or five Days after, Captain Walcot came to me, and told me, ſuch a Day was ſet for the Riſing. Upon which being ſtartled, I had nothing to do, but recoil back to the Duke of Monmouth, and endeavour to ſtop any raſh Proceedings, and it was ſtopped as I thought, and ſo it continued for two or three Days, and at that time, which was in October, there was a Rumour up and down whiſpered, as if ſomething would be attempted; but what it was we did not know, but thus it went on for two or three Days, and then it meeting with a Diſappointment upon the Conſultation at Mr. Shephard's, my Lord Shaftsbury took up his Reſolution to be gone, and went away to Holland, and died in Holland. This is the Subſtance of that Account which I can give of thoſe former Tranſactions.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Now give an Account of what was ſubſequent to this.

Lord Howard. This was in November. After this there being frequent Conferences between Colonel Sidney and me; for Colonel Sidney by the way knew nothing of all this, and I was cautioned by my Lord Shaftsbury, that I ſhould not tell my Friend Sidney any thing of it, and asking him the reaſon, why I ſhould not? Says he, I can't well tell; but you will wonder when I tell you, that his own Friend Major Wildman has barred him and would not let him know it. The Gentleman is now dead; but I will aſſure you he did know nothing of this for a Month after: For he was gone into the Countrey; but after my Lord Shaftsbury was dead, I told him the Hiſtory of all theſe Tranſactions, which he was before a Stranger to. After this, when I had acquainted him with what had been intended in London, and what Preparations had been made, and how what was intended had been ſuppreſſed, and in what Poſture Affairs then ſtood. We then took up a Reſolution to form a Council, that might for the time to come give ſuch Directions as might regulate the Motions of this Affair. Thereupon we began to think of the Perſons who they ſhould be. He undertook to ſpeak to my Lord of Eſſex and Mr. Hambden, and I was to bring the Duke of Monmouth to a right Underſtanding with him in it. So I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and told him Colonel Sidney did preſent his Service to him, and would willingly wait on him, but that he thought it would do him hurt, becauſe he was a Perſon of ſuch Note, and thereupon ſo obnoxious that it might prejudice him to have him ſeen to come to him; and therefore if his Grace would pleaſe to appoint any third Place, he ſhould be very glad to kiſs his Hand. Says the Duke, I do not know any where truly to appoint. Why then, ſaid I, I will tell you a Place: Let us e'en go to his Houſe (having before prepared Colonel Sidney for it) and take him by Surpriſe and dine with him, and then there will be the leſs Suſpicion. But, ſaid I, you muſt not expect to be treated as the Duke of Monmouth, becauſe he does not expect you; but take him as a Philoſopher, and dine with him as he uſes to dine at his own Table. Says the Duke of Monmouth, I care not for Entertainment; I will go with you: And there at that time did the Duke of Monmouth undertake to bring in my Lord Ruſſel and my Lord of Salisbury. This was the only Diſcourſe preparatory to it that ever I knew of. Within a Fortnight or three Weeks after; nay, I think it was leſs than Ten Days after, Colonel Sidney came to me, and told me, my Lord of Eſſex was very forward in it. The Duke of Monmouth would prepare my Lord Ruſſel, and my Lord Salisbury; and he himſelf did not doubt, but Mr. Hambden was very willing to be in it too; and they had appointed a Meeting at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, and he would carry me thither to the Houſe; and this was the firſt Meeting that I knew of; and there we met all Six.

Mr. At. Gen. About what time was that?

Lord Howard. It was about the middle of January; and truly I think I could reduce it to a certain Day or two by the Perſons where I lodged.

Mr. At. Gen. What was debated there?

Lord Howard. When we came there every one diſcourſed what he would. There was a Diſcourſe of the Time and Places where to riſe; but among other Things it was reſolved as a principal Point, that there ſhould be a Preparation made for the Deſign, by a Treaty with thoſe of Scotland, and an Underſtanding ſettled with Argyle, and a Meſſenger ſent to my Lord Argyle and others. And before this was done, we could not be ripe for any Reſolution: But this muſt be ſpeedily done.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, give me your Favour, I would not interrupt you; but to make Things clear as we go, I deſire to ask you, when you came firſt to Mr. Hambden's Houſe, Who ſpake firſt, when you were all met together?

Lord Howard. Every body diſcourſed what they pleaſed.

L. C. J. But who gave an Account of the Reaſon of the Meeting? Will you pleaſe to recollect, and tell what you know, who began the Diſcourſe?

Lord Howard. Something introductive to it was ſaid by Mr. Hambden, we being at his Houſe, as 'tis natural to conceive for any Gentleman at whoſe Houſe People are met, to ſay, Pray let us ſit down, and talk of our Buſineſs. Something leading and introductive was ſaid by him.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, as near as you can remember, will you give an Account what was the thing he began to diſcourſe of? Did he ſeem to take any Notice, or have any Knowledge of your Meeting, and other Things before?

Lord Howard. It was a general Hint and Intimation to us of the Ends of our Meeting, that we were there come to conſult and adviſe one with another, how to put Things into a better Method and Poſture than formerly: And he deſired that we would ſit down and diſcourſe of theſe Things. My Lord, I would not charge my ſelf with Particulars poſitively.

Mr. At. Gen. Upon what Queſtions did you debate and conſult, my Lord?

Lord Howard. Thoſe were ſtarted ſeverally. Some would ſpeak of the Time when it ſhould be, whether it were not convenient now, or when? Others offered ſomething concerning the Places, whether it ſhould be begun in the City or in the Countrey, or both together. Others took it into Conſideration, what Perſons were to be prepared in the ſeveral Countries to be aſſiſting in it, that were probable to carry it on. And then ſome diſcourſed concerning the raiſing of Money, and then what Sum ſhould be raiſed, and I think that was ſtarted by the Duke of Monmouth; but I am ſure the Sum that he named was 20 or 30000 l. The laſt Thing that was talked of, but which was concluded to be the Thing principally to be taken care of, was the ſetling ſuch a Concurrence and Correſpondence with Scotland, that they might chime in at the ſame time, that ſo we might give as many Diverſions both from Home and Abroad, as could be at one and the ſame time.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Howard, Did Mr. Hambden diſcourſe of this Matter?

Lord Howard. I cannot ſpeak to the Diſcourſe of any one in particular; for I cannot ſay it was put to the Vote as we formerly expreſs'd it, but it may be ſaid we were all conſenting and concurring.

L. C. J. Did any of you diſſent from the Riſing?

Lord Howard. No, no, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any of you oppoſe it at all?

Lord Howard. No, no, That was diſcourſed of as a thing reſolved.

L. C. J. I ask you this Queſtion, my Lord Howard, Was there any ſort of Complaint made of the Government, That it was uneaſy and that occaſioned you to enter into theſe Debates?

Lord Howard. There was, I cannot ſay a Complaint, becauſe there was no Perſon to complain to; but it was ſpoken of as a Matter of great Grievance, that ſuch a Force and Violence ſhould be put upon the City in their Election of Officers, and the tendency of that as to all Juries, tho' I cannot diſtinctly remember the particular things.

L. C. J. You ſay you were talking of a Meſſenger to be ſent into Scotland to my Lord of Argyle, and others, to chime in with you in this Matter as you ſay, pray did you come to any Reſolution about that, and what did you reſolve upon?

Lord Howard. That there ſhould be one only at that time. And afterwards it was the matter of the Debate at the next Meeting, which was that Meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's, which was about this time twelve-month in February ſome time.

Mr. At. Gen. How long after the firſt Meeting at Mr. Hambden's was that?

Lord Howard. My Lord, I think it was about a Fortnight.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was there?

Lord Howard. The ſame Perſons that met before. But then there was little ſpoken of but the Buſineſs of Scotland.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Hambden there at the ſecond Meeting?

Lord Howard. He was there.

L. C. J. At my Lord Ruſſel's you ſay it was?

Lord Howard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What Reſolution did you come to then?

Lord Howard. Then we came to a Reſolution that ſome body ſhould be ſent, and we began to diſcourſe who was fit, and Col. Sidney he propounded Aaron Smith, to ſome of the Company he was known, to others not; but thoſe that did know him did approve of him as a fit Perſon.

Mr. At. Gen. To whoſe Province was that committed of ſending this Perſon into Scotland?

Lord Howard. Col. Sidney undertook it himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Did the reſt conſent to it?

Lord Howard. Yes, No body did oppoſe it, but left it to him.

L. C. J. Did you name the Perſon then that was to go?

Lord Howard. He was not ſo named as to be with any ſolemnity approved or diſproved; but it was left to Col. Sidney to manage it, and he naming Smith as a fit Perſon (he told us that by the by not to put it to the Queſtion for our Approbation) and ſome of us knew the Perſon, others did not. I was one that did know him, and did think him a very fit Man to ſend.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, who was the Perſon? Be pleaſed to tell the Jury ſo as they may know it.

Lord Howard. Aaron Smith.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Had you any Diſcourſe with Col. Sidney, my Lord, afterwards that he was ſent?

Lord Howard. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray give an account of that.

Lord Howard. About three or four Days after this Meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's, I went to viſit Col. Sidney at his Houſe, and while I was there in the Room, he went to his Cabinet, and out of a Drawer where there were five or ſix hundred Pounds in Gold as I could gueſs, he took a good many Pieces, I do not know directly how many; but he took out ſo many as he ſaid were threeſcore Guineas that he was going to carry to Aaron Smith, I went not in my own Coach, and therefore went away with him in his Coach, and he ſet me down at Southampton-ſtreet at my own Lodging. I went no further, but he did, and he told me afterwards it was conveyed to him, and that he did go.

L. C. J. How long was that after your Meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's, where you ſay you intruſted Col. Sidney to ſend one into Scotland?

Lord Howard. I think it may be leſs than a Week, four or five Days, that I ſaw him carry the Money. After this he ſaid, he had given him this Money, and was gone: And when he was diſpatched, in a Week after I was making Enquiries after him, and Col. Sidney ſaid, he had not heard of him ſince he went away; but about a Fortnight or three Weeks Col. Sidney ſaid he had heard of him, That he was at Newcaſtle and ſtaid there; but he wondered he could hear no more of him. I then went into Eſſex, and when I came back from thence, he told me, he was come, but I had never ſeen him, not to this Day, indeed I had once appointed a Meeting with him at Mr. Weſt's Chamber; but ſomething or other happened, we did not meet.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done with my Lord Howard; if they will ask him any Queſtions, they may.

L. C. J. They know their time, when the King's Attorney has done with any Witneſs, then they may examine him if they pleaſe. If they will not, call your other Witneſſes.

Mr. At. Gen. Will you ask him any Queſtions?

Mr. Jones, No, no, by Advice they are to ask him nothing.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall give your Lordſhip and the Jury an account in the next place, that we have traced Aaron Smith into Scotland. And for that we ſhall call ſome Witneſſes which indeed we did not produce before at any Tryal, becauſe we had not then diſcovered ſo much. We ſhall bring you the Perſon at whoſe Houſe he lay at Newcaſtle, and the very Meſſenger that was ſent with him to conduct him a By-way into Scotland. Call Sheriffs and Bell.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, You that are at the Bar there, you muſt let the Jury ſtand by themſelves. I ſee there are a great many others intermingled with them, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, If any Whiſperer talk to you, we expect that you ſhould tell us who they are; for we will ſuffer no Remarks to be made but what are openly made to the Court, and the Jury, by the Counſel of both ſides.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sheriffs and Bell.

[Which was done.

Mr.

Mr. Williams. What is this Man's Name, Mr. Attorney? Friend, what is your Name?

Witneſs. My Name is Sheriffe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account what you know of any Perſon that lay at your Houſe ſome time ſince, and whether you have ſeen him ſince? My Lord, this Gentleman did not know Aaron Smith before, and therefore I deſire Mr. Atterbury may be called and examined again. Mr. Atterbury, Do you know Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Had this Gentleman a View of Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, he had. He was brought where Aaron Smith was, and this other Perſon was by before him too, and I was by when they had a view of him.

Mr. At. Gen. Now pray give an account what you know of the Man you ſaw?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is Aaron Smith?

Mr. Atterbury. He is in the King's-Bench Priſon, and he was brought by Habeas Corpus to Whitehall before the King, where theſe two Perſons were brought likewiſe, and there this Man Sheriffe did own that Aaron Smith was the Man that was at his Houſe; and the other Bell owned that he travelled towards Scotland with him, and that he was hired to ſhew him the way into Scotland.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Aaron Smith ſay any thing?

Mr. Atterbury. He would not anſwer any thing at all, nor ſay a Word.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an account, Mr. Sheriffe, who it was that lay at your Houſe, and when it was, and what he ſaid was his Buſineſs, and by what Name he went?

Mr. Sheriffe. Indeed his Buſineſs I did not know; but he was at our Houſe about the middle of February, it was thereabouts.

L. C. J. When was it? What February?

Mr. Sheriffe. The laſt February.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay he was at your Houſe laſt February, pray tell the Court where that is?

Mr. Sheriffe. At Newcaſtle.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you keep any Inn there?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What Sign?

Mr. Sheriffe. The Sign of the Black ſpread Eagle.

Mr. At. Gen. And what did he do there?

Mr. Sheriffe. He ſtaid there one Night and went away, and returned again in twelve Days or thereabouts, and came to my Houſe again.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he go from you?

Mr. Sheriffe. He went Southward as I ſuppoſe, I know no further.

Mr. At. Gen. But when he firſt came to your Houſe, which way went he?

Mr. Sheriffe. He went Northward towards Scotland, as he himſelf ſaid, and deſired to have one to ſhew him the way: And I ſent for this Man, and when he came to him he hired him to go with him, and I was by.

L. C. J. When he firſt came to your Houſe about the middle of February was twelve-month, Whither was he bound then, Northward or Southward?

Mr. Sheriffe. He was going to Scotland, that is Northward.

L. C. J. And you ſay, after he came back again, and lay another Night at your Houſe.

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, ten or twelve Days after he did.

L. C. J. And which way went he then?

Mr. Sheriffe. Then he came Southwards towards London.

L. C. J. Did you take exact notice of the Man?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, I ſaw him before His Majeſty and the Council.

L. C. J. And upon your Oath that ſame Man you ſaw there was the ſame Man that lodged at your Houſe in February was twelve-month?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, it is.

Mr. At. Gen. What Name did he go by at your Houſe?

Mr. Sheriffe. He went under the Name of Mr. Clerke, but what his Sirname was I can't tell.

L. C. J. Had he a Servant with him?

Mr. Sheriffe. He had a Man with him that ſtaid at our Houſe during the time of his going Northward?

Mr. At. Gen. What did he call his Name?

Mr. Sheriffe. William Langſton.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he deſire you to furniſh him with a Guide?

Mr. Sheriffe. He told me his Servant did not know the way, and his Horſe was a little lamiſh, and deſired me to get a Guide for him. For after he had dined at our Houſe it happened to be a rainy Day, and he could not go further that Night, and therefore deſired me to get him a Man that knew that Country, and I ſent for this ſame Man, and he hired him; and he went along with him next Morning, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was he to go?

Mr. Sheriffe. Truly I did not know; but he told me he did not know the way into Scotland, and I directed him to a Gentleman's Houſe at Jadbrough in the way.

L. C. J. Is that the Road to Scotland?

Mr. Sheriffe. Yes, the high Road to one part of Scotland.

L. C. J. Did he tell you to what part or place of Scotland he was to go?

Mr. Sheriffe. He named the Weſt of Scotland, I think he named Douglas, but I do not know what Place certainly he deſigned for.

Mr. At. Gen. Then where is Bell?

Bell. Here.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you a view of this Man they call Aaron Smith?

Bell. Yes, I had.

Mr. At. Gen. Give an account, whether you ſaw him in the North, and when and where.

Bell. This Man, Mr. Sheriffe, ſent for me. I live at Newcaſtle, and there I keep Hackney Horſes to ſerve any Gentlemen, or be a Guide to them as there is occaſion, and Mr. Sheriffe ſent for me, and when I came, he told me the Gentleman wanted a Guide into Scotland. We immediately agreed, it was upon Thurſday Night before that we call Eaſter-Eve.

L. C. J. When was it, ſay you?

Bell. It was the Thurſday before Eaſter-Even, ſo they call it with us, that is, Shrove-Tueſday.

L. C. J. Ay, they call it ſo in thoſe Places, becauſe 'tis the Even of the Faſt of Aſh-Wedneſday, the beginning of Lent——— Well, go on.

Bell. We went away on Friday the next Morning on our Journey towards Jadbrough, and the 2d Day, which was Saturday in the Afternoon, my Horſe tired, whereupon he left me with my Horſe, and took the Man's Man of the Houſe where he left me, to guide him, for my Horſe would not ride up with him being tired, and he reſolving to go on, and he bid me follow him on the Sunday Morning to Jadbrough Town, which I did, and we ſtaid there all Sunday. And on Monday Morning I ſaw him take Horſe and another Man that was his Guide, and away they went, as I think, he ſaid towards Douglas he was going. And he paid me, and I returned again from him to Newcaſtle and left him.

L. C. J. Pray how far was this, you ſay you went with him to Jadbrough, how far diſtant is that from Newcaſtle?

Bell. To Jadbrough, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes.

Bell. 'Tis Forty Miles, my Lord.

L. C. J. How near Scotland is it?

Bell. 'Tis within ſome ſix Miles of the Engliſh Border.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him at any time after that?

Bell. I ſaw him at his coming back again; being at Sheriffe's Houſe, his Wife asked me, if I would go up and ſee the Gentleman that I went with towards Scotland: So I went up, and he made me eat and drink at the Table with him.

Mr. At. Gen. What Name did he go by?

Bell. He went by the Name of Clerk.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Servant with him?

Bell. There was a Man that came with him as a Servant there, and was all the time at Newcaſtle, that he was gone towards Scotland, till he came back again.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Did this Man ſee Smith at the time the other ſaw him?

Bell. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. And is that the Man that went by the Name of Clerk at Newcaſtle, and that you went with towards Scotland?

Bell. Yes, It is.

Mr. Atterbury. And when they charged him with it, Aaron Smith did not deny it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you go any By-road to get into Scotland?

Bell. No, 'tis the Road Gentlemen uſually go to Jadbrough, and ſo on; becauſe 'tis ſomething the nearer way to that part of Scotland, as we judge it to be, therefore Gentlemen uſe it.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it an High Open Road?

Bell. Yes, 'tis the High Open Way to that part of the Country.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Howard, Pray were the Names of any of the Scotch-men mentioned at your Meeting that were to be ſent for?

Lord Howard. Yes; There was my Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and one Campbel.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, We will give you an account, That as Smith went into Scotland, ſo theſe Perſons ſoon after came into England.

Jury-man. My Lord, We deſire that my Lord Howard would name thoſe Scotch-men that were to come.

Lord Howard. There was my Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and one Campbel, one that was of my Lord Argyle's Name and Family; and there was another Name, but I can't remember what that Name was.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall give you an account, my Lord, That they came immediately after this to Town; and at the breaking out of the Plot they abſconded.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Has my Lord Howard his Pardon?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he has.

L. C. J. Then your Lordſhip may be covered.

Lord Howard. I can't tell but they may ask me ſome Queſtions.

Mr. At. Gen. Then you may be uncovered when they ask them, in the mean time your Lordſhip may be covered. Swear Sir Andrew Foſter. (Which was done.) Pray, Sir, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know about the Campbels, and Sir John Cockram's being in Town? or any other Scotch men that you know of?

Sir Andrew Foſter. My Lord, I did ſee thoſe Gentlemen in the beginning of laſt Summer. Sir John Cockram, and Mr. Monroe, and Campbel the Son, I did ſee; but the Father I did not, but I do know he was in Town, tho' I ſaw him not.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you know it?

Sir Andrew Foſter. I had Meſſages from them.

L. C. J. Sir Andrew, You ſay, you ſaw Sir John Cockram, and Monroe.

Sir Andrew Foſter. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you ſee any body elſe?

Sir Andrew Foſter. I ſaw Sir George Campbel the Son.

Mr. At. Gen. What became of them upon the Diſcovery of the Plot?

Sir Andrew Foſter. Sir John Cockram did abſcond, and Mr. Monroe was taken into Cuſtody.

Mr. At. Gen. What became of the others?

Sir Andrew Foſter. The Campbels were both in Cuſtody.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee any Commiſſion they had?

Sir Andrew Foſter. I did ſee a Commiſſion that Sir John Cockram had.

Mr. At. Gen. What was it for?

Sir Andrew Foſter. To make a Purchaſe of ſome Plantations beyond Sea, I think it was Carolina.

L. C. J. Ay, where my Lord Shaftsbury had an Intereſt.

Sir Andrew Foſter. It was ſome of the Weſt Indies.

Lord Howard. I did omit that Paſſage, my Lord——

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, was it diſcourſed then, what ſhould be the Blind for theſe Gentlemen that were notorious Diſſenters, that they ſhould come to Town from Scotland about?

Lord Howard. It was to carry on a Plantation in Carolina. The Scotch Gentlemen were perſonally known to my Lord Ruſſel only; and my Lord Ruſſel was to write the Letter to them, and, I ſuppoſe, did.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Atterbury, What do you know of theſe Scotch-men coming to Town; and what became of them afterwards?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, About the beginning of July, 4th, 5th, or 6th, or thereabouts, I had ſome Information, That there were ſome Scotch Gentlemen that had been ſhifting up and down, and at that time were about Black-Fryars, lodged there ſecretly. I immediately went with the King's Proclamation, and ſome Warrants that I had to apprehend ſome Traitors that were fled: And when I came, I found that Mr. Common Serjeant having notice of them, had beat up their Quarters, and they were endeavouring to eſcape by Water; but there they were catched. There was Sir Hugh Campbel, and Bayley, and Sir George Campbel, and ſome others, I know not the Names of them all; truly I can't tell whether Monroe was not another, but Sir Hugh Campbel I had in my Cuſtody, and Bayley was immediately committed to the Gate-houſe; and the reſt of the Gentlemen I afterwards took in a cunning Hole by Moor-fields, in a back Houſe. And when I came there, I found them lying on the Bed in the middle of the Day; and had them Priſoners in my Cuſtody two or three Months; and then they were all ſent out of my hands into Scotland Priſoners. Six of them there were, my Lord, that I ſaw.

and

Mr. At. Gen. We have done, my Lord, only we deſire that a Word of a Record may be read.

Mr. Williams. What Record is it, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Of Colonel Sidney's Attainder.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We ſhall deſire your Judgment, whether that Record ought to be read againſt Mr. Hambden; I perceive by Mr. Attorney, that 'tis a Record of the Conviction of Mr. Sidney, which ought not to be given in Evidence againſt Mr. Hambden upon this Indictment.

Mr. At. Gen. We make uſe of it, to ſhew how upon former Tryals, upon this Evidence, Verdicts have gone.

Mr. Williams. We are in your Judgment, my Lord, if by Law it may be given in Evidence againſt Mr. Hambden, who is neither Party nor privy to it, nor indicted for the ſame Offence.

Mr. At. Gen. Let it alone then.

L. C. J. Well, Mr. Attorney does not preſs it. What ſay you to it, Gentlemen, for the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for Mr. Hambden the Defendant upon this Indictment here before you. This Indictment is a ſevere Indictment: It is a very high Crime of which my Client is accuſed. How far the Evidence tends to reach it, you have heard; and I ſhall, with the patience of the Court, particularly obſerve it to you. But I ſhall firſt ſpeak to the Indictment it ſelf: It ſays, that Mr. Hambden being a Perſon of a turbulent Diſpoſition, and ſeditiouſly intending to diſturb and diſquiet the King's Peace, and to ſtir Sedition, and to bring the Government into Danger, did Conſpire, &c. As to this Matter, Gentlemen, there is no manner of Proof of what the Indictment charges, as to the Diſpoſition of the Perſon accuſed; nor that he had any other Deſign, than what my Lord Howard hath now ſworn. Then it ſays further, that Mr. Hambden did Conſult and Conſpire with divers Perſons to execute theſe Purpoſes; and particularly for the making and raiſing of an Inſurrection in the Kingdom. This is laid as the particular Fact: And for this purpoſe he did further Conſpire with ſeveral Perſons, to provide Arms and Armed Men: And for their fulfilling of this, he did further Conſult with ſeveral Perſons, that ſome Perſons ſhould be ſent into Scotland to ſtir up the King's Subjects in Scotland, to a Concurrence and Conjunction with ſome People in England, about this his evil Deſign. How far this Indictment is proved upon the Defendant, Gentlemen, is the Queſtion before you. He has pleaded not Guilty, and hopes to ſatisfy you he is not. Gentlemen, as to what Evidence has been given you ſo far as 'tis Poſitive and Affirmative, I mean the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard, in that part, it is impoſſible for us that are of Counſel for the Defendant directly to contradict him with Proof, or to give a direct poſitive Proof in anſwer to it: I ſay, 'tis impoſſible for us to contradict him, who gives ſuch a poſitive Evidence of Fact. By the Evidence of my Lord Howard he tells us there were ſix Perſons in this Council, as he is pleaſed to call them. By his Evidence, three of the ſix are dead, my Lord Ruſſel, Col. Sidney, and the Earl of Eſſex; He himſelf is the Fourth, the Defendant is the Fifth, who cannot give Evidence for himſelf; and the Duke of Monmouth, who is the Sixth, being away, there is not any Perſon in Being, that ſhould contradict my Lord Howard's Affirmative in this part of his Evidence but the Duke of Monmouth: Whom we cannot have here, ſince it appears by the Evidence, Mr. Attorney General could not prevail to have him at this Tryal; therefore Proof of that nature cannot be reaſonably expected from my Client to acquit himſelf by a poſitive Contradiction of what my Lord Howard has ſworn. Then in this Caſe we muſt, as in all Caſes where a Perſon does ſwear directly againſt a Defendant, endeavour to ſatisfy and perſwade your Lordſhip and the Jury, upon Circumſtances ariſing out of this Fact, and further Circumſtances attending the Fact, and by probable Arguments and reaſonable Inductions out of the Evidence, that this Gentleman, the Defendant, is not guilty of what he is charged with.

In the firſt place, We ſhall obſerve upon the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard, that as to ſome things he is very poſitive, and particular: He has an incomparable Memory, and ſpeaks particularly to Perſons, particularly to Places, particularly to Times. But, Gentlemen, as to that which is the principal Part of his Evidence, and which moſt affects the Defendant, and wherein it concerns us to contradict or diſprove him, he is wanting as to that Circumſtance of Time. He that is ſo exact in his Memory as to other Circumſtances, is not poſitive, nor any thing like poſitive, as to the Times of the Meeting. For they would imagine, that the firſt Meeting the Defendant was concerned in, was at his own Houſe. He deſcribes the Houſe and the Place very exactly, but as for the Time, he only ſays it was about the middle of January: He carries other things in his Memory poſitively; and whether it might not be expected in a Caſe ſo remarkable as this, and which ſo nearly and highly concerned himſelf, that he ſhould be as particular in the Time, as he is in other things, you may rationally judge. His Lordſhip ſometimes is very particular as to Time: He tells you in his Relation about my Lord Shaftsbury, that his going to him was on the Saturday after Michaelmas-day; and then he he purſues it to the Second and Third of October. He is poſitive to many ſeveral Days; upon which I would obſerve, that he being particular to a Day, as to other Things, may well be expected to be ready (if it be true) to be as particular as to the Time of this Meeting: But therein he is to ſeek; he is doubtful as to that. And you muſt give us leave, Gentlemen, to make this Obſervation, That ſince he will not be particular to that Time, we do apprehend that he gives himſelf a little Looſe, that we may not meet with him to contradict him in that Circumſtance: For if he ſhould be poſitive therein, as he is in the other Matters that concern not the Defendant, we might perhaps by clear pregnant Circumſtances contradict, if not diſprove his Lordſhip, that it is not probable (if poſſible) it ſhould be true what he affirms. But Gentlemen, we muſt anſwer it as well as we can; and ſince he is ſo cautious, we muſt meet him by Arguments in another way. Another Thing we ſhould obſerve upon my Lord's Evidence, is this; That my Lord, though he be particular as to many Facts and Things relating to my Lord Shaftsbury, where he names other particular Perſons, I think Coll. Rumſey and Walcot, and names the particular Diſcourſes, particularly inſtancing in them, between him and my Lord of Shaftsbury, between him and Walcot, and between him and other Perſons; yet he has not made uſe of any one Circumſtance of Fact in this Caſe of the Defendant's now before you, that does juſtify what he has ſaid, ſave only that of Aaron Smith; not any one Circumſtance of Fact. So that there is no more than the bare Saying of what my Lord Howard is pleaſed to deliver no more than his Oath, nay, no more than his Obſervation, and Inference of much of what paſſed in the Company of ſeveral Perſons, without any concurring Circumſtances in Fact to juſtify or confirm his Teſtimony. It might have been an eaſy Matter, if all that my Lord Howard ſays was true, that there was ſuch a Meeting at Mr. Hambden's Houſe by ſuch and ſuch Perſons, to prove that ſuch Perſons, or ſome of them met there. But that there ſhould be no Perſon to prove, that theſe Gentlemen, or any of them, were there; nor any other Fact or Circumſtance in the World, to go along with my Lord Howard to juſtify his Aſſeveration, is very wonderful, and may well make it doubtful that it ſhould not be true: And the rather, Gentlemen, (if it be true, as my Lord Howard would have it) becauſe there was a ſecond Meeting of all theſe Perſons at my Lord Ruſſel's, which was ſo publick and open a Place, and yet no Man to concur or go along with my Lord Howard in any one thing; no particular Fact aſſigned to juſtify his Teſtimony as to this Meeting, is ſtrange, if it be true.

So then, Gentlemen, there is no more than what my Lord Howard has Sworn, without any one Circumſtance to back it, to prove the Defendant Guilty. My Lord, taking this upon the main of my Lord Howard's Evidence, it will be pretty hard too upon the nature of the Fact, that he is pleaſed to prove againſt this Gentleman, to make an Anſwer to it: And truly, I think as hard for you to believe it. Gentlemen, He would imagine, That there ſhould be Men raiſed, Men armed, a Diſcourſe of Money, and this done, as he would have it, about the middle of January; and yet nothing at all done, though there appears no manner of Diſcovery of this very evil Contrivance, till about July. Neither is there any thing done in order to the raiſing of Men, the arming of Men, or the levying of Money all this while. So that there is no one Fact of any kind whatſoever, that goes along with what my Lord Howard has ſaid.

My Lord, and Gentlemen, Another Thing we would deſire to obſerve, is this, and here we ſhall begin with what we have to ſay, as to our own Arguments and Circumſtances, that we have to take off from the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard in this Caſe: In the firſt Place, it appears by the Evidence of my Lord Howard, That he was very deep in a Conſpiracy againſt the Government, and to make a Diſturbance in the Kingdom long before this, that he now ſpeaks of againſt the Defendant, that is plain enough; for he tells you, That my Lord Shaftsbury and He at Michaelmaſs, were contriving of Projects to overturn the Government, and raiſe a Rebellion. It appears plainly by his Evidence, That my Lord Shaftsbury, when he left his Houſe, was reſolved upon it, and my Lord Howard was very Sollicitous to carry on the ſame Deſign; nay, he was ſo active in it, that he tells you, That he did create Meſſages between my Lord of Shaftsbury, and the Duke of Monmouth, and would needs go by a falſe Inſinuation of his own, to draw in the Duke of Monmouth, by telling his Grace, his Information he had from Walcot, and not ſaying he came from my Lord Shaftsbury, with whom he ſays he had been diſcourſing; but he would put it under ſome ſort of Diſguiſe, the better to prevail. So that it appears my Lord was very Criminal, and Guilty, in this Caſe. Why then, Gentlemen, my Lord being ſo highly Criminal, and there being a Diſcovery of this Conſpiracy by Keeling, and Rumſey, and Weſt, having made a more manifeſt Diſcovery, and this happening in July; Then it was high time my Lord Howard might conceive for him to ſecure himſelf, and ſave one, he being thus Guilty, as he declares: It is but reaſonable to conjecture, he then began to place his Security in a Pardon; and that there were no other means to ſave his Life, and that the way to it, muſt be by ſome further Diſcovery of a Conſpiracy againſt His Majeſty and the Government: And having ſince obtained a Pardon, it is agreeable, That whatſoever my Lord Howard has done in this Caſe, he has done for his own Sake, to purchaſe his own Pardon for a Treaſon he was ſo deep in, and to out-do all the Witneſſes that went before him, by freſh Teſtimony againſt the Defendant and others: This might incline him to go an Inch or two, or more, beyond the Diſcovery of Keeling, Weſt, and Rumſey; to have but ſaid the ſame thing that was proved by three or four Witneſſes before him, might not perhaps have availed him: May not the indifferent believe it in this Caſe, to be the Intereſt and Security of my Lord Howard, by theſe means to merit his Pardon? May it not be believable, that what he hath ſaid, he hath ſaid only for his own Sake, and that he has, by expoſing this Gentleman, and the Blood of others, procured himſelf a Pardon?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. By being a Witneſs againſt the Defendant and others, he has procured his own Pardon.

L. C. J. That is a little harſh Expreſſion——

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I explain my ſelf thus——

L. C. J. 'Tis an harſh Word, and too roundly expreſſed; You had need to explain your ſelf; 'Tis a little too rank, as though the King's Pardon were to be procured by Blood.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I intend nothing of hardſhip, or amiſs, but to ſpeak according to my Inſtructions, and to make the beſt Obſervations I can, out of the Evidence for my Client: I will expreſs my ſelf as well as I can, That my Lord Howard being a Witneſs againſt Men in a Caſe of this high Nature; and there being other Witneſſes before, and beſides himſelf, to the Diſcovery of the late Conſpiracy againſt the Government, it concerned him to give an home Evidence in the Caſe, or elſe he could not have any expectation of his Pardon: For if he had done no more than what others had done before him, when there were three Witneſſes beſides, and they had got the ſtart in the Diſcovery, his Diſcovery had been in vain; and therefore he was concerned perhaps to ſtrain, that he might make ſuch a Diſcovery as might anſwer his end; and this will ariſe naturally, I ſuppoſe, out of what has happened in this Caſe: For it ſeems, though it was ſomething long before he got his Pardon, now he has it. My Lord, another thing is this, How far my Lord Howard will be credited in this Matter, we ſhall leave his Credit to you, Gentlemen, upon what we ſhall prove. For we ſhall make it out by Perſons of great Honour, and Perſons of great Integrity, That upon Diſcourſe concerning this Conſpiracy, my Lord Howard did declare, That he knew of no Perſons that were guilty of having any Hand in it; he declared it upon his Honour, he declared it upon his Religion, and he uſed all the Aſſeverations that were poſſible for a Man to offer, to make himſelf believed.

My Lord, It may be objected, as it has been ſome times, that That was to out-face the Conſpiracy, and ſo ſtop the Proſecution of that he knew himſelf to be ſo guilty of: But however, thus far we may make uſe of it for the Defendant, That if my Lord Howard would, in the Face of Heaven, pawn his Honour, his Truſt, his Conſcience, and his Religion, to aſſert that which was not true, and under all thoſe Vows and Ingagements affirm an Untruth; a Man that would deal ſo, and ſpeak an Untruth with that Solemnity, I think is not a Perſon of the ſame Credit, as a Perſon of certain known Truth and Veracity. For if a Man will ſay one thing one time, and that with ſolemn Vows and Aſſeverations, and ſwear another Thing the quite contrary another time, he does not ſtand ſo fair for Credit, I think, as he that always maintains, and avows the Truth. So far we may make uſe of it very ſafely, I think, as to my Lord's Credit.

My Lord, Another Matter that we have to urge, is, That ſince the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel, and ſince the Tryal of Colonel Sidney, my Lord Howard has in Diſcourſe owned, that my Lord Ruſſel died Innocent. If that be true, it will have a great Weight ſure with you, Gentlemen, to diſcredit my Lord's Teſtimony: For then he hath contradicted what he hath ſworn. For if my Lord ſwore, that my Lord Ruſſel was Guilty, as all the World knows he did; and afterwards Soberly, and Publickly, ſhall have ſaid he died Innocent, he has contradicted his own Evidence, and his own Oath; and ſure is not to be believed as to what he ſwears now againſt the Defendant. My Lord, it did not reſt there; but ſince the Tryal of Colonel Sidney, it will be proved by Witneſſes, that my Lord Howard did declare, That Colonel Sidney had hard Meaſure. This will be proved by Witneſſes; and 'tis rather to be preſumed, He meant hard Meaſure as to his own Teſtimony, which he was beſt knowing of, than of any thing elſe as to his Tryal. Now, how this Perſon of great Honour can ſolve this, and how it can ſtand with his Oath, and his Honour; I will leave it to you, Gentlemen, to judge of it. My Lord, I have another Matter to ſay, That with me ſeems to have very great Weight: My Lord Howard, upon ſome Occaſions has ſaid, being in Diſcourſe with a very great Intimate of his, and the Man being ſpeaking of the World to come, ſpeaking of Eternity, ſpeaking of the Immortality of the Soul, ſpeaking of the Rewards and Puniſhments of another Life; my Lord Howard ſhould ſay to him, How long wilt thou perſiſt in this Folly? How long wilt thou be ſo fooliſhly prevailed upon, as to believe the World was ever Made, or will ever have an End? My Lord, if a Perſon be of that Opinion, and a Man's Judgment in ſuch Things will diſcover it ſelf in his Words; How far the Teſtimony of a Man of that Perſwaſion ſhall influence a Jury when he ſtands ſingle, when there is no Fact to juſtify him, in Point of probable Circumſtance, will be eaſily obſervable, and I muſt leave it to the Gentlemen of the Jury to conſider.

My Lord, We have another ſaying of my Lord Howard's, which we ſhall give you an Account of in the Proofs, and that was in relation to his Pardon. Being free in Diſcourſe, as my Lord is a Man very liberal that way; and his Friend inquiring whether he had his Pardon: No, ſays he; Nor I cannot have it, till the Drudgery of Swearing be over. Truly 'tis a very odd Thing, that a Man ſhould call that Drudgery, that is his Duty. To teſtify the Truth, is as much the Duty of every honeſt Man, as any thing elſe. Men have died for the Truth, and we look upon thoſe as Martyrs, and the beſt of Martyrs that die for the Truth. Now, that this Noble Lord, or that any Man ſhould call this a Drudgery, which is ſo manifeſt a Duty, by giving a true Teſtimony to preſerve the King's Life, and ſupport the Government againſt the Contrivance, and Conſpiracies of evil Men, is but an odd Inſinuation; and truly I think is rather to be taken in this Senſe, as to my Lord, That he did ſtrain a little to make his Diſcovery the more profitable to him; and ſo did ſay more (ſo far I may ſafely go) than any one elſe did ſay. And my Lord, This is That that I would obſerve upon the firſt Part of the Evidence.

As for that part that concerns Aaron Smith, the Evidence given by Sheriffe and Bell, I ſubmit that to your Lordſhip, how far that can any way affect Mr. Hambden the Defendant. It is introduced to fortify the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard, and it is introduced by himſelf thus: That at their Meeting at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, there was a Diſcourſe of ſome Aſſiſtance to be had from Scotland; but ſays he, at the ſecond Meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's, then it came to a further Diſcourſe, and Colonel Sidney did undertake to name a Perſon to ſend thither; and a Perſon was named; he does not ſay Mr. Hambden was concerned in it, or that Mr. Hambden named the Man, or any thing particular as to Mr. Hambden, more than that he was in the Company. Mr. Hambden had no Hand in the Undertaking, or ſending him into Scotland; that was altogether the Part of Mr. Sidney; ſave this, that he ſays my Lord Ruſſel writ the Letter that was to go by him. It does not appear Mr. Hambden was at all concerned in it, but only was there.

is

L. C. J. And conſented to it.

Mr. Williams. I would not ſtrain any thing my Lord, further than the Evidence is.

L. C. J. Nor do not Miſrepeat it neither.

Mr. Williams. I deſign not any ſuch Thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you do though; for he ſwears it, Every one of them conſented.

Mr. Williams. By Silence it muſt be then. For he does not ſay, That he ſaid any Thing. He ſwears only Colonel Sidney undertook to manage it, to ſend a Perſon; and my Lord Ruſſel to write the Letter.

L. C. J. And all the reſt conſented to it.

Mr. Williams. What is meant by Conſent, when nothing was ſaid, I muſt leave to the Jury. I muſt agree, the Lord Howard did ſwear, that my Client was in their Company, but how far he did, or did not conſent, does not at all appear; and how far this will charge my Client, I muſt leave to you, Gentlemen. But the Proof, as to this Matter, ſtands thus; that Aaron Smith was at New-Caſtle in February laſt, that he went publickly. Now, my Lord Howard ſays, that he went to agitate a Confederacy between the Malecontents of Scotland, and thoſe in England. Now it is ſtrange, that a Man that was to agitate ſuch a Concern, ſhould go publickly with a Servant to New-Caſtle; ſo publickly as to be known again; and of his own accord tell them he was going to ſuch a Place in Scotland. And be it ſo in Fact, will any Man apply this to any thing was done before (as my Lord Howard ſays about a Conſultation to join in Rebellion?) Will any Man think, that he ſhould talk at that kind of rate, if that were his Employment, and tell whither he were going? But I rely upon this, in Point of Evidence. 'Tis not proved yet, that Aaron Smith was in Scotland. That he came within ſix Miles of the Borders of Scotland, is proved; but it is not proved he was in Scotland, or did agitate any Conſpiracy there; or did any thing more than go within ſix Miles of the Borders of Scotland. But then they would preſs it further, and they ſay, that there were ſome Scotch Gentlemen, that in the Summer came here into England, and that they hid themſelves, when the Plot was diſcovered. It does not appear my Client had any Converſation with theſe Scotch Gentlemen, or any of them, or was ever in their Company. 'Tis a very remote Inference to bring any thing of this to affect my Client in this high Charge.

My Lord, We ſhall add one thing more to diſprove that Part of the Indictment, that lays the Imputation of Turbulency and Sedition to the Charge of Mr. Hambden; and which alſo will ſhew the Improbability of his being concerned in any thing of this nature. We ſhall prove him to be a Perſon of a ſober Converſation, of a retired Life, and ſtudious Diſpoſition; and as an Evidence for the Defendant, we ſhall prove, that he, in October 1680. left England for his Health's ſake, and went into France for the Recovery of his Health. He continued there till about Michaelmas was Twelve month, then he returned. 'Tis true, he continued in England from Michaelmas to the time they ſpeak of; but we ſhall make it plain, that in February, my Client, and my Lord Mountague had adjuſted Matters between themſelves, to go the beginning of Summer again into France, there to continue and abide ſome time for their Healths. Here is a ſtrange kind of Imagination, that this Contrivance between my Lord Howard and my Lord Shaftsbury, that was going on before this time, and that was diſappointed, and my Lord Shaftsbury went away, and afterwards died in Holland, was taken up by my Client, and thoſe other Perſons when my Client, as we ſhall prove, never intended to ſtay in England. My Lord, he was a Parliament man in both the laſt Parliaments, but appeared in neither of them, being all the while in France, for the Recovery of his Health. We ſhall prove him to be one Studiouſly inclined, that he lived a retired Life, and kept very little or no Company; and you will hear from Perſons of very great Honour and Quality, what he is, as to his Perſon, and as to his Opinion; and then we ſhall ſubmit it to you Gentlemen of the Jury, Whether you can believe him Guilty of this he is charged with, which is your Iſſue. You are to try, whether he be Guilty, or Not Guilty of the Crime charged in the Indictment.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I deſire to make one Obſervation, before we call our Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Pray do not take up our time altogether in Speeches, but go on to your Evidence.

Mr. Wallop. I deſire to obſerve but one Thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Make your Obſervations at laſt, but ſpend not our Time in Speeches. I know you will expect to be heard at laſt, and ſo you ſhall whatever you will ſay.

Mr. Williams. Call the Earl of Angleſey, the Lord of Clare, and Lord Paget. Mr. Ducas (Who appearing was ſworn.) Now we have him here we muſt begin with him, my Lord. Mr. Ducas, Pray what did you hear my Lord Howard ſay at any time concerning this Conſpiracy, and who were concerned in it, and who were not?

Mr. Ducas. My Lord Howard came once to the Houſe of Colonel Sidney, I believe it was about 8 Days after the Impriſonment of Colonel Sidney, and when he was in the Houſe, I asked him, What is the Matter my Lord? He did anſwer me, he was told there was a Plot againſt the King and the Duke, and one general Inſurrection to be made, and that Colonel Sidney ſent a Man into Scotland, to which Thing my Lord Howard ſware, laying his Hand on his Breaſt, ſaying, God knows all Things, and God knows I know nothing of that; and I am ſure if

Colonel

Colonel Sidney had known any thing, he would tell me; and I ſaid, what is the Matter, my Lord? Are you afraid? And he made Anſwer to me, No honeſt Man is ſafe in his own Houſe, I pray you lend me a Bed to lie in. And he asked me about the Goods of Colonel Sidney, becauſe of the Plot and ſuch Things, and he deſired to have them removed to his Houſe; and he ſaid, rather than go to the Tower he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Speak again to the Jury that did not hear you, what ſaid my Lord Howard to you?

Mr. Ducas. He ſaid, rather than to be a Priſoner again he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Who to be a Priſoner again?

Mr. Ducas. My Lord Howard.

Mr. At. Gen. What Things were ſpoken of?

Mr. Ducas. He ſaid he would do any thing.

Mr. Williams. Were you ſpeaking of the Conſpiracy? Of the Plot?

Mr. Ducas. He ſpake of the Plot, and ſaid he knew nothing of it.

Mr. Williams. What did he ſay, Sir?

Mr. Ducas. He ſaid to me and ſwore, he knew nothing of it, and called God to witneſs.

Mr. Williams. Pray did he than ſay he would do any Thing rather than go to the Tower, when you were talking of the Plot and Conſpiracy?

Mr. Ducas. Yes, he would do any thing rather than be a Priſoner again.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what did he ſay?

Mr. Ducas. He raiſed up his Hands on high, and ſaid, he knew nothing of the Plot, or of the Inſurrection, or that Colonel Sidney had ſent any Man into Scotland.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Ducas. I believe it was 8 or 9 Days after the Impriſonment of Colonel Sidney.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month, and what Month was it?

Mr. Ducas. He was Impriſoned about the end of June.

Lord Howard. My Lord, It would be neceſſary that I ſhould make an Anſwer to this, and I know not whether I ſhould make a particular Anſwer to every one; for here is a whole Set of Witneſſes, I ſee.

L. C. J. No, let them alone. You muſt not interrupt them, they muſt go on with their Evidence; and when 'tis a fit time for you to anſwer them, the Counſel for the King will call you.

Mr. Williams. Pray ſwear Mr. Howard (Which was done.) Pray, Sir, will you pleaſe to acquaint my Lord and the Jury what you know, of what my Lord Howard has ſaid of the Plot, and who were concerned in it?

Mr. Howard. My Lord, what I have ſaid is in the Paper of Mr. Sidney's Tryal, and truly I can ſay no more than what I ſaid there.

Mr. Williams. Pray ſpeak out, Sir, and tell it again to this Jury.

Mr. Howard. I was told I ſpake it very loud then.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, ſpeak as you pleaſe, We don't direct you in what Key you ſhall ſpeak. Speak in what Key you will.

Mr. Howard. Then if you will have me ſpeak it, I will ſpeak it as loud again. My Lord, is Mr. Hambden here?

L. C. J. Yes, there he is.

Mr. Howard. In the firſt Place I do not know Mr. Hambden, my Lord, I cannot promiſe to ſpeak the very Words that I ſpake the laſt time, I cannot make them ſo fit as one Tally fits another.

Mr. At. Gen. Conſider, Sir, you were not Sworn then, you are Sworn now, That is the Difference, and therefore pray conſider of it.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, As near as I can, I will repeat the ſame Words again, I had little Acquaintance with my Lord Howard; but meeting him often at my Brother's Houſe (and being he was extraordinary pleaſant Company, I muſt needs ſay that he was ſo, and a Man of great Wit) and I coming from White-Hall, he asked me what News of the Plot? I told him there were ſome People that were in the Proclamation, or would be, and I named their Names. Says he, I know none of them except Rumbald, I think; and by chance I met him paſſing through the Old Exchange, and he ſaluted me very kindly. After this my Lord Ruſſel was taken, and when my Lord Howard heard that, ſays he, then we are all undone. And I very much fear it is a Sham Plot, ſince they have ſeized upon my Lord, and I doubt he is a loſt Man. After that, I think, as near as I can remember——The next Thing was this ——If you look upon the Book, you will ſee what I ſaid there.

L. C. J. We are not to look upon the Book, Man. You muſt give your Evidence your ſelf. Mr. Howard, I hope you do not Swear by Book? Let the Truth come out in God's Name, whatever it be.

Mr. Williams. Ay, my Lord, We deſire to have Truth come out.

L. C. J. Ay, whether it be of one Side, or the other, God forbid but Truth ſhould be ſpoken. Mr. Howard, go on.

Mr. Howard. Then my Lord, Colonel Sidney was taken, and ſays my Lord, I am extremely troubled for Colonel Sidney, for he is my very good Friend, ſaid I, Why are not you concerned for my Lord Ruſſel? He is of your Blood, ſays he, he is a Man without Exceptions. There is no Man of ſuch Honour as he, but I am concerned for Colonel Sidney, as that particular Man that has obliged me above all the World, but I never heard my Lord Howard name Mr. Hambden in all my Life.

Lord Howard. I'll give you a Reaſon for it, my Lord, if you pleaſe, why I ſaid ſo.

L. C. J. My Lord, This is Evidence for the Defendant. If the King's Counſel will call you afterwards to make Anſwer to any of theſe Things, then is your time to ſpeak. We will not let them interrupt you when you come to ſpeak, nor muſt you interrupt them now. We are bound to hear both Sides, and ſo by the Grace of God we will do.

Lord Howard. My Lord, I deſire both he and his Brother may ſtay in Court, for I have ſomething to ſay to them.

Mr. Williams. Pray what did you hear my Lord Howard ſay concerning the Plot?

Mr. Howard. He did deny it poſitively, and ſaid, they acted nothing but what was Legal, and he ſaid it 500 times over.

Mr. Williams. Did he deny it?

Mr. Howard. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. But when he ſaid they acted nothing but legally, what did he mean? Was this Plot legal?

Mr. Howard. I had former Diſcourſes with my Lord Howard at other times, and I asked him; My Lord, what tends all this to? Your going up into the City and making theſe Meetings? Says he, we intend nothing but what is legal. There is not one Man in the Company that I know of, intends any thing elſe.

Mr. Williams. What was my Lord's Opinion of the Plot in June or July, or Auguſt?

Mr. Howard. He ſaid he knew nothing of it, nor could he believe there was any ſuch thing. When thoſe Perſons were named that were to kill the King, Lord bleſs me, ſaid he, can there be ſuch a thing in Nature, That any Men ſhould be ſo wicked, but that there is one Man of Honour or Eſtate, or Conſcience, that ever had any ſuch Thought, it can never into my Head, I can never believe it.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Howard. When Rumbald and thoſe other People were put into the Proclamation.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Howard, Then I will ask you your Opinion, whether, in your Judgment, every Man that was in the Plot could not have ſaid ſo much?

Mr. Howard. I ſuppoſe every Man in the Plot would have defended himſelf as well as he could, but I cannot tell what way.

Mr. Thompſon. Sir, Did he barely affirm it, or with Aſſeverations and Imprecations?

Mr. Howard. My Lord was not put upon his Oath before me.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Howard, Don't you believe a great many that were concerned in this Plot would deny it?

Mr. Howard. I am to give my Opinion only for my ſelf, not for other People.

L. C. J. Have you done with him?

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then go over, Sir.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I am troubled with Fumes, and cannot well endure a Crowd, therefore I deſire I may have leave to be gone.

L. C. J. You may go, if you pleaſe.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Edward Howard. (But he did not appear.) Then ſwear my Lord of Clare and my Lord Paget. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask my Lord of Clare?

Mr. Williams. My Lord of Clare, Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you heard my Lord Howard ſay concerning the late Conſpiracy?

Earl of Clare. My Lord, Some Indiſpoſition I have had of late, together with the great Rigour of the Seaſon, has confined me to my Houſe theſe ſix Weeks, ſo that I ſhould not come here but upon this Summons of a Subpœna, which I thought I ought not to refuſe. I ſuppoſe I need not repeat much of what was ſaid at Col. Sidney's Tryal.

L. C. J. My Lord, You muſt give what Evidence you have to give now.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, The Gentlemen of this Jury have not heard it, therefore you muſt ſay it all over again to them.

Earl of Clare. Sometime after Mr. Sidney was taken, my Lord Howard came to ſee me, and complaining of the Times, ſaid, That all things were very ſad and dangerous, and if ever he was queſtioned again, he would not Plead, but deſire them only to count Noſes, for the quickeſt Diſpatch he thought was beſt: I replied, Sure his Lordſhip was in jeſt. He ſaid, No, he was in earneſt, for he was confident if he came to Tryal, they would have his Life, let him appear never ſo innocent. I ſaid, I hoped not ſo, it was only his Lordſhip's Fear, and becauſe of that, I thought it might be preſumed he would venture much, rather than be Tryed. And diſcourſing of the late Primate of Armagh's Prophecy; He ſaid, for his part, he thought the Perſecution was already begun, and he did believe it would be very ſharp, but withal, he hoped it would be but ſhort; and then he began to wiſh himſelf beyond Sea till the Troubles were over; and in compliance with his Lordſhip I did wiſh ſo too. But as to Sidney, He did with great Aſſeverations very much aſſert his Innocency. He ſaid, he thought he was not guilty of any of the things laid to his Charge; and ſpake with large Encomiums in his Praiſe, as he had Obligation to do, and ſeemed to bemoan his Misfortunes; which I ſaid I had then reaſon to believe he was real in, for I believe never any Man was more engaged to another than he to Colonel Sidney. I told him there was a Diſcourſe of ſome Writings of Mr. Sidney's that were taken; he ſaid he was confident they could make nothing of any Writing of his; I told him, I ſuppoſed he meant, legally they could not do it. This was the moſt he ſaid; as to Mr. Hambden, he mentioned nothing that I know of.

Mr. Williams. Did he ſeem to declare any Opinion about the Plot or Conſpiracy in general, That there was any ſuch thing or not?

Earl of Clare. I do not remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord of Clare, Did you never hear my Lord Howard before this complain of the Government that it was amiſs, and was to be rectified?

Earl of Clare. Yes, he often did complain. Every body knows my Lord's way of Diſcourſe.

Lord Howard. Pray, will you ask him, if my Lord of Clare uſed to fall out with me upon thoſe Diſcourſes.

Earl of Clare. My Lord was always good Company.

Mr. At. Gen. You mean à propos, my Lord.

Earl of Clare. I underſtand what you mean by à propos, you are a learned Man, I know.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord of Clare, if I apprehend your Lordſhip aright, my Lord Howard was diſcourſing of the Primate of Armagh's Prophecy, and ſaid he thought the Perſecution was already begun, and would be ſharp, tho' he hoped it would be ſhort, and he wiſhed himſelf beyond Sea till the Troubles were over, and your Lordſhip wiſhed your ſelf ſo too?

Earl of Clare. No; I ſaid in compliance with his Lordſhip, ſince he wiſhed himſelf beyond Sea till the Troubles were over, I wiſhed he were there too.

L. C. J. But I perceive all theſe Diſcourſes concerning the Government are reckoned but Jeſts and Matter of Laughter, but 'tis a very rank way of jeſting, I aſſure you.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We call our Witneſſes ſeriouſly, they are the King's Counſel that jeſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Was this before my Lord Howard was taken?

Earl

Earl of Clare. Yes, but after Mr. Sidney was taken.

L. C. J. Well, who do you call next?

Mr. Williams. My Lord Paget, Pray what have you heard my Lord Howard ſay concerning the Plot, and when?

Lord Paget. My Lord ſits there, and I believe he may remember it was about the 7th of July, the Saturday before my Lord went into the Country, to the beſt of my Memory, which was, I take it, the 9th of July. Upon Saturday the 7th at Night my Lord came to ſee me, I told him I was glad to ſee him abroad, and not concerned in the Diſorders that were then ſo general; my Lord told me he had been wiſhed joy by ſeveral, and he took it ill, becauſe it looked as if he were guilty. 'Tis true, my Lord was a Man of great fineneſs and readineſs in Diſcourſe, and came eaſily into all Company, my Lord ſaid that was true, but he had ſo carefully behaved himſelf, that he was ſure they could not touch him with any thing, nor did he know any thing of any body elſe that he could charge them withal.

Mr. Williams. When was this my Lord?

Lord Paget. This was the 7th of July.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, good my Lord, Why did you joy my Lord Howard? Had you any reaſon to miſtruſt my Lord?

Lord Paget. No other reaſon, than becauſe I knew he was a Man of great Freedom in Diſcourſe, and might be concerned upon that account.

Mr. At. Gen. And he would frequently diſcourſe againſt the Government, I ſuppoſe?

Lord Paget. No, I never heard my Lord diſcourſe againſt the Government in my life.

Mr. Williams. Sware Dr. Burnet. (Which was done.) Pray will you, Doctor, acquaint the Court, what you have my Lord Howard ſay concerning the late Plot, and when?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord Howard came to ſee me the Day after the Diſcourſe of the Plot broke out, Thurſday I think it was, on Wedneſday it began to be talked of. The thing was little underſtood then, but in general a Plot was diſcovered, and my Lord with a great many Proteſtations, lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, proteſted he knew of none, and believed there was none, and ſpake of the whole thing as a Contrivance.

Mr. Williams. This was the Day after the Diſcovery broke out?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, the Day after that I firſt heard of it.

Mr. Williams. Had you any other Diſcourſe with my Lord about it?

Dr. Burnet. I had not ſeen my Lord before of ſome Months. And then he ſpake a great deal to me. He told me he had been in Eſſex, and after that he went to the Bath, and went ſo early and came away before the Company came, becauſe he would avoid all Danger. And he expreſſed great Apprehenſions of Fear of Sham-Plots, and ſpake of Falſe Witneſſes and former Deſigns of that nature. The Truth of it was, one had poſſeſſed me much with a Belief of the thing, it being then but a Secret, but he ſtrove to diſpoſſeſs me of that Belief, and his whole Diſcourſe ran upon that for an whole Hour, and expreſſed, as I ſaid, great Fear of ſome Sham-Contrivance, and ſpake much of Falſe Witneſſes, wiſhing that he were beyond Sea.

L. C. J. What, he ſpake as if there were like to be great Heats and Stirs, I ſuppoſe?

Dr. Burnet. No, the Talk was about the Diſcovery, which he ſaid he believed was a Contrivance.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Howard uſe to come to you ſometimes?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, he uſed to come frequently to ſee me.

Mr. At. Gen. Dr. Burnet, Pray let me ask you one Queſtion, you ſpake of ſolemn Declarations and Proteſtations made by my Lord Howard, what gave the occaſion to ſuch a Solemnity?

Dr. Burnet. I will tell you the occaſion truly, tho' it was never asked me before. It was thus, I being poſſeſſed with the Belief of the thing by one that aſſured me it was true, and would ſoon appear to be ſo, I argued upon that Belief to convince my Lord Howard, that it was true, and he argued a great deal to diſpoſſeſs me of that Belief. And I ſaid, if there be any ſuch thing, I pray God forgive them that are concerned, but certainly it is one of the monſtrouſeſt ill things that ever was done; for hereby they have done all that could be done to ruin the Proteſtant Religion. He was ſmoaking a Pipe of Tobacco, and he laid down his Pipe, and lifted up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, and proteſted to me, he neither knew of any ſuch thing, nor believed it, but it was all a Contrivance.

Mr. At. Gen. By his Diſcourſe, you poſſibly might underſtand what he meant, did he mean being privy to the Murder of the King, or the Raiſing of Rebellion?

Dr. Burnet. There was not a word then of the Aſſaſſination, but it was all of the Plot in general.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he make no diſtinction?

Dr. Burnet. We talked of nothing but Plot in general. For the Particulars were not then known. It was only about the general Notion of a Plot.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, What was the reaſon you had to believe it?

Dr. Burnet. There was a Gentleman from Whitehall that came to ſee me, and he did aſſure me it was true, as being one that had it from a Privy-Counſellor. This was on the Wedneſday, when the Council ſate long about it; and nothing of Particulars was then let out, but only a Diſcourſe in general of ſuch a thing, and he ſaid it would be found to be a certain Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. But, Doctor, did not you a little wonder at the Carriage of my Lord Howard? That a Man that was not accuſed, that you heard of, ſhould make ſuch ſolemn Proteſtations?

Dr. Burnet. My Lord, He ſaid juſt in this manner as I have told you, when I ſaid, Pray God forgive them, if any have been concerned in ſuch a thing, he laid down his Pipe, and lift up his Hands and Eyes. Whether he thought I ſuſpected him or no, I can't tell, he beſt knows his own Thoughts.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he ſay a Word of Mr. Hambden?

Dr. Burnet. No, There was not any particular Perſon named.

Mr. Recorder. Doctor, He would not make you his Confeſſor.

Dr. Burnet. His whole Hour's Diſcourſe was to diſpoſſeſs me of the Opinion and Belief I had entertained of the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. This was about July, you ſay?

Dr. Burnet. I cannot remember the very Day of the Month, I believe it was the latter end of June, but I am ſure it was before any body was committed, that we heard of.

Mr. Recorder. Dr. Burnet, You ſay you did believe there was a Plot then?

Dr. Burnet. Yes, I did ſo, and he labour'd to diſpoſſeſs me of that Belief.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, do you believe it now?

Mr. Williams. What a Queſtion is that, Mr. Serjeant?

Dr. Burnet. I make no doubt of it, Sir, as to the Aſſaſſination.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Newport, Why do you lift up your Hands? You don't do well; for it is a very proper Queſtion.

L. C. J. Well, call your next Witneſs, Gentlemen?

Mr. Thompſon. Swear Mr. Gisborne.

[Which was done.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, Will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you have heard my Lord Howard ſay about the late Conſpiracy?

Mr. Gisborne. My Lord only ſaid he knew nothing of the Plot; that is all I can ſay.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Gisborne. The Saturday before he was taken into Cuſtody; then it was that your Honour did ſay ſo, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, and 100 more I believe would ſay ſo, that might be concerned in it for all that.

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Blake. (Which was done.) Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what Diſcourſe you had with my Lord Howard about his Pardon, and what he ſaid to you?

Mr. Blake. My Lord, About the Month of October laſt my Lord Howard ſent to me to know how I did, and deſired me to come and make him a Viſit. The next Day I went and waited upon my Lord at his Lodging at Whitehall, and after the Complements paſſed, my Lord began a Diſcourſe of the Plot, and I told him, That I heard none of the Witneſſes had their Pardons, but only Keiling the firſt Diſcoverer. My Lord told me no, but he had a Warrant for his Pardon, and with that he pluck'd it out and ſhewed it me, and I read it. And then I told him I thought it was of no avail without he had his Pardon actually under Seal. He ſaid no, but he had their Word and Honour; But, ſaid he, when I firſt received the Warrant, they ſaid I ſhould not meddle in it till I heard from them again; which I have not yet, and I aſcribe it to no other reaſon but only this, That I muſt not have it till the Drudgery of Swearing is over.

Mr. Williams. When was this?

Mr. Blake. In October laſt ſome time. So I then took my leave of my Lord, and my Lord deſired me to come and ſee him at Night about 6 a Clock in the Evening, for he had a great many came to him, but then he ſhould be at leiſure, and had many things to ſay to me.

Mr. At. Gen. At that time did my Lord expreſs himſelf as diſcontented, and that it was irkſome to him to be brought as a Witneſs?

Mr. Blake. He only ſaid thoſe Words that I have told you, and looked up and turned up his Eyes towards Heaven when he ſaid ſo.

Mr. Williams. Pray, where is Mr. Benjamin Mercer? Sware him. [Who was ſworn.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Williams. We bring him to prove that my Lord Angleſey was ſerved with a Subpœna, but is ſo ill of the Gout he can't come.

L. C. J. If that be all, there is no queſtion of it, but that he was ſubpœna'd.

Mr. Williams. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, we will prove in what Condition my Lord Angleſey is, and then we hope your Lordſhip will give us leave to prove what my Lord has ſaid concerning my Lord Howard's Diſcourſes with him.

L. C. J. No certainly, Mr. Williams, and I am ſure you ask it not as expecting it ſhould be granted.

Mr. Williams. I lay it before your Lordſhip and the Court.

L. C. J. Ay, You lay it before us, but you are a Lawyer, do you your ſelf think fit it ſhould be done?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit it to you.

L. C. J. Come, Will you conſent, that what the Duke of Monmouth has ſaid, ſhall be given in Evidence, and then I preſume the King's Counſel will conſent to your Requeſt?

Mr. Williams. I conſent? Here is my Client, my Lord, in Court, I can conſent to nothing.

L. C. J. But if ſo be there be leave given on one ſide to tell what another Perſon has ſaid, why ſhould not it be conſented to on the other ſide, that it be proved what a third Perſon that is abſent has ſaid for them?

Mr. Recorder. Ay, Will you conſent that we prove what the Duke of Monmouth has ſaid?

Mr. Williams. We don't know what the Duke of Monmouth has ſaid.

L. C. J. But you do know 'tis not Evidence, nor fit to be granted what you ask.

Mr. Jones. You know that 'tis not for your purpoſe what he has ſaid.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We muſt go according to our Inſtructions.

L. C. J. But you know the Law, why ſhould you offer any ſuch thing? Your offering it will make the Lay gens that know not the Law, think that the Court put Hardſhips upon People, in denying things which you that underſtand the Law know can't be granted.

Mr. Williams. I do not preſs it, my Lord, but leave it with you.

L. C. J. Why do you ſpend our time in urging things that are nothing to the purpoſe, and cannot be allowed?

Mr. Williams. Now, my Lord, We will go on to another part of our Defence, and that is, to call Witneſſes to the Reputation of Mr. Hambden, and his Behaviour, to ſatisfy you, that he cannot be ſuch a Perſon as the Indictment ſays, and as he muſt be if it be true what this Gentleman my Lord Howard has ſworn.

Mr. Thompſon. We will firſt examine my Lord Paget. [Who ſtood up.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We ask you to that Queſtion. Have you known this Gentleman Mr. Hambden, and what a ſort of a Man is he?

Lord Paget. I have good reaſon to know him: I have known him a great while, and have always always believed him an honest and a prudent Man, a Man of Honour and Virtue, and Integrity, my Lord; and I have had no reason to have other Opinion of him. I know he has been always ever since he came abroad into the World a Man that hath loved his Study, and Books and a contemplative Life. And therefore I should not be apt to believe, That he could apply himself to a thing so contrary to his own Nature, and to that way that he delighted in, and had always hitherto applied himself unto, I mean, to engage in a Design of so much Malice and Wickedness.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, You have had a long Conversation with the Knowledge of Mr. Hambden, you say. What say you as to his Disposition; Because this Indictment says he is a Person of a turbulent, factious, seditious Spirit?

Lord Paget. I have always known him a quiet peaceable Man, not medling in Business, very friendly, free from all Turbulency, not of much Acquaintance, nor desirous to make much.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord Paget, upon the same Oath you have taken, have you not at any time heard him express Dissatisfaction as to the Male-administration of the Government?

Lord Paget. No, never to me in the least.

Mr. At. Gen. Not at the time of the last Westminster Parliament?

Lord Paget. No, I never heard him then, nor at any time else.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Hambden was then in France, and not in that Parliament, tho' he was a Member. Where is Mr. Pelham?

L. C. J. Here he is. He sits down here. (Pointing to the Table.) What would you ask him?

[He was sworn.

Mr. Williams. Sir, Will you please to acquaint the Cuort, what Acquaintance you have had with Mr. Hambden, and how long? And what you know of him?

L. C. J. You hear the Question, Sir, How long have you been acquainted with Mr. Hambden?

Mr. Pelham. I have been acquainted with Mr. Hambden about five or six Years living near him, and all that I could observe from him was, that he was a Man much addicted to his Studies, kept much at home, and I never observed that he had much Acquaintance; but as to the Business before you, I know nothing of it, nor ever heard him speak any thing relating to it.

Mr. Williams. As to his Spirit and Disposition, Is he a turbulent Man?

Mr. Pelham. No, I never found him any thing like it. We never talked together of Matters of that nature.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you ever in his Company at any time when he discoursed about Government?

Mr. Pelham. No, I was never with him at any time when he discoursed of any such thing.

Mr. Williams. Sir Henry Hobart.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We oppose his being a Witness. He is one of his Bail.

Mr. Williams. That was upon the Habeas Corpus Act, not upon this Indictment.

Mr. At. Gen. If he be Bail for the Defendant, my Lord, he cannot be a Witness.

Mr. Williams. I appeal to the Rule of Court, whether he was not Bail upon the Habeas Corpus Act only?

Mr. At. Gen. Appeal where you will, the Bail cannot be a Witness.

Mr. Williams. We moved for an Habeas Corpus the beginning of last Term upon the late Act for Habeas Corpus's. And then at the last Day of the Term upon Habeas Corpus he was brought up thither, and was Bailed upon that Writ.

Mr. At. Gen. Are not you one of the Bail, Sir Henry Hobart?

Sir Henry Hobart. I was one of his Bail, I think it was for his Appearance.

L. C. J. If he be one of his Bail that he shall appear in this Court the first Day of this Term, and so from Day to Day till he shall be discharged, and remains under that Recognizance, then in any Case against him he cannot be a Witness for him.

Mr. At. Gen. But they mistake the Matter, He was then charged with this Indictment: He then Pleaded to it, and was Bailed to answer the Indictment; and surely in that Case he can never be a Witness.

L. C. J. That is certainly very true, and you know the Law so well Mr. Williams that I wonder you will insist of it; in every ordinary Case it is every Day's Practice to deny the Bail to be Witnesses.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is the Person Principal, will they render him in Custody?

L. C. J. Ay, What say you, will you render him in Custody? Then we will discharge the Bail.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I will tell you what we will do.

L. C. J. Tell me what you will do! Answer my Question, Will you render him in Custody?

Mr. Williams. We will change the Bail, my Lord, and find some other sufficient Person to stand in Sir Henry Hobart's Place, rather than lose our Witness.

L. C. J. With all my heart.

Mr. Williams. Here is Mr. Ashhurst, my Lord, a Gentleman of very good Value.

L. C. J. But you must render him first, and change the whole Bail. They must enter into new Recognizances.

Mr. Williams. I can't tell whether we can do that so very well, because the others I am afraid are not all here. He is a mighty material Witness, I am sure.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Williams says he is a material Witness, let him be sworn, I am so fair, I'll consent to it: Let us hear what he can say.

[Which was done.

Mr. Williams. We thank you, Mr. Attorney. I am afraid you won't live long, you are so good-natured.

L. C. J. But you are like to live for your good Nature, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Thompson. Sir Henry Hobart, How long have you been acquainted with this Gentleman Mr. Hambden?

Sir H. Hobart. I have known him any time these ten Years.

Mr. Williams. How has he been, Sir, as to his Disposition and Spirit? Did you ever find him to be of a turbulent Temper?

Sir H. Hobart. Very far from it always.

Mr. Williams. Have you had any intimate Conversation with him?

Sir H. Hobart. I have known him all along, I say, these ten Years, but of late I have had more Con-

Converſe with him ſome few Years in Travel.

Mr. Williams. Had you much Converſation, Sir?

Sir H. Hobart. I was with him continually at Paris, and Abroad.

Mr. Williams. What ſay you as to his Loyalty and Principles? Was he a Factious, Seditious Perſon?

Sir H. Hobart. Sir, He always expreſſed a great Eſteem for the Government, and great Reſpect and Duty to the King.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, when went Mr. Hambden Abroad to go into France?

Sir H. Hobart. He went into France for his Health about November, (80.) I think it was.

Mr. Williams. How long did he continue Abroad, Sir Henry?

Sir H. Hobart. I found him in Paris the May after.

Mr. Williams. How long did you tarry there, Sir, your ſelf?

Sir H. Hobart. I went from Paris in June, and came back again to Paris about October, or November the ſame Year, and I found him in France ſtill.

Mr. Williams. And when do you take it he returned into England.

Sir H. Hobart. I was with him till he came over, which was about September, (82.) I think.

Mr. Thompſon. What do you know, Sir, of his Intentions to go again beyond Sea?

Sir H. Hobart. When, Sir, do you mean?

Mr. Thompſon. Since that time he came over, you ſay in September, (82.)

Sir H. Hobart. He told me of it often, I think it was about March, more particularly once at his own Houſe.

Mr. Thompſon. What March, Sir?

Sir H. Hobart. March (83.)

Mr. Thompſon. That is laſt March.

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, laſt March, he talked of it ſeveral times, particularly once I went about ſome Buſineſs of my own, and then he diſcourſed a great deal of his going over with my Lord Mountague that now is; for he told me his Health was not yet eſtabliſhed, for he came over out of an hot Countrey in Autumn, and had been all the Winter in this colder Countrey, and the Air he found had impaired his Health again. And it was not only what he told me, but I had a Letter from a Friend of mine in France, to whom I had ſent to deſire him to come over; but he writ me Word, no, Mr. Hambden was coming over again, and he would not come back yet.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he tell you when he intended to go over, Sir Henry?

Sir H. Hobart. As ſoon as Mr. Mountague, my Lord Mountague that now is, could get ready, who was to carry his Lady over with him.

Mr. Williams. Sir, Do you know of any Preparation made by Mr. Hambden for it?

Sir H. Hobart. He had reſolved to take his Lady with him, becauſe Mr. Mountague's Lady went, and ſo I believe did prepare accordingly.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Mr. Mountague go over?

Sir H. Hobart. He did not go then, but ſince he is gone.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you in France then at this Time?

Sir H. Hobart. This was in England at his own Houſe.

Mr. Williams. Pray Sir, what is his Diſpoſition?

Sir H. Hobart. He was always inclined to a ſtudious Life, and kept very little Company.

Mr. At. Gen. Was this in March, 83?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he came over in September before. I always obſerved him to be of a retired Temper.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay, in 1680. he went into France, and in (82.) he came over again?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir Henry, ſince you converſed ſo much with him; Have you heard him ſince the laſt Parliament at Weſtminſter, or at any time have you been by when he hath diſcours'd his Opinion about Government?

Sir H. Hobart. Truly, Sir, I don't take my ſelf to be capable of diſcourſing with him about any ſuch Matters.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you heard him at any time complain of the Male-Adminiſtration of the Government?

Sir H. Hobart. No, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you never heard any ſuch Thing from him?

Sir H. Hobart. No, never.

Mr. Williams. Swear Dr. Lupée——My Lord, We muſt deſire an Interpreter, for the Dr. ſpeaks French only.

L. C. J. Swear an Interpreter.

Mr. Williams. Dr. Burnet, or if he be gone, call Sir Henry Hobart again. We muſt beg the Favour of you, Sir Henry to be an Interpreter, you underſtand the French Tongue very well.

Sir H. Hobart. I will do it with all my Heart, Sir, as well as I can.

L. C. J. Swear him.

Then the Dr. was ſworn, and the Oath repeated to him by Sir Henry Hobart in French.

Cryer. You ſhall well and truly interpret between the Court and the Witneſs, and the Witneſs and the Court, according to the beſt of your Skill and Knowledge: So help you God.

Mr. Thompſon. Sir Henry, Will you pleaſe to repeat what Queſtions we ſhall ask, and what Anſwers he makes?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, Sir, as well as I can, I will.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, ask the Doctor this Queſtion, If he be acquainted with Mr. Hambden?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he ſays very well. He lived near two Years with him.

Mr. Thompſon. How long is it ſince?

Sir H. Hobart. Four Years ſince, he ſays.

Mr. Williams. Pray in that time, What was his Diſpoſition? Was he a ſeditious and turbulent Man? Or was he a ſtudious retired Man, or what?

Sir H Hobart. He ſays the two Years he lived with Mr. Hambden, he kept him Company in his Studies, and all that time he found he had no other Inclinations but for Study and Knowledge, and his Inclinations were very Vertuous. He always obſerved in his Diſcourſe a great ſubmiſſion and reſpect that he had for the Laws of his Nation, and his Prince, and to that degree he was a faithful Subject to the King, that once he told him in diſcourſing with him of the late Popiſh Plot, that he was ready to ſacrifice

ſacrifice his Life and Fortune for the King's Service.

Mr. Thompſon. Ask him what Diſcourſe he had with him of the Plot ſince it brake out?

L. C. J. Will that be any Evidence do you think, Mr. Thompſon? Will Mr. Hambden's Declaration be any Evidence, he being a Perſon accuſed? Do you think he would tell the Doctor, or any body elſe that he was Guilty, when he was like to be queſtioned? That would have been a wiſe Buſineſs indeed. You ſay, he was a very ſtudious Man, and a learned Man, truly if he had done that, he had beſtowed his Time in Learning to very good Purpoſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, That that we would ask him is this; This Perſon the Doctor being diſcourſing with Mr. Hambden upon the Diſcovery of the late Conſpiracy, and of the dangerouſneſs of the Time, he would have adviſed Mr. Hambden to have gone; no, he ſaid, he would not, for he was an innocent Man, and would not ſtir.

L. C. J. Well, ask him what you will, but his Declaration of his own Innocence cannot be taken for Evidence.

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays, ſince this Plot was diſcovered, he was going one Day to viſit Mr. Hambden, and going through Long-Acre, he met a French Miniſter, a Savoyard Miniſter —— But, my Lord, he ſpeaks ſo faſt, and goes on with ſo much at a time, that I cannot remember it all.

Mr. Williams. Well, what ſaid that Miniſter to him?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays, this Miniſter asked him, if Mr. Hambden was not concerned in the Plot, and upon that he went and told him what the Miniſter had ſaid to him——He ſays, he told Mr. Hambden, that the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Grey were hid——He ſays, upon that, Mr. Hambden ſaid to him, I will never fly, nor conceal my ſelf, for my Conſcience reproaches me in nothing.

L. C. J. Ask him why does he think the French Miniſter, the Savoyard as he calls him, ſhould ask whether Mr. Hambden were in the Plot?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays, Mr. Hambden ſaid he would rather die innocent than fly with the imputation of Guilt upon him.

L. C. J. But ask him the Queſtion I put, Why ſhould that Savoyard Parſon ſay ſo? What reaſon had he to think Mr. Hambden was in the Plot?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays the Miniſter did ask him, but he can't tell what Reaſon he had to think ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir Henry, ask him this Queſtion; How long ago it was ſince he left him?

Sir H. Hobart. Four Years, he ſays.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it, in England, or France?

Sir H. Hobart. Whilſt he lived in Bloomsbury, he ſays.

Mr. Williams. Call Dr. Needham and Monſieur Juſtell (Who appeared) and Monſieur Juſtell was ſworn. Pray Sir Henry Hobart, will you ask Monſieur Juſtell who ſpeaks French too, if he know any thing of Mr. Hambden's Reſolution to Travel with Mr. Mountague into France?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays, Yes. He did tell him he was going into France, and he offered to carry ſome Books for him along with him.

Mr. Williams. What Company was he to go in, and what time?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſays, Sir, he can't be exact to the Month when Mr. Hambden ſpake of going over, but he ſays, it was a great while before this Plot came to be diſcovered.

Mr. Williams. Was it ſome Months before?

Sir H. Hobart. It was a Month before it was known, he ſays.

Mr. Williams. In what Company was he to go?

Sir H. Hobart. He ſaid he was to go with Mr. Mountague.

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, Will you ask him, was he employ'd to get any French Servants to be with him?

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he ſays.

L. C. J. Ay, but what was the Queſtion; for there is ſuch a crowd of People before the Counſel, that the Court cannot hear Mr. Conyer's Queſtion.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, I asked him, Whether he was employed to get any French Servants to be with Mr. Hambden.

Sir H. Hobart. Yes, he ſays.

L. C. J. Well there is Dr. Needham, What do you ask him?

Then Doctor Needham was ſworn.

Mr. Williams. We call Dr. Needham for this Purpoſe my Lord, to prove that theſe Gentlemen that are accuſed, Mr. Hambden, and my Lord of Eſſex, and the others, had very little Eſteem, and mean Opinion of my Lord Howard. And how one, they ſo little eſteemed, ſhould be let into ſo great a Secret, will be very ſtrange to imagine. Dr. Needham, Pray, what can you ſay of any of theſe Gentlemen's Opinions of my Lord Howard? What Opinion had my Lord of Eſſex of him?

L. C. J. Is my Lord of Eſſex now before us? What is that to this Caſe, Mr. Williams? Let my Lord of Eſſex have what Opinion he would of him; How does that concern the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. I tell you why, I offer it to my Lord——

L. C. J. But pray, offer what is Evidence, and keep to the Buſineſs before you.

Mr. Williams. Falſus in uno, falſus in omnibus. If we can prove that what he hath ſaid of my Lord of Eſſex is falſe, he is not to be believed againſt the Defendant.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, but upon the Evidence of my Lord Howard, all the reſt were convicted.

Mr. Williams. I offer it only upon what is here to Day before you. He ſays, my Client, and my Lord of Eſſex were confederate with him upon ſuch a Deſign. Now if my Lord of Eſſex was not there, then he is falſe in that, and that he was not, we offer this as Evidence——

L. C. J. But 'tis not a proper Evidence in this Caſe.

Mr. Williams. 'Tis a ſort of Evidence——

L. C. J. Ay, 'tis a ſort of Evidence, but 'tis not to be allowed. If you will prove Mr. Hambden's Opinion, you may, but you muſt not for him bring Proof of what my Lord of Eſſex, a third Perſon, thought of my Lord Howard.

Mr. Williams. I only offer it thus——

L. C. J. Offer what is Evidence, Man! You are a Practiſer, and know what is Evidence, but you have offered two or three Things to Day, that I know you do at the ſame time know is not Evidence, and I ſpeak it that it may not be thought we deny you, or your Client any any thing that is according to the courſe of Law. You that know the Law, know 'tis ſo as we ſay. Mr. Attorney has gratified you in waving three or four Things already, but nothing will ſatisfy, unleſs we break the courſe of other Tryals.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, What I take not to be Evidence I do not offer, and where the Court over-rules me, I have not inſiſted upon it.

L. C. J. No!

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you would have inſiſted upon it, if Mr. Attorney would have been ſo eaſy as to conſent, and the Court would have let you. Pray keep to the Buſineſs, and the Methods of Law; you know the Law very well.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I humbly apprehend this may be Evidence, and I lay it before you. My Lord Howard has proved that my Lord of Eſſex, and Five more, of which Mr. Hambden was one, met and conſulted about ſuch Matters. We may, I hope, be admitted to prove, That my Lord of Eſſex was not there; for if we can take off his poſitive Proof, as to any one of the Circumſtances, we take off from the Truth of the Fact. If all the Perſons were not there; then my Lord Howard is miſtaken in that, and accordingly muſt not be believed in the reſt; therefore my Lord, I preſs it no otherwiſe: He hath proved theſe ſix Perſons were there. I offer this as ſome Evidence, That it is unlikely it ſhould be ſo, becauſe my Lord of Eſſex had ſo little Opinion of my Lord Howard, that he would never conſult with him about any matter.

L. C. J. Then certainly my Lord Howard is to be believed, to all Intents and Purpoſes, for here is a Record of the Conviction of my Lord Ruſſel, and of Colonel Sidney, and all upon the Teſtimony of this Gentleman, my Lord Howard, and is not that more to ſupport his Credit, than a flying Report of a third Perſon's Opinion of him. And yet after all we ſay, 'tis no Evidence againſt Mr. Hambden, and has been waved by Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Williams. Then I will not preſs it, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is no Evidence, certainly, Mr. Williams.

L. C. J. It ſeems my Lord Eſſex had ſuch an Opinion of my Lord Howard's Evidence, That he thought fit to cut his own Throat, rather than abide the Tryal.

Mr. Williams. Call Mr. Murray.

L. C. J. Suppoſe my Lord of Eſſex had ſaid, That he was out of the Plot, and Mr. Hambden was in, would that have been good Evidence againſt Mr. Hambden, do you think? Pray mind what is the Buſineſs before you?

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Murray. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Man?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, we call him as to what I opened of my Lord Howard's Opinion of the World to come, and Rewards and Puniſhments there.

L. C. J. Mr. Williams. Pray take notice of this, private Diſcourſes that People can't come to make Anſwer unto, becauſe they can't imagine to have them objected, are a very odd ſort of Evidence.

Mr. Williams. Therefore I opened it warily and tenderly, my Lord, the Witneſs will tell you the Story better than I.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what Mr. Williams has ſaid, or I have ſaid in heat of Talk or Vanity. God knows how often all of us have taken the great Name of God in vain: Or have ſaid more than becomes us, and talked of Things that we ſhould not do.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, how can my Lord Howard be prepared to give any Anſwer to this?

Lord Howard. My Lord, This preſſes hard upon my Reputation, my Lord. I profeſs before God I do not know this Fellow, I never ſaw him in my Life before as I know: But a Company of impudent Fellows take the liberty of ſaying what they pleaſe.

L. C. J. To rake into the whole courſe of a Man's Life is very hard.

Lord Howard. I would fain have theſe Fellows dare to ſay this any where elſe of me.

Mr. Williams. Well, my Lord, we will wave it.

L. C. J. They do not think it a fit Thing to preſs it.

Lord Howard. But my Lord, it concerns me in my Reputation; who is this Raſcal they bring here? God's life, who is he?

L. C. J. We muſt be tender of Men's Reputation, and not let every thing come as Evidence when 'tis not fit to be Evidence, to put Slurs and Scandals upon Men that they can't be prepared to wipe off. Is he convicted of any Crime? If he is, you ſay ſomething, ſhew the Record of it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Williams. You know the Caſe adjudged lately in this Court, a Perſon was indicted of Forgery, we would not let them give Evidence of any other Forgeries, but that for which he was indicted, becauſe we would not ſuffer any raking into Men's courſe of Life, to pick up Evidence that they can't be prepared to anſwer to.

Mr. Williams. We have that reſpect for my Lord's Honour too, as not to preſs it, only we had it in our Briefs, and we muſt go according to our Inſtructions.

Lord Howard. I deſire to know who that Raſcal is; What is he? Where does he live? I will make him an Example.

L. C. J. Pray compoſe your ſelf, my Lord, There is nothing of this preſſed.

Lord Howard. To ſay, I am an Atheiſt, my Lord! What can be a greater Reflection?

L. C. J. He has not told us any ſuch thing as yet. And we will take care that nothing ſhall be offered but what is fitting.

Lord Howard. I vow to God, my Lord, I do not know the Man.

L. C. J. My Lord, Do you think that every thing that a Man ſpeaks at the Bar for his Client, and his Fee, is therefore to be believed, becauſe he ſaid it? No, the Jury are to take nothing here for Evidence to guide them of what the Counſel ſay, but what is approved. They are to judge ſecundum allegata & probata, that is their Duty.

Lord

Lord Howard. Does that Fellow look like a Man of that Figure, that I ſhould ſay any thing, or have any Converſation with him?

L. C. J. My Lord, I don't know what he is. Go on, Gentlemen.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We have done with our Evidence. If Mr. Attorney will leave it here, we will.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we won't miſtruſt the Evidence, nor the Court.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I deſire to ſpeak a Word my ſelf, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name. You, or your Counſel, I will hear all you will ſay, and as long as you will ſpeak, provided you ſpeak within the Bounds of Decency.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I think it beſt to leave it to the Court: We hope we have made it clear that our Client is innocent.

L. C. J. Would to God you were Innocent, that is the worſt Wiſh I wiſh you, but we will either hear him or you ſpeak, ſpeak as long as you will.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I deſire to make but one Obſervation.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name make what Obſervations you will, Mr. Wallop, I hindered you from making your Obſervations at firſt, becauſe I knew it would be defired after the Evidence was over.

Mr. At. Gen. Then my Lord, I expect to be heard too. If Mr. Hambden makes a Speech, I will reply, or if his Counſel do it, I expect the laſt Word, for I will have neither the Party, nor the Counſel to ſpeak after I have ſumm'd up the Evidence for the King. Mr. Hambden, and his Counſel are all one.

Mr. Wallop. I have but one ſhort Obſervation to make.

L. C. J. Go on then, Mr. Wallop, and ſay what you will.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I think 'tis very fit you ſhould do it of both Sides; 'tis a Cauſe of great concernment.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We will leave it here I think.

L. C. J. Take your own Courſe, Do not ſay we hinder you of ſaying what you will for your Client.

Mr. At. Gen. Let them do what they will.

L. C. J. I'll ſit ſtill, make Speeches every one of you as long as you will.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. 'Tis fit they ſhould ſpeak what they can for the Advantage of their Client.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We leave it to the Court.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been ſomething long, and the Counſel both for the King, and for Mr. Hambden againſt whom this Indictment has already been found by the Grand Jury, having left it to the Court to Sum up all, I ſhall do it as well as I can: And the Queſtion before you, Gentlemen, is, Whether the Defendant be guilty of the Offence charged in the Indictment, or not Guilty, and there having been ſo long an Evidence on the one Side, and on the other, it will be fit for me according to the beſt of my remembrance to help your Memories, by recollecting what has been ſaid on both Sides, which I ſhall do as near as I can, and if my Brethren will pleaſe to ſupply any thing that ſhall be omitted by me, nay, if the Counſel for the King, or for the Priſoner, will put us in mind of any thing that has been ſpoken, and proved either againſt, or for the Party indicted, in God's Name let them have liberty to ſpeak it: For it is fit the Queſtion ſhould be left before you with all fairneſs, and according to the beſt of my Obſervation and Memory, thus it ſtands.

The firſt Thing, Gentlemen, that is conſiderable to you, is, That there is ſuch an Indictment, as has been already opened unto you, that is preferred againſt Mr. Hambden, that does ſet forth, That Mr. Hambden is a ſeditious Perſon, and a Man, according to the Language of the Indictment (which are Words of courſe and form in an Indictment of this Nature) of an evil Diſpoſition, deſigning to diſturb and diſtract the Government, and that he with ſeveral other Perſons, did conſpire to bring in Troubles, and Perplexities upon the Government; and in order to that, that there were ſome Meetings between him and ſeveral other Perſons, and that there was a Deſign to conciliate ſome Perſons of another Nation to go along with them in their Deſign, particularly ſome in the Kingdom of Scotland. This is the Purport in the Indictment, to which the Defendant has pleaded not Guilty.

Gentlemen, The Evidence for the King has been of this Sort, They did at the beginning, which yet I muſt tell you by the way, is not any thing of Evidence, but the King's Counſel would make ſome Overtures to preſs on their Side, as the Defendant, and thoſe that are of Counſel for Mr. Hambden, have made ſome little Hints to preſs on their Side, that ſome Witneſſes the one and the others would have had here, were ſubpœna'd but could not be here. It ſeems by the Proof, here was a Meeting, as it was between Six ſeveral Perſons, and they name them, the Duke of Monmouth was one, the Lord Howard another, the Lord Ruſſel a Third, the Earl of Eſſex a Fourth, Algernone Sidney a Fifth, and Mr. Hambden the Sixth. As for my Lord of Eſſex he is gone to his long Home, my Lord Ruſſex, and Mr. Sidney have received Sentence, and been executed. So there remains Three Surviving, and ſay they that are for the King: We produce my Lord Howard, and we have taken care to Summon the Duke of Monmouth, by leaving Subpœna's, where it could be thought he was to be met with, with Promiſes of his Servants to deliver them to him in order to have the Duke to be a Witneſs for the King this Day. I preſume the meaning is, They would infer from that, that they would give an Account of the fairneſs of this Proceeding, though it has been a Matter that has obtained a Sort of Belief in the World, as though the Duke of Monmouth had denied, that there was any ſuch thing as this Confederacy and Conſpiracy: And that has given People occaſion to be of very different Opinions, and Perſuaſions about the Matter; but ſay they, to ſhew we are not afraid to have the Truth come out, we have done as much as in us lay to get this Perſon hither: Therefore we have left Subpœna's at his Houſes, at his Lodging with his Servants, and they have promiſed to take care they ſhould be delivered to him, and he is not come. Againſt this on the other Side, ſay they, for the Defendant, We have taken all the care we could to bring my Lord Angleſey, who was to have been a Witneſs for the Advantage of the Perſon indicted, but my Lord Angleſey is at preſent afflicted with a Fit of the Gout, and for that very reaſon we can't have him here. And ſo they ſhew, that they have been very zealous to get Witneſſes on their ſide to vindicate their Reputation, but they did not meet with that effect that they deſired. Theſe two things, Gentlemen, are Matters that are uſed both againſt him one way, and for him another.

But now to come home to the Evidence upon which this Matter is to turn, and here you are to conſider, that whatſoever has been ſaid or offered by the King's Counſel on the one ſide, or the Counſel for the Defendant on the other ſide, (I call him ſo, for 'tis but a Treſpaſs tho' a great one) You muſt not take into your Conſideration at all any further than as their Allegations are ſupported by the Teſtimony that has been given: And whatſoever the Witneſſes have ſaid either for or againſt him, and out of that Teſtimony as near as I can remember I will give you the Objections, and their Anſwers with the Obſervations that have been made, or do naturally ariſe out of the Facts in Proof.

My Lord Howard, in the firſt place, gives an account of this Matter, and, Gentlemen, the Times will be wonderful material, and therefore I beg you would take a Pen and Ink, and mark theſe material Circumſtances as you go. For in all Matters of Fact poſitively proved, which alſo have their Credit ſupported by Circumſtances which do accompany them, the Teſtimonies given of ſuch Facts are to be valued according as thoſe Circumſtances keep touch with, and humour, as I may ſo ſay, the Fact that they are to evidence the Truth of.

My Lord Howard does therefore in the firſt place acquaint you, that about Michaelmas there was a Diſcourſe between him and my Lord of Shaftsbury, and that was concerning a Riſing intended to be had, and he tells you how that my Lord Shaftsbury was fully reſolved upon it; That things at length came to that paſs, That he was forced to go from his own Houſe, as he ſaid, being diſappointed by the Duke of Monmouth and others who had promiſed to joyn with him, and was retired to the Houſe of one Watſon in or near Woodſtreet. But he underſtanding where he was, my Lord Howard went to him, (I think he ſays my Lord Shaftsbury ſent to him) when he came, my Lord Shaftsbury told him, That altho' there had been ſuch a Diſappointment by thoſe Perſons he named, yet that did not take off his Edge, but he was reſolved to go on himſelf, nay, tho' his Body was infirm, yet he would be ſet on Horſe-back, tho' he was lifted up to appear in the Head of a Party that he had prepared, and were ready when he would call them. And he began then to reflect upon the Diſappointment of the Duke of Monmouth, and as tho' the Duke of Monmouth had only a Proſpect to advance himſelf, and had only an Eye upon his own particular Intereſt. That he ſo managed Matters as if he deſign'd to have the ſole Diſpoſition of all things whatſoever, and began to be uneaſy with the Duke of Monmouth. My Lord Howard did endeavour to have prevailed with my Lord of Shaftsbury for a Reconciliation between the Duke of Monmouth and him, it being a Matter that required ſo much Safety and Security, and did deſire him that he would have ſome Intercourſe with the Duke of Monmouth in order to conciliate a Friendſhip between them, that they might go hand in hand. You find he was under ſome Difficulties about this Matter, he was not able to bring the Thing about; for after he had ſpake with the Duke of Monmouth, and prevailed with him, my Lord of Shaftsbury was peeviſh, and talked at a diſtance, and when he had appointed a Meeting one time, it was prevented, my Lord Shaftsbury went away into Holland, and there died in Holland. This is the Subſtance of what my Lord Howard ſays as to that Matter.

But, Gentlemen, this is material, and I'll tell you why I think it material; becauſe the Counſel for the Defendant have made it an Objection particularly to my Lord Howard's Teſtimony, That my Lord Howard is particular as to the Day after Michaelmas-day, but he is not ſo particular when he comes to ſpeak of other times upon which the true Queſtion before you depends. For now he ſpeaks more generally as to the Meetings at the Defendant's, and my Lord Ruſſel's, that they were about the middle of January and the beginning of February, and is not particular as to the Day. I ſpeak of this becauſe that has been made uſe of as an Objection againſt my Lord Howard's Teſtimony. And I will tell you as near as I can all the Objections that have been made againſt this Teſtimony after ſuch time as I have ſetled it and laid before you what the whole of it amounts to.

Then comes my Lord Howard and ſays, that Meeting with the Duke of Monmouth ſome time after this they began to talk together, and they thought that tho' the Buſineſs had failed in the Managery of my Lord of Shaftsbury, yet it was fit there ſhould be a re-aſſuming of the Buſineſs again, but in order to ſettle Matters that things might not go inconſiderately on, it was thought fit that they ſhould reſolve themſelves into a certain Number that were confident one of another, in order to ſteer and tranſact theſe Matters the better among themſelves. And they muſt be Perſons fit to be truſted and for whom there ſhould be an Undertaking among them for their Faithfulneſs and Integrity; for all Perſons are not fit to be truſted, but only ſuch as they agreed upon. The Duke of Monmouth he undertook for my Lord of Eſſex and my Lord Ruſſel, thoſe were the Perſons for whom he would engage, as likewiſe for my Lord Salisbury. And then they began to talk of ſome more, particularly of Mr. Sidney, but he was a Cynical Man, and a Philoſopher, and they were firſt to come to him, and to treat with him in another manner than the reſt. He was not to appear as the Duke of Monmouth, but to take him in his Retirement and Privacies, and then they might be the better able to break the Matter to him. And he ſays accordingly there was a time deſigned on purpoſe; and at that ſame time the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Howard did go and attack Mr. Sidney, they found him on a private Day, and dined with him; and upon that Dinner the whole Matter was broke up, and put into ſome Method; Then was the whole Deſign contrived as to the Perſonſons that were to be engaged in this Matter; and he ſays, They agreed upon Six. The Duke of Monmouth undertook for my Lord of Eſſex, and my Lord Ruſſel and Col. Sidney undertook for Mr. Hambden. He ſpeaks of my Lord of Salisbury, but my Lord of Salisbury was never there among them, and ſo I put him out of the Caſe, I quit him from being of their Number, becauſe there were but Six in all, my Lord of Eſſex, and my Lord Ruſſel, who were undertaken for by the Duke of Monmouth, Mr. Hambden undertaken for by Mr. Sidney, and my Lord Howard; for by that time Mr. Hambden was come into the Matter upon Col. Sidney's Undertaking.

Now we are got, Gentlemen, by theſe Steps till we come about the middle of January; but, ſays my Lord Howard, I cannot poſitively ſay, it was this Day, or that Day of the Month; but being about the middle of January, I conjecture it was about the 14th, but he is not poſitive to the Day. He ſays, accordingly they went to Mr. Hambden's Houſe, which was the Place firſt deſign'd for them to meet in. He ſays, there accordingly they did all Six meet; and that it being Mr. Hambden's Houſe, they thought it moſt proper for him who was Maſter of the Houſe, who uſually bids his Gueſts welcome, to break Silence, and to impart the Buſineſs of the Deſign they met about. He ſays, accordingly Mr. Hambden, after the firſt Complements of Entertainment, did give an account of the Buſineſs they were come about, and that it was in order to have a Riſing. This, he ſays, was propoſed by Mr. Hambden. He tells you, then they fell into Debate about the Time when, concerning Men, and Arms, and Money; and likewiſe concerning the Places. He tells you the Places wherein the Riſing was deſign'd to be, were Devonſhire, Cheſhire, Somerſetſhire, and other Places, that is, as to the Circumſtance of the Place. Then he tells you concerning the Time; it was debated, Whether it ſhould be all at one time, or at ſeveral times? Whether they ſhould only begin here, and the Country fall in, or all at once? That likewiſe they had in Conſideration the Buſineſs of Money, and that his Grace the Duke of Monmouth did ſpeak of 30 or 35 Thouſand Pounds, or ſome ſuch Sum at that time. But then, as was natural for Men of Deliberation and Conſideration to conſult about, they took into Debate that they might not go headlong, to endeavour to conciliate another Party to chime in, as he ſays, along with them, in the Buſineſs they were going about, and accordingly it was thought fit and propoſed, That there ſhould be an Endeavour to conciliate a Friendſhip with ſome Perſons in Scotland, to fall in with them; and then he tells you, who the Perſons were that were named: Some of the Names he remembers, and others he has forgot; he ſpeaks particularly of the Campbels, Sir John Cockram, and my Lord Melvin: And he ſays, other Perſons were mentioned, but he can't remember their Names; and my Lord Ruſſel knew ſome of theſe Perſons, and the Duke of Monmouth knew ſome others of them, becauſe of his near Relation to the Earl of Argyle, the Perſon that you know was proſcrib'd for Treaſon in the Kingdom of Scotland. He ſays, that ſo far the Debate of this Matter went, that they thought fit a Meſſenger ſhould be provided, a truſty Man to be ſent into Scotland to treat with theſe Gentlemen about this Matter; and my Lord Ruſſel, I think he ſays, undertook to write a Letter to be carried by this Meſſenger to theſe Scotch Gentlemen.

He ſays, purſuant to this Conſultation at Mr. Hambden's, a Fortnight after, or thereabouts, which brings it up to the beginning of February, then was the Meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's Houſe, and there they debated theſe Matters over again, and the whole Managery of ſending a Meſſenger into Scotland, was left to the Diſcretion of Col. Sidney, and he undertook that Work, that was his Poſt that he was to manage; and he does ſay, That he does very well remember, That Aaron Smith was the Perſon propoſed then; and tho' he was unknown to ſome of the Company, yet he was well known to others; and by reaſon of that Knowledge that others had of him, they looked upon him as a Perſon very fit, and every way qualify'd for it.

So that, Gentlemen, here is proved a Conſultation in order to the Raiſing of Men to infeſt the Government; a Diſcourſe concerning Money and Arms for this End, and the Places where, and the time when; and of conciliating a Friendſhip with ſome diſcontented Perſons in Scotland, to joyn, and chime in with theſe Conſpirators in England.

And then there is yet another Circumſtance very remarkable, Becauſe tho' my Lord ſpake it not at the ſame time that he delivered his Teſtimony; yet upon the Queſtion asked, he gives you a plain Account of it; and it has a plain Dependance upon what went before. Said they among themſelves, 'Tis proper for us, as near as we can, to ſhut the Door againſt any Exceptions about theſe Men's coming to Treat with us; but how ſhall we get them hither without ſuſpicion? We muſt have ſome Shams, or Cant or other, to be a Pretence for theſe People to come into England; and that was agreed to be about ſome Plantation in Carolina.

This, he ſays, was the Reſult of that Meeting; and that when the Meeting was broke up, about three or four Days afterwards (mind the Circumſtance of Time, Gentlemen, for 'tis very material) Col. Sidney and he met together, they went to Col. Sidney's Houſe, and there he ſaw him take Money out of a Till, where there were ſeveral hundreds of Guineas, or Pieces of Gold; and as he believes, he ſays, he took threeſcore Guineas, or ſome ſuch Sum; and told him, it was to give to Aaron Smith in order to his Journey into Scotland: That he went out with him in his Coach, but Mr. Sidney ſet him down by the way, and he himſelf went into London, telling him, he went to that purpoſe, to give Aaron Smith the Money. Some time after, about a Week, or a Fortnight, or ten Days after that, he ſays, he met with Mr. Sidney again; and he ſays, Mr. Sidney gave him an account, That he had heard Aaron Smith had been at Newcaſtle, but he had not heard of him ſince that time, and that is another Circumſtance in point of Time, Gentlemen; ſo that you have here a poſitive Oath made by my Lord Howard, that Mr. Hambden was privy, and conſenting to all theſe Debates, as to the Raiſing of Men, and the Levying of Money, and about the conciliating a Friendſhip with theſe Men of Scotland, and about ſending a Meſſenger into Scotland to that purpoſe. And if my Lord Howard do ſwear true, no Man living can doubt but that Mr. Hambden is guilty of this Indictment. The firſt Meeting was at his Houſe, and there he did take notice of what had been formerly done, and propoſed the things, breaking the Silence, and entering into the Debate; which ſhews that he had been diſcourſing about it before, and had it in his Thoughts before, or elſe he could not have propounded it as the End of their Meeting.

Now this, Gentlemen, Here is a poſitive Fact; and, as Mr. Williams ſays true, no Man living can give any Anſwer to a poſitive Fact, but by ſome other things that may be Circumſtances to oppoſe that Fact. Now he ſays, there are no Circumſtances that have been proved, that will give any Credibility to what has been depoſed, beſides the poſitive Oath of my Lord Howard. So that, ſays he, your Fact, tho' it be poſitively ſworn, is not ſupported by any Circumſtances of the Fact, that may give Credibility to it. And he objects very materially; for if it be not ſupported by credible Circumſtances, then indeed it would be leſs material; yet I cannot ſay, it would not be at all material; it is material, and you are to determine, whether you have ſufficient Evidence given you, to induce you to believe, That my Lord Howard is at this time Guilty of wilful and malicious Perjury; for it is Perjury, and that in the higheſt degree, if it be not true that he ſays; and God deliver all Mankind from being Guilty of any ſuch thing. I leave that to your Conſciences, Gentlemen, who are the Judges of it.

But ſays the King's Counſel, Here are Circumſtances that do ſupport our Fact, and the Credibility of it. For, 1ſt, here is the Circumſtance of Aaron Smith, who was ſent into Scotland by Mr. Sidney in purſuance of this Deſign, and this Circumſtance my Lord Howard does ſubjoin to what he has poſitively affirmed againſt the Defendant. And this Circumſtance is a thing that may be helped by other Proof; and what is this Circumſtance? Say they, That Aaron Smith was ſent into Scotland; and in order to prove that, they have called one Sheriffe, who is a Man that keeps an Inn at the Poſt-houſe in Newcaſtle, from whence Col. Sidney told my Lord Howard he had notice of his Arrival at Newcaſtle, but had heard no more of him after that. And this Sheriffe ſwears directly, I ſaw that Man they call Aaron Smith, when he was ſhewn to me before the King and the Council; and Mr. Atterbury ſwears he ſhew'd Aaron Smith to him, and then Sheriffe ſwears, That Man you ſhew'd to me, was the Man I ſaw at my Houſe at Newcaſtle, that chimes in with the Circumſtance of Fact that Mr. Sidney heard from him at Newcaſtle. And then there is the Circumſtance of Time when he ſaw him there; Says he, I ſaw him the Friday before Shrove-Tueſday, which they in the North call Faſter's-Even. He came to my Houſe on Thurſday Night, and went away the next Day, Friday; and he went with his Guide, the other Man, Northward, in order to his Journey into Scotland, as he himſelf ſaid. Says he, I remember the time very particularly, it was the Friday before Shrove-Tueſday laſt, this February was Twelve-month; and he went yet further; ſays he, I did not only ſee him when he went away, but when he came back again, for he left his Man at my Houſe all the time, and he tells you what his Name was; for he ſays, Smith went under the diſguiſed Name of one Clerke, and he did then talk of going to the Weſtern Parts of Scotland, he named Douglas as he thinks, tho' he is not poſitive in that, but he is in the Perſon, that was the Man. And ſays he, I ſent for this Perſon, the other Fellow Bell, and he was the Guide he had along with him. And upon Bell's Examination, What ſays he? Says he, I remember that Man came thither at that time to the other Man's Houſe; I take it upon my Oath that is the Man, and he went by the Name of Clerke, he hired me to be his Guide; I went out with him on Friday Morning, and I went along with him all that Day; but upon Saturday, which was the next Day, going Northward with him, my Horſe tired, and failed me. Thereupon I was forced to be left behind, but I overtook him on Sunday Night following; I overtook him at ſuch a Place, and ſaw him within ſix Miles of the Borders of Scotland. I take it upon my Oath, this is the Man that was there under the Name of Clerke; and at his returning back again, I took notice of him, I went up to him, I drank with him, and we had Diſcourſe of our Journey. He told me at firſt, he was to go to the Weſt of Scotland, and ſo he went Northward. After that, which was about ten or twelve Days, he came back again, and ſo went Southward towards London. This he doth ſwear directly to be at that time.

Now Gentlemen, The Time is wonderful material in that Caſe, becauſe that very time twelve-month that they talk of, is the beginning of February. If you look upon your Old Almanack of the laſt Year (I happen to have one in my Pocket, and look upon it, when the Men gave their Teſtimony) and there you will find, that the Monday before Shrove-Tueſday, when he ſays, he left him within ſix Miles of the Borders of Scotland, falls out to be the 19th of February; I will look upon it again, leſt I ſhould miſtake; 'tis juſt ſo, and that humours the Time that my Lord Howard ſpeaks of, which was about the middle of February, a few Days after, that he ſays the Money was given by Mr. Sidney; and then for the Time for Aaron Smith to get to Newcaſtle, there is a fit ſpace of Time, for it falls out that the Thurſday that he arrived at Newcaſtle, is the 15th Day of February, and ſo it falls in well with my Lord Howard's Teſtimony, and ſo the Monday that he parted with him at the Borders of Scotland was the 19th, which alſo juſt humours the time that he ſpeaks of. So that here is a Circumſtance of Fact to confirm his Teſtimony, both as to the ſending the Meſſenger, and the Circumſtance of Time. That he is the ſame Man is proved by theſe two Witneſſes, who agree in this, That he was there about ſuch a time; and it does likewiſe humour that other Circumſtance of Place, that Mr. Sidney ſaid he had heard from him from Newcaſtle, but not ſince; and then there is the other Circumſtance which backs and confirms all, There was not only a ſending for theſe Perſons, but there is notice taken that theſe Campbels, who were to be aſſiſting in this Matter, ter, were to come about the Sham, and under the Diſguiſe of purchaſing Plantations in Carolina. About the beginning of June they come to Town, the Two Campbels, Sir John Cockram, and Mr. Monroe. Sir Andrew Foſter he tells you, he met with ſome of the Men, and they told him, They came about the Buſineſs of Carolina; and ſo the Cant of Carolina is made good in this Circumſtance that way; but when the Plot brake out, theſe Men ſculk, one flies one way, another another; ſome were taken as they were eſcaping away by Water; others of them were taken upon the Bed at Noon-day in Moorfields: Had the Buſineſs they came over into England about, been a fair, and a lawful, and honeſt Buſineſs, why ſhould they hide themſelves? Why ſhould any Man ſneak and ſculk, and be aſhamed to own an honeſt and lawful Buſineſs? But this does humour and touch the thing exactly, as to that Circumſtance, That Carolina was only a Cant for to diſguiſe their coming over. Theſe are the only Two Circumſtances that ſeem to be pretty ſtrong for them, to prove and ſupport the Credibility of what their Witneſs has ſworn.

For, Gentlemen, What a wonderful ſort of Expectation would it be, That we ſhall never Convict a Man of High-Treaſon, unleſs you can bring a Man to be a Witneſs that is not concern'd? For then all theſe Perſons muſt have been acquitted, for they intruſted none, it ſeems, but theſe Six, they took care they would keep it amongſt themſelves. Do you think they called their Servants to be Witneſſes of what they were about? That is a vain and idle Imagination. In the Popiſh Plot, what Witneſſes of it had you there? Were they Strangers to the Plot? No, you cannot expect any Witneſſes but ſuch as the nature of the Caſe will bear.

This is the Meaning of the Evidence that has been given for the King, and it carries a great weight in it. But they have made an Objection, which indeed is not remote, but may concern the Queſtion very much. Say they, If we prove my Lord of Eſſex was not there, or ſuch an one was not there, would it not diſcredit the Evidence of my Lord Howard? Yes, certainly, it would wholly diſcredit it, and he were not to be believed at all; Nay, which is yet nearer to the Queſtion, If Mr. Hambden, that had notice all along of the Times fixed wherein this Tranſaction was, to wit, about the middle of January, and beginning of February. For becauſe they talk of the Prints, Mr. Hambden had from them ſufficient Notice and Intimation of the Time. If Mr. Hambden, that hath had all this Notice, could have proved before you, That he was in France, or any other Place at that time, That had been wonderful material. But all the Circumſtances that are any way ſignificant to ſupport the Credit of this Matter, are very well proved; and ſo the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard is, by theſe concurrent Circumſtances of Fact, ſufficiently ſupported.

Now, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, This being the Subſtance of the Evidence for the King; I will now, as near as I can, give you an account of the Evidence for the Defendant; It was opened by Mr. Williams very ingeniouſly for the Advantage of his Client, as every Man is bound to ſay what he can for his Client. He made a great many Objections againſt my Lord Howard; ſo if he could but ſhake the Teſtimony of my Lord Howard, then he might eaſily bring off his Client; and if you, upon any thing that has been offered, either in Evidence, or by way of Obſervation fairly made from the Evidence, do believe my Lord Howard has forſworn himſelf, you muſt find Mr. Hambden, the Defendant, Not Guilty; but if you believe he has not forſworn himſelf, you muſt find him Guilty. So all our Matter is reduced into a very narrow Compaſs; and therefore I muſt repeat it again what I ſaid at the beginning, If my Memory do not ſerve me to recollect all right, the Counſel for the Defendant ſhall have free liberty to inform the Court of what has been omitted.

Firſt, ſays Mr. Williams, My Lord Howard was a Man very deep in a Conſpiracy with my Lord Shafiſbury, by his own Acknowledgment, endeavouring to conciliate a Friendſhip between the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Shaftsbury; and ſo he had a great Hand in the Plot; and what he might do on purpoſe to get himſelf out of danger from that Plot, and procure his Pardon, is not known.

It is a very ſtrange thing, that it ſhould be an Objection before he had his Pardon, That he did it for Fear, and to get his Pardon; and when he has it, now the Objection is, Becauſe he has his Pardon; and he got it, ſay they, by this means. It ſeems, whether he had his Pardon or no, it muſt be an Objection againſt him: Before he had it, he was under the Fear of not obtaining it till the Drudgery of Swearing was over; but now he has his Pardon, What now? Why he does it on purpoſe to accuſe other People. Why, he ſays no more now, than what he has ſaid before he was pardoned; and if after he is pardoned, when he is under no Dread or Fear becauſe of his Guilt, he ſays the ſame things that he did when he might be in Fear, How can that be an Objection to him? It cannot be thought he does it to ſave his own Life, for that is as ſafe now by his Pardon, as it can any way be; and 'tis, and muſt be a great Satisfaction to his Mind, and will be ſo to any other reaſonable Man's Mind: and is a plain Anſwer to the Objection of his Fear, (for 'tis a captious Age we live in, that will make ſome ſpecious Objection or other, tho' it be not of any great weight.) But how can it be thought a Man would come and ſwear too much, or too far, for fear he ſhould not ſave himſelf; or, as they call it, ſwear himſelf into a Pardon, when he has his Pardon? It might be an Objection before; but as long as he is under no ſuch Terrors now, but ſtands right, both by the Laws of God and Man to be heard as a Witneſs, I think it would be hard for any one to come, and ſay, This Man would forſwear himſelf. What ſhould provoke him to come and forſwear himſelf, when he is under no danger as to his own Particular? There might be an Umbrage, I ſay, of an Objection before he had his Pardon, tho' it was, indeed, no Objection before; not a rational weighty one, to ſet aſide his Teſtimony. But no body knows which way in the World to ſatisfy the Minds of ſome ſort of People.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, ſays Mr. Williams, You are not poſitive as to the Time; You ſay, ſay, It was about the middle of January, and the beginning of February, and that is too general and wide; but you remember particularly to a Day the Buſineſs between you and my Lord of Shaftsbury, That that was the Day after Michaelmas Day: How can you be ſo particular as to the one, and not as particular as to the other?

Why, I will undertake that Mr. Williams, when he made the Objection, muſt needs think of the Anſwer that would be given to it. It is notoriouſly known, that the Preſſures theſe Gentlemen thought they lay under, were what my Lord of Shaftsbury ſaid, Now they have got the Juries into their own Power, and no Man is ſafe; They will find me or any Man Guilty, as they pleaſe; Why, how came they to get Juries into their own Hands, but by having the Sheriffs as they would have them? Now the Sheriffs that are to return Juries, are, as all Men know that know any thing, Sworn the Day before Michaelmas Day; therefore he might very well, and had good reaſon to remember that Day; When ſuch a notorious Thing happens to fall out at ſuch a notorious Time, 'tis eaſier for a Man to remember that Time, than to ſpeak to the particular time of an Action, done about the middle of a Month, where there is not ſuch a notorious Circumſtance. Why, I can tell you very well where I was upon the Day before Michaelmas Day; upon that Day, and the Day after; for that very reaſon, becauſe it was a notorious Day about the ſwearing of Sheriffs in London. But if you ask me, where I was the middle of January, or the middle of February, I cannot ſo well remember that. But there is Credit to be given to a Man that ſpeaks to a notorious Circumſtance, and thereby proves the Probability of what he ſays, though he ſhould not be ſo particular in a Thing that admits not of ſuch a notorious Circumſtance.

Gentlemen, I make the Objections as they are ſtated on the one Side, and on the other Side; and the Anſwers that naturally flow to prove the Matters before you one way or other; and you are to judge, you are to weigh them; and which has the greater Credit with you, you are to take notice of.

He does ſay, in the next Place, Here was a Diſcourſe of Arms and armed Men, and a great Sum of Money ſpoken of, but there breaks out nothing of this Matter till July following; but this Debate was in January, and February before. For that Matter, the Anſwer that is given, and it ſeems to be a plain one, is, That they were to conciliate a Correſpondence with People that were Abroad, and that they could not go on till they had effected that, and till theſe People came to join with them, which could not be without ſome time. And you hear the Cockrams and the Campbels came not to the Town, till June or July; ſo that it was not probable it ſhould break out till then, becauſe it was to be agitated upon their coming here. And ſo that Objection is anſwered, they did not apprehend any ſuch neceſſity for preſent engaging in it. For, my Lord Howard, becauſe he thought it would be a Work of Time to ſettle the Correſpondence, and get theſe People to Town, went down to his Countrey-houſe in Eſſex, and from thence to the Bath, for he did apprehend ſome conſiderable time muſt be ſpent e're theſe People could come; and therefore he thought it convenient to take his Retirement in the mean time.

Ay, but 'tis ſtrange, ſays Mr. Williams, and he makes that another Objection; he would have my Lord Howard to draw in this Accuſation of Mr. Hambden, to procure his Pardon, by going further than the other Diſcoverers had gone. It ſeems, ſay they, Mr. Hambden was not thought of at firſt; but becauſe Weſt and Keeling had diſcovered a Plot, my Lord Howard, to ſecure himſelf, muſt go a ſtep further than they, and (as the Defendant's Counſel would have it) than the Truth; and that is the Streſs of the Objection. But the weight of the Proof is quite different; for all Men know, in the Plot there were ſeveral Parts. There was the Buſineſs of Keeling and Weſt, and that was the Aſſaſſination of the King and the Duke; but the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Howard, and thoſe other Gentlemen, were for the Buſineſs of the Riſing, though that might be in order to that other purpoſe; but they kept not Company with thoſe that were engaged in that Part of the Deſign. They were the Underlings, the Scoundrel Plotters, that were concerned in the Aſſaſſination. But theſe Gentlemen looked upon themſelves to be Privy Counſellors, not to be the Executioners; they were to be only Adviſers, what was to be done after the other Buſineſs was over; and their Conſultations were for raiſing of Men for an Inſurrection; not the Buſineſs of the Aſſaſſination of the King, that was not their Province. Can it be an Objection againſt my Lord Howard, becauſe he gives a Teſtimony Weſt and Keeling could not give? Could they go further than the killing of the King, which was their Buſineſs? If any Man ſhould have asked my Lord Howard about that Matter, he would have made Anſwer, it was not for that Purpoſe that we met together at Mr. Hambden's, and my Lord Ruſſel's; no, that was upon a particular Buſineſs, and to a particular End and Purpoſe.

Then he ſays too, That though my Lord Howard comes here upon his Oath, and declares theſe ſeveral Matters that he hath depoſed; yet he has given a different Account of Things elſewhere, and he has called ſeveral Witneſſes to that purpoſe. To whom my Lord Howard ſeveral times upon his Honour, upon his Word, with Eyes lifted up, and Hands elevated to Heaven, and many extraordinary Proteſtations, declared, That he knew nothing of the Plot; and ſay they, If a Man will at one time pawn his Honour, and his Reputation, for the Truth of a Thing, and after that, will come again to ſwear againſt all that Matter, that is an Argument that does ſink the Credit and Reputation of that Witneſs; and thereupon they call you ſeveral Witneſſes, ſome whereof are Perſons of great Honour and Quality. I think they begin firſt with Ducas, Servant to Colonel Sidney, and he tells you, after his Maſter was taken, my Lord Howard came thither, and deſired he might lie there; and deſired the Uſe of ſome Plate and Goods of Colonel Sidney's; and then asked, what was become of his Maſter? And when Ducas told him what he heard of the Plot, that ſomething was talked of, about the Aſſaſſination of the King and the Duke, my Lord Howard lifted up his Eyes, and his Hands to Heaven, and declared he knew nothing of it, it, but he believed Colonel Sidney was a very honeſt Man, and knew nothing at all of any ſuch Matter; and as for himſelf, rather than he would be taken or confined again, he would do any thing. This was the Evidence they gave as to him. Then they come with Mr. Howard their 2*d* Witneſs; for I would take them in order as they were produced, and he gives you an Account, That he met with my Lord Howard, and my Lord Howard told him, he knew nothing at all of any Plot, and did believe that Colonel Sidney was innocent, and he did believe likewiſe that my Lord Ruſſel was innocent, and for his Part he knew nothing of any ſuch thing as a Plot, but he ſays, when he began to talk to him, why did he make ſuch a Buſtle, and go ſo often into the City and concern himſelf about the making of Sheriffs? He anſwered, I do nothing but what is in a legal way, and he juſtified all that was done to be only in a legal way.

When once People come to believe, that the raiſing of Tumults, and making Seditions, Stirs and Noiſes, is a legal way to obtain their Ends, as we know 'tis the Tenet and Principle of a great many People, what will they not do under that Pretence, that all they do is according to Law? They think it is lawful by the Religion they profeſs, to reſiſt and oppoſe the Government, and the Old Cauſe is a good Cauſe to this Day in ſome Men's Opinion, and they can die in it, and thank God for being concerned in it. And there are ſome People that ſay, the raiſing of Arms by the King's Authority againſt his Perſon is lawful by the Religion they profeſs, and they call themſelves Proteſtants (how juſtly you may imagine) and if Men will make Inſurrections to difficult the Government, it is Rebellion, and no Man can juſtify it, let him pretend Conſcience or what he will, 'tis rank Treaſon. It is not ſaying, I am thus perſuaded in my Conſcience, that will excuſe the Man; if I ſteer my ſelf by the Dictates of a good and regular Conſcience, it can never be thought that I ſhall commit Treaſon, but it is the effect of evil Principles.

Was it not under the Shape of Religion, that that bleſſed Martyr King Charles I. of ever bleſſed Memory came to the Block? Nay, and I have heard of ſome Men in the late Times that were ingaged on that Side, who finding that the King did prevail at the beginning of the War, becauſe he had Gentlemen of Quality and Spirit to appear for him, were at a loſs to know which way in the World they ſhould put a Spirit into the common People to oppoſe the King; and ſome among them bid them be ſure to put Religion to be but the Pretence, and that would make them run headlong to what they would have them. Whoſe Opinion that was is not ſtrange to any that know any thing of the Hiſtory of thoſe Times. So that when once People take it to be the Principle of their Religion to oppoſe and reſiſt all that are not of their Perſuaſion, and for Religion ſake to reſiſt Authority, then they think all is lawful they can do to preſerve their Religion as long as they are wound up to that Opinion.

Their next Witneſs, Gentlemen, is my Lord of Clare, and he gives you an Account of his Diſcourſe with my Lord Howard. And by the way I muſt obſerve, what I am very ſorry for with all my Heart, to hear, that among Gentlemen of Quality and Honour, Diſcourſes of the Government, and the Male-Adminiſtration of it as they think, ſhould be only Matter of Jeſt fit for their Recreation, and Laughter, only merry Table-talk, as though Government ſo ſacred a Thing, were as mean as any trivial Concern whatſoever. I am ſorry to hear and ſee, that Perſons of great Honour and Quality ſhould eſteem it ſo. And I muſt be pardoned, if I take notice of it: For Matters of Government, and yielding Obedience to Superiours, is a Matter of Religion, 'tis a ſerious Matter, and every Man ought to make Conſcience of it. To talk of Government with Reverence, as well as pay Duty and Obedience to it. And when I find it made a Jeſt, I muſt be permitted to ſay that is not ſo well done, and whoever it is that makes it ſo, ought very much to be blamed.

My Lord of Clare comes and teſtifies, That my Lord Howard told him, He did not believe my Lord Ruſſel was guilty of what he was accuſed of, much leſs did he believe it of Colonel Sidney, and when he began to talk about Writings found in Sidney's Cloſet, he ſaid, there can be nothing of his Writings found, that can do him or any Man elſe any hurt. This is the Subſtance of what that Noble Lord has ſaid.

Then there is my Lord Paget, and he likewiſe gives an Account, That he had ſome Diſcourſe with my Lord Howard about the Plot; and he told him too, That he did not believe any thing of this Plot, or that my Lord Ruſſel and others accuſed had any Hand in it. But I would obſerve this one thing upon my Lord Paget's Teſtimony, That ſtill my Lord Howard was wiſhed Joy by every body, and I am glad to ſee your Heels at liberty, and the like. So that there was ſome jealouſy of his being concerned; ſome thing or other there was in it. Says my Lord Howard, I look upon my ſelf as affronted, that any body ſhould talk ſo of me. He was concerned that they ſhould ſuſpect him. But ſomething there was at the bottom. Says my Lord Paget, I am glad to hear you are out of it. For he began to imagine there muſt be ſome Fire for all this Smoak. That, Gentlemen, was the Diſcourſe he had with him. But he ſays, That with my Lord Paget there were Diſcourſes of his going beyond Sea, but he did not go.

Then comes Dr. Burnet, and he tells you, That there were Proteſtations made to him, and he has got the ſame Words as the Frenchman had, That he did it with lifted up Eyes and Hands, he profeſſed ſolemnly he was altogether a Stranger to any ſuch Thing. The Dr. ſays, He had heard there was a Plot, and was perſuaded of the Truth of it, but he was a little ſhaken by what my Lord Howard ſaid to him. But now he is ſufficiently ſatisfied there is a Plot, and I am glad he is, for I think it ſcarce does remain a Doubt, with any Men that have any Value for the Religion and Government we live under. And I know not how they could be better ſatisfied, than by the Evidence that has been given of it, a main Part of which was given by my Lord Howard. All this before my Lord Howard was taken.

Then comes in one Mr. Gisborne, and he tells you the ſame Story, That a great while ago my Lord Howard told him he knew nothing of the Plot.

The

The next to him is Mr. Blake, and he tells you, That after ſuch time as the Plot was diſcovered, and after my Lord Ruſſel was tried, and after my Lord Howard had given Evidence at the Old Bailey, he ſhewed him the Warrant for his Pardon, and Blake telling him that was not ſufficient without an actual Pardon; he replied, I think in my Conſcience I ſhall not have a Pardon till the Drudgery of Swearing is over. But is that any Argument? Here is a Man under the Drudgery of Swearing; therefore he did not know any ſuch thing as he ſwears. It carries thus much along with it, That it was uneaſy to him, and there is a kind of a force put upon him to ſwear, as they ſay, in order to his Pardon.

But now, Gentlemen, that will admit of this Anſwer, and a plain one certainly it is, When a Man comes over and over again to tell the World ſuch a Story, and give ſuch an Account of himſelf, it muſt a little grate upon him, though it be his Duty to tell the Truth, and though as Mr. Williams, ſays, he is the beſt Martyr that is a Martyr for Truth; even ſo ſay I on the other Side, he is the beſt Penitent that is a Penitent for Truth, and he is the beſt Witneſs that is a Witneſs for Truth's ſake, and he gives the beſt Teſtimony of his Repentance, that by his Teſtimony declares the Truth, though it be harſh and uneaſy to him; for if I have any Ingenuity, and have lived in good Credit in the World, it muſt be a drudgery and irkſome Thing to call my ſelf a Traytor ſo often in a Court of Juſtice. It is true, he might have given it a more moderate Term, and yet withall upon theſe Circumſtances, he might have reaſon to call it in ſome Senſe a Drudgery. But now, Gentlemen, as he did ſwear it, before he had his Pardon from time to time upon all Occaſions when he was called as a Witneſs: So now the Pardon is come, which they would have to be the Reaſon of the continuance of his Drudgery, he ſwears the ſame thing. He has his Pardon under the King's Seal, and though it might be thought they would keep him within the compaſs of his Tether till he had done his Evidence; now he has got that he deſired, he ſwears the ſame Thing. And now his Pardon does not at all influence his Teſtimony, he is not under any fear, but is as free as any Subject the King has, and now he is upon his Oath, he gives you the Account you have had, and he did ſay all the ſame Things, before ſuch time as Colonel Sidney, and my Lord Ruſſel were tried, that he ſays now.

Then, Gentlemen, you have in the next Place Witneſſes called, ſeveral of them to give you an Account of the Converſation and Diſpoſition of Mr. Hambden; for ſays Mr. Williams, for a Man to be guilty of a Crime of this nature, there muſt be ſome kind of evil Diſpoſition to it, and ſo Mr. Williams would argue and make this Inference. You ſee he is not a Man of a turbulent, ſeditious and factious Spirit and Temper, he is a ſtudious Perſon, very retired, that has been beyond Sea much, and came not Home till ſuch a time. And if there were Interlocutions between my Lord Howard and my Lord Shaftsbury it was before he came into England, and ſo he was not concerned in them. He ſays, That March laſt he was to go again, he had a mind to return again to France for his Health, and what reaſon have we to imagine he ſhould concern himſelf in the Plot? When he was ſo ſtudious a Man, lived ſo retired a Life, and intended to go Abroad ſo ſuddenly. And for this you have my Lord Paget, Mr. Pelham, Sir Henry Hobart, Dr. Lupée, Monſieur Juſtel, and one Murray.

Mr. Williams. Murray, my Lord, we did not examine.

L. C. J. 'Tis true, I beg your Pardon. Well then, Theſe others tell you, They have been Perſons very intimately converſant with him, they never knew he concerned himſelf with any thing about Government, but was of a quiet peaceable Demeanor, and was ſo far from that which the Indictment talks of Turbulency and Sedition, that they never had any Diſcourſe with him about any ſuch Thing at all, ſave what Dr. Lupée ſays, who it ſeems lived with him about two Years, and kept him Company in his Studies, and that once having ſome Diſcourſe about the Popiſh Plot, He ſaid he would venture his Life, and any thing he had to preſerve the King and Government againſt that Plot; He did very well, and if he had ſince declared, he would have ventured his Life to have ſecured the King and Government againſt this Plot, I ſhould have been glad to find him of that Mind, I pray God you may find him to be ſo. But from the Evidence even of that Frenchman, it ſeems there was ſome Jealouſy in the World, and that he lay under hard Cenſures as well as other People. For ſpeaking of the Plot, the Advice given him was this. My Lord Grey is gone, and the Duke of Monmouth is gone, why won't you go? Why ſhould that Advice be given, if there were no Suſpicion of his being concerned? That he ſaid, I will not go, and ſo they would make his ſtaying here to be an Inſtance and Proof of his Innocence; Why, Gentlemen, if that ſhould be ſo, then there was the ſame Innocency in my Lord Ruſſel, and Colonel Sidney, and all of them: For all the Council of Six every one of them ſtay'd, except the Duke of Monmouth, and he indeed did abſcond. And the ſame Evidence that made the Duke of Monmouth fly, and my Lord Eſſex cut his own Throat, convicted my Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney, and is now brought againſt the Defendant, and has from time to time been given againſt the reſt. We know no reaſon that they had to ſtay more than Weſt or Rumſey had to ſtay and be taken, and yet that is not uſed by them as an Argument of their Innocency.

Theſe are the Evidences that have been given on the Defendant's Part; and I tell you as I go along what Anſwers are given to it on the Part of the King. As to what is ſpoken of his intention to go again into France, if he deſigned to go, why did he not go before all this Miſchief broke out? He came here at Michaelmas, and I may ſay he came, it may be at an unlucky Time, when the City and its Neighbourhood was in a Diſtemper, and ſome Men were blown with Fears and Jealouſies. Theſe might animate him, and inſpirit him as they did other People, and put them into a Ferment; but you find him attending in Town conſtantly here till the Matter was diſcovered, whatſoever his Intentions were, 'tis much he did not put them into Action, 'tis ſtrange he did not go all this while, it had been much for his Advantage that he had never ver came out of France, or that he had returned thither much ſooner.

Againſt all this that has been urged for the Defendant about my Lord Howard, I will tell you what is the Anſwer to it; and truly firſt I ſay, I am apt to believe my Lord Howard did tell theſe Gentlemen what they here teſtify; but was it ever thought, That any Man that was guilty of High Treaſon would preſently proclaim his own Guilt? Is it reaſonable to imagine, my Lord Howard would tell Dr. Burnet I am in a Plot, and Colonel Sidney is in a Plot, and Mr. Hambden is in a Plot, and make it his common Talk? Nay, it is ſo far from being an Argument of his Innocency, that more naturally it may be turned upon them as an Argument of his Guilt. For if a Man had not been concerned in the Buſineſs at all, but were an honeſt Man, and free from Suſpicion, what need I talk or concern my ſelf to proclaim my own Innocency not being accuſed? Why muſt I tell Colonel Sidney's Footman, This Man, the other Man, That I know nothing of the Plot, and neither I nor any other Man I am ſure is concerned in it? But that ſhews there was a dread and apprehenſion upon him of ſomething that he was conſcious of, and that lying within muſt have ſome vent, and this over-caution is an intimation that there was ſomething more than ordinary in the Matter. We take notice of it as a great Evidence againſt a Man that is accuſed for an High-way Man, if he comes to ſuch an Ale-houſe or Inn, and bids the People take notice I am here at ſuch a time of the Day, and that is a Circumſtance of Time that will ſerve to anſwer a Proof, it may be, that may be brought againſt him of a Robbery done ſuch a time; but we always look upon that Induſtry of theirs, as a Piece of Artifice deſigned to patch up a Teſtimony to evade a Proof. So that the Argument will turn the other way; and 'tis more for the Advantage of theſe worthy Gentlemen, that it ſhould be turned the other way, for otherwiſe they would be thought to be Perſons ill affected to the Government; that is, Dr. Burnet, my Lord Paget, my Lord Clare, and the reſt. And if they have a mind to be thought otherwiſe, they muſt let the Argument run that way as I ſay, and in Charity we ought to believe the beſt of all Mankind, till we find otherwiſe by them. We ſay then in Charity, we ſuppoſe he thought it not fit to intruſt you with his Confeſſions; for you are all Loyal Men, I know 'tis the beſt Anſwer that can be given, and that which they ought to value themſelves upon for their own Credit and Reputation, and not to make it an Argument againſt my Lord Howard, or againſt the Credibility of his Teſtimony in the Matter.

I don't know, truly, Gentlemen, That I have omitted any one Thing that is material, on the one Side or on the other, of which there hath been any Proof, but I muſt only repeat to you this, Here is a Matter of great Concern and Conſequence, a Matter wherein the Peace of the Government and the Kingdom is concerned in a very high degree, a Matter, that if there were another Witneſs as poſitive againſt the Defendant as my Lord Howard, would amount to no leſs than High Treaſon. But as there is but one Witneſs, backed with theſe Circumſtances to corroborate his Teſtimony, 'tis but only a Treſpaſs, but I tell you it treads very nigh upon High Treaſon, and the Tendency of it was to bring us all into Confuſion; and what would be the Conſequence of that, but to lay us open to the ſame Miſchiefs that we were under in the Times of the late Rebellion? For though Men pretend never ſo fair, and vail it under the Names of the Security of the Government and the Proteſtant Religion; yet they would have done well to have tarried till they had a legal Authority to call them to conſult of theſe high Matters that they pretend to ſecure; that had been well. What had theſe Gentlemen to do to take upon themſelves this Power without Authority?

Gentlemen, You have heard the Evidence, and you ſee what it is. And I muſt ſay, in the late Evidences you have had concerning another Buſineſs of this nature, I wiſh that might be ſaid to preſerve and ſupport the Credit of ſome Perſons, upon whoſe Teſtimonies Lives have been taken away, as has been ſaid, and is evident for the Advantage of my Lord Howard. I do not find that he has been guilty of Perjury, as being concerned in taking Oaths one way, and then giving Evidence another. I mean, firſt taking Oaths of Secrecy and then revealing; not but that notwithſtanding all this, they may be believed, and God forbid but they ſhould be believed according to Truth. But I ſay, if Objections of this nature are to prevail, we muſt never expect any great Crime to be puniſhed, becauſe we muſt ſtay till Perſons that are Strangers to the Guilt of the Fact come to give Evidence of it, which is impoſſible to be done.

Therefore, Gentlemen, I muſt reſolve it all into one Head; You have the Caſe of a Gentleman of Quality on the one Side, and the Peace and Preſervation of the Government on the other Side. You hear what is proved againſt him, the Evidence given on his Behalf, the Objections that have been made by the Counſel, which all of them as near as I can remember, I have repeated to you, and I ask your Pardon and theirs if I have omitted any thing, and I deſire to be minded of it. You hear the Anſwers that have been given. And becauſe the Counſel were unwilling to give the Court trouble or themſelves to make long Speeches and Obſervations, Therefore I have been neceſſitated to do it as well as I can.

Upon the whole Matter, my Lord Howard has thus poſitively ſworn the Matter of Fact charged in the Indictment againſt the Defendant; he has been ſupported by the Witneſſes that confirm the Circumſtances of Smith's going into Scotland, the Scotchmen's being here in June, and the Sham and Cant of Carolina. All which you have heard, and I make no queſtion obſerved, and is not contradicted by any thing I hear that carries any Probability of an Anſwer. Therefore, Gentlemen, I leave it to you, whether upon this Evidence you will take it upon your Conſciences and Oaths, that my Lord Howard is Guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury, Then you muſt find the Defendant not Guilty; But if you think he has proved the Matter fully, and his Teſtimony is ſupported by thoſe four Witneſſes, Atterbury, Sir Andrew Foſter, Sheriffe, and Bell, then, Gentlemen, you muſt find the Defendant Guilty.

Jury-man. My Lord, We deſire to ask one Queſtion. At the Meeting at Mr. Hambden's Houſe, I think my Lord Howard ſays they went to Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No, it was at Col. Sidney's they went to Dinner.

L. C. J. I know not whether you have taken notice of it, but I have, it was at Col. Sidney's they dined, not at Mr. Hambden's.

Then the Jury withdrew from the Bar, and within half an hour the Jury returned, and being called over anſwered to their Names, and gave in their Verdict thus.

Cl. of Cr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Omnes. Yes.

Cl. of Cr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Omnes. Foreman.

Cl. of Cr. How ſay you? Is the Defendant Guilty of the Treſpaſs and Miſdemeanor whereof he is impeached, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Which Verdict being Recorded, the Court roſe.

Martis 12. Februarii, An. 1683. B. R.

L. C. J. MR. Attorney, Have you any thing to move?

Mr. At. Gen. I pray your Judgment againſt Mr. Hambden, my Lord, who was Convicted the other Day of a great Miſdemeanor.

L. C. J. Let Mr. Hambden come into the Court then. [Which he did.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I need not aggravate the Heinouſneſs of the Offence; for it appears both by the Information, and upon the Evidence to be beyond all Aggravation, wherefore I ſhall only pray your Judgment for the King, That you would pleaſe to ſet a good Fine upon him, and that he find Sureties for his good Behaviour during his Life.

Mr. Williams. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I am of Counſel for Mr. Hambden.

L. C. J. Are the Rules out in this Cauſe?

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord, they are out.

L. C. J. Well then, what ſay you for Mr. Hambden?

Mr. Williams. Mr. Hambden does attend here according to the Condition of his Recognizance, and ſince Mr. Attorney hath prayed your Judgment, I ſhall not ſtir any thing as to the Indictment or the Verdict, but all I have to ſay for him is this, Mr. Hambden is but Heir apparent, his Father is alive; and ſo tho' he has the Proſpect of a good Eſtate, yet he has but little at preſent in Poſſeſſion; Your Lordſhip knows what Magna Charta ſays, That there ſhould be a Salvo Contenemento in all Fines, and how far that may be an Ingredient into your Lordſhip's Judgment, I leave to your Conſideration.

L. C. J. For that matter I cannot tell what his Eſtate is, I have no Knowledge of him, nor of his Eſtate whether it be great or ſmall, but Mr. Williams knows very well, That the Crime, in Conſcience as well as Law in caſe it had been proved by two Witneſſes, would not only have wrought a Forfeiture of all his Eſtate, but a Forfeiture of his Life too, and all his Reputation, would have baſtardized his Children, would have attainted and corrupted his Blood. So that there is no ſort of Imagination but that the Crime was High enough of Conſcience; and certainly deſerves, if we can impoſe it adequate to its Deſert, a very great Puniſhment. Mr. Hambden nor his Counſel can deny but that they had a fair and a full Hearing, They had the liberty to ſay and prove all that they could, and you cannot but ſay, Mr. Attorney was very fair in making ſeveral Conceſſions that he might very lawfully and rightfully have inſiſted upon. So that there can be no Exception of that kind. I am ſorry, that Mr. Hambden, a Gentleman of good Quality as he is by Birth, tho' he be a Perſon I never ſaw before he came here the laſt Day of the laſt Term upon his Habeas Corpus, that I know of. I ſay, I am ſorry one of his Quality and Education, a ſtudious Perſon, as it ſeems, by his own natural Inclination, and a learned Man, ſhould be ſo unhappily engaged in a Deſign of this horridly evil nature. But on the one ſide as well as we muſt take care of the Subject, ſo on the other we muſt take care of the Government. Here was a Deſign of deſtroying the King, and ſubverting the Government and bringing all into Confuſion. Of this Deſign the Defendant is Convicted, and we muſt take care to proportion the Puniſhment, and according to our Conſciences and Oaths, and as we ought to have regard to the Offender, ſo alſo we are to have regard to the Government that he has offended.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Williams, It was Amercements that were ſpoken of there in Magna Charta.

L. C. J. Ay, It was never meant of Fines for great Offences.

Then the Judges conſulted together.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Hambden, You know you are convicted of a very great Offence, as great an Offence as can be I think committed, unleſs it were High Treaſon. For the Matter of it would have made you Guilty, if there had been two Witneſſes. It was for Conſpiring to levy War againſt His Majeſty, and for Conſpiring to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion within the Kingdom, a Conſpiracy of which ſome other Perſons being lawfully Convicted, they have ſuffered Death for it. You are a Perſon of an extraordinary good Family, and I am ſorry one of your Family that has flouriſhed ſo long and through ſo many Generations in great Honour and Reputation, and great Proſperity under the Monarchy of England, ſhould come to Conſpire to deprive that King of his Government, whoſe Anceſtors have protected and defended your Family, and to ſpoil that Monarchy that has been the Fountain of ſo much Proſperity and Honour to it. I am ſorry

ſorry it comes to my turn to pronounce the Sentence of the Court upon you, Mr. Hambden. I have not any perſonal Knowledge of you, but I have heard of you, and heard heretofore very well of you. You have had a good Education and the Report of a learned and ingenious Perſon, which makes me yet wonder the more that you ſhould engage in ſuch a horrid Deſign as this was. Indeed, Mr. Hambden, I am ſatisfied no Fine can be too great, if any can be great enough for ſuch an Offence. We cannot take Cognizance what your Eſtate is, 'tis reported there is a great Eſtate in your Family, it has been always repreſented to be ſo.

Mr. Hambden. I have nothing but for Life, and that is but little neither.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I know not what it is truly, Sir. But it was always reported to me to be a very great Eſtate, but whatſoever it is, we are to look after the proportioning the Puniſhment as near as we can to the Offence. My Lord, and the Court have conſidered of the Matter, and they think fit to give this Judgment upon you.

They ſet the Fine of Forty Thouſand Pounds upon you, to be paid to the King, and you muſt be committed till you pay it.

L. C. J. And that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life.

Mr. At. Gen. I pray he may be committed for his Fine.

L. C. J. Let it be ſo. Mr. Hambden, If you will apply your ſelf to the King, you may, and there perhaps you may find Mercy; we muſt, according to the Duty of our Places and Oaths, give ſuch Judgment as the Law requires.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Ay, in God's Name. You are in the King's Hands, and he may do what he pleaſes in it.

L. C. J. If a Crime of this nature ſhould have a little Puniſhment, it might encourage Offenders, and if we were to judge according to ſome Verdicts that have been given here for leſs Offences, where Gentlemen have given very much greater Damages than this Fine amounts to, this would be thought a moderate Fine. I am ſorry any Man ſhould bring himſelf into theſe Circumſtances: The King as he is the Fountain of Juſtice, ſo he is alſo of Mercy, and you and all the reſt of his Subjects have cauſe to bleſs God that you live under a Monarch that is very merciful. No doubt, if you give a good account of your Contrition and Sorrow for your great Offence, and decently apply your ſelf to the King, he will think of ſhewing Mercy to you; but Juſtice is our Work that are Judges; and according to the Methods of Juſtice we think we cannot inflict leſs than we have done.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I pray his Bail may be diſcharged.

L. C. J. Ay, His Bail is diſcharged, he being committed.

Mr. Williams. And for the High-Treaſon, he is diſcharged by the Habeas Corpus Act.

L. C. J. Yes, he is ſo, for there is no Proſecution.

Then Mr. Hambden was carried by the Marſhal away Priſoner.

The TRYAL of Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, Gent.

On Thurſday the 7th of February, Anno Dom. 1683. Annoq; Reg. Caroli Secundi 36. A Tryal was had at the King's-Bench Bar, in a Cauſe between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, Gentlemen; upon an Information exhibited againſt them the laſt Term, by His Majeſty's Attorney General, for an High Miſdemeanor; and to which they the ſame Term pleaded Not Guilty, and the Tryal proceeded in this manner.

Cl. of Cr. CRyer, Call the Defendants, Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke.

Cryer. Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, come forth, or elſe this Inqueſt ſhall be taken by your Default.

Mr. Wallop. They appear.

Cl. of Cr. Gardez votrez Challenges. Swear Sir Hugh Middleton. (Which was done.) And there being no Challenges, the Twelve Gentlemen ſworn to try this Cauſe, were theſe.

Sir Hugh Middleton, Thomas Harriott, Thomas Earsby, Joshua Galliard, Richard Shoreditch, Charles Good } Jur' { Samuel Rouse, Hugh Squire, Nehemiah Arnold, John Bisfield, William Wait and James Supple.

Who being counted, Proclamation was made in usual Form for Information.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you of the Jury hearken to the Record. His Majesty's Attorney General in this Court has exhibited an Information against the Defendants by the Names of Laurence Braddon of the Middle Temple, Gentleman, and Hugh Speke of Lincolns-Inn, Gentleman.

And the Information sets forth,

That whereas Arthur Earl of Essex, the 12th of July, in the 35th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. was committed to the Prison of our Lord the King, in the Tower of London, for certain High-Treasons by him supposed to be committed. And the said Arthur Earl of Essex being a Prisoner in the Tower of London aforesaid, for the High-Treason aforesaid, the 13th Day of July, in the aforesaid 35th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King, that now is; not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, himself feloniously, and as a Felon of himself, did kill and murther, as by an Inquisition taken at the Tower of London aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the 14th Day of July, in the Year aforesaid, before Edward Fernham, Esq; then Coroner of our Lord the King, of the Liberty of the Tower of London aforesaid, upon the View of the Body of the said Arthur Earl of Essex; and now in this Court remaining of Record more plainly does appear. They the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke not being ignorant of the Premises, but contriving, and maliciously and seditiously intending the Government of our said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, into Hatred, Disgrace and Contempt to bring, the 15th Day of August, in the aforesaid 35th Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, with Force and Arms, &c. falsly, unlawfully, maliciously and seditiously did Conspire, and endeavour to make the Subjects of our said Lord the King of this Kingdom of England, to believe that the Inquisition aforesaid was unduly taken, and that the said Arthur Earl of Essex by certain Persons unknown, in whose Custody he was, was killed and murthered. And to perfect and bring to effect their malicious and seditious Contrivances aforesaid; they the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke at the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, the 15th Day of August, in the 35th Year aforesaid, falsly, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously and seditiously did Conspire to procure certain false Witnesses to prove, That the said Arthur Earl of Essex, was not a Felon of himself, but that the said Earl of Essex by the said Persons unknown was killed and murthered: And to perswade other Subjects of our said Lord the King to believe this to be true, they the said Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, falsly, maliciously, and seditiously, then and there in Writing did declare and cause to be declared, the said Laurence Braddon to be a Person that would prosecute the Murther of the said Earl of Essex; to the great Scandal and Contempt of the Government of our Lord the King of his Kingdom of England, to the evil Example of all other in the like case offending, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this Information the Defendants have severally pleaded Not Guilty, and for their Tryal have put themselves upon the Country; and His Majesty's Attorney General likewise, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether the Defendants, or either of them, are Guilty of this great Misdemeanour whereof they are impeached, or Not Guilty? If you find them or either of them Guilty, you are to say so; if you find them or either of them Not Guilty, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Then Proclamation was made for Evidence.

Mr. Dolben. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: This is an Information preferred by Mr. Attorney General, against the Defendants Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, and the Information does set forth, That whereas Arthur late Earl of Essex the 12th of July last was committed to the Tower of London for certain Treasons supposed to have been by him done: And the said Earl being so committed Prisoner to the Tower for Treason, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, feloniously and as a Felon did kill and murther himself, as by an Inquisition taken before the Coroner of the Tower Liberty may more fully appear; yet the Defendants Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke not being ignorant of the Premises, but designing to bring the Government into Hatred and Contempt, the 15th Day of August last, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes in this County, with Force and Arms falsly, unlawfully, maliciously and seditiously did Conspire together to make the King's Subjects believe, That the Inquisition aforesaid was unduly taken, and that the said Earl of Essex did not murther himself, but was by certain Persons unknown, in whose Custody he was, murthered. And it further sets forth, that these Defendants, Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, designing to disturb and disquiet the Minds of the King's Subjects, and to spread false Reports, did Conspire to procure certain false Witnesses to prove, that the said Earl of Essex was not a Felon of himself, but was by some Persons unknown, killed and murthered: And to perswade other Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King to believe the said Report, they did falsly, maliciously, unlawfully and seditiously cause to be declared in Writing, That the said Laurence Braddon was the Person that did prosecute the said Earl's Murther. And this was to the great Scandal of the Government, to the evil Example of all Persons in like case offending, and against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this the Defendants have pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove it upon them, we make no question you will find it.

Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Mr. Speke and Mr. Braddon, these two Gentlemen, are accused of as High Conspiracy as ever has or could well happen in in our Days, of throwing the Murther of a Perſon that killed himſelf, upon the Government. And I muſt acquaint you, their Deſign was of an higher nature than barely that; for this Gentleman, my Lord of Eſſex, was committed to the Tower for the late Plot, and being ſo committed, when he had killed himſelf there, that was more than a thouſand Witneſſes to open the Eyes of the People, and confirm the Belief of the Conſpiracy: And one would have thought, after that there had been an end of the Deſign, that theſe Proteſtant Gentlemen, as they call themſelves, were carrying on; when the Earl of Eſſex, a Perſon of that Quality and Worth, ſhould go to murther himſelf upon the ſenſe of what he was Guilty of. So that the Deſign, Gentlemen, was to ſtifle the Plot, and at the ſame time they muſt throw this ill thing that the Earl had committed upon himſelf, upon the Government: That, Gentlemen, was the main Diſgrace in order to ſtifle that great Evidence of the Plot. And Mr. Braddon muſt of his own Head, not being put on by any of the Friends of the Earl of Eſſex, who were all very ſenſible the Earl had done this Fact, committed this Murther upon himſelf; but I ſay, he, out of a true Principle to manage the Proteſtant Cauſe as they call it, but indeed it was the Plot, he becomes the Proſecutor of this Buſineſs, and you will find him by the Proofs in the Caſe, a Man of many like Projects. For you will find him value himſelf upon theſe Titles, That he is the Proſecutor of the Earl of Eſſex's Murther, and the Inventor of the Proteſtant Flails, an Inſtrument, I ſuppoſe Gentlemen you have all heard of.

Now, Gentlemen, To make this appear to the World, Letters are ſent into all Parts of England of this Bruit and Report. He himſelf goes about to find Evidence; for it was ſo great a Truth, and there was ſuch a plain Proof that the Earl of Eſſex had killed himſelf, that he muſt labour it to get Evidence. And he goes about it accordingly, and at length he meets with a little Child of twelve Years of Age, and he prepares for him all with his own Hand-writing, a Depoſition, which is a feigned Story all of it, and in every part of it will appear to be falſe, and there he mightily ſollicites this young Boy to ſign it. He comes to his Father's Houſe, carries him in a Coach, forces him away, and forces him to ſign this Paper that he had thus prepared for him, all of his own Invention and Writing; and with the like Confidence as he appears here, (for ſo he does appear with very great Confidence, as you may obſerve,) he atteſts it himſelf. And, Gentlemen, we ſhall ſhew you, that here up and down the Town he makes it his common Diſcourſe, what he was in hand with, and makes his boaſt of himſelf to be the Proſecutor of the Earl of Eſſex's Murther, and he had as good a Confederate as himſelf, Mr. Speke, and he having an Intereſt in the Country, whither the News muſt be ſent all abroad, and Mr. Braddon muſt go to pick up Evidence, I know not where a great way off, of a Murther committed in the Tower. We ſhall prove to you, he had Letters Miſſive and Recommendatory from Mr. Speke to a Gentleman with whom Mr. Braddon was to adviſe; for they looked upon it to be as dangerous an Enterprize almoſt as the Plot it ſelf, as indeed it was; therefore they muſt be wary, and Mr. Braddon is adviſed to go by a wrong Name, ſo this Mr. Speke and Braddon were to carry on and make up this Tragi-Comedy, for I can call it nothing elſe, for the Ridiculouſneſs as well as the Dangerouſneſs of the Deſign. The Report was to be, that this Murther of the Earl of Eſſex was committed by the Officers that attended my Lord, and to fall out in time when His Majeſty was in the Tower, as if the King himſelf had a hand in it. We ſhall trace it in all the Parts of it by ſeveral Witneſſes, and hope you will make them an Example, firſt by finding them Guilty, and the Court afterwards by a ſevere Puniſhment for ſuch a villainous Practice, to ſcandalize the Government with the Murther of a Noble Peer. We ſhall begin with ſhewing you the Inquiſition, or rather firſt with the Conviction of the Earl of Eſſex for High-Treaſon, becauſe that is ſaid in the Record by way of Inducement. Call Mr. Reynolds. (Who was ſworn.) Have you the Warrant of Commitment of my Lord of Eſſex?

Mr. Reynolds. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Shew it the Court. Let the Clerk read it.

Mr. Reynolds. This is the Commitment that was delivered the Lieutenant of the Tower, together with my Lord of Eſſex.

Cl. of Cr. This is directed to Thomas Check, Eſq; Lieutenant of His Majeſty's Tower of London. Subſcribed Leolin Jenkins, and dated ——

Sir Leolin Jenkins Knight, of His Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, and Principal Secretary of State.

THeſe are in His Majeſty's Name to will and require you to receive into your Cuſtody the Perſon of Arthur Earl of Eſſex herewith ſent you, being committed for High-Treaſon, in Compaſſing the Death of the King (whom God preſerve) and Conſpiring to Levy War againſt His Majeſty. And him the ſaid Earl of Eſſex to keep in ſafe Cuſtody, until he ſhall be delivered by due Courſe of Law. And for ſo doing this ſhall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal at Whitehall the 10th Day of July, 1683.

To Thomas Check, Eſquire Lieutenant of His Majeſty's Tower of London. L. Jenkins.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We will then read the Inquiſition, that the Earl, being thus in the Tower, killed himſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew the Inquiſition. Where is Mr. Farnham? Mr. Finch.

Mr. Farnham. Here I am. The Inquiſition is returned here, and is upon Record.

Cl. of Cr. Here it is, Number 11.

[Hereads.]

London ſſ. An Inquiſition indented, taken at the Tower of London aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex, the 14*th Day of* July, in the Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles II, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the 35*th; before* Edward

Edward Farnham, Eſquire, Coroner of our ſaid Lord the King, of the Liberty of the Tower of London, aforeſaid, upon view of the Body of Arthur Earl of Eſſex, then and there lying dead; by the Oaths of Samuel Colwel, Eſq; William Fiſher, Thomas Godſel, Eſq; Thomas Hunt, Nathaniel Mountney, Eſq; Thomas Potter, William How, Robert Burgoine, Eleazer Wickins, Thomas Hogsfleſh, Henry Cripps, Richard Rudder, William Knipes, John Hudſon, John Kettlebeter, Lancelot Coleſon, Morgan Cowarn, Thomas Bryan, William Thackſton, Richard Cliffe, Zebediah Pritchard, William Baford and Theophilus Carter, good and lawful Men of the Liberty of the Tower of London aforeſaid, who being charged and Sworn to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, when, by what means and how, the ſaid Arthur Earl of Eſſex, came to his Death, upon their Oaths do ſay, that the ſaid Arthur Earl of Eſſex, the 13th Day of July, in the Thirty Fifth Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King aforeſaid, at the Tower of London aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, about the Hour of Nine in the Forenoon of the ſame Day, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being ſeduced and moved by the Inſtigation of the Devil, of his Malice aforethought, at the Tower of London aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, then and there being alone in his Chamber, with a Razor of the Value of one Shilling, voluntarily and felonioufly did cut his Throat, giving unto himſelf one Mortal Wound, cut from one Jugular to the other, and by the Aſpera Arteria, and the Wind-Pipe, to the Vertebres of the Neck, both the Jugulars being throughly divided, of which ſaid mortal Wound the ſaid Arthur Earl of Eſſex inſtantly died; And ſo the Jurors aforeſaid, ſay upon their Oaths, that the ſaid Arthur Earl of Eſſex, in manner and form aforeſaid, then and there, voluntarily and felonioufly as a Felon of himſelf, did kill and murther himſelf, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. In Witneſs whereof, as well I the Coroner aforeſaid, as the Jurors aforeſaid, to this Inquiſition, have interchangeably put our Seals, the Day and Year aboveſaid.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Evans and Mr. Edwards. After this, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew you, that Mr. Braddon went about the Town, and declared the Earl was murthered, and he was the Proſecutor. There is Mr. Evans, Swear him,

[Which was done.

Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Braddon's going about and declaring he was the Proſecutor of my Lord of Eſſex's Murther?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, All that I know of this Matter, is this. About the 17*th* of July laſt——

Sir George Jefferies.

L. C. J. When is the Inquiſition?

Cl. of Cr. It is the 14*th* of July.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mr. Evans. The 17*th* of July laſt, I was at the Cuſtom-Houſe Key, ſhipping off ſome Lead, and the Perſon that brought me the Warrant, I told him I could not Execute it without one of the Commiſſioners Officers; and I bid him go to Mr. Edwards, who was the next Officer adjoining to the Key, and he went to his Houſe, and told him I was at the Water-ſide, and had a Warrant, which I deſired him to be preſent while I executed it, Mr. Braddon it ſeems, was then preſent in the Place with Mr. Edward, when this was told him, and hearing my Name, Mr. Braddon came down with Mr. Edwards, and found me then at Smith's Coffee-Houſe, and Mr. Edwards told me, Mr. Braddon had been with him examining his Son, in relation to a Matter of a Razor that was thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window, and I preſently replied, I deſired they would not ſpeak of any ſuch Matter to me, for I had ſeen the Coroner's Inquiſition upon Oath, where it was declared, the Thing was ſo and ſo, and two Perſons had Sworn what ſeemed to be contrary to this; and therefore I deſired they would forbear any ſuch Diſcourſe to me.

L. C. J. Who they?

Mr. Evans. Braddon and he were together.

L. C. J. Who, he? Man.

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards. And withall I made my Application to Mr. Braddon, and I deſired him he would not meddle with ſuch a Matter, for I thought it might be prejudicial to him and Mr. Edwards too. Mr. Braddon made me no Anſwer, but went directly out of the Room.

L. C. J. What do you mean by ſo and ſo, and a Razor thrown out of a Window? We do not underſtand your ſo and ſo.

Mr. Evans. Relating to a Matter of a Razor.

L. C. J. Prithee, we don't know what that Matter of a Razor is.

Mr. Evans. A Razor that was ſaid to be thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window.

L. C. J. Tell us what the Story was, Man.

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards told me, That Mr. Braddon was with him, to examine his Son, relating to a Matter of throwing a Razor out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window: This is that he ſaid to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Braddon preſent there?

Mr. Evans. Yes, Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards were both preſent.

L. C. J. Well, What was the Diſcourſe between you? Tell us plainly.

Mr. Evans. Says Mr. Edwards to me, Mr. Braddon has been to examine my Son about ſuch a matter, ſo I deſired he would not diſcourſe any thing of that matter to me, and I told him, I adviſe you not to proceed, for I told him, it would be prejudicial both to him, and Mr. Edwards too.

L. C. J. What is meant by this Matter? He examined my Son about a Matter, and I deſired him he would not diſcourſe of this Matter, What is all that Matter?

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. What did you apprehend by it?

Mr. Evans. I apprehended that Mr. Braddon had been to examine Mr. Edwards's Son about ſuch a Matter.

L. C. J. What Matter, Man?

Mr. Evans. His diſperſing of any ſuch Report.

L. C. J. What Report?

Mr. Evans. A Report of throwing a Razor out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window.

L. C. J. Here is a Razor thrown out of a Window, and a Matter of I know not what.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Suppoſe a Man ſhould throw a Razor out of a Window, what ſignifies that?

L. C. J. Where heard he of that Matter?

Mr. Evans. This is all I heard, my Lord, I am upon my Oath.

L. C. J. But I wiſh thou would'ſt let us know what it is thou didſt hear.

Mr.

Mr. Jones. Was there no Talk of a bloody Razor?

Mr. Evans. No, not a Word of it.

L. C. J. How came you to be frighted then, and to be unwilling to hear of that Matter, and to tell him, you thought it might be prejudicial to him and Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Evans. I told him I had ſeen the Coroner's Inqueſt, where it was proved, that the Razor lay in ſuch a Place; therefore I deſired they would not ſpeak to me of any ſuch Matter, and I deſired Mr. Braddon not to proceed in it, for you may do your ſelf and Mr. Edwards too, ſome Prejudice.

Mr. At. Gen. Look you, Mr. Evans, what did you underſtand by the throwing the Razor out of the Window, and giving him Caution not to proceed? The Razor might be found there, what was the meaning of it?

Mr. Evans. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, There was a Report at the Cuſtom Houſe, that very Morning the Earl of Eſſex cut his Throat, that there was a Razor thrown out of the Window.

Mr. Jones. You did adviſe Braddon, you ſay, not to proceed in it?

Mr. Evans. Yes.

Mr. Jones. How came you to adviſe him ſo?

Mr. Evans. Becauſe it might be prejudicial to him, and Mr. Edwards too.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there no Talk between Mr. Edwards, Mr. Braddon, and you, That Mr. Braddon would be a Proſecutor of the Murther of the Earl of Eſſex, upon your Oath?

Mr. Evans. Not one Word or Syllable. For Mr. Braddon ſpake not one Word, good or bad: I gave an Account to Secretary Jenkins, of every Word that paſſed.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you adviſe him not to proſecute the Buſineſs?

Mr. Evans. I did adviſe him not to diſperſe ſuch a Report.

L. C. J. What Report?

Mr. Evans. Of a Razor being thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window.

Mr. At. Gen. Why, ſuppoſe there had been a Razor thrown out of the Window, what then?

Mr. Evans. Then it was contrary to the Information and Evidence given before the Coroner.

L. C. J. Why ſo? Why might it not be thrown out after it was found in the Place where the Inquiſition ſays? Thou art a wonderful cautelous Man, where is the danger of the Report of a Razor being thrown out of a Window? There muſt be ſomething more in it, if we could but get it out of him.

Mr. Evans. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to hear me.

L. C. J. Ay, I do hear thee, but I do not underſtand thee.

Mr. Evans. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I will read the Words verbatim that I gave to the Secretary.

L. C. J. Why, I believe you can read, and I make no doubt you can write too, or you are not fit to be a Cuſtom-Houſe Officer.

Mr. Evans. I put in this Paper to the Secretary, and will repeat what I ſaid then, as near as I can upon my Oath.

L. C. J. I care not a Farthing what you delivered to the Secretary, tell us what thou haſt to ſay plainly.

Mr. Evans. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I will read it what it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may look upon your Paper to refreſh your Memory, but you muſt not read it here.

Mr. Evans. If it pleaſe you, I will tell you the Reaſon and Occaſion I had to go to the Secretary.

L. C. J. I know not what Occaſion thou hadſt to go to the Secretary, nor do I care what thou didſt when thou cameſt there, it may be thou madeſt three Legs, it may be never a one; what is that to us? What canſt thou ſay to the Matter here before us?

Mr. Evans. That is all I can ſay, my Lord. It was an Accident that they came into my Company. And tell you the manner and the occaſion. That Perſon that brought me the Warrant, ſaying to Mr. Edwards that I was below, Mr. Braddon hearing my Name named, comes down with Mr. Edwards, for he had told Mr Edwards, I was related to him, and they both came to the Coffee-Houſe, and there they began to diſcourſe about this Matter.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Who began to diſcourſe?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards.

L. C. J. Well, What was it he ſaid to thee?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards began thus. Says he, Mr. Evans, this Gentleman has been at my Houſe to examine my Son concerning a Report that is ſpread Abroad concerning a Razor that was thrown out of the Window of the Earl of Eſſex's Lodgings, that Morning he cut his Throat. I hearing of that, ſaid I, Gentlemen, I have read the Coroner's Inqueſt that is in Print, and it is otherwiſe declared there: And therefore let there be no Diſcourſe of any ſuch Matter, for I believe no ſuch Thing. And ſaid I to that Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, Pray forbear meddling in any ſuch Thing, for Mr. Edwards is a poor Man, and has divers Children, he may be ruined, and you likewiſe may be ruined your ſelf, if you proceed any further in it.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall interpret this matter by our other Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Ay, ſo you had need, for there is nothing to be made of this Fellow's Evidence.

Mr. North. Pray, by the Oath you have taken, when you gave that Advice, did Mr. Braddon make you no Anſwer?

Mr. Evans. No, none at all.

Mr. Braddon. [Lifting up his Hands in an unuſual manner.] Mr. Evans, Pray will you anſwer one Thing?

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, let us have no elevation of Hands. Your Confidence does not ſo well become you in a Court of Juſtice, this is not a Cauſe wherein you need uſe ſo much Confidence.

Mr. Braddon. Sir, pray anſwer, did not I——

L. C. J. What is it you would ask him?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked, Whether I, with a Brother of his, did not come to his Country-houſe, on the Monday immediately after my Lord of Eſſex's Death, and whether at his Table there was not a Report then of a Razor being ſeen to be thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window?

L. C. J. Pray ask by your Counſel, they are moſt proper to ask Queſtions for you. Tell them them what you would have asked, and don't make long Stories your ſelf.

Mr. Wallop. Were you not in company with Mr. Braddon, the Monday after my Lord of Eſſex's Death?

Mr. Freke. What was the Report, Sir, at your Table, upon the Monday next after my Lord of Eſſex's Death?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe——

L. C. J. Pray Sir, make a ſhort and plain Anſwer to what Queſtions are asked you, and let us have none of your Circumlocutions, and your Diſcourſes of the Matter; but let us underſtand what you ſay.

Mr. Evans. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is your Queſtion?

Mr. Braddon. Whether I was not upon the Monday after the Earl of Eſſex's Death at his Table, where there was a Diſcourſe of a Report that a Razor was thrown out of the Window, before Murther was cried out, and concerning a Boy which went to take it up?

L. C. J. What a Story is here! Pray ask him a fair and a ſhort Queſtion, if he can remember what was ſaid at his Houſe? We are got quite to the Cuſtom-houſe and the Coffee-houſe again, and I know not where.

Mr. Freke. What Diſcourſe was there at your Table, Sir, the immediate Monday after the Earl of Eſſex's Death, concerning a Razor thrown out of a Window?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, This, to the beſt of my remembrance, is what I have to ſay, and remember of the thing, that a Gentleman being with him——

L. C. J. Who?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Wallop. Where was this?

Mr. Evans. In the Country.

Mr. Wallop. Where, in what Country?

Mr. Evans. In Eſſex.

Mr. Wallop. What was the Place's Name?

Mr. Evans. At Wanſted, my Lord; and being there, and he plucking out a Paper.

L. C. J. He, who?

Mr. Evans. A Brother of mine, that that Gentleman came down with to ſee me.

L. C. J. What is his Name?

Mr. Evans. His Name is Mr. William Hatſell.

L. C. J. With whom did he come?

Mr. Evans. With this Perſon.

L. C. J. With this Perſon, who is this Perſon?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon.

L. C. J. Why can'ſt thou not name him, without this wire-drawing? Thou art a moſt exact Cuſtom-houſe Officer, I'll warrant thee, thou can'ſt not make a plain Anſwer to a plain Queſtion.

Mr. Evans. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, I do not know the Methods of the Court.

L. C. J. Prithee, I care not for thy Methods, nor thy Matter, but deal plainly with us.

Mr. Evans. My Brother Mr. Hatſell, came down along with Mr. Braddon to my Houſe at Wanſted in Eſſex, on the Monday after my Lord of Eſſex's Death, and coming down, my Brother Mr. Hatſell pulled out the Coroner's Inqueſt upon Oath that was printed, and ſhewing of it to me, I read it, and as ſoon as ever I had read it, ſaid I, Mr. Edwards, that was at the Cuſtom-houſe that very Morning when the Earl of Eſſex's Throat was cut, did declare to me upon the Cuſtom-houſe Key, That his Son did declare that the Razor was thrown out of the Window, which ſeems to contradict this Paper, that ſays, it was found lying by him.

Mr. Freke. Was this before Mr. Braddon was with Mr. Edwards?

Mr. Evans. I can't tell that.

Mr. Freke. Was it before Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards came to you to the Coffee-houſe?

Mr. Evans. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay Mr. Braddon came with Mr. Hatſell to your Houſe at Wanſted?

Mr. Evans. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Who was the Perſon that told this Story?

Mr. Evans. He brought down the printed Paper with him, and upon plucking out that Paper and reading of it, the Story was told.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who was the Perſon that told him it was ſo reported at the Cuſtom-houſe?

Mr. Evans. I made that Anſwer my ſelf immediately upon reading the Paper; for I obſerved what the Coroner's Inqueſt had returned, and upon that I made this Obſervation, That it ſeemed to contradict what was declared at the Cuſtom-houſe that Morning my Lord of Eſſex cut his Throat.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray who declared there that the Razor was thrown out of the Window?

Mr. Evans. It was Mr. Edwards told me.

L. C. J. Why conſider with your ſelf now, You ſay firſt of all Edwards and Braddon came to me to the Coffee-houſe.

Mr. Evans. That was at another Day.

L. C. J. I am ſure you ſwore ſo at firſt.

Mr. Evans. With your Lordſhip's Favour——

L. C. J. And with your Favour too, Sir. Pray will you hear me, I have heard you a great while I am ſure to no purpoſe. But conſider with your ſelf, and pray be pleaſed to reconcile what you ſay now with what you ſaid at firſt, if you can. You ſay firſt of all Edwards and Braddon came to me to the Cuſtom-houſe, and found me out at the Coffee-houſe, and that Edwards ſhould ſay, Some body had been with his Son, in order to examine him about a Razor that was thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window, and that you immediately cryed out, Have a care of that, for that contradicts the Inquiſition that I have ſeen in Print, which declares as tho' the Razor was found in the Room. And after that you ſay, it was that you ſaw the Inquiſition when Hatſell came down with Braddon, and you told him of the Report at the Cuſtom-houſe. How came you, if you had not ſeen the Inquiſition till then, to give out ſuch Words at the Cuſtom-houſe: Have a care of medling with that, becauſe that contradicts the Inquiſition?

Mr. Evans. My Lord, This was ſeveral Days before that.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, This Diſcourſe at Wanſted was before that at the Cuſtom-houſe.

Mr. Wallop. This that he now ſpeaks of is an Anſwer to Mr. Braddon's Queſtion, which was about a Diſcourſe that paſſed before this other at the Cuſtom houſe. This that he ſpeaks of, the Diſcourſe at a Coffee-houſe, was afterward, but indeed he firſt ſpake of it; but theſe were two distinct Matters at several times. This last of the Custom-house was, when he had made the Examination of the Boy, as that Witness says.

L. C. J. Therefore I think it was fit to explain it, for it looked very inconsistent before, what thou said'st at first, and what thou say'st now; but if thou tellest me thy Essex-matter was before thy Coffee-house-matter, it is well, otherwise the Matter, I assure you, looked very ill.

Mr. Evans. This is the truth, my Lord, and I can tell no more.

Mr. At. Gen. Take the Times, my Lord, and you will see he does speak very notably. The 13th of July my Lord of Essex murder'd himself, the 14th of July the Inquisition was taken before the Coroner, pray what was the Day that Hatsel and this Gentleman came down to you to Essex?

Mr. Evans. I can't tell that, Sir, truly; but it was before this Matter of the Examination of the Boy.

L. C. J. But pray let me ask you one Question, if your Matter about the Inquisition in the Country was before the Matter of your cautious Discourse at the Custom-house, how came you to tell them, I heard this Report of a Razor thrown out of the Window, that Morning the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Edwards reported this same thing that very same Morning to me and several others at the Custom-house Key.

L. C. J. Why did you not tell us this before?

Mr. Evans. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I do not understand the Methods of the Court.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Hatsel gave the occasion by pulling out the Inquisition.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, make your Observations anon, let the King's Counsel go on with their Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. What Discourse had Mr. Braddon with you then at that time, when Hatsel came down with him to your House you say, and pulling out the Inquisition you read it, and made Answer, You heard at the Custom-house Key such a Report that very Morning the Earl murdered himself.

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon was walking up and down the Room, I did not speak it to him, but I spake it to Mr. Hatsel, but I believe Braddon over-heard and took notice of it.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did he concern himself about it?

Mr. Evans. No, not much, I did not hear him say any thing, but he walked up and down the Room.

L. C. J. Now after all this Discourse of the Matter, for ought I can understand, the Matter is but this: He says, Edwards before the Meetings either at his House in Essex, or at the Coffee-house by the Custom-house, reported to him, as tho' the Earl of Essex had not murdered himself, but some body else had done it for him. And this was reported at the Custom-house that Morning the Earl of Essex cut his own Throat, and he hearing this Report at the Custom house at that time, afterwards comes Braddon and Hatsel to his House into Essex, and after Hatsel had shew'd him the Paper of the Inquisition in Print, he said, I heard some Discourse from Mr. Edwards at the Custom-house of a quite other nature, and then he says, Braddon and Edwards came to the Coffee-house, and there it was he desired them not to talk of that Matter, for, said he, that contradicts the Inquisition I saw before. This is the Substance of what he said.

Mr. At. Gen. And hereby it does appear, that Braddon, and Evans, and Edwards, and Hatsel, are all of a Gang.

L. C. J. Have you the Information he gave in to the Secretary, Mr. Attorney General, that that was given before the Council?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, 'tis much the same with what he hath said now.

Mr. Evans. Yes, my Lord, 'tis verbatim as I have declared now.

Mr. At. Gen. Only this other part of Hatsel and the Meeting in Essex was spoken of since, that was not declared before.

Mr. Evans. No, my Lord, that I did not speak of, because I was not examined about it.

Mr. At. Gen. That was part of the Secret.

Mr. Evans. No, it was common Discourse with me. And I did not think any thing of it, what Mr. Edwards said at the Custom-house, was spoken to a great many others as well as me, and the People seemed to be surprized with an account of the thing at the first News of my Lord of Essex's Death. And if I had thought it material, I could have brought a great many that were by then; but Mr. Edwards is here brought himself, I suppose he will not deny it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you, Sir, you say that very Morning my Lord of Essex killed himself, Mr. Edwards discoursed, and made this Report to you at the Custom house, pray tell what the Discourse was; what he said to you; and then tell us what time of Day it was.

Mr. Evans. To the best of my remembrance it was about eleven a Clock; there were several Persons standing together, among the rest Captain Goodland, and some of the Searchers, and Mr. Edwards was there, and said he, I am informed from home, That my Boy has been at home, and given an account to my Wife, that being in the Tower, he saw a Hand throw a Razor out of a Window, and he named my Lord of Essex's Window; and this Mr. Edwards did not only tell me, but to a whole Coffee-house of People, this Matter of Fact.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Did not Mr. Edwards tell you, That some body had been examining his Boy about that Report?

Mr. Evans. That was the second time, when Mr. Braddon and Mr. Edwards came together.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Who was it had been examining his Boy did he say?

Mr. Evans. Mr. Braddon, he said, had been to examine his Son.

Mr. Just. Holloway. That was after the Discourse at Essex that Braddon came to examine his Son concerning the Razor.

Mr. Wallop. Yes, it was after the Discourse at Essex, where Hatsel plucking out the Paper, Evans told Mr. Braddon first of this Razor.

L. C. J. Well, Make your Defence by and by, Mr. Wallop: Do not make your Remarks now.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Mr. Edwards. Cryer swear him. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Edwards, Pray will you give the Court an account of this Buſineſs; for I don't know whether you heard what that Gentleman that went out laſt ſaid, he ſays, you raiſed this Story, Pray give an account what you know of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what you know of Mr. Braddon's coming to your Son, and what Diſcourſe he or you had about the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex.

Mr. Edwards. The Report that Mr. Braddon came to enquire after, was with us ſome three Days before; it was in our Family three Days before, and upon the 17th of July——

L. C. J. What was the Report, Mr. Edwards, before Mr. Braddon came to you?

Mr. Edwards. The Report I have already declared before the Council.

L. C. J. But you muſt tell us too what it was.

Mr. Edwards. The Report of the Boy the 13th of July about 10 a Clock, as I was informed by my Family, and by the Boy afterwards by Word of Mouth, was this, He comes in about 10 a Clock, ſays he, I have been at the Tower (to one of his Siſters,) and have ſeen His Majeſty and the Duke of York, and the Earl of Eſſex has cut his Throat, and I ſee an Hand throw a Razor out of the Window, and one came out of the Houſe, a Maid, or a Woman in a white Hood and a Stuff-Coat and took it up, and went in again, and then I heard a Noiſe as of Murder cryed out. This was the Boy's Report, and more than as his Report I can't ſpeak to it.

L. C. J. This was your Son, was it not?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, the younger of them. The two Boys were that Morning going to Merchant-Taylor's School together as they uſed to do, and by the way hearing the King was in the Tower, this younger Boy that was well acquainted with the Tower, gave his elder Brother the ſlip and went into the Tower, and rambled about from place to place.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you examine him?

Mr. Edwards. Ay, I did examine him.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you find that he denyed it again?

Mr. Edwards. No, I did examine him, and I found no denial of any thing at all that he had reported till Mr. Braddon came to make enquiry. Aſſoon as he came to make the enquiry, and I underſtood what Mr. Braddon's Buſineſs was, I begged of him that he would not inſiſt upon it by no means; I begged of him as if I had begged for my life, but he was ſo zealous in the Buſineſs, that nothing would ſatisfy him. And after I had told Mr. Braddon that which I could not deny, which was the Boy's Report, I left him and went down to the Cuſtom-houſe, and ſome of my Family diſcourſed the Boy at that rate that he began to deny it, and in leſs than half an hour's time recollected himſelf and began to own it again, and ſo the Boy was off and on till the time he was before the Council; and to this Day he ſeems to ſtand in the Denial, whether he will do it now or no I can't tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon, That you had found this Boy to be a lying Boy, and detected him in Lyes ſeveral times?

Mr. Edwards. Nay it pleaſe you, Sir, I acquainted him with thus much: Said I, Mr. Braddon, As I have dealt ingenuouſly with you, to let you know what the Boy's Report was, ſo I muſt likewiſe tell you, that I cannot nor will undertake to aſſert the truth of it, and preſently upon that my Daughters told me, the Boy had many times excuſed his playing Truant by falſe Stories.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon, that your Boy was a lying Boy at that time?

Mr. Edwards. I think I did not at that inſtant of time.

L. C. J. How old is this Boy you talk of?

Mr. Edwards. About 13 Years of Age, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What do you know of Mr. Braddon's forcing your Boy to ſign any thing that he had prepared after this?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you told him your Boy had deny'd it, what did he ſay? Was he pleaſed and ſatisfied?

Mr. Edwards. He was not told it by me, but ſome of my Family.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did he behave himſelf?

Mr. Edwards. At the ſame time they told him he denied it, at the ſame time they told him he owned it again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How did Mr. Braddon behave himſelf?

Mr. Edwards. Like a civil Gentleman. I ſaw nothing elſe by him, but that he was very zealous in the Buſineſs, that is the truth of it, nothing could perſwade him to deſiſt.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray did you ask Mr. Braddon, or did he tell you, what was the reaſon that he was ſo inquiſitive about this Razor, and the Report of the Boy?

Mr. Edwards. As to that he told me, he would let me know the reaſon of it, which was, out of Conſcience.

Mr. Jones. Did not Mr. Braddon carry your Son before ſeveral Juſtices of Peace?

Mr. Edwards. Before none as I know of, not one truly to my knowledge.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you underſtand he had taken your Boy from your Houſe in a Coach?

Mr. Edwards. Never till he carried him into His Majeſty's Preſence before the Council, and I knew not that till the Boy came home.

Mr. Thompſon. Mr. Attorney, Have you done with him? May I ask him a Queſtion?

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, ask him what you will.

Mr. Thompſon. If I underſtand you right, Sir, this Report of the Boys was that Morning that the Earl of Eſſex was murdered——

L. C. J. Was murdered, murdered himſelf, Man.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I mean the Day of his Death. Now I would ask you, Sir, when that was?

Mr. Edwards. The Boy's Report was this, Sir,——

Mr. Thompſon. I ask you not what his Report was, but when? What Day it was?

Mr. Edwards. The 13th of July. That Day the Earl of Eſſex cut his Throat.

Mr. Thompſon. How many Days after that was it when Mr. Braddon came to you?

Mr. Edwards. It was not till the 17th of July.

Mr. Thompſon. Had you diſcourſed of the Report of your Boy at the Cuſtom-houſe, or any where elſe, that ſame Day he came to you?

Mr. Ed-

Mr. Edwards. I cannot ſay that.

Mr. Thompſon. Had you diſcourſed it before Mr. Braddon ſpake to you, upon your Oath?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I believe I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you diſcourſed it before your Boy told you?

Mr. Edwards. I ſhould then indeed have been the Contriver of the Story.

Mr. At. Gen. So it is like enough you were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you diſcourſed it to any body before you went home to your own Houſe, upon your Oath, Sir?

Mr. Edwards. Upon my Oath then I diſcourſed nothing of that nature, not a tittle of it, nor knew nothing of it, till I had it from my own Family.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you not diſcourſe of it before you went home?

Mr. Edwards. No, when I came home they told me of it.

L. C. J. I ask you again, Sir, Did not you tell it before you came home?

Mr. Edwards. About 10 a Clock, I having heard the News of the Earl of Eſſex's cutting his Throat, at the Cuſtom-houſe, I ſtepped home, being very near to my own Houſe, and as ſoon as I came in at the Door, the Family began to give me an account what News the Boy brought in.

L. C. J. That was the firſt time you heard of it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, that was the firſt time I heard of it.

L. C. J. And did not you diſcourſe of it till after that?

Mr. Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Evans. Let him come in again then.

Mr. At. Gen. Let Mr. Evans come in again.

L. C. J. Mr. Evans, I would ask you this Queſtion, There were three times that you ſay, I think, that you had Diſcourſe with Edwards about the Matter, as you call it, once at Eſſex, and twice at the Cuſtom-houſe?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, not in Eſſex, it was Hatſel and Braddon, my Lord, that came to him there, Edwards was not there.

L. C. J. When you firſt had a Diſcourſe with Edwards about this Matter, what was it that Edwards did ſay to you?

Mr. Evans. Being upon Cuſtom-houſe Key, and Captain Goodland and ſeveral others ſtanding upon the Key, that very Morning my Lord of Eſſex's Throat was cut, about 11 a Clock Mr. Edwards came to us, being ſtanding upon the Key, and told us, That he was informed his Boy had been at the Tower, and came home and told his Mother, he ſaw a Hand throw a Razor out of a Window, and that he went to take it up, and a Maid or a Woman came and took it up, and went in again.

L. C. J. Evans, Did he tell you this as if he had been at home?

Mr. Evans. No, I think it was that he had it from home by ſome Hand or other.

Mr. Edwards. I was at home.

Mr. Evans. My Lord, At two a Clock in the Afternoon, when he came again to the Cuſtom-houſe, he did tell us, he had been at home, and his Boy had told him the ſame Story.

L. C. J. But when he had told you before he had dined, did he ſay, he had been at home?

Mr. Edwards. My Family can teſtify I was at home between 10 and 11 a Clock.

Mr. Evans. To the beſt of my remembrance he told me he heard ſo from home.

L. C. J. Before he went home, you ſay, he told you of this, and that was 10 a Clock in the Morning, and about 2 a Clock in the Afternoon, he ſaid, he had been at home, and it was true.

Mr. Evans. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I was at home.

L. C. J. Mr. Edwards, Did you tell him ſo, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. It is like I might ſay ſo about 10 a Clock, but not before I had received the Report at home.

Mr. Evans. I underſtood it ſo, my Lord, That he had heard from home.

L. C. J. I ask you this upon your Oath, mind the Queſtion, and anſwer me plainly, Did you ſpeak to him, that you had ſuch a Report from home, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. When I told it him, I had it from home, for I brought it from home.

L. C. J. Nay, Did you tell him you had ſuch a Report from home at 10 a Clock, or no?

Mr. Edwards. I told him that I had met with ſuch a Report.

L. C. J. From whom?

Mr. Edwards. From my Family at home, for the Boy came not to me to tell it.

L. C. J. Then did you ſee Mr. Evans about 2 a Clock that Afternoon?

Mr. Edwards. 'Tis probable I did.

L. C. J. Did you, or did you not?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I believe I might. I beſeech your Lordſhip give me leave to ſpeak. Mr. Evans and I am converſant Forenoon and Afternoon every Day, we have Buſineſs together.

Mr. Evans. We have Buſineſs, my Lord, about ſhipping off Goods.

Mr. Edwards. But, my Lord, if you pleaſe, I will tell you, that is the Occaſion of our being together.

L. C. J. Anſwer me my Queſtion, Did you, or did you not tell him ſo?

Mr. Edwards. I did not acquaint him with it before I had been at Home, and received it from my own Family.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, Don't you go about to evade the Queſtion, nor trifle with the Court, you muſt anſwer me my Queſtion directly, and upon your Oath, Did you tell him you had notice from Home of ſuch a Report, or no?

Mr. Edwards. I did not receive notice from Home, but I brought it from Home.

L. C. J. Did you tell him you had it from Home?

Mr. Edwards. I told him I had it from my Family, who told me the Boy had made ſuch a Report.

L. C. J. Did you tell him you had it from your Boy, or received notice from Home about it?

Mr. Edwards. I did not tell him any thing before I had been at Home.

L. C. J. Well, then, anſwer me this Queſtion. Did you tell him in the Afternoon at two a Clock; Now I have been at Home and examined my Boy, and find it ſo as I told you?

Mr. Edwards. I examined my Boy at Dinner, and I found the Boy agreed with the Report of my Daughter, and confirmed it.

L. C. J. I ask you what you told Mr. Evans, not what your Boy or your Daughter told you?

Mr. Edwards. It is probable I might tell Mr. Evans the ſame Story after Dinner at Two a Clock, that I did before.

L. C. J. Now tell us the Paſſage again, Mr. Evans, as you heard it.

Mr. Evans. To the beſt of my remembrance, at Two a Clock in the Afternoon, Mr. Edwards came and told us, he had examined the Boy, and ſays he, the Boy has confirmed all that I told you.

L. C. J. But before that in the Morning, what did he ſay?

Mr. Evans. I cannot ſay exactly the Time, but I think it was about Ten a Clock. There were four or five more beſides my ſelf, ſtanding at Cuſtom-Houſe Key, and Mr. Edwards came to us, and told us, ſays he, I am informed from Home, as I underſtood it, not that he had been at Home, but that he heard it from Home, that his Boy had been at the Tower, had ſeen an Hand throw a Razor out of a Window.

L. C. J. What ſaid he at Two of the Clock?

Mr. Evans. He ſaid he had examined his Boy, and he ſaid the ſame thing, that he told us he had heard in the Morning.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we are now but upon the Entrance of our Evidence, to ſhew upon what ſlender Grounds, how ſlight a Foundation there was for this Gentleman to undertake this Proſecution.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Edwards, Pray let me ask you a Queſtion, Did Mr. Braddon tender any Paper to your Son to ſign?

Mr. Edwards. I was informed he did do it afterwards, but I ſaw him not do any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you never ſay that Mr. Braddon had tendered a Paper to your Son to ſign?

Mr. Edwards. I do not believe I ever did ſay ſo, I do not remember any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray recollect your Memory, and tell us, whether you did, or did not.

Mr. Edwards. I thank God, Sir, that he has given me my Memory and my Underſtanding, I bleſs him for it.

Mr. At. Gen. But it were well if thou hadſt any Honeſty too.

Mr. Edwards. And Honeſty too, Sir: I have not lived theſe 39 Years at the Cuſtom-Houſe without Honeſty. I never had my Honeſty queſtioned to this Day. I am ſure no body can tax me with Diſhoneſty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Mr. Edwards let your Anger alone for a while, and anſwer the Queſtion that I ſhall ask you: Did your Son refuſe to ſign that Paper?

Mr. Edwards. He did ſign it at laſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he refuſe to ſign it?

Mr. Edwards. I do not know whether he refuſed it or no.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did you hear that your Son refuſed it?

Mr. Edwards. I did hear that he had ſigned it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But did you hear that he refuſed to ſign it?

Mr. Edwards. The Boy did not tell me he had refuſed to ſign it. I did not hear him refuſe it.

L. C. J. Thou doſt prevaricate very ſtrangely, I muſt tell thee, that notwithſtanding thy Reputation of 39 Years of Honeſty: Prithee, anſwer plainly, Did you hear at any time, that your Son had refuſed to ſign it?

Mr. Edwards. No, my Lord, I did not, to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. C. J. That is a plain Anſwer, Man, but thou doſt ſo ſhuffle up and down, one cannot tell what to make of what thou ſayeſt.

Mr. Thompſon. Sir, I deſire to ask you one Queſtion, Whether ever Mr. Braddon and you had any former Acquaintance?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, ſtay, Sir, and if you pleaſe, ſpare your Queſtion a little, for we have not yet done with Mr. Edwards. Mr. Edwards, pray anſwer me, Did Mr. Braddon ever tell you, that he had other Informations to confirm this Report of your Son from others?

Mr. Edwards. Truly I do not remember he ſaid any ſuch Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever ſay he told you ſo? Conſider of it, and remember your former Examination.

Mr. Edwards. 'Tis like ſince he may have ſaid ſo, but not at his firſt coming.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At his firſt coming did your Son ſign his Paper then?

Mr. Edwards. No, he did not, as I am informed, I ſaw it not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But afterwards you ſay, Mr. Braddon did tell you, he had other Evidence to confirm it.

Mr. Edwards. It may be he might, I can't ſay it poſitively.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay he did not ſign the Paper at his firſt coming?

Mr. Edwards. No, I am informed he did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know he did ſign it at laſt?

Mr. Edwards. My Wife and Daughters Information.

L. C. J. But how then can you ſay, That you never heard he did refuſe it?

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, he did not tender a Paper to him to ſign, till he had been two or three times there, as I have heard, it was not tender'd the firſt time he came.

L. C. J. I wonder how thou haſt eſcaped 39 Years with ſuch a Reputation.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I never was thought otherwiſe, nor I hope never gave any Occaſion for ſuch a Thought.

L. C. J. I'll aſſure thee, I do not, nor can take thee for one.

Mr. Edwards. I hope I have done nothing to make your Lordſhip think the contrary.

L. C. J. Yes, thou haſt. Thou didſt nothing but ſhuffle up and down, thou art to conſider thou art upon thy Oath, and muſt anſwer Queſtions plainly.

Mr. Edwards. My Lord, I do anſwer as truly as I can.

Mr. At. Gen. Heark you then, Mr. Edwards, anſwer me.

L. C. J. Speak the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, that is all that is required of thee; no Court of Juſtice ought to be afraid to hear Truth. Let Truth come out of God's Name.

Mr. At. Gen. Did Mr. Braddon ever tell you, That he had other Evidence beſides your Son?

Mr. Edwards. I do not remember he ſaid any ſuch thing at his firſt coming.

L. C. J. How thou doſt ſhuffle again. Anſwer plainly.

Mr. At. Gen. I ask you, Whether ever he did ſay it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, he did ſay ſo afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I muſt ask you one Queſtion more (for I ſee 'tis very difficult to get it out of you) Pray did he tell you, that he had other Evidence beſides your Son, before he ſigned the Paper, or after?

Mr. Edwards. It was before, as I take it. I ſpeak to the beſt of my Knowledge, my Lord, I can ſay no more.

L. C. J. If thou haſt a mind to continue the Reputation thou haſt got, as thou ſayeſt, the the way is to anſwer Queſtions, and ſpeak the Truth plainly, let it concern whom it will.

Mr. Edwards. I labour to do it, my Lord, to the beſt of my Underſtanding and Capacity.

L. C. J. I would not have thee ſay a Tittle more than the Truth, but let the Truth come out.

Mr. Freke. Now, Sir, I would ask you, if they have done with you, Did you ever know Mr. Braddon before the 17*th* of July? Or did you ever ſee him before?

Mr. Edwards. No, I never had any Knowledge of him, nor ever heard a Word of him.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Edwards, The Queſtion was asked of you, Whether Mr. Braddon did ſay, There was other Evidence beſides your Son; pray when was that?

Mr. Edwards. He did not at the firſt time, but afterwards he did.

Mr. Wallop. That was a good while after, he had been with the Boy firſt.

L. C. J. Make your Obſervations by and by, Mr. Wallop. This is not a Time for them.

Mr. At. Gen. Then where is Edwards, the Boy? [Who was brought forthwith into Court.]

Mr. Edwards. I charge you in the Preſence of Almighty God, ſpeak Truth, Child.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And ſo ſhould you too.

Mr. Edwards. Be ſure to ſay nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. And Child, turn about, and ſay, Father, be ſure you ſay nothing but the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, This is the Boy, he is very little and very young, will your Lordſhip have him ſworn? What Age are you of?

William Edwards. I am 13, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you know what an Oath is?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Suppoſe you ſhould tell a Lye, do you know who is the Father of Lyars?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Who is it?

William Edwards. The Devil.

L. C. J. And if you ſhould tell a Lie, do you know what would become of you?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. What if you ſhould ſwear to a Lie? If you ſhould call God to witneſs to a Lie, what would become of you then?

William Edwards. I ſhould go to Hell-fire.

L. C. J. That is a terrible Thing. And therefore, Child, if you take an Oath, be ſure you ſay nothing but what is Truth, for no Party, nor Side, nor any Thing in the World, for that God that you ſay will call you to an Account, and caſt you into Hell-fire, if you tell a Lie, and witneſs to a Falſhood, knows and ſees all you do, therefore have a care, the Truth you muſt ſay, and nothing but the Truth.

Cryer. Pull off your Glove, and hearken to your Oath. [Then he was ſworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And now remember you call God to witneſs to the Truth of what you ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Young Man, look upon that Paper, is that your Hand?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſign that?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Prithee tell the Court, how thou cameſt to ſign it?

L. C. J. Ay, Child, be not afraid. Tell the Truth, for if thou telleſt the Truth, thou needeſt not be afraid, but if thou telleſt a Lie, thou haſt need to be afraid; let no body, whatever has been ſaid to thee, affright thee from telling the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Don't be afraid of thy Father, or any body, but tell plainly what thou knoweſt, and ſpeak only the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to ſign that Paper?

William Edwards. Mr. Braddon bid me ſign it when he had writ it.

L. C. J. Heark thee, Child, Did he take it from thee what he writ, or did he write it from himſelf? Come hither, Child, be not afraid, no body here will do thee any hurt.

Then the Boy was lifted up upon the Table before the Judges.

L. C. J. Look upon that Paper, didſt thou put thy Name to that Paper, Child?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Whoſe Hand-writing is that Paper, beſides thy Name?

William Edwards. Mr. Braddon's.

L. C. J. Did he bring it ready written?

William Edwards. He writ it in our Parlour.

L. C. J. How came he to write it?

William Edwards. He ſaid it was for the Earl of Eſſex, to give to his Wife.

L. C. J. And what did he ask thee before he writ that?

William Edwards. He asked me, whether I ſaw any Thing at the Tower, and ſo I told him, yes.

L. C. J. Ay, tell us what you told him, and be not afraid, Child, but tell the Truth.

William Edwards. I told him, I was in the Tower, and ſaw a Razor thrown out of a Window.

L. C. J. You told him ſo, and then what ſaid he to you?

William Edwards. He bid me ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. Was that all the Words you had?

William Edwards. I afterwards went with my Brother into the Tower, and I ſhewed my Brother the Place, and then afterwards Mr. Braddon writ this, and he ſaid, it was to give to the Counteſs of Eſſex.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Did he read it to you after he had writ it?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. And did he ask thee, whether it were true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And didſt thou tell him it was true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. And didſt thou tell him all that was in that Paper was true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you tell him all that was writ in that Paper before he writ it down.

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Prithee mind the Queſtion, and ſpeak truth, Didſt thou tell him all that was in that Paper before he writ it down?

Will. Edwards. Yes, I told him, and ſo he writ it down.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. You heard it all read to you, you ſay?

Will. Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Then I ask you again, Did you tell him all that was in that Paper was read to you, before he writ it down?

Will. Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And after you had told him, he writ it down?

Will. Edwards. I told him as he writ it down.

L. C. J. And after ſuch time as he had writ it down, did he read it to you?

Will. Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And then you put your Name to it?

Will. Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. I pray, my Lord, he may be asked this Queſtion, Whether or no, when he firſt brought it in, the Boy did not deny to ſign it?

L. C. J. Did he bring the Paper thither before thou ſigned'ſt it?

Will. Edwards. It was upon the Table.

L. C. J. Did'ſt not thou refuſe to put thy Name to it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Why?

William Edwards. I was afraid.

L. C. J. Why?

William Edwards. For fear of coming into Danger.

L. C. J. Why, what Danger could there be? There was no Danger if it was Truth.

William Edwards. That was not the Truth.

L. C. J. Which was not the Truth? Was not the Paper that he had written Truth?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. How ſo, Child? Was not that thou toldeſt him the Truth?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Tell the Truth now then.

William Edwards. So I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then he offered it firſt to you, and bid you ſign it, and you denied to put your Hand to it, becauſe it was not true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And how long after did he offer it to you again?

William Edwards. A little while after.

L. C. J. But did you tell Mr. Braddon it was not true, when you refuſed to ſign it?

William Edwards. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Why didſt thou refuſe to ſign it, then?

William Edwards. I was afraid becauſe it was not true.

L. C. J. Didſt not thou tell Mr. Braddon it was not true?

William Edwards. I did not tell Mr. Braddon it was not true.

L. C. J. Why then, waſt thou afraid to ſign it becauſe it was not true at one time, and yet didſt ſign it, though it was not true at another time?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Child, Didſt thou give Mr. Braddon any Reaſon, why thou didſt not ſign it at that time?

William Edwards. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How didſt thou come to ſign it? Did any any body ſpeak to thee between that firſt Time thou refuſedſt to ſign it, and the ſecond time thou didſt ſign it?

William Edwards. He would fain have got my Aunt to have ſigned it.

L. C. J. Thou ſayeſt, thou didſt firſt refuſe it, becauſe it was not true?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And then afterwards thou didſt ſign it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Then I ask thee, who perſwaded thee to ſign it after that time that thou ſtill refuſedſt it?

William Edwards. My Mother was afraid to have me ſign it.

L. C. J. Who perſwaded you to ſign it?

William Edwards. Mr. Braddon ſaid, there was no Harm in it, ſo I did it.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Braddon then perſwade you to ſign it?

William Edwards. He ſaid there was no Harm in it, that was all.

L. C. J. Did you do it at his Deſire?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. And you refuſed it at firſt when he deſired it?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. What, becauſe it was falſe?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Why then would'ſt thou ſign it afterwards, if ſome body did not perſwade thee to it?

William Edwards. He told me there was nothing of Harm in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Hadſt thou any Money offered thee by Mr. Braddon?

William Edwards. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Hadſt thou any Money promiſed thee?

William Edwards. No.

Mr. At. Gen. Hadſt thou any thing elſe offered or promiſed thee?

William Edwards. No, nothing at all.

L. C. J. You have heard what he has ſaid, Gentlemen?

Jury. No, my Lord, we have not heard a Word.

L. C J. Then I will tell you what he has ſaid exactly. He ſays, that Mr. Braddon writ it from him; that he writ it in the Room while he was there; that after ſuch time as he had writ it, Mr. Braddon read it to him: He ſays, that he had carried his Brother to ſhew him the Place where he aſſigned that the Razor was found in the Tower, he ſays, that after ſuch time as the Writing was finiſhed, Mr. Braddon offered it him to ſign, and he refuſed to ſign it, and I asked him the Reaſon why, and he ſays, becauſe it was falſe; he ſays, ſome ſhort time afterwards Mr. Braddon came to him again.

William Edwards. No, Sir, it was the ſame time.

L. C. J. Well, the ſame time Braddon was at him again, and told him there was no Harm in it, and therefore deſired him to ſign it, and becauſe he would not, he would have had his Aunt to have ſigned it; and he ſays, that Braddon telling him there was no Harm in it, he did ſign it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But withall he ſays, that it is falſe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Ay, he ſwears now 'tis all falſe.

Mr. Freke. Did you tell Mr. Braddon it was falſe?

L. C. J. No, he ſays he did not.

Mr. Freke. Did your Siſter at all diſcourſe with you after you had dictated to Mr. Braddon? Pray what Diſcourſe had you with her after Mr. Braddon writ that Paper, before you refuſed to ſign it?

L. C. J. Do not ask any leading Queſtion, Sir, but propoſe a fair plain Queſtion.

Mr. Freke. Did you diſcourſe with your Siſter at all, after Mr. Braddon had been at your Houſe?

William Edwards. Yes, I had been at School, and when I came Home, they ſaid that a Gentleman that came from the Earl of Eſſex's Brother, had been to enquire of the Truth of the Report I had raiſed.

Mr. Freke. What did your Siſter ſay to you?

William Edwards. That was all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did ſhe name the Gentleman, and did you ſee him afterwards?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was it?

William Edwards. That Gentleman, Mr. Braddon.

Jury. My Lord, We don't hear a Word he ſays.

L. C. J. He ſays, he had been at School, and when he came Home, they told him a Gentleman came from the Earl's Brother, to inquire of the Truth of what he had reported: It was asked him who the Gentleman was, and he ſays, it was that Gentleman, Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Thompſon. Before ſuch time as Mr. Braddon came to you, what did you tell your Father about this Razor, and when?

William Edwards. Sir, I told him the King and Duke of York were at the Tower, and while I was there, I ſaid, I ſaw a Hand caſt out a bloody Razor, and a Maid come out and take it up, and go in again.

Mr. Thompſon. Did you ſee any ſuch thing as a bloody Razor caſt out?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. What a Duſt has ſuch a trivial Report made in the World! Admit the Boy had ſaid any ſuch thing, what an Age do we live in, that the Report of every Child ſhall blow us up after this rate? It would make a body tremble, to think, what ſort of People we live among: To what an Heat does Zeal tranſport ſome People, beyond all Reaſon and Sobriety? If ſuch a little Boy had ſaid ſo, 'tis not an Halfpenny matter, but preſently all the Government is to be libelled for a Boy, which whether he ſpeaks true or falſe, is of no great Weight, and he ſwears 'tis all falſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We ſhall next call Dr. Hawkin's Son of the Tower. Where is Thomas Hawkins? [Who was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Agreeable to what the Boy has now ſaid, to ſhew you that what Mr. Braddon got him to ſign was all falſe, here is the young Man that truanted with him the ſame Morning, that was with him all the Time, the whole Morning, that ſays, there was no ſuch Thing, and he ſaw no ſuch Thing; and how could it enter into the Boy's Head ſuch a malicious Lie, if it had not been dictated? Pray Mr. Hawkins, will you acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, whether you play'd Truant that Morning with this other Boy, and where you were.

L. C. J. Ay, Tell the Truth in God's name, young Man, be it one way or t'other, let the Truth come out.

Hawkins. In the Morning, Sir, I met with him at the Tower, going round with the King, and we walked round the Tower as long as the King walked, and then the King going into the Conſtable's Houſe, we and ſome more Boys were playing——

L. C. J. Prithee ſpeak out, as tho' thou wert at play at Chuck-Farthing.

Hawkins. After we had been at play, I went Home, and after I had been there a little while, News was brought to my Father, that the Earl of Eſſex had killed himſelf. My Father went down, and I followed him, and after I had been there a little while, William Edwards came Home, and there we ſtood looking up at the Window an Hour or two at leaſt, and after we had tarried there a great while, I went out of the Tower Gate a little after Eleven.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there no Razor thrown out of the Window?

Hawkins. No, there was no Razor thrown out.

L. C. J. Didſt not thou ſee a Razor thrown out of the Window? And a Maid come and take it up?

Hawkins. No, there was no ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Were you there before Edwards came?

Hawkins. Yes.

L. C. J. And you went out with him?

Hawkins. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you and Edwards go away together?

Hawkins. Yes.

Mr. Thompſon. Did he tell you of any ſuch Thing?

Hawkins. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it that you went out of the Tower?

Hawkins. Almoſt Eleven a Clock.

Mr. Wallop. The Boy does ſay, he did tell his Father and Mother, and all the Family of it. And 'tis plain by the Father, that it was known in the Family by Ten of the Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this young Man with you, all the Time that you was there, Edwards?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you tell your Father of this Story when you came from the Tower?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. And that was the ſame time you came out of the Tower with Hawkins?

William Edwards. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. And you Hawkins, was this young Man with you all the time you were at my Lord Eſſex's Window?

Hawkins. He came thither while I ſtood there.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, This is but the beginning of our Evidence, your Lordſhip ſees what a fine Caſe it is, and how all this Noiſe and Buſtle has come to be made in the World. The Rumour did firſt ariſe in a Fanatick Family, and was propagated by that Party.

Mr. Jones. Ay, 'tis eaſily known whence it came.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, Pray will you go on with your Evidence, and make no Deſcants.

Mr.

Mr. Freke. You, Hawkins, when you came from your Father's Houſe, did you find that Boy in the Tower?

Hawkins. Yes, Sir, a going round with the King.

L. C. J. That was before this Thing happened.

Mr. Freke. Were you with him all the while he was in the Tower?

Hawkins. Juſt before my Lord Eſſex cut his Throat I went home.

Mr. Freke. Were you with him all the time or no? And how long were you with him?

Hawkins. I went with him round the Tower with the King. And after we were at play, and then I went Home, and then when I had been at Home a little time, the Rumour and Noiſe came, that the Earl of Eſſex had killed himſelf, ſo I went with my Father, and ſtood before the Window, and I tarried there a while before he came Home, and I ſtayed with him looking at the Window a great while, and we went out of the Tower together.

Mr. Freke. You little Boy, Edwards, was this Mr. Hawkins with you all the Time that you were in the Tower?

William Edwards. Yes, but only a little while that I was at the Mills.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We had not laid ſo much Weight upon Mr. Braddon for this Matter, but that he could not be quiet, but muſt inform the King of it, and this Matter was all examined before the King, the Boy was ſent for, and before his Face the Boy declared it was a Lie. And after he knew this, and after the Boy had twice in the Preſence of the King denied it, yet notwithſtanding all this, then was the Project between him and Speke. We ſhall firſt prove the Examination of this Matter before the Council, and how he was acquainted with it. Pray call Mr. Blathwaite and Mr. Monſtevens.

Mr. Blathwaite was Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Blathwaite will you give an Account whether you were preſent at the Council, when Mr. Braddon brought this Information, and how the Matter was Examined there, and what was done.

Mr. Blathwaite. My Lord, It was on the 20*th* of July, that Mr. Braddon came to White-Hall, he may remember I was there, for he could not but ſee me attending on the King. This little Boy was brought before his Majeſty, and was asked what Information he had given Mr. Braddon? And whether the Matter of the Information was true? The Boy ſaid it was a Lie, and that upon his Faith it was not true. Mr. Braddon knew all this, for he was called in and informed of it; and I believe Mr. Braddon will remember, that he heard the Boy deny it. The whole Examination could not but ſhew that it was an Invention of his, as he ſaid, it was to excuſe himſelf for having play'd Truant that Day, and that becauſe he was afraid to go Home, he invented that Lie. After this Mr. Braddon, as it appears, did nevertheleſs purſue this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Pray only tell what you know of your own Knowledge, both before, and after.

Mr. Blathwaite. I know, my Lord, that Mr. Braddon (having been in the Countrey) came afterwards before the King, and was again Examined upon this Matter, by which it appear'd, that he did continue in his Purſuit, though he was always informed of the Denial the Boy made, and that it was underſtood to be a Lie by the whole Family of the Edwards's, as well as from the Denial of the little Boy; for they did confeſs, that the Boy uſed to tell Lies, and one of the Siſters ſaid he had denied it at firſt, but afterwards was brought to ſay it. And if I remember right, the Words of one of the Siſters were, BRADDON COMPELLED THE BOY TO SIGN IT. Thoſe are the Words in the Minutes that I took at the Examination, therefore I believe it was ſo, that the Boy had denied before to ſign it. But this I only mention, as what the Siſter ſaid.

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to ask Mr. Blathwaite, Gentlemen?

Mr. North. Becauſe we will not trouble Mr. Blathwaite to call him again; pray produce the Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you look upon that Letter, and tell the Court what you know of it, and whoſe Hand it is.

Mr. Blathwaite. My Lord, This is a Letter that was produced before the King, when Mr. Speke attended there. It was then put into my Hands; and I do well remember, and likewiſe I have written upon it, That Mr. Speke owned it to be his Letter.

L. C. J. Did he own it to be his Letter, Sir?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, he did own it to be his Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. That is all we have to trouble you with at preſent, Sir: We will now call Mr. Monſtevens. [Who ſtanding up by the Cryer was Sworn.

And we call him to prove, That Mr. Braddon had notice the Boy had diſowned this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You hear the Queſtion, Sir, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Boy's Examination before the Council, and this Gentleman's having notice the Boy diſowned the Thing.

Mr. Monſtevens. My Lord, About 5 or 6 Days after my Lord of Eſſex had murdered himſelf in the Tower, I ſaw Mr. Braddon at the Secretary's Lodgings, my Lord Sunderland's Lodgings at Whitehall, with a young Woman, and a Boy about 12 or 13 Years old. The Boy was juſt now in Court, I ſaw him there. He came to me, and told me, he had earneſt Buſineſs to ſpeak with my Lord Sunderland, That he came from Sir Henry Capel, and he told me, he came with an Information, that the Boy had given relating to the Earl of Eſſex's Death. (The Information I believe is in Court.) He gave me the Information, and I read it, and I remember there was ſomething in the Information of a Razor thrown out of a Window, a bloody Razor thrown out of my Lord Eſſex's Window, and after I had read the Information, I told Mr. Braddon, I wonder Sir Henry Capel had not appeared himſelf in a Matter of that moment, wherein the Reputation of his Family was ſo much concerned, and I took the liberty to tell him, That I believed if Sir Henry Capel had thought that to be true, that was contained in that Paper, he would doubtleſs have came to my Lord Sunderland himſelf. Thereupon he told me, That Sir Henry Capel had not been well, and did not ſtir abroad. Then I told Mr. Braddon again, as I very well remember, That I was confident he had been abroad lately, and had been to wait upon the King, ſince the Death of my Lord of Eſſex. Then, my Lord, he had little or nothing to ſay to that, but he ſaid, what he did he was obliged to do in Conſcience, and out of the Duty he owed to the Memory of my Lord of Eſſex. Upon that, my Lord Sunderland came by, and I went with him to my Lord Sunderland, and he gave him that Paper, as I ſuppoſe, which I read, and my Lord Sunderland took the Information, and afterwards Mr. Braddon was committed in Cuſtody, and then the thing was brought before the King, and the Lords of the Council, which Mr. Blaithwaite has given you an account of.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I pray that a Word of the Information may be read, we will firſt prove the Information taken by him, and then call Sir Henry Capell, who will prove that he never had any Order from him, as he ſaid he had, but it was only his own buſy Inclinations.

Cl. of Cr. This is ſubſcribed, William Edwards.

L. C. J. Call the Boy in again.

Mr. Braddon. May I ask Mr. Monſtevens a Queſtion, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, ask him what you will.

Mr. Braddon. Sir, Did not I come to you the Thurſday Evening, and waited at the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's Lodgings, before I brought the Boy and the Girl to Whitehall?

Mr. Monſtevens. No, I did not ſee you there.

Mr. Braddon. You are poſitive in that, Sir?

Mr. Monſtevens. Yes, I will take my Oath again of it, if you will.

Mr. Braddon. Then I will prove I was, and that I ſaw you at ten of the Clock that Morning.

Mr. Monſtevens. I remember, my Lord, very well, That I was ſurprized to ſee him at the Lodgings at Whitehall. I never ſaw him, to the beſt of my remembrance, but once in my Life.

Mr. Braddon. What time was it, pray, you firſt ſaw me?

Mr. Monſtevens. It was in the Afternoon, as I remember.

L. C. J. Hark you, young Man, do you know my Lord Gerard?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Which Lord Gerard do you know?

William Edwards. My Lord Brandon Gerard.

L. C. J. How came you to know him?

William Edwards. By ſight I know him.

L. C. J. Do you know where he lodged in the Tower?

William Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Where?

William Edwards. At one Mr. Sam's.

L. C. J. Was you ever in his Lodging?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Never at all?

William Edwards. No.

L. C. J. Did you never tell any body you were in my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings?

William Edwards. Never in my life.

L. C. J. Did you never tell Braddon, that you went to ſee his Lodgings?

William Edwards. Into the Houſe I never went.

L. C. J. Did you never tell Braddon, That you went to ſee my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings? Never in your life?

William Edwards. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Now read it.

Cl. of Cr. [Reads.] —— The Information of William Edwards, ſecond Son to Thomas Edwards, of the Pariſh of All-hallows Barkin, London, taken the 18th Day of July, in the 35th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Charles II. Anno 1683. ſays: That this Informant on Friday the 13th of this inſtant July, as he was going to School, with his Brother Edward, he heard that His Majeſty, and His Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, were going to the Tower. Whereupon this Informant left his Brother, and went to the Tower to ſee His Majeſty, and His Royal Highneſs. And when this Informant had ſeen His Majeſty and His Royal Highneſs, this Informant about 9 of the Clock in the Morning of the ſame Day, went to ſee my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings; and as this Informant was ſtanding almoſt over againſt my Lord Gerard's Lodgings, between the Lord Gerard's and the late Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings, this Informant ſaw a Hand caſt out a bloody Razor out of the ſaid Earl of Eſſex's Lodgings. And this Informant was going to take up the ſaid Razor, which he ſaw on the Ground to be bloody, but before this Informant came to the Razor, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's Houſe, where the ſaid Lord of Eſſex lodged, and took up the ſaid Razor, which ſhe carried into the ſaid Captain Hawley's Houſe. And this Informant believes that it was the ſaid Maid, who he firſt heard cry out Murder. And this Informant further ſaith, That he heard the ſaid Maid ſay to ſome which were about the Door after the Murder was cryed, That ſhe did hear the ſaid Lord of Eſſex to groan three times that Morning. The Father, three Siſters and Brother will ſwear, That the ſaid William Edwards did declare the Subſtance of this Information to them on Friday the 13th inſtant, and never in the leaſt denied it till Tueſday after, when being chid and threatened by the elder Siſter, he did deny it, but ſoon after confeſſed it, and ſigned it in the Preſence of five or ſix Witneſſes.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Thus you ſee, he perſwaded him to tell a fine Story, of going to ſee my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings, but the Boy never told any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. No, he never told him a Word of it, he ſwears.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Your Lordſhip has heard from Mr. Monſtevens, That this Gentleman Mr. Braddon made uſe of the Name of an honourable Perſon Sir Henry Capell, and ſo at the Secretary's and at Edwards's Houſe, made uſe of the Name of my Lady Eſſex. We ſhall now call Sir Henry Capell. (Who was ſworn.) Sir Henry Capell, Will you pleaſe to give an account, Whether ever you employed this Gentleman Mr. Braddon about any ſuch Buſineſs as he has here undertaken?

Sir H. Capell. I hope you will give me as ſhort a Diſpatch as you can, Sir, for 'tis very uneaſy for me to be here in this Crowd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We give you ſome trouble, Sir Henry, but indeed 'tis not we, but this Gentleman, that has been pleaſed to uſe your Name, has neceſſitated it.

Mr. At. Gen. We ask you a ſhort Queſtion, Whether you employed Mr. Braddon to go to Mr. Edwards's Houſe or to the Secretary's, or any where elſe to proſecute this Matter of your Brother's Death?

Sir H. Capell. My Lord, I know very little of Mr. Braddon. He was to ſpeak with me twice. The firſt time he took me in very great Diſorder, both as to the Circumſtance of Time and Place, which are ſo tender with me, that truly I cannot expreſs, nor do I very well know what I did ſay, or what he ſaid to me, but the ſecond time he came to me, I do very well remember what I did ſay. And that which I did ſay the ſecond time is the moſt material thing I have to ſay in the Matter. He came to me and ſpake of ſuch a Buſineſs as the Court is well apprized of already (I hope you will pardon me if I do not repeat it) I made Anſwer to him, Mr. Braddon, I am under great Grief and under a great Burthen of Buſineſs in my private Family, whatſoever you have to ſay in the Matter, I deſire you would go to a Secretary of State and acquaint him with it. This is the moſt material thing that was ſaid that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. But you never employed him to go about to proſecute any ſuch thing?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Sir Henry, Pray anſwer me, Did you deſire him to go to Edwards's Houſe and ask him any Queſtions about it?

Sir H. Capell. I know nothing of Edwards, nor his Houſe at all.

Mr. Braddon. Sir Henry Capell, Will you pleaſe to let me ask you one Queſtion? Do you not remember I came to Eſſex Houſe on the Monday Night, and that I came and told you of ſuch a Report, and that I had not been with the Father of the Boy as yet, but if you would then ſend one with me I would go, and in his Preſence examine the Boy, and you, Sir, promiſed me that you would, and whether you did not appoint me to tarry at ſuch a Place where you promiſed to ſend one to go along with me?

Sir H. Capell. My Lord, I have a groſs Idea of that which he ſpeaks of concerning his having one to meet him, and that I told him ſuch an one ſhould meet him, and the Perſon did deſire to be excuſed, and I did excuſe him, and ſo he did not go, upon which this Gentleman Mr. Braddon came to me the ſecond time, which was after Dinner, and I directed him to go to a Secretary of State and acquaint him with what he had to ſay in the Buſineſs.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you promiſe, Sir, to ſend one to me to go with me, and deſired me to meet at ſuch a Place?

Sir H. Capell. I remember no more but what I have ſaid.

Mr. Braddon. Upon the Oath you have taken, Sir Henry Capell, I deſire you would recollect your Memory, whether you did not promiſe me in the Morning to meet at ſuch a Place, and was not I twice with you that Day?

Sir H. Capell. Sir, I know no more.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you think, Sir Henry Capell would forſwear himſelf, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I only deſire him to recollect his Memory.

Sir H. Capell. Only I do farther remember, He ſeemed to be very willing to go to the Secretary of State.

Mr. At. Gen. And if he had acquieſced there he had done very well, and there had been no farther Trouble.

Mr. Jones. But that was not the way he intended, that would not do his Work.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blaithwaite, do you give my Lord and the Jury an account, whether this Information was ever carried before any Juſtice of Peace in order to have it ſworn before him, and the Circumſtance of it.

Mr. Blaithwaite. My Lord, I do very well remember, when this Information was before the King, and was ſhew'd to Mr. Braddon, he there confeſs'd, That he had gone about to find ſome Juſtice of Peace to take it upon Oath. He named Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir John Lawrence. And I do very well remember, and 'tis upon my Minutes, That he confeſſed that Sir Robert Clayton, being asked by him to take the Information in private alone without Company, being by Sir Robert Clayton refuſed to take it unleſs he might take it more publickly, and Sir Robert Clayton refuſing to take it alone, in private, he would not let him take it all, but went away with it. I remember this for Sir Robert Clayton, and it may be Mr. Braddon may remember the ſame of Sir John Lawrence, but I can't tell that.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Now we are come to the 20th of July, when this Buſineſs was heard before His Majeſty, and the Boy declared it was a Lye, and then he had full notice it was a Lye. But after this Mr. Speke and he conſult together, and he muſt be ſent as an Emiſſary into the Country to pick up Informations and Evidences, and with this, and ſome other Informations in his Pocket, to poſſeſs the People, that the Government had murdered my Lord of Eſſex. And he muſt be ſent I know not how far, as if the further he went from London the better Intelligence he was like to have of a thing done at the Tower. The Juſtice of Peace that took him was ſummoned, but is ſince dead. But we will call the Perſons that were preſent when he was taken, where is Mr. Beech? (He was ſworn.) Mr. Beech, Will you acquaint the Court and the Jury with the manner of apprehending this Gentleman, and what Papers were found about him?

Mr. Beech. My Lord, I was preſent when Mr. Braddon was apprehended in Wiltſhire, and ſeveral Papers were found upon him, and upon Examination he was committed to the County Goal, and from thence removed by Habeas Corpus hither up to London. I have Copies of all the Papers that were taken about him, which I examined with the Originals. The one was the Copy of a Letter ſent by one Speke to Sir Robert Atkyns, and there were other Papers in the nature of Informations, another was a Letter to one Cumpten, Poſt-Maſter at Frome. Mr. Braddon upon his Examination ſaid, his Buſineſs was to enquire after the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex, and that one Mr. Burgis had ſent him a Letter to this purpoſe, That it was reported at Frome that very Day the Earl of Eſſex cut his own Throat, that he had ſo done, the News of which could not ſo ſoon come down thither.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſpeak out, Sir, Tell us what his Buſineſs he ſaid, was, and as to the Letters he had about him, tell us what he ſaid.

Mr. Beech. He told me, that he had a Letter from one Mr. Burgis of Marlebrough, to go to one Cumpten at Frome, who is Poſt-maſter there, to inquire about a Report, that it was ſaid was reported in Frome, the 13*th* Day of July, the ſame Day the Earl of Eſſex murdered himſelf, that he was murdered. Mr. Braddon had that Letter about him. I went afterwards to that Compton at Frome, he ſaid, he never heard any thing of it, or that there was any noiſe of the Earl of Eſſex's Murder, untill the Sunday following, which was two or three Days after. From thence I went to my Lord Weymouth, a Perſon of Quality that lives near Frome, and acquainted his Lordſhip with it, and he then ſaid that he had an account on the Sunday of my Lord of Eſſex's Murder, and he believed that was one of the firſt Letters of it that was in the Country.

to

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are theſe the Papers you found about him, Sir?

Mr. Beech. I examined theſe Copies with the Originals, and they were true Copies.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, put them in.

Mr. Beech. Truly, Mr. Braddon gave a very ill account of his Journey to thoſe that did examine him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray look upon thoſe Papers that are the Originals.

Mr. Beech. One Colonel Airs was the Juſtice of Peace, before whom Mr. Braddon was examined, and by whom he was Committed, he is ſince dead, but I do believe this was the Original Letter that was taken about Mr. Braddon.

L. C. J. Do you believe that was the Original?

Mr. Beech. I do, I have a true Copy of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Beſides, We will prove it otherwiſe to be Mr. Speke's Hand. It was proved by Mr. Blathwaite that Mr. Speke upon his Examination did own it, what ſay you Mr. Blathwaite?

Mr. Blathwaite. He did own it, and ſaid in theſe Words, as I remember, he believed it to be his Hand.

Mr. At. Gen. What, that Paper?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, and I have put my Hand upon it, That it was owned by him.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. This is ſubſcribed by Hugh Speke, and dated London Lincolns-Inn, Auguſt 15*th*, 1683. Wedneſday Night 10 a Clock, and directed, For the Ever-Honoured Sir Robert Atkyns, Knight of the Bath, at his Houſe at Netherſwell near Stow on the Old in Glouceſterſhire.

Honoured Sir,

THE Bearer hereof is one Mr. Braddon, a very honeſt Gentleman, whoſe Father has at leaſt Eight Hundred per Ann. in Cornwall; It ſeems it is his Fate to be the only Perſon that follows, and Proſecutes the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex, and he has made a very conſiderable Diſcovery already of it, notwithſtanding the hard Stream he rows againſt, as things ſtand and are carried on at preſent. But indeed I think it could never have fallen on ſo fit a Man, for he has been a very hard Student, and is a Perſon of a very good Reputation, Life and Converſation, and has a great deal of Prudence, and has as much Courage as any one living whatſoever. He went away on a ſudden hence Poſt towards Marlebrough to make ſome farther Diſcovery, and what he has diſcovered he will give you a full Account, and of all the Tranſactions hitherto about it. I lent him my Man to go with him for fear he ſhould come to any Miſchief, for moſt here fear he will either be ſtabbed or knock'd on the head, if he do not take great care of himſelf; ſeeing he came into theſe Parts, I thought it not amiſs to go and adviſe with you how he had beſt to proceed in it, and I did charge him not to let any body know who he was, that it might not be known that he had been with you; for I would not for the whole World that you ſhould come to any Prejudice in the leaſt for your Kindneſs towards us. For we labour under many Difficulties as the Tide runs at preſent.

Pray call Mr. Braddon by the Name of Johnſon when he is with you, I have given him the ſame Item. We hope we can bring on the Earl of Eſſex's Murder on the Stage, before they can any of thoſe in the Tower to a Tryal. He being in great haſte, I have not time to write more, but to aſſure that Mr. Braddon is a Perſon of that Integrity and Courage that no body needs fear to truſt him. I was very willing that he ſhould take your Advice in this Caſe which is of ſo great a moment, ſeeing he came within twenty or thirty Miles or thereabouts of your Houſe. He will give you a full and clear Relation of every thing in that Affair, and how hard they have been upon him. Sir Henry Capell told him, that it was a thing too great for him, &c. All which Mr. Braddon (that you are to call Johnſon whilſt he is with you at your Houſe) will give you a true Relation of. Mr. Braddon hath been at a great Trouble and Charge already about it; I know few that would have ventured to have undertaken this Affair beſides himſelf, as Times go. I received yours this Day, with the great pains you took, and the Letter to the Lady Ruſſel, which finding unſealed I ſealed, without looking into it, and carried it my ſelf; She returns you ten thouſand thanks, and ſays, ſhe knows not what Return to make you for your moſt extraordinary Kindneſs. I have not time to write any more at preſent by reaſon that Mr. Braddon alias Johnſon ſtays only for this my Letter. I am, Sir,

Your moſt obliged Friend and moſt humble Servant,

Hugh Speke.

I am writing a Letter to ſend to you by the Carrier.

Mr. At. Gen. This Gentleman brings in Mr. Speke to be the Author of all this Contrivance. But we ſhall prove to you, That at the ſame time this Letter was taken about him, this Gentleman had others that were likewiſe taken. Theſe Examinations which I deſire may be likewiſe read.

Mr. —— My Lord, I came lately from Sir Robert Atkyns, He is an utter Stranger to all this, he is now in the Country and knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. If they will uſe his Name, I can't help it.

Mr. —— My Lord, I would not have any Reflection upon him, for he knows nothing at all of this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Letter was never received by Sir Robert Atkyns, but taken before it came to him.

Mr. At. Gen. All the matter is, 'tis an unhappy thing to be thought well of by ſuch ſort of People.

L. C. J. I ſee nothing of Sir Robert Atkyns in the Caſe, but only his Name is uſed, and notice is taken of the great Obligations ſome People have to him, for his great Kindneſs to his Friends.

Cl. of Cr. Here is an Information.

L. C. J. Was this found about him too?

Mr. Beech. Yes, I believe that is the very Paper, I have no Copy of that Paper, but I well remember the Contents of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſign it or mark it?

L. C. J. He may believe it to be without ſigning.

Mr. Beech. I preſume Mr. Braddon will own it.

Cl. of Cr. The Information of Mrs. Edwards, Wife to Thomas Edwards, ſaith, That about 10 of the Clock in the Morning on Friday the 13*th of this Inſtant* July, this Informant's youngeſt Son William Edwards, aged about 13 Years, came trembling to this Informant, and in great Amazement and Horror told this Informant, that the Lord of Eſſex had cut his Throat in the Tower, and further ſaid, That he the ſaid William Edwards in the Morning about 9 of the Clock, did ſee a Hand caſt out a Razor out of the ſaid Lord of Eſſex's Lodging Window, which Razor he ſaw on the Ground to be bloody. And the ſaid William Edwards was going to take up the ſaid Razor, but before he came to it, there came a Maid running out of Captain Hawley's Houſe where the ſaid Earl of Eſſex lodged, and took up the Razor, which ſhe the ſaid Maid forthwith carried into the ſaid Captain Hawley's Houſe, and ſoon after he the ſaid William Edwards heard her, as he the ſaid William Edwards did believe, cry out Murder. And this Informant further ſaith, That the Subſtance of which the ſaid William Edwards hath ſworn in this Information, he the ſaid William Edwards on Friday laſt did declare to this Informant and her whole Family, ſeveral times atteſting it to be true, and ſeveral times ſince.

Cl. of Cr. Here is the Information of William Edwards ſecond Son of Thomas Edwards.

Mr. At. Gen. That is the ſame with what was read already.

L. C. J. Ay, That is the Boy's Information.

Cl. of Cr. Here is another, 'tis dated Auguſt the 8*th*, 1683. The Information of Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, did in the Preſence of theſe, whoſe Names are here under-written, declare as followeth, That the ſaid Jane Lodeman was in the Tower on Friday Morning, the 13*th of* July laſt, and ſtanding almoſt over-againſt the late Earl of Eſſex's Lodging Window, ſhe ſaw a Hand caſt out a Razor out of my Lord's Window, and immediately upon that ſhe heard Shrieks, and that there was a Soldier by my Lord's Door, which cryed out to thoſe within the Houſe, that ſomebody ſhould come and take up a Razor which was thrown out of the Window, whereupon there came a Maid with a white Hood out of the Houſe, but who took up the Razor ſhe can't tell.

This is ſubſcribed

John Boom, and
William Smith.

Cl. of Cr. Here is another Paper Auguſt the 8*th*, 83. Mr. William Glasbrooke does declare, That one Jane Lodeman, aged about 13 Years, inhabiting in the ſame Houſe where he the ſaid William Glasbrooke lodged, did on Friday the 13th of July laſt paſt between the Hours of 10 and 11 in the Morning, in the Preſence and Hearing of him the ſaid William Glasbrooke declare to her Aunt, That the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat, upon which her Aunt was very angry with her, whereupon ſhe the ſaid Girl did declare, that ſhe was ſure of it, for ſhe ſaw him throw the Razor out of the Window, and that the Razor was bloody, and that ſhe heard two Groans or Shrieks (which of the two Words ſhe uſed, he the ſaid William Glasbrooke is not certain) of this he the ſaid William Glasbrooke is ready to make Oath.

This is ſubſcribed

William Glasbrooke,
Margaret Smith.

Mr. At. Gen. He carried his Stuff about him, it ſeems, wherever he went.

L. C. J. 'Tis Stuff indeed. Good God, what an Age do we live in!

Mr. At. Gen. It is not taken upon Oath before any Magiſtrate, but cooked up to amuſe the Country, as if they were formal Informations. Here is another Letter, Mr. Beech, was this Letter found about him?

Mr. Beech. Yes, This Letter was found about him.

Mr. At. Gen. It is from one Burgis, a Man of the ſame Kidney.

Cl. of Cr. This is directed for Mr. Cumpen at the Dolphin at Frome, and 'tis ſubſcribed Jeremiah Burgis, and dated Marleb. Oct. 21.

Mr. Cumpen,

MY kind Love to you. Theſe are to deſire you to call to mind, that I was in Frome the 6*th of* July being Friday, where I heard the Report that the Earl of Eſſex had cut his own Throat, I would deſire you to inquire into it, to know who firſt reported it, and give this Gentleman the truth of it. And in ſo doing you will oblige me who am

Your Friend,

Jeremiah Burgis.

Mr. Beech. Under favour, my Lord, This Letter talks of a Report that was the 13th Day, the very Day the Earl of Eſſex murdered himſelf, I went directly to Frome and ſpake with this Cumpen, and he told me, he did not ſpeak with Burgis nor ſee him, nor was there any ſuch Report before the Sunday Morning. From thence I went to my Lord Weymouth's as I told you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We have gone through our Evidence for the preſent, to ſhew how this Man has endeavoured to ſpread this Matter to the Scandal of the Government. We ſhall end here at preſent to ſee how he has improved his Confidence, by what Defence he will make to all this Proof. Afterwards, if there be occaſion, We ſhall give an account of the Earl's Death, how he murdered himſelf. And for that we have a Cloud of Witneſſes, tho' this Gentleman has taken upon him ſo much Confidence as to conteſt it.

L. C. J. That would be very fit, Mr. Attorney, becauſe they have raiſed a Doubt in ſome People's Minds about it.

Mr. At. Gen. I thought it beſt to reſerve it till after I ſee what Defence he will make.

L. C. J. Take your time.

Mr. Wallop.

Mr. Wallop. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for Mr. Braddon and Mr. Speke, the Defendants here. You see what the Issue is before you, Mr. Speke and Mr. Braddon, they are in the Information charged, That they did Conspire together to make the People believe, That whereas the E. of Essex murdered himself, and so it was found by the Inquisition, yet they would have the People believe, that that Inquisition was taken unduly, and that they did Conspire to procure false Witnesses to make these Things out. Now, Gentlemen, the only Point that you are to inquire of, is this, Whether these two Gentlemen did maliciously, factiously, and seditiously set these Things on Foot. This Report that the Earl was murdered, or whether there were such Intimations offered to them accidentally and casually, without officiousness, or any of their own seeking, that might induce a good Man, or a wise Man to follow the Business upon such Information given. For our Parts that are for the Defendants, we say this for our Clients, we are not so much to make any Men guilty of this Murder, that is not our Business, but to prove our own innocency and fair dealing in this Matter. Now, Gentlemen, if these two Persons had no inducement to lead them on to this, but did it of their own heads, that is Criminal in them, but if they had that which might induce a wise and good Man, though they were much mistaken, yet they are not to be found Guilty of this Offence that is charged on them. I shall leave it Gentlemen, to you, who I question not have observed the Evidence that has been given, and whose proper Work it is to make your Judgment upon it. But in our Defence, the Steps we go are these, and we desire you would please to observe them. First, we say, That the Report of this Murder was the Day before, two or three Days before, and that very Day, so many Miles distant from London, that hearing of such a Report, we might very easily be induced to make some inquiry after it; and of this four Instances we shall give in the Course of our Evidence, that this was a great many Miles off London, talked of at the Day, and immediately after the Day, before the News could reach those Places, after the Fact committed. Then we shall proceed to those Passages concerning the Boy, and produce Evidence to set forth the true State of that Matter, That this Boy, as he says himself, did tell the Family this Story, that very Day that my Lord murdered himself, immediately upon his coming Home. Now this Original Story is impossible to be contrived by Mr. Braddon, be it true, or be it false. Then Mr. Braddon coming into Essex, to Mr. Evans's House at Wansteed, there what was said by the Boy was spoken of. Then Mr. Braddon finding this Information of the Boy, which he had given merely of himself, and which contradicted the Inquisition, and put him upon this Enquiry. Now how far this Intimation has weight, and may be an inducement to a good and a wise Man, as I say, that we must leave to you. But besides that, there is a Girl a Stranger to the Boy, that at the same time upon the Matter, and to this same Effect and Substance, delivered such an Evidence, as might very well serve to confirm us in our Enquiry, and this is the Course of our Evidence, in the Substance of it. And we shall apply our selves to your Lordship and the Jury after the Evidence given, and make our Observations upon it, and submit it to you, Gentlemen.

Mr. Williams. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word that is an Objection that we would make from the Record it self. The Information that does recite, That the Earl of Essex was imprisoned in the Tower, and during his Imprisonment there, cut his own Throat, and became Felo de se. And that there was an Inquisition taken before such an one, before Edw. Farnham Coroner of the Liberty of the Tower: My Lord, I was not here when the Inquisition was read, if I had I should have made the Objection then, but this is that I say, If we can falsifie that part of the Record, if there be a mistake there, that is, if Farnham was not Coroner, then they fail in their Proof, and we must be found not Guilty, for so it is in the Information.

L. C. J. It is said to be before him as Coroner of the Liberty.

Mr. Williams. Yes, my Lord, They recite that he is Coroner, and that the Inquisition was taken before him as Coroner, and Mr. Braddon knowing of it, did thus, and thus.

L. C. J. Why, Is he not Coroner?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I desire the Inquisition may be looked into, I cannot go to contradict the Inquisition, but my Instructions only are that he is Deputy Coroner, and if it be so they are mistaken in their Information.

Cl. of Cr. It is Coram Edvardo Farnham Coronatore.

Mr. Williams. Then we can't help it. But there are these Things, that we say to it, one Part of the Information is, That we should go about to perswade the People, that this Inquisition was not duly taken, another Part is, That we did procure false Witnesses to prove it; now what Proof is offered as to the matter of perswading the People, I must submit to you, whether it be such as comes up to the Charge in the Information. There is some kind of Proof, but what it is, you see. Then for the other Matter, which is the procuring of false Witnesses, that under Favour I think I may affirm, That there is no Proof at all of, that Mr. Braddon or Mr. Speke did procure false Witnesses. Gentlemen, we shall endeavour to acquit our selves of all, if we cannot of all, yet of Part, especially that Part which seems to be the most Criminal. And I must needs say, I have not heard any Proof of procuring false Witnesses, by either of the Defendants. Then there is a Third Thing charged, and indeed in the Evidence there is something that looks towards it, That he should go about by Papers, and otherwise to publish it, That he was a Person employed to prosecute the Murder of the Earl of Essex. Now as to this Matter, all I shall say for Mr. Braddon is this, If he have done something more, it may be by a transport of Zeal, than became him, that must be submitted how far it is Criminal. If he did what did not become a mighty wise and discreet Man; yet if he did what became a rational Man of ordinary Capacity to do, if he had this Information, and so many other Informations, and he did search innocently a little into it, if he did not do it Seditiously and Factiously with an ill Mind, we hope there is no such great Harm done. And indeed, Gentlemen, his Mind is to be

be try'd in this Matter. And 'tis an hard Matter to try a Man's Mind, quo animo a Man did ſuch an Action; that he did it, there is ſome Sort of Evidence, but if he did it not out of an ill Principle, and with an evil Intention, then, under Favour, we take it he is not Guilty of this Information. And we ſhall endeavour to make it out thus, This Gentleman hearing of this Report of the Boy, makes his Application firſt to Sir Henry Capell, who was a Perſon well known, to be nearly related to this unfortunate Lord, the Earl of Eſſex, and he tells him what Information he had received. Sir Henry Capell puts him into an excellent Courſe, and deſires him to go and inform the Secretary of State, and he did ſo, and if he had gone only this way, all that he had done had been innocent. Then the Matter is only this; He has gone a little out of the way, and has taken ſome Informations and Examinations in Writing: Why, though he has gone a Step or two awry, yet if it was with a Deſign to prepare the Matter the better for the Secretary, by laying theſe Papers before him, we hope there is no Crime; if we did it not Seditiouſly, but only with an Intention, That Mr. Secretary might receive a more clear and full Information; I hope the Jury will acquit us.

L. C. J. You ſay well. Come prove your Matter.

Mr. Thompſon. Call Mr. Fielder and Mrs. Mewx, and Mr. Lewes.

Lewes appeared.

Cryer. Lay your Hand on the Book.

Lewes. My Lord, I deſire my Charges may be paid, before I Swear.

L. C. J. Prithee, what have I to do with thy Charges? I won't make Bargains between you, If you have any Evidence to give, and will give it, do, if not, let it alone.

Lewes. My Lord, I ſhall not give any Evidence 'till I have my Charges.

L. C. J. Mr. Braddon, If you will have your Witneſſes ſwear, you muſt pay them their Charges.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I am ready to pay it, I never refuſed it, but what ſhall I give him?

L. C. J. Nay, I am not to make Bargains between you, agree as you can.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, We are willing to do what is reaſonable. You, Lewes, What do you demand?

Lewes. He can't give me leſs than Six Shillings a Day.

L. C. J. Why, where doſt thou live?

Lewes. At Marlebrough.

L. C. J. Why, can'ſt thou earn 6 s. a Day by thy own Labour at Marlebrough?

Lewes. My Lord, I am at 40 s. or 3 l. a Week Charge with my Family and Servants.

L. C. J. What Trade art thou?

Lewes. A Stapler.

L. C. J. And does your Trade ſtand ſtill while you are here in Town?

Lewes. Yes, to be ſure it can't go well on.

L. C. J. Well, I ſay that for you, you value your Labour high enough, I know not what your Evidence may be; but Mr. Braddon you muſt pay your Witneſs if you will have him.

Mr. Braddon. I will, my Lord, very readily, what will you have? I have paid you ſomething already.

Lewes. Give me Twenty Shillings more then. You can't give me leſs.

Then Mr. Braddon paid him Twenty Shillings, and he was Sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him, Mr. Thompſon?

Mr. Thompſon, We ask him, What Report he heard of the Earl of Eſſex's Death, and when?

L. C. J. What is your Name, Friend?

Lewes. Lewes.

L. C. J. Well, what is it you ſay?

Lewes. My Lord, as I was riding up Husband, within three or four Miles of Andover——

Mr. Wallop. How many Miles is that off of London?

Lewes. Fifty two.

Mr. Wallop. Well, go on.

Lewes. Between the Hours of Three and Five, but it is ſo long ago, that I cannot exactly tell the certain time, a Man asked me what News I heard in the Country, I told him, I heard none. Says he, I hear the Earl of Eſſex has cut his Throat: It was upon a Friday in the Summer, I forget the Day of the Month, I can't tell what Month it was certainly.

Mr. Thompſon. What Day of the Week was it?

Lewes. I remember it was upon a Friday.

Mr. Thompſon. Can't you tell what Month it was?

Lewes. I can't tell what Month it was, it was in the Summer I know.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I deſire to ask him a Queſtion.

L. C. J. Do if you will: Ask him what you will.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you go to Marlebrough on the Saturday?

Lewes. I did go to Marlebrough the next Day, which was Saturday.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire to know of him, whether he did meet with the News of it there then?

Lewes. My Lord, as to that, when I came Home, my Neighbours asked me if I had heard any News? I told them, ſays I, I hear the Earl of Eſſex hath cut his Throat. Why when did you hear it, ſay they? I heard it yeſterday, ſaid I. Said they, it was done but yeſterday, how could you hear it ſo ſoon? That is all I have to ſay, my Lord.

Mr. Williams. By the beſt Conjecture you can make, was it that very Day the Earl of Eſſex cut his Throat?

Lewes. I do not know that ever any ſuch Man cut his Throat, but this I heard, and I tell you the Time as well as I can.

Mr. Williams. Then pray let us have our Money again.

L. C. J. Thou art well paid, I will ſay that for thee.

Mr. Williams. Where is Mr. Fielder? Swear him. [Which was done.

Pray, Sir, what did you hear, and when, of the Earl of Eſſex's Death?

Mr. Fielder. The Wedneſday and the Thurſday of the ſame Week that the Earl of Eſſex cut his Throat, it was reported in our Town of Andover, that he had ſo done. The Women as they came came in and out of the Town talked of it one to another.

L. C. J. What was talked of that Wedneſday and Thurſday?

Mr. Fielder. That my Lord of Eſſex cut his Throat in the Tower.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What, before he had cut his Throat?

Mr. Fielder. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is very ſtrange indeed.

L. C. J. Lord, what a Story is here!

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if you pleaſe, I will tell you what Uſe we would make of it——

L. C. J. I know what Uſe you would make of it, the Uſe is juſt the ſame, as you make uſe of all Sorts of ridiculous and ſhamming Stories, to ſet us together by the Ears, and rake into all the Dunghills that can be, to pick up Matter to put us into Confuſion.

Mr. Williams. But my Lord, if there was ſuch a Report ſo long before——

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you were here in Town at that time, I am ſure.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I heard it at Eleven a Clock that Day, that is the ſooneſt I heard it.

L. C. J. What an Age do we live in? What Stuff is here picked up, on purpoſe to kindle the Fire, and ſet us all into a Flame!

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month was it, Fielder, upon your Oath?

Mr. Fielder. I did not mind the Day of the Month, I can't tell that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How do you know it was that Week?

Mr. Fielder. Becauſe on the Saturday night that Week, we had the certain News of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay ſomebody told you then of it on Saturday?

Mr. Fielder. Yes, on Saturday we had certain News of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who gave you the certain Intelligence?

Mr. Fielder. Some Clothiers.

Mr. Williams. Was Gadbury your Countryman?

L. C. J. Ay, Prithee ask him that, whether Gadbury told it him, or Erra Pater, if you will?

Mr. At. Gen. From what Market-people was it reported?

Mr. Fielder. Some Women.

Mr. At. Gen. It was only Women's Stories then?

Mr. Fielder. Yes, they talked of it among themſelves.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the Forenoon or the Afternoon?

Mr. Fielder. The Wedneſday and Thurſday both, it was the common Talk of the Town all Day long.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Name one that ſpake it to you.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, name one of any Credit, if you can.

Mr. Fielder. I cannot, it was the Women as they came in and out of my Shop, and as they went up and down the Town.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we leave it with your Lordſhip and the Jury. He ſwears he then heard ſuch a Report.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you believe this, Mr. Wallop, your ſelf? You are a Man of Ingenuity, I appeal to you.

Mr. Wallop. I believe that Mr. Braddon in his Proſecution of this Matter, went upon the ground of this Report, for he had heard the like Evidence was given in my Lord Stafford's Tryal, about the News of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey's being killed, before it was known here what was become of him, and that perhaps miſled him, if he be miſlead.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you believe, that this Man can ſpeak Truth, when he ſays it was reported all about their Town, for two Days before it was done, and yet can't name one Perſon that ſpake it?

Mr. Fielder. I keep a publick Shop, and don't take notice of every one that comes in and out, to remember particularly.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You heard it up and down the Town you ſay, ſurely you might remember ſomebody.

Mr. Wallop. He might hear it, and not take notice of one, but it was the common Fame at Andover.

Mr. Williams. Let it go as it will. Your Lordſhip and the Jury hear what he ſays——

L. C. J. But under Favour, Mr. Williams, it ought not to paſs ſo eaſily, 'tis a contrivance to deceive the King's Subjects, and ſhews a Deſign to pick up Evidence to amuſe the unwary, and fill their Heads with Fears and Jealouſies of I know not what.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I would excuſe my Client from Malice as well as ever I can, and therefore we produce theſe Witneſſes, to ſhew what grounds he had for what he did.

Mr. Williams. We will next call ſome Women that live near the Tower, that might give him ſome Occaſion for his concerning himſelf in this Buſineſs, Jane Lodeman, and Margaret Smith. This Voice and Rumour in the Country, made him to go into the Country, but it ſhews he was no Contriver of the Report.

Mr. At. Gen. I would feign know of Fielder, when he told Mr. Bradden of this.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I deſire the Family of the Edwards's may be called.

L. C. J. Name them, Who are they? How can we tell who your Witneſſes are?

Mr. Braddon. Cryer call them, Mrs. Edwards, and her Daughter. Will your Lordſhip give me leave to make my own Defence?

L. C. J. Ay, if you will, but then take notice your Counſel are diſcharged from making any Defence for you.

Mr. Braddon. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Theſe were the Inducements following, that put me upon engaging in this Matter. ——

Mr. At. Gen. Call your Witneſſes firſt, and then ſpeak.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Edwards, and Mrs. Edwards. [Who came into Court.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray, Mr. Braddon, anſwer me this one Queſtion. What was the Matter that incouraged you to proceed after you knew the Boy had denied it, and ſaid it was all a Lie?

Mr. Braddon. I was bound to anſwer to an Information after I had been examined at the Council; I had not otherwiſe ſtirred in it again.

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask Edwards?

Mr. Braddon. What Day was the firſt Day I

ſaw

ſaw you, and had Diſcourſe with you, and what was the Diſcourſe I had with you?

Mr. Edwards. It was the ſeventeenth of July.

Mr. Braddon. What did you tell me then that your Boy reported?

Mr. Edwards. I told you what I acquainted the Court withall before, that the Boy had brought Home ſuch a Report.

Mr. Braddon. Had the Boy ever denied it before I ſaw you?

Mr. Edwards. That Day you came to ſpeak with me about it, as I was informed by my Wife and my Daughter, the Boy did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. Was it before I came, or after I came that he denied it?

Mr. Edwards. It was after you came.

Mr. Braddon. What were the Inducements that made him to deny it?

L. C. J. He tells you himſelf, becauſe it was falſe.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire the elder Siſter Sarah Edwards may be called.

Mr. Wallop. It is apparent the Boy did affirm it——

L. C. J. I thought Mr. Braddon would have made his Defence himſelf, Mr. Wallop, but you will be breaking in upon him with your Remarks. Make your Remarks by and by, this is a Time for Evidence.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I only ſay this, 'Tis apparent the Boy did firſt affirm it, and we ſhall ſhew how he came to deny it.

L. C J. 'Tis not proper for you to make Remarks, when you are examining your Witneſſes; but when you ſum up, You may take what Notes you will, and reſerve them till that time, but do not break in upon the Evidence.

Cryer. Here is Sarah Edwards now. [Who was Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. This is not the Siſter, this is the Mother of the Boy.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask her?

Mr. Braddon. What Diſcourſe had you with your Boy about Ten of the Clock that Friday Morning I met you?

Mrs. Edwards. I had no Diſcourſe, but what my Child told me.

Mr. Braddon. What did your Child tell you?

Mrs. Edwards. I gave an Account to my Lord Keeper, he had it in Writing, I gave him an Account in Writing.

Mr. Braddon. But you are now called upon your Oath, and are to ſpeak the Truth, and muſt give an Account to his Lordſhip and the Jury upon your Oath, what it was the Boy told you.

Mrs. Edwards. What was it Sir he came and told me? Why the Boy told me, Mother, ſays he, I have been at the Tower, and ſeen the King's Majeſty, and his Royal Highneſs, and ſays he, the Earl of Eſſex has cut his Throat; and Lord Mother, ſays he, and wept. Lord Child, ſaid I, I am afraid, you are going to make ſome Excuſe to me, that I ſhould not beat you, being you have play'd Truant; no Mother ſays he, I did not. He continued in this for a little while, and then afterwards did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. What did he deny?

Mrs. Edwards. What he had ſaid to me.

Mr. Braddon. Did he deny that he had been at the Tower? Or that the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat?

Mrs. Edwards. No, he denied what he ſaid he ſaw.

Mr. Braddon. What was that?

Mrs. Edwards. He ſaid, he ſaw an Hand out of a Window, and a Razor fell down, and he went to take it up, and there came out a Woman, or a Maid, a ſhort fat Woman came out, and took it up, and went in again.

Mr. Wallop. And he ſaid this crying and weeping you ſay?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, he did ſo.

Mr. Braddon. Did he deny it before ſuch time as I had been there?

Mrs. Edwards. No, you was once at my Houſe before, and ſpake to my Husband, and then you came the ſame Day again.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, what was the Diſcourſe your eldeſt Daughter had with the Boy between the time of my firſt coming, and the time of my ſecond coming?

L. C. J. 'Tis impoſſible for her to anſwer any ſuch Queſtion, what Diſcourſe two other People had.

Mr. At. Gen. Bring the Daughter her ſelf, and let her tell.

L. C. J. Hark you, Mrs. Edwards, before you go. The Boy denied it, it ſeems, in two or three Days after he had given out ſuch a Report?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. How came he to deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. I will tell you how, When this Gentleman came and acquainted my Husband with his Buſineſs, it put us all into a great Damp; and my Husband ſaid, now both my Boys were gone to School, and ſays he, after the Gentleman was gone, to my Daughter Sarah, Don't you ſay any thing to your Brother when he comes in, but let him alone, and we will talk to him. So with that She was ſo grievouſly affrighted, and ſo amazed, that as ſoon as he came in, ſhe ſaid, prithee, Billy, deal truly, and don't you tell any Lie to ſave your Breech, for here has been a Gentleman to inquire ſomething about what you ſaid; why, Siſter, ſays he, will any thing of Harm come? Truly Child, ſays ſhe, I don't know, and upon that he did deny it.

L. C. J. Did you tell Mr. Braddon he had denied it?

Mrs. Edwards. He was told he had denied it.

L. C. J. Did you tell Mr. Braddon, before the Paper was ſigned, that he did deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, my Lord, he knew that before the Paper was ſigned.

Mr. Braddon. Mrs. Edwards, Did not the Boy come to you, and cry out, he ſhould be hang'd, and then did deny it?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, that he did.

Mr. Braddon. From whence did he come, that he was in ſuch in a Fright?

Mrs. Edwards. I can't tell that, Sir.

Mr. Braddon. Did not your eldeſt Daughter chide him and threaten him?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes, ſhe did bid him ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. And then he denied it?

Mrs. Edwards. Yes.

L. C. J. Ay, ſays ſhe to him, Billy, do not to ſave thy Breech, tell a Lie, but ſpeak the Truth, why then ſays he, the Truth of is, there was no ſuch Thing.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, ſhe ſays it was after his Siſter had chid and threatened him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are a little too fierce upon the Woman, Mr. Braddon, you do not obſerve what ſhe ſays.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Yes, he is wonderful zealous flouriſhing his Hands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. She ſays, the Daughter did tell the Son that he muſt ſpeak the Truth, and not tell a Lye to ſave his Breech, for there had been a Gentleman to inquire about it, why, ſays the Boy, will there come any harm of it, I don't know, ſays his Siſter, why then, ſays he, I tell you the Truth, there was no ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Ay, when ſhe engaged him to tell the Truth, and not tell a Lye to ſave his Breech, then the Truth comes out.

Mr. Braddon. Pray call Sarah Edwards the Daughter. My Lord, They told me in the Houſe that ſhe had frighted him into a Denial.

L. C. J. Pray, good Sir, how came you to be a Juſtice of Peace, and to turn Examiner? You live in the Temple, or belong to the Temple, how come you to take Examinations here in London, but that ſome People are ſo very zealous and officious in Matters that concern them not, on purpoſe to raiſe a Duſt?

Then Sarah Edwards the younger was ſworn.

Mr. Braddon. Did not your Brother deny what he had ſaid by your means?

L. C. J. Pray ask a fair Queſtion.

Mr. Braddon. Miſtreſs, Pray tell your Knowledge of what the Boy declared?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, Tell what you know, what your Brother ſaid concerning his ſeeing a Razor, and his denying of it afterwards. Tell all from the beginning to the end, and tell Truth in God's Name, and nothing but the Truth. We deſire the Truth may come out, let it be of which ſide it will.

Sarah Edwards. My brother came home and ſaid he had been at the Tower, and that he had ſeen His Majeſty and His Royal Highneſs, and the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat, and that he ſaw an Hand fling a Razor out of a Window, and that a Maid or a Woman came out and took it up, and went in again, and preſently after he heard the Noiſe of Murder cryed, ſo I knowing he was very apt to tell Lies I did not believe it.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, Miſtreſs, Did you prevail with him to deny it afterwards?

L. C. J. You are ſo wonderful full of Zeal and Heat in this Matter, you cannot let your own Witneſſes tell their own Story, but you muſt interrupt them. You have been bred to the Law, and you have been before here preſent, I ſuppoſe, at many Tryals, and what pretence can you have to be more indulged in an extraordinary way of proceeding than others, 'tis not for the Integrity of your Converſation I am ſure that you ought to have it, but only becauſe you have more Impudence.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I have nothing of Confidence, but what is grounded upon Innocence.

L. C. J. I tell you, you are too confident, and pray know where you are, and behave yourſelf as you ought.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I hope I do no otherwiſe.

L. C. J. We muſt give ſuch Liberty and Toleration becauſe of the Extravagance of his Confidence, as to let him break in upon all Rules and Methods. When you behave your ſelf as you ought to do, the Court will indulge you and give you all juſt Liberty, but don't expect for your Zeal ſake and the flinging of your Hands to do what you liſt. Go on Miſtreſs.

Sarah Edwards. So, Sir, this Mr. Braddon came on Tueſday following about one or two of the Clock, and asked for my Father, and coming, my Siſter Mary went to the Door, and called my Father out to him. When my Father came to him, he told my Father he came from Sir Henry Capell, and the Counteſs of Eſſex to know the Truth of my Brother's Report. So my Father told him the Boy had reported ſuch a thing, but he would not aſſert the Truth of it, for he had been informed by us that the Boy was apt to tell Lies to excuſe his playing Truant, ſo the Child was gone to School when Mr. Braddon came, and when he came home from School they went to the Child, ſaid I, Billy, will you be ſure to tell me the Truth of this Report, why Siſter, ſaid he, will any Harm come of it? Nay, ſaid I, I do not know, for there has been a Gentleman to enquire about it. So then the Child denied it.

L. C. J. Did he know this before he made the Boy ſign the Paper?

Sarah Edwards. Yes. This was on the Tueſday after Mr. Braddon had been firſt there. And I ſpake to him, ſaid I, Billy, ſay nothing but the Truth be ſure, and don't tell a Lye to ſave your Breech. So, Sir, as ſoon as ever the Child denied it Mr. Braddon came in again the ſame Day, and coming in found us, my Mother and all of us, daunted hearing the Boy deny it; but he asked the Child and bid him ſpeak the Truth, and told him it was a dreadful thing to be a Liar, and bid him read the 5th of the Acts, telling him he would find there two were ſtruck dead for telling of a Lye, and ſeveral other ſuch Expreſſions that I cannot remember. Upon Wedneſday about Noon he comes again, and then my Brother did own it again, and he writ down what the Boy owned, and went away, ſaying he would go to Sir Henry Capell and the Counteſs of Eſſex. And on Thurſday he comes again and brings a Paper written over again, not the ſame he writ at our Houſe, and then the Child ſet his Hand to it. The Child was ſomething unwilling, ſo ſays he to him, it will be no harm to you, if any Danger does come of it, it will come to me and not to you.

L. C. J. The Child was unwilling to ſign it you ſay, but by his Perſwaſion?

Sarah Edwards. Yes. Mr. Braddon told him it would be no harm to him, all the harm would come to himſelf.

Mr. Braddon. When the Child had owned to me what he firſt ſaid, and upon your ſaying that he denied it, I asked him the reaſon why he denied it, pray will you tell what Anſwer he made to that Queſtion. Pray tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Sarah Edwards. Upon my word, Sir, I can't recollect that.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, Miſtreſs, what Anſwer did he make?

Sarah Edwards. I have told you what I know, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you hear your Brother run to his Mother, and cry out I ſhall be hanged?

Sarah Edwards. Yes.

Mr. Braddon. What was the reaſon of his crying out ſo?

Sarah Edwards. Why the Child had that Fear and Dread upon his Spirits, knowing it was a Lye, I ſuppoſe, he had told.

Mr. Braddon. What was the reaſon of his Fear?

L. C. J. She tells you, it was the Falſhood of the Story.

Mr. Wallop. Miſtreſs, Did not you tell him, that his Father would be in danger of loſing his Place?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, Sir, we did.

Mr. Wallop. Did you tell him, the King will hang your Father if you do not deny it?

L. C. J. Why, you have a mind to have it believed that it was true then, Mr. Wallop.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, the Boy beſt knows that.

L C. J. But do you believe that if it had been true, that the King would hang his Father, or turn him out of his Place if he did not deny it, as tho' the King would force People to deny the Truth?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I do not ſay nor believe any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. But your Queſtion ſeems to carry it ſo.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I ask the Queſtion of her, whether ſhe did not ſay ſo to him, I ask Queſtions according to my Inſtructions.

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Wallop, be as angry as you will, you ſhan't hector the Court out of their Underſtandings. We ſee plainly enough whither that Queſtion tends. You that are Gentlemen of the Robe, ſhould carry your ſelves with greater Reſpect to the Government, and while you do ſo, the Court will carry themſelves as becomes them to you.

Mr. Wallop. I refer my ſelf to all that hear me, if I attempted any ſuch thing as to hector the Court.

L. C. J. Refer your ſelf to all that hear you, refer your ſelf to the Court, 'tis a Reflection upon the Government, I tell you your Queſtion is, and you ſhan't do any ſuch thing while I ſit here, by the Grace of God, if I can help it.

Mr. Wallop. I am ſorry for that, I never intended any ſuch thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray behave your ſelf as you ought, Mr. Wallop; you muſt not think to huff and ſwagger here.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Braddon, You hear what the reaſon was of his crying out ſo. She ſaid he was afraid, becauſe he knew he had told a Lye.

Mr. Wallop. Pray, Miſtreſs, who told him the Family would be ruined by it?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Wallop, I asked this Gentlewoman, whether ſhe did ſay it, and ſhe ſaid ſhe could not tell.

Sarah Edwards. Indeed I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mrs. Edwards. She did indeed ſay ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Wallop. Pray let it go, my Lord, as it is, what was it ſhe ſaid? Did ſhe ſpeak about turning her Father out of his Place?

Mrs. Edwards. I cannot ſay that, but ſhe ſaid, when the Boy asked whether there would be any harm by it, ſhe could not tell, but it may be her Father and Family might be ruined.

L. C. J. And is not this a Reflection upon the Government, to ſay the King would ruin any one if they did not tell a Lye?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, For a falſe Report he might be ruined, but it ſeems upon this Saying he did deny it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Was there a Word ſaid of his being turned out of his Place?

Mrs. Edwards. I cannot ſay there was.

L. C. J. No not a word, but only Mr. Wallop is ſo impetuous in the worſt of Cauſes.

Mr. Wallop. I am in the Judgment of the Court, whether I do any thing but what becomes an Advocate for his Client, according to my Inſtructions.

L. C. J. Yes, you are ſo, and ſhall know that you are under the Correction of the Court too.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I know where I am.

L. C. J. Ay, you know well enough, but you would do well to carry yourſelf as you ſhould do.

Mr. Wallop. With humble Submiſſion, my Lord, I appeal to all that hear me.

L. C. J. Appeal to whom you will, I know the Buſineſs of the Bar is to appeal to the Court.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What is the matter with Mr. Wallop, that makes him ſo earneſt in this Cauſe?

L. C. J. There is ſuch an Heat in this Cauſe, I wonder whence it ſhould come, I am ſure 'tis not from the Honeſty of it.

Mr. Braddon. Young Mrs. Edwards, If I ſuffer any thing by reaſon of the falſity of your Teſtimony, it will return upon you.

Sarah Edwards. Sir, I do tell you all I know.

Mr. Braddon. Then I deſire you to anſwer me this Queſtion, whether or no when the Boy did own what he firſt ſaid, and I asked him the reaſon of his Denial, whether the Falſity of the thing, or Fear cauſed him to deny it, did not he ſay it was Fear through your Diſcouragements and Threatnings?

Sarah Edwards. No, he did not ſay it, did he, Mother?

L. C. J. Why we are got into a way of appealing and appealing, here is appealing to the People, and appealing to the Witneſs, pray keep to the Buſineſs, and within the bounds of Decency. Before ſuch time as the Boy denied it, did you deſire him to ſpeak truth?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, I did.

Mr. Thompſon. And when Mr. Braddon examined him, did he deſire him to ſpeak Truth?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. But he knew before he examined him that he had denied it, did not he?

Sarah Edwards. Yes, the ſecond time before he came into the Houſe.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire the old Gentleman may be asked this Queſtion.

Mr. Thompſon. Call Mr. Edwards again.

L. C. J. The Spirit of the Client was got into the Counſel I think juſt now, and now 'tis got into the Client again. 'Tis an hard matter to lay it, I perceive.

Mr. Wal-

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I am here of Counſel for Mr. Braddon, and I only ask Queſtions as they are in my Breviate.

L. C. J. But, Sir, if you have any thing in your Breviate that reflects upon the Government, you ought not to vent it, nor ſhan't be permitted to vent it as long as I ſit here.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, with ſubmiſſion, I hope I never did, nor never ſhall let any ſuch thing come from me.

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry, or as pleaſed as you will, 'tis all one to me, you ſhall not have liberty to broach your ſeditious Tenets here.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Edwards, Pray will you anſwer this Queſtion? Did not your Son, when he was asked why he denied it, ſay that it was Fear and Diſcouragement, through his Siſter's Threats, was the Cauſe? Pray ſpeak the Truth.

Mr. Edwards. I cannot tell whether the Child did ſay ſo, ſomething of that nature he did ſay.

Mr. Thompſon. Call Anne Burt.

L. C. J. We have got ſuch ſtrange kind of Notions now-a-days, that forſooth Men think they may ſay any thing becauſe they are Counſel. I tell you, Mr. Wallop, your Queſtions did reflect upon the Government, as tho' the King had a mind to turn a Man out of his Employment, if he did not ſwear a Falſity. What can be a greater Reflection than that? But all the matter is, what has been done muſt be avouched and juſtified, though it be never ſo ill. But we plainly ſee through all. This was the Deſign from the beginning, the King and the Duke of York were in the Tower at that time, and it muſt be thought and believed that they had deſigned this Matter, and ſo then all People muſt be ruined in caſe they would not ſay the Earl murdered himſelf, tho' indeed others had done it.

Mr. Wallop. Mr. Edwards did not delight to have ſuch a Report, as might create Trouble, firſt come out of his Houſe.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, As to the making ſuch an Inference, or any Reflection as your Lordſhip mentions, I am as far from it as any body here.

L. C. J. We muſt give a wonderful deal of countenance to ſuch barbarous and horrid Practices, and I warrant you muſt ſuffer the Government to be reflected upon at the Will and Pleaſure of every Man. No, let us hear the Truth, but not in the face of a Court permit Men to aſperſe the Government as they pleaſe, by asking ſuch Queſtions.

Mr. At. Gen. And the Witneſſes ſay nothing to it neither.

L. C. J. No, nothing at all like it, but 'tis Aſperſion for Aſperſion ſake. And we muſt ſit ſtill and hear it.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I think 'tis for the Honour of the Government to have all things fairly inquired into.

L. C. J. And 'tis for the Honour of all Courts of Juſtice not to ſuffer Reflections upon the Government, let them be by whom they will. And in Gentlemen of the Bar 'tis worſe than others.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Truly, I do not ſee, where there is any countenance for asking ſuch a Queſtion.

L. C. J. No, but ſome People are ſo wonderful zealous ——

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, Zeal for the Truth is a good Zeal.

L. C. J. It is ſo, but Zeal for Faction and Sedition, I am ſure, is a bad Zeal. I ſee nothing in all this Cauſe but Villany and Baſeneſs. And I believe no Man that has heard it, but will readily acknowledge that it appears to be an untoward malicious ugly thing, as bad as ever I heard ſince I was born, on purpoſe to caſt an Indignity upon the King and Government, and ſet us all in a Flame.

Then Anne Burt appeared, and was ſworn.

Mr. Braddon. Mrs. Burt, I deſire to know what Diſcourſe you had with Mrs. Edwards, and that Family?

Mr. At. Gen. I beg your Pardon for that, Here Mrs. Edwards is her ſelf to tell what ſhe has ſaid.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire to know what Diſcourſe ſhe had with any of the Family?

Mrs. Burt. I went to make a Viſit to Mrs. Edwards, and I had not been there half an hour but in comes this Gentleman, now I had asked no Queſtions about the Buſineſs, but in he comes and deſired to ſpeak with Mr. Edwards, Mr. Edwards was called, and when he came in with Mr. Edwards, the Gentleman ſat down in the Room, and told Mr. Edwards he had heard a Report of ſomething his Son had ſpoken, but he deſired to have it from his Son's own Mouth, and the Boy was called in (this is a real Truth, Sir, for I do not know whether I may ſtir from this Place where I am alive or no;) And when the Boy came in, the Gentleman ſaid to him, if it be true that you have reported, own it; if not, do not own it; for, ſaid he, 'tis a dreadful thing to be found in a Lye, I would have you read the 5th Chapter of the Acts, where a Man and a Woman were ſtruck dead for telling a Lye. Sir, ſaid the Boy, 'tis true, and what I ſaid I will ſpeak it before any Juſtice of Peace in the World. And then he asked him what he had reported, and the Boy made a Repetition of what he had ſeen and ſaid before, that he went into the Tower and came to the firſt Row of Houſes that goes along. And at the firſt Houſe he ſaw no body look out at the Window, nor at the ſecond Houſe, but he looked up at the third Houſe, and he took his Hand and ſhewed thus, ſaid he, I ſaw, a Man's Hand he did not ſay, but an Hand throw a Razor out, of this faſhion, and he imitated it with his Hand. Said the Gentleman, was it not the wrong Window, or the wrong Houſe? I will not take the thing upon this Credit, take your other Brother down, that was a bigger Boy than this, and, ſays he, go down to the Houſe, and ſhew your Brother the Window where you ſaw this. The two Boys went down, and he ſhew'd his Brother the Place where he ſaw the Hand ——

L. C. J. Were you preſent at his ſhewing?

Mrs. Burt. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me leave ——

L. C. J. And pray give me leave too, I ask you, Were you preſent? For you tell it as if you knew it your ſelf.

Mrs. Burt. Both the Boys came up and ſaid ſo.

L. C. J. You ſhould have ſaid ſo then, that they told you it, for you are upon your Oath, and muſt affirm nothing but your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Burt. If I do miſplace my Words I cannot help that ———

L. C. J. You miſplace your Evidence, Woman, you muſt not ſwear that to be true that you don't know to be true.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I heard what I ſay with my own Ears.

L. C. J. But you talk of a thing you did not ſee with your own Eyes, as if you had ſeen it.

Mrs. Burt. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I can't tell how to place my Words ſo exactly.

L. C. J. I care not how thou placeſt thy Words, tell thy own Knowledge.

Mrs. Burt. I tell what is Truth, what I heard and ſaw; for, ſaid Mr. Braddon, I believe it was not the right Window, when the Boy came up and ſaid he had ſhewed the Window. And this Gentleman, I cannot hit his Name right (he is a Stranger to me) he and Mr. Edwards went down with the Boy, to ſee whether it were the right Window of the Houſe where my Lord died (which where it is I cannot tell any otherwiſe than has been reported, or whether there be one Room or two of a Floor I don't know;) and when he came up again he called for a Sheet of Paper, that he might write from the Boy's Mouth, and that he might not differ one Word from what the Boy had ſaid himſelf. And when I ſaw Mr. Braddon begin to write I went away, for I thought it may be the Gentleman might expect I ſhould ſet my Hand to it as a Witneſs, and I did not deſire any Trouble.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire this Queſtion may be asked her, my Lord, Do not you remember it was ſaid the Boy denied it?

Mrs. Burt. Yes, it was ſaid, the Boy did deny it.

Mr. Braddon. What did his Siſter ſay was the reaſon of his denying it?

Mr. Thompſon. Ay, what did you hear the Siſter ſay?

L. C. J. I told you before, that was no Evidence what another body did ſay.

Mr. Wallop. Miſtreſs, The Boy denied it, for what reaſon?

Mrs. Burt. Becauſe his Siſter, as his Mother told me, had been talking to him.

L. C. J. As his Mother told you, prithee, Woman, ſpeak your own Knowledge, and not what another body told thee.

Mrs. Burt. Pray, give me leave, my Lord ——

L. C. J. I tell thee, I will not give thee leave to ſay what thou ſhould'ſt not ſay.

Mrs. Burt. I heard his Siſter ſay———

L. C. J. It is not Evidence if thou did'ſt hear never ſo many People ſay it.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Shall we allow that in this Caſe for Evidence that we allow in no other Caſe, for what reaſon, pray? I do not ſee it deſerves any ſuch extraordinary Favour.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Wallop, We muſt not hear what another ſaid, that is no Party to this Cauſe. You know it is no Evidence, therefore do not preſs it.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I have done, if that will ſatisfy you.

L. C. J. Prithee ſatisfy thy ſelf, good Woman.

Mrs. Burt. My Lord, I have done. I come here to ſpeak the Truth, and ſo I do.

L. C. J. Nay, prithee be not ſo full of Tattle, ſo full of Clack.

Then a little Girl came into Court.

L. C. J. What Age is this Girl of? How old art thou, Child?

Girl. I was 13 laſt Saturday.

L. C. J. Do you know the Danger of telling a Lye?

Girl. Yes.

L. C. J. Why, what will become of you if you tell a Lye?

Girl. The Devil will have me.

L. C. J. Give her her Oath. What is thy Name, Child?

Girl. Jane Lodeman.

Then ſhe was ſworn.

L. C. J. Child, Do not be afraid of any thing in the World, but only of telling any thing but what is true, be ſure you do not tell a Lye, for if, as you ſay, you ſhall be in danger of Hell-fire by telling a Lye, much more will you be in danger if you ſwear to a Lye. Now what do you ask her?

Mr. Braddon. What did you ſee in the Tower that Morning the Earl of Eſſex died?

Lodeman. I ſaw a Hand out of a Window, but I cannot tell what Window it was, but it was a Hand throw out a Razor.

Mr. Braddon. And what did you hear after that?

Lodeman. I can't well remember, but it was either two Shrieks or two Groans that I heard preſently after.

L. C. J. What time of the Day was it, Child?

Lodeman. It was between nine and ten of the Clock.

L. C. J. Who was with you beſides your ſelf there?

Lodeman. There were more beſides me, but they went away.

L. C. J. Who were they Child?

Lodeman. A great many that I did not know.

L. C. J. And how came you to take notice of it?

Lodeman. And there was a Coach ſtood juſt at the Door.

L. C. J. Tell us ſome of them Child that were there beſides thy ſelf, ſpeak the Truth, be not afraid. Thou ſay'ſt a great many People were there, and all the People muſt neceſſarily ſee it.

Lodeman. They were People I did not know.

L. C. J. But they all ſaw it as well as you?

Lodeman. So I ſuppoſe they did.

L. C. J. And you heard a Shriek or two, you ſay?

Lodeman. Two Shrieks or two Groans, I can't well remember which.

L. C. J. How high was the Window?

Lodeman. Not above one pair of ſtairs high.

L. C. J. How high from the Ground might it be?

Lodeman.

Lodeman. Not above one Story.

Mr. Thompſon. Where-abouts in the Tower was it?

Lodeman. Sir, it was as you go upon the Mount.

Mr. Wallop. Whoſe Lodging do you think it was?

Lodeman. I did not know whoſe it was, but Folks ſaid it was the Earl of Eſſex's.

L. C. J. Who did you tell this to?

Lodeman. I told no body till I came to my Aunt, and I told her.

L. C. J. What is her Name?

Lodeman. Margaret Smith.

L. C. J. Did you ever tell this to that Man?

Lodeman. Yes, afterwards I did.

L. C. J. How came he to enquire of you about it?

Lodeman. He came and asked me, and I could not deny it.

L. C. J. Ay, but how came he to ask you?

Lodeman. There was a Gentlewoman that was at our Houſe, and ſhe heard of it, and ſpake of it at a Gentlewoman's at Dinner, and ſo he came to our Houſe to inquire about it.

L. C J. Who is that Gentlewoman? What is her Name?

Lodeman. Suſan Gibbons.

L. C. J. Let me ſee the Information of this Girl, that Mr. Braddon had taken.

Cl. of Cr. Yes, my Lord, there it is.

L. C. J. Do you know my Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings?

Lodeman. They ſaid it was his.

L. C. J. Did you know it of your own Knowledge?

Lodeman. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. Thompſon. Pray what became of the Razor that was thrown out of the Window, after it was thrown out?

Lodeman. I ſaw a Woman in a white Hood come out, but I did not ſee her take it up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Girl, you ſay, that when you were at this Place in the Tower, and ſaw this Matter, there were a great many People there beſides your ſelf.

Lodeman. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Razor fall among the People that ſtood there, or did it fall out in the Street, or how?

Lodeman. Sir, it fell within the Pales.

Mr. Sol Gen. And was the Paſſage eaſy into the Pales?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What they muſt climb over, muſt they?

Lodeman. No, you need not climb over, there is a Door to go in. And when People went in the Soldier opened the Door.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who went in with the Soldier? Did you ſee any body go in?

Lodeman. There was a Man went in, but I know not who he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Soldier ſtand at the Door when this Razor was thrown out?

Lodeman. I can't tell that, a Soldier uſed to be at the Door.

Mr. Sol Gen. The Woman came out of the Lodging, did ſhe not?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did ſhe go in again?

Lodeman. I did not ſee her go in again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did ſhe go into the Pale?

Lodeman. I did not ſee her go into the Pales.

Mr. Sol Gen. Did you ſee the Razor after it fell upon the Ground?

Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol Gen. Was it bloody?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Very bloody?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee no body take it up?

Lodeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come hither, Child, are you ſure it was a Razor, or a Knife?

Lodeman. I am ſure it was a Razor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it open or ſhut?

Lodeman. It was open.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Colour was the Handle

Lodeman. Sir, I can't tell, I ſee it but as it flew out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it all over bloody?

Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol Gen. All but a little Speck?

Lodeman. It was very bloody.

L. C. J. Bleſſed God, what an Age do we live in! Girl, you ſay, you did not know it to be my Lord of Eſſex's Window.

Lodeman. No, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Nor you did not ſee any body take up the Razor?

Lodeman. No.

L. C. J. But are you ſure you did not?

Lodeman. I am ſure I did not.

L. C. J. But Child, recollect thy ſelf, ſure thou did'ſt ſee ſome body take it up?

Lodeman. No, I did not.

L. C. J. I ask thee again, Did'ſt not thou know it to be my Lord of Eſſex's Window?

Lodeman. No, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Did you hear no body ſpeak to the Maid that came out?

Lodeman. No body at all.

L. C. J. No, Prithee is that thy Hand, Child? Shew her the Paper, the uppermoſt Part of it.

Lodeman. Sir, I can't write.

L. C. J. Who put thy Name to it?

Lodeman. Sir, I don't know, no more than the Pope of Rome.

L. C. J. Whoſe Hand-Writing is that?

Lodeman. I cannot tell, I never could write in my Life.

Mr. Braddon. Thoſe are the Names of ſuch as heard her ſay it.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, you have Cooked it up bravely.

L. C. J. You ſhall ſee what a brave Managery you have made of this poor Child. Read the Information.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. —— The Eight of Auguſt, 1683. Jane Lodeman, Aged about 13 Years, did in the Preſence of theſe whoſe Names are Under-written, declare as follows, That the ſaid Jane Lodeman was in the Tower on Friday Morning, the 13th of July laſt, and ſtanding almoſt over-againſt the late Earl of Eſſex's Lodging Window, ſhe ſaw a Hand caſt out a Razor out of my Lord's Window, and immediately upon that ſhe heard Shrieks, and that there was a Soldier by my Lord's Door, which cryed out to thoſe within the Houſe, that ſome body ſhould come and take up a Razor, which was thrown out of the Window, whereupon there came a Maid with a white

Hood

Hood of the Houſe, but who took up the Razor ſhe cannot tell. ——

L. C. J. Here 'tis ſaid the Soldier cried out, but now ſhe ſays, the Soldier ſhe does not know was there, and ſhe heard no body ſpeak to the Maid.

Mr. Braddon. With Submiſſion, my Lord, I deſire to ask her this Queſtion.

L. C. J. Prithee ask her what thou wilt. We hear what ſhe ſays.

Mr. Braddon. Did you hear the Soldier cry out, or did you not?

Lodeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Braddon. Did not you ſay, you heard him cry out?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we cannot admit Mr. Braddon ſhould ask ſuch Queſtions, they are leading Queſtions. Ask her a general Queſtion, and you ſhall have an Anſwer, but you ſhall not give her Words to Swear to.

L. C. J. No, upon my Word, you have given her too many Words to Swear to already.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I only writ what ſhe declared.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you carried by Mr. Braddon before any Magiſtrate, or any Juſtice of Peace?

Lodeman. No.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he take the Examination himſelf?

Lodeman. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not he deſire you to go before a Juſtice of Peace to be Sworn?

Lodeman. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol Gen. Did he write it himſelf?

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, he writ it, and took it, and this Woman that is coming here, is a Witneſs to it.

L. C. J. What is this Woman's Name?

Mr. Braddon. This is the Aunt Margaret Smith. [Who was Sworn.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to her?

Mr. Braddon. I deſire to know, what this Girl ſaid to you, when ſhe returned from the Tower the 13*th* of July?

Mrs. Smith. She ſaid to that effect that ſhe ſpeaks now.

Mr. Braddon. What was that? Tell the Court.

Mrs. Smith. I chid her, becauſe ſhe had been playing: That is all I can ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did ſhe tell you, the Soldier cried out for ſome body to come and take up the Razor?

Mrs. Smith. I cannot ſay that.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did ſhe ſay, ſhe ſaw a Razor thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window?

Mrs. Smith. She ſaid, ſhe ſaw a Razor thrown out of a Window; I can't tell whether ſhe ſaid out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window.

Mr. Freke. Did you ſet your Hand to that Paper?

L. C. J. Were you a Witneſs to that Paper?

Mrs. Smith. There were others heard what the Girl ſaid, as well as I.

L. C. J. Who deſired you to ſign it?

Mr. Freke. Who writ that Paper, Mrs.?

Mrs. Smith. Pray excuſe me, Sir, I do not know.

Mr. Freke. Did you ſee it writ?

Mrs. Smith. No.

L. C. J. No: It was one got ready drawn by Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray let the Boy's Information be read again; for I obſerve there is a difference; ſhe ſays, the Razor fell within the Pales, the Boy ſays, it fell without.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, the one ſays it was the inſide, the other, the outſide of the Pales.

Then the Information was read.

L. C. J. Go on now, and ask your Queſtions.

Mr. Braddon. Did the Girl ſay, That after the Razor was thrown out, the Soldier cried to ſome body to take it up?

Mrs. Smith. Sir, I can ſay no more than what I have ſaid.

Mr. Braddon. Did ſhe, or did ſhe not?

Mrs. Smith. Pray, Sir, excuſe me; I have ſpoken what I know.

Mr. At. Gen. You may ſee how he has managed this Matter, my Lord, by his urging the Witneſſes with Queſtions they know nothing of.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we ſee he would fain put Words into their mouths.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Did you ſend to Mr. Braddon, to inform him of what the Girl had ſaid? Or did he come to you?

Mrs. Smith. Sir, I never ſaw him before in my Days.

Mr. At. Gen. He came firſt to you then?

Mrs. Smith. Yes: He hearing of it, came as a Stranger to me.

Mr. Braddon. Did I, directly or indirectly, offer you, or your Neece, any Thing?

Mrs. Smith. No, never in this World.

Mr Braddon. Did I ever deſire her, or you, to ſay any thing but what was true?

Mrs. Smith. No, Sir: You ever encouraged the Girl to ſpeak Truth; and bid her ſpeak nothing but what was Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. You need not pay dear for a Lie; you are like to pay dear enough before you have done.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, as to Perſonal Knowledge, I am as much a Stranger to this Matter, as any body here; and in all my Concern in it, I have done nothing but what was very fair.

L. C. J. Mind your Defence, Mr. Braddon, and leave commending your ſelf; or if you will, rather commend your ſelf by your Actions, than your Expreſſions: One good Action is worth Twenty good Expreſſions.

Mr. Braddon. Swear William Glasbrooke. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, what do ask him?

Mr. Freke. My Lord, we deſire to know of him, whether he was by on the 13*th* of July, when the Girl gave this Report?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I was up two pair of Stairs when ſhe came in.

L. C. J. What is your Name, Sir?

Mr. Glasbrooke. William Glasbrooke.

Cl. of Cr. Ay, here is his Information, among thoſe that were taken about Braddon.

Mr. Glasbrooke. She came in to her Aunt, that went out juſt now before me, and I heard her very loud with her Aunt, ſaying, the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat in the Tower. Her Aunt chid her upon it; and her Aunt chiding her, ſhe ſaid, ſhe was ſure it was true; for ſhe ſaw a bloody Razor, with a bloody Hand thrown out of the Window.

Mr.

Mr. Freke. Was this the Day of my Lord of Eſſex's Death?

Mr. Glasbrooke. It was the Day the King was in the Tower, and, as was reported, the Day he was killed.

Mr. Braddon. Were you preſent when I firſt diſcourſed the Girl?

Mr. Glasbrooke. Yes.

Mr. Braddon. Had you ever ſeen me before, or no?

Mr. Glasbrooke. No.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay, my Lord of Eſſex cut his Throat at that Time?

Mr. Glasbrooke. Yes.

L. C. J. Are you a Witneſs to this Paper? Did you ſet your Hand to this Paper?

Mr. Glasbrooke. To the Paper Mr. Braddon writ, I did: I am a Witneſs to that.

L. C. J. Then read his Information.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, —— Mr. William Glasbrooke does declare, That one Jane Lodeman, aged about Thirteen Years, inhabiting in the ſame Houſe where he, the ſaid William Glasbrooke, lodged, did on Friday, the 13th of July laſt paſt, between Ten and Eleven in the Morning, in the preſence and hearing of him, the ſaid William Glasbrooke, declare to her Aunt, That the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat; upon which her Aunt was very angry with her; whereupon ſhe, the ſaid Girl, did declare, That ſhe was ſure of it; for ſhe ſaw him throw the Razor out of the Window; and that the Razor was bloody; and that ſhe heard two groans or ſhrieks (which of the two Words ſhe uſed, he, the ſaid William Glasbrooke, is not certain:) Of this, he, the ſaid William Glasbrooke, is ready to make Oath.

L. C. J. Now my Lord of Eſſex cut his own Throat, and after threw the Razor out of the Window.

Mr. Glasbrooke. 'Tis what the Girl did declare.

Mr. At. Gen. Does not this Girl uſually tell Lies?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I have before that time taken her in a Lie.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you acquaint Mr. Braddon with that?

Mr. Glasbrooke. I cannot tell that I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember that you told Mr. Braddon, That ſhe was a Girl that told Truth?

Mr. Glasbrooke. No, I never did that; for I was always of another Perſwaſion about her.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He never was of that Temper, to praiſe her; he was always of a contrary Perſwaſion.

L. C. J. I'll aſſure him, that I am of his Opinion too: I do believe ſhe is a lying Girl, and hath told us a company of Lies now.

Mr. Braddon. Theſe two Children told me, they never ſaw one another till they were examined at the Council.

L. C. J. Well, well: Go on with your Witneſſes.

Mr. Braddon. Where is William Smith. [Who appeared and was ſworn.

I deſire to know of you, Mr. Smith, what you heard the Girl ſay, when I was there?

Mr. Smith. I heard the Girl tell us, That ſhe ſaw a Hand caſt out a Razor, and either the Hand was bloody, or the Razor, I can't tell which; but ſhe ſaid it was out of the Window, where ſhe ſaid the Earl of Eſſex lodged.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ſay the Earl of Eſſex did it himſelf?

Mr. Smith. She ſaid, ſhe ſaw an Hand caſt out a Razor.

L. C. J. Did ſhe tell you, it was the Earl of Eſſex's Lodging-Window?

Mr. Smith. She ſaid it was that Lodging.

L. C. J. Ay, but ſhe ſays now, ſhe does not know it to be his Lodging.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, ſhe ſays ſhe was told it was his Lodging.

L. C. J. But you have made her to ſay poſitively, it was his Lodging, and that he threw out the Razor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, where did you firſt hear this Report of this Girl?

Mr. Smith. There, at the Houſe, where ſhe was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you alone when you went to the Girl the firſt time?

Mr. Smith. No, I went with Mr. Braddon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear any thing of it before? What did induce you to go along with Mr. Braddon? What were the Arguments that prevailed with you to go with him?

Mr. Smith. I did not know where he was going; Mr. Braddon called me at the Shop, as I ſtood at the Door, and asked me if I was buſie, or would go with him? So I went with him to the Tavern.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You never heard one Word before of the Girl's Report?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

L. C. J. What elſe did the Girl tell you?

Mr. Smith. I can't ſay what elſe ſhe ſaid. This I remember, that I have told you.

L. C. J. Did ſhe name the Earl of Eſſex's Lodgings?

Mr. Smith. I am ſure ſhe ſaid, the Lodging where the Earl of Eſſex lay.

L. C. J. Did ſhe name the Earl of Eſſex?

Mr. Smith. She did name the Earl of Eſſex's Lodgings.

L. C. J. Did ſhe in ſo many Words ſay, That it was the Earl of Eſſex's Lodgings?

Mr. At. Gen. Your Lordſhip ſees, they give one Evidence, and ſhe another.

Mr. Smith. I cannot ſay whether ſhe did in ſo many Words ſay ſo, or no; but ſhe ſaid, That ſhe ſaw a Hand toſs out a Razor, and either the Hand was bloody, or the Razor, and it was where my Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings was.

L. C. J. But did ſhe name my Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings?

Mr. Smith. Yes, ſhe did.

L. C. J. Well, what elſe did ſhe ſay? Tell us all ſhe ſaid.

Mr. Smith. She ſaid, There was a Man ſtood below, and ſhe heard two Shrieks, and the Man did ſay, Here is a Razor; and a Woman came out, or one in Woman's Cloths, with white Head-cloths. Mr. Braddon asked if ſhe ſee any Body take it up, and ſhe ſaid, no; but ſhe heard a Man ſay, here is the Razor, and ſhe ſaw a Woman come out.

L. C. J. You are ſure that is all you heard her ſay?

Mr. Smith. I think ſo.

L. C. J. Recollect your ſelf, pray good Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith. I do not know that I heard any thing elſe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray read his Information.

Cl. of Cr. Here is William Smith ſubſcribed.

Mr. Smith. Mr. Braddon writ down what the Girl ſaid, and we did read it over all, and then ſet our Hands to it.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, Read the Information then.

Cl. of Cr. Reads the Information as before——

L. C. J. You hear what you have affirmed in this Paper, that the Girl ſaid; you have forgot in your Evidence now this long Buſineſs about the Soldier.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I have told all I did remember.

L. C. J. Why, you have ſet your Hand to it.

Mr. Smith. I did read it over, and it was nothing but what the Girl ſaid, I am ſure.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Smith. In Throgmorton ſtreet.

L. C. J. What Trade?

Mr. Smith. A Barber.

L. C. J. A notable Shaver upon my Word! a ſpecial Fellow I'll warrant him!

Mr. Braddon. Call Mrs. Mewx [Who appeared and was Sworn.

Pray what Day was it you went from London to Barkſhire?

Mrs. Mewx. The Day before my Lord Ruſſel was tried.

Mr. Braddon. What Expreſſion did you hear from a Gentleman in the Coach?

L. C. J. We muſt not ſuffer ſuch a Queſtion to be asked, that is not Evidence.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I ask the Queſtion in general Terms, what ſhe heard ſuch a Day?

L. C. J. Does ſhe know any Thing of her own Knowledge?

Mr. Braddon. She can tell what ſhe heard, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis no Evidence.

Mr. Braddon. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to hear what ſhe ſays.

L. C. J. No, I will not hear what I ſhould not hear; let her ſpeak what ſhe knows.

Mr. Braddon. She knows this, that a Woman told her——

L. C. J. Ask your Counſel, whether that be Evidence. If you will not be ſatisfied with what I ſay, ask them.

Mr. Wallop. She proves a Report.

L. C. J. I ask it of you, Mr. Wallop; is what another ſaid to her, Evidence in this Caſe?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, if really there was ſuch a Report——

L. C. J. Is that Evidence?

Mr. Wallop. 'Tis Evidence there was ſuch a Talk, and that is Evidence of the probability of the Thing.

L. C. J. I'll leave it to your ſelf, if you as a Lawyer ſay 'tis Evidence, we will hear it, becauſe you ſay ſo; but I believe you, nor no body elſe will offer to ſay any ſuch thing.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we lay it before the Court, as part of the Ground upon which we went, in our being concerned in this Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Is that a Juſtification of Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Wallop. Upon theſe Probabilities he ingaged in this Matter, and to prove this Report, he brings this Gentlewoman to tell what ſhe heard.

L. C. J. Why, is what the Woman told her, Evidence? She reported a Report to me, can that be Evidence?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, with Submiſſion, we think it juſtifies Mr. Braddon, that he went upon theſe grounds.

L. C. J. Where is the Woman that told her? Why is not ſhe brought?

Mr. Wallop. They ſay, ſhe is ſo big with Child ſhe can't come.

L. C. J Why, if that Woman were here her ſelf, if ſhe did ſay it, and would not Swear it, we could not hear her; how then can her ſaying be Evidence before us? I wonder to hear any Man that wears a Gown, to make a doubt of it.

Mr. Braddon. I deſire Jeremy Burgis may be called. [Who appeared and was Sworn.

Mr. Wallop. What can you ſay about the Report in the Country?

Mr. Burgis. I was at Frome about my Buſineſs on a Friday——

L. C. J. Why, Gentlemen, what are we doing all this time? Do you think we ſit here for nothing? Is not this the firſt time that a Report was given as Evidence in Weſtminſter-Hall?

Mr. Freke. My Lord, We are neceſſitated to uſe this Sort of Evidence.

L. C. J. I tell you, Sir, It is no Evidence, be neceſſitated what you will.

Mr. Freke. My Lord, They have produced this Man's Letter that was taken about Mr. Braddon, that is produced in Evidence againſt him: Now this Man comes to give an Account how he came to write that Letter.

L. C. J. But he ſhall not give an Account by a Report in the Countrey.

Mr. Burgis. It was written to the Landlord of the Houſe where I quartered, that he might give notice to Mr. Braddon of a Diſcourſe that paſſed in his Houſe that Friday, of a Report that was there concerning the Earl of Eſſex's murdering himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Had the Maſter of the Houſe told you any ſuch thing?

Mr. Burgis. No, he had not told me ſo; but I heard it in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Of whom did you hear it? Who told you ſo?

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I was a Stranger there.

L. C. J. They can never tell any of them, who it was firſt reported it, nor particularly who told it them; but it was reported by ſome body, we don't know who.

Mr. Beech. Under Favour, my Lord, I rode directly to the Poſt-Maſter at Frome, whither this Letter was directed; and by the way, there is a Remark in the Letter of an alteration of the Figure, 'tis interlined the 13th; it was not ſo before, to hit the Day exactly of the murder of the Earl of Eſſex; and when I came thither, the Poſt-Maſter told me, There was no ſuch Report in his Houſe, nor in the whole Town at that Time.

L. C. J. I deſire to know, upon your Oath, who told you that Report?

Mr. Beech. Sir, I do not know; I was a Stranger there.

L. C. J. Was it a Man or a Woman?

Mr. Burgis. He did not tell his Diſcourſe to me.

L. C. J. But thou could'ſt gueſs by the Habit, whether it was a Man or Woman.

Mr.

Mr. Burgis. It was a Man.

L. C. J. Who did he tell it to?

Mr. Burgis. The Company in the Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, let him tell how Mr. Braddon came to ſpeak to him about it.

L. C. J. Shew him that Letter. Look upon it, Friend; Is that your Hand?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, it is.

L. C. J. When did you put that Figure of 13 in? There was another Figure before, and that is blotted out.

Mr. Burgis. It was a Miſtake in me, I miſtook the Day, and I corrected it.

L. C. J. When did you correct it? How ſoon did you correct it?

Mr. Burgis. Preſently.

L. C. J. What Day had you put in firſt?

Mr. Burgis. The 6th Day.

L. C. J. Ay, but that was not the right Day, Man.

Mr. Burgis. It was a great while after, and I did not expect to be brought in queſtion for any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. How long after?

Mr. Burgis. Six Weeks.

L. C. J. How cameſt thou to recollect, to make it from the 6th to the 13th, ſix Weeks after?

Mr. Burgis. Mr. Braddon was there when I had writ it.

L. C. J. And he corrected it, did he?

Mr. Burgis. He ſaid, that that was not the Day of my Lord's Death.

L. C. J. You had written it the 6th, and he put you in mind of the 13th?

Mr. Burgis. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. And he was to be the Meſſenger that carried the Letter himſelf?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is very well. I ſuppoſe, Gentlemen, you hear what he ſays, He ſays, Mr. Braddon was there, and told him that was not the Day.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Braddon ſaid, You have miſtaken the time, that will not do it, it muſt be the 13th.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray let me know one thing, Who recommended Braddon to you?

Mr. Burgis. Indeed I can't tell.

L. C. J. Who did he ſay he came to you from? Tell the Truth, upon your Oath.

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I was at work at my Buſineſs, and knew nothing of his Coming.

L. C. J. What Trade art thou?

Mr. Burgis. A Pinmaker.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Burgis. At Marlebrough.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Braddon and you acquainted?

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I will tell you; I was at work at my Trade, and there came down a Gentleman that lives in our Town to me, and asked me ——

L. C. J. What is that Gentleman's Name?

Mr. Burgis. Mr. Butcher.

L. C. J. What is that Butcher?

Mr. Burgis. A Gentleman that lives in Marlebrough, a Grazier by Trade. He came and told me, There was a Gentleman come from London, about the Buſineſs now in Diſpute——

L. C. J. Prithee, what was ſpoke of?

Mr. Burgis. It was concerning the Earl of Eſſex's Death. And he deſired me to ſpeak what I heard at ſuch a time.

L. C. J. Who had you told what you heard firſt to? You muſt have told it to ſome body; who did you tell it to firſt?

Mr. Burgis. Indeed I can't directly ſay who I did tell it to.

L. C. J. Had you told that Gentleman of your Town, Butcher, as you call him?

Mr. Burgis. No, not that I know of.

L. C. J. Well, when he came to you, what then?

Mr. Burgis. He deſired me to go to Mr. Braddon to the White Hart. And ſo I went up to the White Hart; and when I came to Mr. Braddon, I told him what I had heard at Frome.

L. C. J. And what then?

Mr. Burgis. Then Mr. Braddon asked me the ſame Night, Whether I would go down with him to Frome, and I could not; ſo then he deſired me to write a Letter to recommend him to the Houſe where I had heard it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you did write that Letter?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, I did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Your Lordſhip obſerves, this Houſe was the Poſt houſe, to be ſure to have it ſpread in Publick Places.

Mr. Sol Gen. Did you tell Butcher of your knowledge, before he carried you to Braddon?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When?

Mr. Burgis. Then, at that time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ask you of your Knowledge, or did you tell him voluntarily?

Mr. Burgis. He asked me if I remember'd any ſuch thing as I had ſpoken?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why had you ſpoke of it before?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he tell you upon whoſe Recommendation he came to you?

Mr. Burgis. I do not know upon whoſe Recommendation he came.

L. C. J. When you writ this Letter, did he dictate it to you, or did you write it of your ſelf?

Mr. Burgis. I writ it of my ſelf.

L. C. J. Did he tell you what you ſhould write?

Mr. Burgis. I ſhewed him what I had written.

L. C J. And when you writ it, of your ſelf you put in the 6th day?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. What did he ſay then?

Mr. Burgis. Mr. Braddon ſaid, it was the 13th day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did you ſhew Braddon your Letter after you had written it?

Mr. Burgis. He came to my Houſe before I had ſealed it.

L. C. J. But why did you ſhew him the Letter?

Mr. Burgis. He deſired a Letter to recommend him to that Man at whoſe Houſe I heard it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was he to be recommended to him for?

Mr. Burgis. It was to deſire him to enquire, who brought the News firſt to Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay, he deſired a Letter of Recommendation?

Mr. Burgis. Yes, it was to recommend him to that Man.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That you may not be in a Miſtake, pray recollect your ſelf; for there is not one Word of Recommendation in the Letter.

Tell the true Reaſon, why you ſhewed him the Letter?

Mr. Burgis. I can't tell any other, but only he came before I had ſealed it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he deſire to ſee it?

Mr. Burgis. No, but the Letter lay writ upon the Table.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the Maſter of the Poſt-houſe at Frome preſent, when that Report you talk of was made?

Mr. Burgis. I cannot rightly ſay, whether he was or no.

L. C. J. How comeſt thou to put it in thus? This bears Date a pretty while ago, Marlebrough, Aug. 21. and that was a good diſtance of Time from that Report that thou talkeſt of: How comeſt thou then to ſay, Theſe are to deſire you to call to mind, That I was at Frome ſuch a time, and heard ſuch a Report: If he was not there, why ſhould he call to mind? What did'ſt thou mean by that calling to mind?

Mr. Burgis. I would have had him called to mind my being at his Houſe at that time.

L. C. J. But if he was not there, why did'ſt thou ask him to call to mind that Report?

Mr. Burgis. He might hear of it from ſome other at that time, tho' he might not hear it in that Company where I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is a Riddle in it, if we could but ſolve it.

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Solicitor, the Riddle is unfolded; 'tis a plain Contrivance.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray from whom did he tell you he was recommended?

Mr. Recorder. How came you to talk ſo to a Stranger, Sir, whom you never ſee before, about ſuch a Buſineſs?

Mr. Burgis. He was recommended to me by Mr. Butcher, as I told you, who carried me to him.

Mr. At. Gen. But who, as Braddon, or Butcher told you, did recommend him firſt to come down thither to you?

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Sir, who did Butcher tell you he came from?

Mr. Burgis. I have forgotten, Sir; I do not remember.

Mr. Recorder. Was it not a Non-conformiſt Parſon, Sir, upon your Oath?

Mr. Burgis. Sir, I cannot remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Beech, Do you know any particular Perſon that Braddon ſaid he came recommended from?

Mr. Beech. I can tell what Account Braddon gave of his Journey himſelf: He ſaid, he had a Letter that came particularly from this Man to London, to bring him down into the Weſt: Said I, when came you out of London? I came on Thurſday, ſaid he: Where did you lodge a Thurſday Night? At Ockingham? Said I, That is not your way to Marlebrough: Where did you lie the next Night? He told me, at one Venables; and the next Night at Salisbury, I think.

L. C. J. Did Braddon tell you he had a Letter from that Man?

Mr. Beech. He ſaid a Letter from that Man brought him down into the Weſt.

L. C. J. Burgis, Did you ſend him e're a Letter?

Mr. Burgis. No, I did not.

Mr. Beech. He ſaid he came down purpoſely upon this Report.

Mr. At. Gen. What ſaid the Poſt-maſter to you, Mr. Beech?

Mr. Beech. If you pleaſe to give me leave to ſpeak, I'll tell you: I did deſire, that Mr. Braddon might have no Pen and Ink, and preſently I rid away to Frome, to this Poſt-maſter's Houſe, and ſpake with the Poſt-maſter, and all his Family: We then examined them all, and there was no ſuch Report in that Town till the Sunday after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He was perſwaded, ſure, all People would ſay juſt as he would have them.

Mr. Thompſon. Well, Mr. Braddon, Who do you call next?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, I deſire this Man may go on; for methinks he mends e'ery Step he goes.

Mr. Braddon. Mr. Burgis, Do you remember how it was that you came to recollect your ſelf, and to know it was the 13th, and not the 6th?

L. C. J. He ſays, you told him.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, Sir, remember your ſelf, whether you did not ſay yourſelf, you remember'd the true time; for you came from Frome to Marlebrough on the Saturday Night, and then you heard there the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat the Day before; and when they told you ſo, you cried out, How can that be? It muſt be done before; for yeſterday I heard it at Frome before 5 of the Clock.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did not Mr. Braddon himſelf tell you, you had miſtaken the Day?

Mr. Braddon. Sir, it was from this, he told this whole Story that I juſt now repeated, that the Saturday Night he was told, that the Earl had cut his Throat, and replied to them, that he had heard at Frome, the Day before, that he was murdered, and then I ſaid, that muſt be the 13th.

L. C. J. How came you to tell that Man, you had a Letter from Burgis?

Mr. Braddon. No, my Lord, I did not tell him any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Mr. Beech, Did not he tell you he had a Letter from Burgis?

Mr. Beech. He told me he came down upon the Information of this Burgis.

L. C. J. And he ſwears he never ſaw him before, nor never writ to him.

Mr. Braddon. You ask me, whether I had received any Letter from this Burgis. I told you, I had a Letter of Recommendation to Mr. Butcher, thinking he had been the Perſon that had reported it, and Mr. Butcher went to this Perſon and brought him to me, and he told me what he heard.

Mr. Beech. I never heard of the Name of Butcher till now he mentioned it.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I will call no more Witneſſes.

Mr. At. Gen. Your Lordſhip and the Jury obſerve, I ſuppoſe, his confident Behaviour.

L. C. J. Ay, He is no more concerned at it, than if he had been doing the moſt juſtifiable thing in the World.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I have but one Word to add on the behalf of Mr. Speke, who is likewiſe joyned in this Information. Truly, Mr. Speke, is a young Gentleman of ſome Quality, his Father is of very good Quality, Mr. Braddon was of his Acquaintance, and being his

Acquain-

Acquaintance, and thus concerned, as you have heard in the Profecution of this Buſineſs; he hearing of theſe Reports, and reſolving to go down into the Country about it, deſired Mr. Speke to lend him his Man and his Saddle, for he was going into the Country. Mr. Speke inquires what his Buſineſs was, thereupon he told him it was to enquire about ſome Perſons that had reported ſomething relating to the Earl of Eſſex's Death. And being to go into the Country where Mr. Speke, who was that Country-man, had ſome Acquaintance, upon this he deſires him to write him a Letter, to recommend him to ſome Perſons of Credit. He did write that Letter, but was never concerned in this Buſineſs, either before or after; and this is the whole of the Caſe, as to this Mr. Speke.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I deſire I may ſpeak one Word for my ſelf.

L. C. J. Ay, ſay what you will.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, One Day, ſometime after Mr. Braddon had concerned himſelf in this Thing, I met him caſually and accidentally, and he was telling me ſomewhat of the Matter. And after this one Night as I was going to Bed between 10 and 11 at Night, ſome Body knocked hard at my Door. My Man went to the Door, and opened the Door, and Mr. Braddon comes in, and tells me, he deſired the Favour of me, that I would lend him my Man, and lend him my Saddle. He being my Acquaintance, and I knowing him, I was willing to do him that Kindneſs; and asking him, whither he went? He told me he was going down to Marlborough, and he told me he had heard that my Lord of Eſſex's Death was diſcourſed of there in the Country, that Day it was done; beſides other Things of a Boy, and of a Girl, that could prove ſuch and ſuch Things. Said I, this is a Thing of great Concernment, and I would have you take good Advice in it, before you proceed, becauſe otherwiſe it may be a Reflection upon the Government; therefore, ſaid I, I would not have you proceed to concern your ſelf further in this Thing, but take the Advice and Judgment of ſome prudent and diſcreet Perſon or other, that you may do nothing but what is according to Law. I was never at all concerned, nor knew any thing of the Buſineſs, but what I heard from Mr. Braddon at firſt. And before he came into my Chamber, I knew nothing of his coming; and I writ this Letter, becauſe he ſhould not concern himſelf without the Advice of ſome Perſon, that I thought was able to adviſe him, that he might do nothing that might bring him within the Danger of the Law, or reflect upon the Government.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. And you adviſed him to go by the Name of Johnſon, not Braddon?

Mr. Speke. It was late at Night, and I had been at the Tavern drinking a Bottle of Wine or two with a Friend, and might not ſo well conſider what I did write.

L. C. J. But Mr. Speke, You hear what you writ, We row again Stream, and we thank you for the Countenance you have given to Us. And here is a worthy Gentleman, Mr. Braddon, who is a very proper Man for the Deſign he has in Hand, and none better than he, and when you are with him, you may diſcourſe freely; and he is a true Man, and a ſtout Man, and fit to be truſted; but he muſt not go by the Name of Braddon, but of Johnſon.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, the Reaſon was, becauſe he was not perſonally known to Sir Robert Atkyns; and for him to go down directly, and to have it reported, one of ſuch a Name came to Sir Robert Atkyns, who was a Man that had retired himſelf into the Countrey from all Publick Concern, I thought not ſo well.

L. C. J. Why did you trouble him, if he was ſo retired?

Mr. Speke. I had particular Concerns of my own, that Sir Robert Atkyns was pleaſed to concern himſelf for me, and I knew him a prudent Man, that would adviſe him nothing but according to Law.

L. C. J. You ſhould not have diſturbed him in his Privacies, Mr. Speke.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I never was any other way concerned, I knew nothing of the Matter.

L. C. J. You had done well if you had not concerned your ſelf about it at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Moſt here do fear, you ſay, That he will be either ſtabbed or knocked on the Head, and therefore you lent him your Man to guard him, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Speke. He deſired me to lend him my Man, becauſe he did not know the way ſo well himſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But why was there ſuch Fear about him?

Mr. Speke. I know nothing at all of the Matter, but what I had from Mr Braddon.

L. C. J. Ay, we live in ſuch a ſtabbing Age, that ſuch an extraordinary Gentleman as Mr. Braddon, that is ſuch an extraordinary good Proteſtant, can't walk the Streets for fear of being murdered.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I writ it at ſuch a time of the Night, after I had been at the Tavern, that I knew not well what I writ.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Speke, You ſee what a Sort of a Man he is, upon the Evidence that hath been given.

Mr. Speke. Truly, my Lord, I never knew any thing, but what I had from him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But to make the Country believe, that there were ſuch Endeavours here to ſtifle any Thing that might give light into the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex, there muſt be great Caution uſed to conceal his Name.

L. C. J. Yes, being ſuch a vertuous Man, as Mr. Braddon, there was great need of all Circumſpection and Care to preſerve him: Why did not he get his Life-guard to keep him from the Danger that was thought ſo near him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. They had not raiſed them as yet, but he was contented at preſent with Mr. Speke's Man.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I am wholly innocent in all this Matter.

L. C. J. Would to God you were Innocent. You are a Man of Quality, Mr. Speke, I know; I ſhould be glad you were Innocent with all my Heart. But when Men forget their Studies and their own Buſineſs, and take upon them the Politicks without being called to it, That puts them into Frenzies, and then they take all Opportunities of ſhewing themſelves Men of Zeal.

Mr. At. Gen. We need but read the Letter which Mr. Speke has owned, and you will ſay it is ten times worſe than what Mr. Braddon has done.

L. C. J. Nay, I will not have Mr. Braddon topped upon for all that, I aſſure you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, if you read it once again, you will find, that he therein owns it all, and pins the Basket upon himſelf.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Attorney, I will not have ſuch a Reflection put upon Mr. Braddon, That any Man ſhould be a greater Actor in the Buſineſs than he.

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I writ it at Night after a Bottle of Wine, and other People may be miſtaken, as well as I.

L. C. J. If ſome of theſe Gentlemen, that now and then think themſelves better headed than others, and that are ſo extraordinarily concerned to preſerve our Religion, but are generally much miſtaken, were, and I obſerve their Miſtakes, are always on the wrong Side. I wiſh you could have gone and recollected your ſelf next Morning, Mr. Speke, and then the Miſtake had been more pardonable.

Mr. Speke. I writ nothing as to matter of Fact, but what he told me, and I could hardly recollect it next Morning, when he was gone away.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, We ſhall prove he has bragged, that is, Mr Braddon, That he was the only inventor of the Proteſtant Flails, an Inſtrument you have heard of, Gentlemen, and for what Uſe deſigned.

L. C. J. But, Brother Jenner; that is nothing to the Purpoſe now, what he was before this Buſineſs, or what he was after. You are, Gentlemen, to Try him upon this Indictment only, and are not to mind any other Thing at all.

Then Mr. Speke's Letter was read again.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſee, Gentlemen, in what Strain it runs, We and We, He makes himſelf a conſiderable Party in the Deſign.

L. C. J. Ay, We thank you for your Kindneſs towards Us, and We hope to bring on the Tryal of the Earl of Eſſex, before they can any of thoſe in the Tower.

Mr. Speke. He told me, Sir Henry Capell ſaid it was a Thing too great for him to meddle with. And I knew nothing, but what I had from him.

L. C. J. He was a Man of Integrity, and could tell you nothing but what was true, Mr. Speke.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, All I can ſay for Mr. Speke, is this, He did believe Mr. Braddon's Grounds, as he told him, were probable to go upon, but he knew nothing himſelf, and concerned himſelf no further. I hope the Jury will conſider of it, that there is no Contrivance proved againſt him.

L. C. J. Nay, Mr. Wallop, though we interrupted you in making Remarks upon every Witneſs, yet now make what Remarks upon what hath been ſaid that you will.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, I ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury, how far they think the Defendant Guilty of this Information.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We have indeed given as great an Evidence as ever was given I think of any Offence. But to clear up the Matter that it was impoſſible for any Man, unleſs the moſt maliciouſly and villanouſly inclined againſt the Government and Peace of the Kingdom, that can be, to imagine ſuch a Thing, much leſs ſpread ſuch a Report, we will call you two or three Witneſſes to prove, that the Earl of Eſſex murdered himſelf.

L. C. J. 'Tis neceſſary, Mr. Attorney, I think, for you ſo to do, to ſatisfy the World, though to a diſcerning Eye there is enough given from the Evidence this Day, to make it appear to be a moſt malicious and ſcandalous Contrivance, to hawk about for every idle Rumour, to pick up Children of ſuch tender Years, and make them Swear any thing to ſerve a Turn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We do not call theſe Witneſſes, as if there were any Doubt of it in the World.

L. C. J. But we live in an Age, when Truth paſſes for nothing in the World, and Swearing and Forſwearing is taken for a Thing of courſe. Had his Zeal been half ſo much for Truth as it was for Falſhood, it had been a commendable Zeal. But when Men are ſo zealous and fierce for ſuch vile Things as theſe are, 'tis time of my Word for the Government to interpoſe.

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not to ſatisfy the Court nor the Jury, who I believe are all of them already ſufficiently ſatisfied, but 'tis to ſatisfy the World, that may have entertained ſome Prejudices from this Conſpiracy. Call Mr. Bomeney in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not as if there were any doubt, whether Mr. Braddon were the malicious Inventor of this Report at the beginning, and went down into the Countrey to ſpread it. The Evidence has been full, and by his own Management of his Defence, he has proved it himſelf, and ſeems by his Confidence to juſtify it. But we ſhall, to give the World ſome Satisfaction, call ſome that waited upon the Earl in the Tower, and others that ſaw him when dead, that will give a Confutation to any thing that could be ſuppoſed, as if my Lord of Eſſex had not murdered himſelf.

Then Bomeney was Sworn.

L. C. J. Did you wait upon this unfortunate Gentleman, my Lord of Eſſex?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, what do you know of his Death?

Mr. Bomeney. I went with him from White Hall, and I ſtayed with him all the while he was in the Tower.

L. C. J. How came he by that unhappy End, pray?

Mr. Bomeney. When we were at his Lodging, my Lord uſed to call for a Pen-knife to cut his Nails of his Hands and Feet, and he then had long Nails, and ſaid he to me, give me your Pen-knife to cut my Nails; ſaid I, my Lord, I have none, I came in haſte, but I will ſend to Morrow for one; and therefore I ſent our Footman, one William Turner; to whom I gave a little Note for Proviſions, and among other Things which I writ Directions to the Steward to ſend, there was a little Line; Pray ſend a Pen-knife for my Lord. He brought ſome Proviſions, but he did not bring a Pen-knife on the Thurſday, becauſe he ſaid he had none, but he would ſend one the morrow after; I ſent William Turner, the Morning after very early, and gave him another little Note for Proviſions; and,

and, among other Things, I writ in the Note, Do not forget the Pen knife for my Lord. He went, and when he was in the way, my Lord ſent the Warder to me, to call me. I came to my Lord, and my Lord asked, Is the Footman come? Has he brought the Pen-knife? No, my Lord, ſaid I, but I hope he will not ſtay long, becauſe I ſent him early. Then I was turning to come down from the Chamber, and I ſaw my Lord walking in the Room, and picking of his Nails with the Pen-knife. ——

L. C. J. How? With a Pen-knife?

Mr. Bomeney. No, with the Razor that I gave him. For I went to my Lord, and when my Lord asked me, if I had gotten him a Pen-knife. I ſaid, the Footman was not come, but I hoped it would come immediately, becauſe I ſent him early. And I was turning from the Chamber, thinking I had done with my Lord, and my Lord called me again, Hark, you, Bomeney, ſaid he, I can do it with one of your Razors. My Lord, ſaid I, I will fetch one, ſo I went into my Cloſet and fetched one. And I went to my Lord, and when he had it, he did as if he picked his Nails with it, and was walking in the Chamber. I looked a little while upon him, and turned out of the Chamber into the Paſſage, where I talked with the Warder, Ruſſel his Name was, and when I looked out of the Window, His Majeſty was in the Tower, and there was a great Buſtle in the Street; and when I had talked a little while with the Warder, I went down into my Cloſet again, and at the ſame time that I was in my Cloſet, there came the Footman, and one with him, that brought the Proviſions, and he gave me the Pen-knife, and gave me a little Note, that he had brought with the Proviſions, which, he ſaid, Mr. Billingsly, that was our Steward, bid me to ſhew that to my Lord. I took it, and went up to ſhew it to my Lord; I found no body in my Lord's Chamber. There was a Cloſet there, in which was a Cloſe-Stool, and that I found ſhut, and thinking my Lord was there, I would not diſturb my Lord, but came down again, and ſtayed a little while, in ſo much as I thought my Lord by that time might have been come out. I went up again, and found no body in the Chamber, but the Cloſet Door ſhut ſtill, I went againſt the Door, and knocked three times, and ſaid, my Lord, my Lord, and no body anſwered: Then I looked through the chink of the Door, between the Door and the Wall, and I could ſee Blood, and a little part of the Razor. Then I called to the Warder, and the People of the Houſe, and they came up and found him there.

Mr. At. Gen. Had you much ado to open the Door, or could you open the Door eaſily?

Mr. Bomeney. No, the Door could not be opened eaſily, I know not how they opened the Door, but I think Ruſſel the Warder, when he came up, puſhed at the Door, but could not open it very far, becauſe my Lord's Foot was againſt the Door, and ſo they had much adoe to open the Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Which way does the Door open, out of the Room, or into the Room?

Mr. Bomeney. Inward, into the Room.

L. C. J. And ſo his Feet being againſt it, it could not eaſily be opened.

Mr. At. Gen. How big is the Cloſet?

Mr. Bomeney. A very little Cloſet, I believe no wider than that; and the length of a Man, and a Cloſe-Stool at the upper end would fill it up. My Lord lay all along on his Side.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve your Lord melancholy, Mr. Bomeney?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, he was melancholy. But we took no notice of it, for he was uſed to be ſo, and we had no reaſon to ſuſpect any thing more than ordinary.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you find the Razor?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, it lay by him.

Mr. At. Gen. What became of the Razor?

Mr. Bomeney. The Coroner's Jury had it.

L. C. J. Was there any Window in that Room, where the Cloſe-Stool was?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, there was a Window.

L. C. J. Was there a Caſement to that Window?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes, I think there might.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Which way does that Window look?

Mr. Bomeney. I can't very well remember, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Which way do you think?

Mr. Bomeney. I believe it is upon a Yard.

L. C. J. He ſays, he does not well know. But, Mr. Bomeney, you ſaw Mr. Ruſſel the Warder in the ſame Place, as you came up again, that you left him in when you went down?

Mr. Bomeney. My Lord, I went down but a little while.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you find Ruſſel the Warder, when you came up again?

Mr. Bomeney. At the Guard.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you find him in the ſame Poſture, when you went up again, that you left him when you went down?

Mr. Bomeney. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you hear of any body that went up elſe?

Mr. Bomeney. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Mr. Ruſſel the Warder he ſpeaks of. [Who was Sworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord an Account at that Time where you were, and what was done.

Mr. Ruſſel. I was in the Chamber next oppoſite againſt my Lord's Chamber, there is but a little ſtep betwixt the Doors, the Stairs come up betwixt the two Doors, no body could paſs backwards or forwards, but I muſt ſee them; for I was then Waiter at that time, and ſtood upon the Guard; and my Lord asked Mr. Bomeney, Whether the Pen-knife was come; and he told my Lord, No. Then, ſays he, lend me your Razor, that will do it. And my Lord took the Razor in his Hand, and the Door was open, and he went two or three Turns in the Room, with the Razor ſo. This I ſaw, the Door being open, as I ſtood in the Paſſage. My Lord, by and by Mr. Bomeney goes down, and my Lord ſhut the Door to him, and Mr. Bomeney ſtaid below a little while, and afterwards comes up again. And my Lord was gone to the Cloſet to Stool, as he ſuppoſed. So away he comes down again, and ſtaid about a quarter of an Hour, or there-abouts. And this I ſee all my ſelf, my Lord.

L. C. J. Had any Perſon been there, from the time Bomeney went down, to the time he came up again?

Mr. Ruſſel. No, my Lord, there was no body went went up or down all the time, but Bomeney. He came up, and seeing my Lord was not come out of his Closet (this I did stand and hear) so he puts by the Hanging, and looks in, and sees my Lord in his Blood, lying in the Closet; and he makes an Oration, a great Noise, with that I stepped two or three Steps, hearing him make such an Oration, and I found the Key was on the out-side of the Door, and I opened the Door, and saw him lie in his Blood.

L. C. J. Could you open the Door with ease?

Mr. Russel. Yes, I could put it a little way open, and there saw him.

L. C. J. But you could not put it quite open?

Mr. Russel. No, for his Legs lay against the Door.

L. C. J. Was it a narrow Closet?

Mr. Russel. Yes, a very narrow Closet.

L. C. J. In what Posture did my Lord lie?

Mr. Russel. He lay all along on one Side.

L. C. J. Where lay the Razor?

Mr. Russel. By him. But I did not take so much notice of the Razor, for I was surprized with the sight.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Was there any Window in the Closet?

Mr. Russel. Yes, that looks into Captain Hawley's Yard. And the Window is quite Northward.

L. C. J. Which way does that Window look?

Mr. Russel. Quite the other way, into the Back-yard.

L. C. J. Then there is no Way out, nor Light, nor Casement out into the Fore-yard?

Mr. Russel. No, my Lord, 'tis backward, and 'tis Paled in, only into the House there is a Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there any Door out of the Street, that way?

Mr. Russel. No, there is one Door that goes out from the Entry to go into the Yard.

L. C. J. Has any body else access to come to the Yard, but what must come through Hawley's House?

Mr. Russel. No, no body.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will call Captain Hawley himself.

L. C. J. Warder, Do you remember there was any Coach that stood there?

Mr. Russel. No, there was no such thing.

L. C. J. I ask you for this reason, because here was a Girl that spake of a Coach, that came through the House I suppose, and so through the Entry out of that Door into the Yard.

Mr. At. Gen. Where is Lloyd the Soldier? For, my Lord, as there was a Warder above, so there was a Soldier that stood at the Door below. And while he staid there, there could not any one come in, nor near, but he must observe them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask Mr. Bomeney, how long he lived with my Lord.

L. C. J. How long had you lived with my Lord of Essex?

Mr. Bomeney. Six Years.

Mr. Just. Withins. You waited on him in his Chamber, I suppose?

Mr. Bomeney Yes, in the Nature of his Valet de Chambre.

Then Lloyd was Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Hark you, Lloyd, you were the Sentinel. Give an Account where you stood that Day that my Lord of Essex murdered himself?

Lloyd. At my Lord's Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Which Door?

Lloyd. At my Lord of Essex's Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you above Stairs, or below at the Street Door?

Lloyd. Below at the Street Door.

Mr. Just. Withins. Did any body come into the House that Morning?

Lloyd. No body came in, all the while I stood there, that I knew of.

Mr. Just. Withins. Were you there at that time, when my Lord killed himself?

Lloyd. I was there when the noise was made of it above Stairs.

L. C. J. Did you see e're a Coach there?

Lloyd. Not to stand at the Door at all.

L. C. J. Did'st thou see e're a Coach in Captain Hawley's Back-yard?

Lloyd. No, no.

L. C. J. Why, could not the Coach go through the Door and the Entry into the Yard?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you seen my Lord of Essex that Morning?

Lloyd. Yes, he spake to me, and asked me What a Clock it was?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was he?

Lloyd. At the Casement.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you?

Lloyd. He said, Centry, What a Clock is it?

Mr. At. Gen. Did you see him, when my Lord Russel went by?

Lloyd. Yes, I saw him then.

Mr. At. Gen. How long after was the Cry of my Lord's having killed himself?

Lloyd. I believe, not half an Hour after.

Mr. At. Gen. Did any Maid go out of the House?

Lloyd. None at all.

L. C. J. What, not in a white Hood?

Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Why did'st not thou call to the Maid to come and take up the Razor, that was thrown out of the Window of Captain Hawley's House?

Lloyd. There was no Razor at all thrown out, that I saw?

L. C. J. Did not you open the Pales for her to go in, and take up the Razor?

Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Was there any other Soldier there besides you?

Lloyd. No.

L. C. J. Then you must be he that cried out, or no body?

Lloyd. I saw no Razor, nor did not cry out to any body.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could you open the Pales? Is there a Door to the Street-side, out of the Pales into the Yard?

Lloyd. 'Tis no Yard, but there is a Door that all pass through that come to the House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What else did my Lord of Essex say to you?

Lloyd. He only examined me, what a Clock it was? That was all.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We have here two Women, who were the only Women that were in the House, they will tell you what they saw.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, do not miſpend your Time unneceſſarily, becauſe I am to ſit this Afternoon at London.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We will then only call Capt. Hawley. [Who was Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Captain, tell what you know of this Matter?

Capt. Hawley. My Lord, All the Account I can give, is, That about 4 or 5 a Clock in the Morning, I went to open the Gates, that being the uſual Hour to open the Gates. And I was at the Gate then, when a Warder came, and told me, my Lord of Eſſex had killed himſelf, and that was between 9 and 10 of the Clock. When I came into the Houſe, I went up Stairs, and ſaw no body in the Room, nor no Blood; ſaid I, to the Warder, What do you make a Fool of me? Here is nothing: Says one of the Warders, look into the Cloſet, I went to the Cloſet, and could not open the Door above this wideneſs, and I looked in, and ſaw the Razor all in Blood, and my Lord lay on his Arm in this faſhion. I could not tell, whether he was dead or no, but I thought it was not my Buſineſs to ſtir him. Then my Lord Conſtable was ordered to come and Secure, and Examine all the Servants.

L. C. J. Pray, Captain Hawley, where does the Caſement look into?

Capt. Hawley. The Houſe, ever ſince I came to it, is juſt as it was; and the Houſe having ſettled, the Caſement won't open above thus far: and 'tis ſo low, and the Pales are 9 or 10 Foot high, that 'tis impoſſible for any one to throw any thing out of the Window 3 Foot hardly. It is one of the horrideſt Reports that ever was heard of, and the unlikelyeſt Thing, they cannot throw any thing out of the Window to be ſeen.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not neceſſary to call any more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Have they any thing to ſay further, on the other Side?

Mr. Speke. I deſire, my Lord, to call my Man.

L. C. J. Call your Man, for what Purpoſe?

Mr. Speke. My Lord, If your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will call my Man to prove, that I knew nothing of Mr. Braddon's coming to me.

Then Mr. Speke's Man was Sworn.

L. C. J. Ask him what you will?

Mr. Speke. Did you ever ſee Mr. Braddon with me?

Servant. Never but once, before that time he came to my Maſter's Chamber, which was the Night before he went out of Town; and when he came, after he had been there a little while, my Maſter ordered me to get me ready to go into the Country with him. And after I had been with him a little time, he got another to go with him, and ſent me Home again.

Mr. Speke. I was going to Bed, was I not?

Servant. Yes, you was.

L. C. J. Have you done of both Sides?

Mr. Speke. Was it not a Surprize to me, when he came to me?

L. C. J. How does he know that?

Mr. Speke. I tell you, why, my Lord, I ask it; Becauſe when I go out of Town, I always tell him to prepare himſelf.

Servant. It was a Surprize to me; I knew nothing of it.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? Have you a mind to ſay any thing to the Jury, you that are of Counſel for the Defendants; or you, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. No, I will ſay nothing.

L. C. J. Have you, Mr. Speke?

Mr. Speke. My Lord, I have proved it here, That I had no Hand in what I am accuſed of. It is put down in the Information, that I Conſpired, with Mr. Braddon, to endeavour to procure falſe Witneſſes. I have proved, I never had any Hand at all in any Thing of it. It was an accidental Thing, his coming to me; and it was a great Surprize to me, when he came; and I never concerned my ſelf in it more, than the Writing of that Letter: And I had no ill intent in it; I did it not deſignedly; for I knew nothing of his coming; and I had not writ the Letter if he had not come to me. And 'tis plain, it was a Surprize, for I always give my Man notice, when I go out of Town, beforehand to prepare himſelf. I thought nothing at all of ill in the Letter: I writ it late at Night, when I had been with ſome Company at the Tavern. And he made me believe that to be True, which was not; I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will conſider that. I have nothing to ſay of the Thing, I did not concern my ſelf in it any further at all, than writing the Letter, which I did not well know what I writ.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay, Mr. Speke?

Mr. Speke. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more, Mr. Braddon?

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I have only this to ſay for my ſelf. It has not been proved directly, or indirectly, That I uſed any evil Arguments, to perſwade theſe Witneſſes to teſtify what was falſe; but I dealt with them with all the Candor, that any Perſon in the World could uſe; and uſed all the Caution that I could, to hinder them from ſpeaking any thing that is falſe. There has been nothing proved of evil Practice uſed by me; and I deſire the Gentlemen of the Jury to take no other notice of any Thing that has been, or ſhall be ſpoken, but what has been proved.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, of the Jury. The Evidence has been very long, that has been given both for and againſt the Perſons, againſt whom this Information is exhibited. 'Tis an Information exhibited by the King's Attorney General, in His Majeſty's Name, againſt Lawrence Braddon, and Hugh Speke. And the Information does ſet forth, That the late Earl of Eſſex murdered himſelf in the Tower, and that thereupon there was an Inquiſition taken before the Coroner, that did find that he had ſo murdered himſelf, he being before that Time committed for High Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, and levying War to diſturb the Government. And theſe Perſons did render that Inquiſition, as though it had been fraudulently and irregularly obtained; and alſo to breed ill Blood, and ſpread falſe Rumours among the King's Subjects, by endeavouring to perſwade them to believe, That the Earl of Eſſex was murdered by ſome other Hand, and had not murdered himſelf, and had procured falſe Witneſſes to teſtify ſome ſuch Matter, Matter, in order to the ſpreading about that falſe Rumour. This is the Subſtance of the Information. To this Information they have both pleaded, Not Guilty; and the Evidence, as I was telling you, has been ſomewhat long; but according to the beſt of my Memory, and for the aſſiſtance of yours, I will mind you of as many Things, as occur to me, that have been ſaid againſt them, and what has been ſaid on their Behalf, I mean ſo much of it, as is Evidence. For I muſt tell you, all Hear-ſays, and common Diſcourſes of other Perſons are not Evidence, and I will give you that Reaſon, that is ſufficient to ſatisfy any Man, that is unbiaſs'd, That if in caſe the Perſon, that ſo told the Story had been here, if he had not told it upon Oath, you could not have believed that Perſon: Therefore, ſurely there is leſs Credit to be given to him, that tells a Tale out of another bodies Mouth. And I tell you this, becauſe there have been great Allowances given, and ought to be when People are accuſed of ſuch great and weighty Crimes; for theſe are monſtrous Crimes that theſe Gentlemen are accuſed of; but 'tis you, that are to try, whether they are Guilty or not: Certainly there is ſcarce in Nature a greater Crime that can be committed, than this that is now before you; for I think Robbery, or any other ſuch Felonies, are not ſuch monſtrous Crimes in their true real Weight, though in conſideration of Law, in reſpect of Puniſhment they are greater; yet in Point of Crime, they are ſurely leſs, for to ſpread falſe Reports, in order to raiſe Sedition, Ill-will, Heart-burnings, and Jealouſies in the King's Subjects againſt the Government, and to ſuborn Witneſſes to that evil Purpoſe, is ſurely a much greater Crime than robbing on the High-way. Now, Gentlemen, 'tis not unknown to moſt of you, what Endeavours have been of late made, to poſſeſs the Minds of the King's Subjects, of great Injuries deſigned to be done them by the King, or His Authority: And in order to foment Differences and Miſapprehenſions between the King and his People, and among the People between one and another, all Arts have been uſed, to proſcribe People that they are minded to expoſe. Thoſe, they bear ill will to, muſt be called Papiſts, or Papiſts in Maſquerade; but They and their Confederates are the Sober Party, the true Proteſtants, as if there were none Sober or True Proteſtants but ſuch as are Factious and Troubleſome in the Government. But by theſe Things they bring an Odium upon the Name of a Proteſtant, their Aim is, by diſtinguiſhing to divide us; whereas if they were Proteſtants in Truth, the Church of England Proteſtants, they would have another Behaviour, they would learn to obey, and ſubmit to Authority, and not go buzzing from Houſe to Houſe, and ſpreading falſe Reports, but ſtudy to be quiet, and do their own Buſineſs. And though Mr. Braddon made uſe of the 5th Chap. of the Acts, to the Child, he would have done well to have taken notice of ſome other Parts of Scripture, that are as much Scripture as that, That enjoin Obedience and Submiſſion to the Magiſtrate; and, being quiet and minding his own Buſineſs, it's odds, he had never come to that Trouble, he is now likely to meet with. But the Crime he is accuſed of, carries all the Venom and Baſeneſs, the greateſt Inveteracy againſt the Government that ever any Caſe did, that I have met with. For its inſinuated, That becauſe the King and the Duke were walking in the Tower, that Day, and near that Time, when this unfortunate Thing happened, now it muſt be whiſpered, as though the King and the Duke had deſigned this Murder. How Baſe? How Deviliſh and Helliſh a Deſign is this? But yet, this muſt be ſpread about, and endeavoured to be diſtilled into the Minds of the King's Subjects. But beſides, Gentlemen, you are to conſider, as was opened by the King's Counſel, to what this Thing tended; for in as much as there was an horrid bloody Conſpiracy, to take away the Life of the King, and of his dear Brother, His Royal Highneſs the Duke of York. And foraſmuch as ſeveral Perſons have been duly executed for that Conſpiracy, who were concerned along with this unfortunate Lord; (I cannot help the naming of it, though I am ſorry for his Misfortune, for the Sake of that Honourable Family) but rather than he would abide his Tryal, God knows what other reaſon he had, but the probability of the Thing ſpeaks it, he being conſcious, the great Guilt he had contracted, in being concerned in ſuch a Conſpiracy, made him deſtroy himſelf. And 'tis eaſy to imagine, how far that might prevail upon him, it being done immediately after my Lord Ruſſel, who was one of the Conſpirators with him, was carried to his Tryal. It cannot be thought, but it was to prevent the Methods of Juſtice in his own particular Caſe. And, Gentlemen, there was Digitus Dei in it, and it is enough to ſatisfy all the World of the Conſpiracy; though we live in an Age, wherein Men are apt to believe only on one Side, they can believe the greateſt Lie, if it makes for the Advantage of their Party, but not the greateſt Truth, if it thwarts their Intereſt.

But becauſe Mr. Attorney has produced his Proofs, to manifeſt, that this Lord murdered himſelf, I will take notice a little of it, becauſe it may have ſome good effect to undeceive ſome that have been impoſed upon. Not for my own Satisfaction, I thank God I am ſatisfied, and ſo I believe are moſt honeſt Men: But that ſilly People may not be impoſed upon by every buſie Fellow for the future, that takes the liberty to run about and ſpread falſe News, and that Men may be aware of ſuch Fellows, and may not be decoyed any more by ſuch falſe Pretences; it was therefore fit that Evidence ſhould be given of the Truth of the Fact, that that Gentleman did murder himſelf. And the Evidence is this.

Beſides the Inquiſition, which was taken upon the Oaths of ſeveral Perſons of Quality (as you hear upon the reading their Names, ſeveral of them were Eſquires, and Men of Note) 'tis here alſo proved by the Teſtimony of his Servant that attended him, how he came to this untimely End. And, Gentlemen, I would obſerve, 'tis Sworn by his Servant, one that had lived ſix Years with him, not an upſtart, or a wandering Fellow, but one whoſe Integrity and Fidelity to my Lord, was confirmed by ſix Years Experience of his Service. Then here is the Warder that was at the Door, here's the Soldier, here's the Maſter of the Houſe, who are all the Perſons that probably can give any Account of the Matter, and they tell you poſitively tively that no one did go up and down, but this Frenchman, who was his Valet de Chambre. And the Warder tells you, that he coming to the Door, and knocking at the Door, and hearing no one anſwer, did endeavour to open the Door, but it was ſo faſt by my Lord's Feet, that he could open it but a little, and looking in, diſcerned Blood, and that made him make Acclamations, as the Warder calls it, Orations, which brought all the People in the Houſe thither, and they gave the ſame Account that he does.

And 'tis likewiſe fit to be taken notice of, that the Window of this Cloſet looks into a private Yard, where no Strangers uſually come, and where no Coach could come; and that the Pales were ſo high, that in caſe a Man were deſirous to throw any thing out, it were impoſſible to caſt it above three Foot. And if there could no Coach at all come into the Yard, as it is plain there could not (for there is no Door, ſave only a back Houſe-door) then this muſt needs be a Lie, that was ſpread A, broad. And 'tis beyond all peradventure true that my Lord of Eſſex did murder himſelf.

Now to have ſo great a Truth as this to be perverted, and to reproach the Government with Falſities, is the moſt malicious Thing in the World. If in caſe the Law has made it Penal for any Man to ſcandalize any one private Perſon as it has; and if it be by Law, much more Penal to ſcandalize a Noble Man: How much more ought it to be, when the King and the whole Government is thus ſcandalized?

Now to come to the Fact, as near as I can recollect, I will give you an Account of what Evidence has been given of the one Side and of the other. But this I thought fit to premiſe, becauſe there will ſome Circumſtances fall out fit to be taken notice of in the Evidence, eſpecially about the Window in Captain Hawley's Yard and Houſe, which may be cleared this way.

In the firſt Part of the Evidence for the King, they call a Witneſs to prove the Earl of Eſſex's Commitment, which is Part of the Inducement in the Information.

But for the Information it ſelf, there is this Evidence. Firſt, Evans he comes and tells you, how that he had heard at the Cuſtom-Houſe, from Edwards, the Father of this Boy, as though there had been a Report came to him from Home, at Ten a Clock that Morning my Lord Eſſex cut his Throat, of a Razor thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Window; That he came to him in the Afternoon again, and in the Afternoon told him, He had examined the Matter further, and his Boy confirmed the Truth of it. He ſays, That after this, Mr. Braddon and another Man, one Mr. Hatſell, if I am not miſtaken in his Name, came to the Place where he was in Eſſex, and there they had ſome Diſcourſe about my Lord of Eſſex's Death, and there Hatſell took out of his Pocket a printed Copy of the Inquiſition; and Mr. Braddon was then in the Room, but he ſays, he thinks Mr. Braddon at that time took no manner of notice of it, but walked about the Room, but he ſays, the Inquiſition was read while he was in the Room, and Evans ſaid ſomething about the Report he had heard, which did ſeem to contradict that Inquiſition. But ſome time after, he ſays, That he being at the Coffee houſe, Braddon and Edwards came to him into the Coffee-Houſe, and there they began to talk; Edwards ſaid, that Braddon had been with his Child to examine him, to bear Teſtimony about flinging the Razor out at Window. He was very full of the Word [Matter] and toſſed that to and fro, but at length the Subſtance of his Matter was, that Report of the Boy's, and he adviſed them to forbear talking any farther to him about the Matter, for it might do Edwards and Braddon both an Injury; and he had read the Inquiſition which was quite contrary. That was all he could ſay.

Then comes Edwards, and the Subſtance of what he ſays, is this, That he firſt heard it from his Family, and afterwards the Boy confirmed the Truth of it; but then afterwards he heard he had denied it, which was after Braddon had been there to inquire about it. And then he ſays, Braddon came to him again, and then he had got a Note dictated by himſelf and not by the Boy, but at firſt he tendered it to the Boy, and the Boy refuſed to put his Hand to it, and Mr. Braddon came again another time (though he was told the Boy had denied it as he heard) and then the Boy did ſet his Hand. This is the Subſtance of what Edwards ſays. He does ſay indeed, the Boy uſed to tell Lies very often, to make excuſes when he played Truant, and that his Family told him, the Boy was often guilty of telling of Lies.

Then the next Evidence is the Evidence of the Boy himſelf. He it ſeems is thirteen Years of Age: Certainly any Man that had been of an upright Mind and Conſcience, as Mr. Braddon pretends to be, and would have you, Gentlemen, think them ſo; would have it thought that he was full of Honeſty and Integrity to the Boy, when he baited his Hook with a Text of Scripture, about the Danger of telling a Lie, and, Have a care, Child, of telling a Lie; if he had done no more, but given him this Advice, it had been worthy of Commendation: But when the Boy had refuſed to ſign it, for him to go and make ſuch a ſtir, without examining further into the Particulars, but only taking a ſlight Report from ſuch a Child, and to make ſuch a Diſturbance in the Nation, and ſuch a Noiſe, not only here, but Abroad, as this has done, ſure argues neither Uprightneſs nor Conſcience. Had the Boy ſtood in it and perſevered in it, it had become him, in regard of the tenderneſs of the Boy's Age, to have been more inquiſitive into Circumſtances, before he gave ſuch Credit to what he ſaid, as to make all this adoe.

But what ſays the Boy when he comes here, he is now upon his Oath, and he tells you, He did tell his Mother ſo at firſt, and he did tell Mr. Braddon ſo at firſt; but afterwards when his Siſter ſpake to him, and bid him be ſure to tell nothing but what was Truth, then he ſaid truly, it was not Truth. He tells you, Mr. Braddon offered him the Paper to ſign, but he would not ſign it; and being asked the Queſtion, Why he would not ſign it? He ſays, becauſe it was not true; and being asked, Whether Braddon had notice of this? The Mother and Siſters, all tell you, He had notice the Boy had denied it.

How came Mr. Braddon, what Authority had he to take this Examination? He is no Juſtice of Peace, no Magiſtrate that had any Authority to take Examinations. What Concern had he in it more than other People? The Boy could tell him there were abundance of People there beſides himſelf, tho' it was a Lye he told then, and that the Girl told now. Why did not he ſtay to have it confirmed by ſome of thoſe People? Why did not he carry theſe Children before ſome Magiſtrate or Juſtice of Peace, ſome body that had Authority to take Examinations? There was a Spirit that prevailed with Mr. Braddon to engage and make a Stir in this Buſineſs; and you may eaſily gueſs what a kind of Spirit it was which gave him this Authority that he had not before.

Gentlemen, Another thing is this, 'Tis plain, and the Boy now ſwears it directly, That whereas he put it into his Information, How that he told him he was going to ſee my Lord Brandon Gerard's Lodgings, but now he is upon his Oath, he ſwears directly, he never told him any ſuch thing, and yet he hath put it into the Paper he made him ſign.

He tells you a ſecond time, Mr. Braddon came to him, which was after the Boy had refuſed and declared himſelf unwilling, and that then he was perſwaded by Mr. Braddon, who told him there was no harm in it; if there be any harm, it would be to him, and not to the Boy, and ſo by virtue of that, he inſinuated himſelf, and got the Child to ſign that Paper, which is every tittle of it falſe, as the Boy now ſwears directly. And he tells you, how he was impoſed upon by Mr. Braddon, pretending there was no Harm to him, all the Harm would come to himſelf, and by reaſon of theſe Inſinuations he was prevailed upon to put his Name to that which was notoriouſly falſe.

The next Witneſs (to make it appear that it was notoriouſly falſe, not only by the Boy himſelf, but by other Circumſtances) is Hawkins the Miniſter's Son, Dr. Hawkins's Son of the Tower. And he tells you, I play'd Truant as well as he that Day, and I ſaw the King and the Duke at the Tower, and when I had ſeen them I went about as they did, and afterwards I went home, and there came a Report, that my Lord of Eſſex had cut his Throat, which made me go back again to the Tower, and there was I a conſiderable time gaping among other People, and there did I ſee this Boy Edwards; when he came there, I was there; I was there all the time that he was there, and we went out of the Tower together, and there was no ſuch thing, nor any pretence or ground for ſuch a Story. And Edwards himſelf being asked the Queſtion, upon his Oath, doth likewiſe ſay, Hawkins was with him all the time there. So that that ſhews not only by what the Boy ſays, that it was falſe, but it is alſo proved falſe by the Teſtimony of this other Witneſs Hawkins.

Then next comes Mr. Blathwaite, who was preſent when Mr. Braddon was before the King, and what does he ſay? He ſays, there was the Boy fetched, and the Girl fetched, and all Perſons examined there, and then 'tis told him, all the Boy had ſaid to him was falſe, and it was told him with all its Circumſtances. So that Notice ſufficient, if you will believe Mr. Blathwaite, was given to this Mr. Braddon, That the Boy had denied it then, as he had before to his Siſter: So he knew it was falſe.

But what does Mr. Braddon do now? He is ſo far from being ſatisfied in the Matter, that inſtead of ſtopping there, his Zeal tranſported him to purſue it further: And ſo he tells you, that Mr. Braddon confeſſed he would have got ſome Juſtice of Peace to have the Boy examined; and he applied himſelf to Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir John Lawrence. There were many Juſtices of the Peace beſides them, in London, to whom he might have applied himſelf. But when he comes to Sir Robert Clayton, and acquaints him with the Matter, he would not do it alone; it was thought a Matter of that Importance. Then ſays Mr. Braddon, you ſhan't do it at all. He muſt have the Kindneſs of having it done in private; to have it examined when any body was by, was not ſo well for his purpoſe; which ſhews you ſtill, Gentlemen, his Deſign was to contrive privately, to effect that which the Light ſhould not eaſily diſcover.

Then the next thing is the Evidence of Mr. Monſtevens, And he gives you an account, That he came to him, and he read the Information, and gave him a Caution, that he wondered at him: Says he, Why do you concern your ſelf about this Buſineſs, there is Sir Henry Capell, he does not concern himſelf? Then he pretended to come in his Name, but at length, when Mr. Monſtevens began to diſpute it with him, why Sir Henry did not appear himſelf in it; then truly Sir Henry Capell was very ill, and could not poſſibly come himſelf, but I am to go to him, and give him ſatisfaction about what I do, and ſo alſo to the Counteſs of Eſſex. No, ſays Mr. Monſtevens, that cannot be, for Sir Henry Capell is not ſo ill, but that he has been with my Lord Sunderland, and with the King too, ſince the Death of my Lord of Eſſex. To which he made him no Anſwer. So that that was but an Excuſe and a Subterfuge; but yet notwithſtanding all this Caution, he continues on his Zeal in the thing: Whereupon Mr. Monſtevens brought him to my Lord Sunderland, and what Diſcourſe has paſt between them, he has given you an account of.

The next Evidence is Sir Henry Capell, who tells you, That Braddon comes officiouſly and tells him, he had ſome Diſcovery to make about the Death of the Earl of Eſſex, and you hear that poor Gentleman being related to this unfortunate Noble Lord, was at the firſt time very much under Surprize (being in ſuch great Affliction as one Brother muſt needs be for another, Nature obliges People to a great Concern for ſuch Accidents) and he ſays, he is not able to give an account what he ſaid or did at that time, or what Braddon did particularly ſay to him. But when he came the ſecond time to him, he was a little more ſedate and calm, and then (he does remember) he told him, If you have any thing of this nature to ſay, go to a Secretary of State, it is his Buſineſs to enquire into this Affair, and 'tis not the Buſineſs of every particular private Man, becauſe theſe are Matters that concern the Government. But Braddon pretended (forſooth) it was his Zeal and his great Conſcience that made him to be thus tranſported, and to be ſo eager for carrying on this Proſecution.

The next Witneſs, Gentlemen, that you hear of, is the Gentleman that ſeized upon Mr. Braddon in the Country; and that is Mr. Beech, who brought brought him before a Juſtice of Peace (one Aires that it ſeems is ſince dead) and in his Pocket he found a Letter from the other Defendant Speke, which is the only thing indeed in the Evidence that does affect that Gentleman; and what that Letter is, you have heard it read, and for your better ſatisfaction, becauſe the Language of the Letter is pretty extraordinary, if you have a mind to have it to peruſe while you are here in Court, you may have it with you. I ſuppoſe you remember the Subſtance of it, commending the great Integrity, Courage, and Magnanimity of this Gentleman Mr. Braddon, thanking the Perſon to whom it was writ, for his great Kindneſs to him and his Friends, how they did hope to be able to get the Murder of my Lord of Eſſex tryed before any in the Tower could come to their Tryal; That the Tide ran ſtrong againſt them: And, pray, you muſt take notice, I have given him a hint he muſt go by another Name, by the Name of Johnſon, and not by the Name of Braddon; for alack-a-day he would be ſtabbed in theſe dangerous Times, or knocked on the head, if he be known by his own Name. Mr. Braddon would be thought a Man ſo conſiderable in the World for his Zeal for Truth, and the Proteſtant Religion, that there was very great Hazard of his being murdered, we live in ſuch perilous Times.

Gentlemen, This is to amuſe and affright People, and to put odd Thoughts and Jealouſies and Fears into the Minds of the King's Subjects, which was the Beginning and Riſe of the late Rebellion, which we have All reaſon to remember with Horror; that Rebellion that in the Iſſue of it brought the late King of bleſſed Memory to the Scaffold: And therefore we muſt have a great care of ſuch things growing upon us now.

And pray, Gentlemen, mind the Style of the Letter: We have many Thanks to give you, for your Care of Us, and Countenance you have given to Us, and We don't doubt We ſhall be able to carry on the Buſineſs of the Earl of Eſſex, notwithſtanding that the Tide runs ſtrong againſt Us; We hope this, and We hope that, and t'other, and ſo makes himſelf a Party. And he recommends him in particular to Sir Robert Atkyns, to whom the Letter was written, to adviſe him in the Matter he went about (which by the way, you ſee, was to pick up falſe Evidence) to carry on this wicked Deſign. And I muſt tell you, Gentlemen, If Mr. Speke was given to believe a Lye, and did write that Letter, with a Deſign to have that Lye ſpread abroad, he makes himſelf a Party, and he is as guilty in every Circumſtance as the other, as to the Deſign in general laid in the Information, tho' not equally guilty about the Management of the Witneſſes: And it is the Letter only that particularly affects him. But I tell you, If in caſe you think he was ſurprized in the thing, or did it ignorantly or innocently, without any Concern (tho' he ſeems to have a wonderful Concern in his Letter, and very zealous he ſeems to be in the Proſecution of this Buſineſs) you are to acquit him. But, if he did contribute to the Deſign of ſpreading this falſe Report, he is as guilty of that part as Mr. Braddon, tho' he be not guilty of Suborning the Witneſſes. But the Evidence againſt Braddon goes farther; There is not only the Evidence of this Letter, which ſpeaks plain enough, as to this Deſign, but you find alſo about him all the Informations that have been read. The Information of this Boy of 13 Years of Age; the Information of the Girl of 13 Years of Age: There was alſo taken in his Pocket a Letter from one Burgis a famous Pin-maker of Marlebrough, written to one Cumpen a Poſt-maſter at Frome, in this manner: "Pray call to mind "ſuch a Buſineſs of hearing ſuch a Report, "of my Lord of Eſſex's cutting his Throat "upon Friday the 13th of July laſt. Pray recol- "lect ſuch a thing, and impart it to this Gen- "tleman the Bearer. This likewiſe was intruſted with Mr. Braddon: But it ſeems the Man had gone and writ his Letter, and had put in the 6th Day, which happened to be a Week too ſoon, and this muſt be rectified by Mr. Braddon himſelf, he being a great Companion of Mr. Braddon's; for it ſeems he had ſuch a Confidence in him, that upon his Report, he came down from London to Marlebrough, tho' now indeed they pretend they never knew one another before: But it is proved he confeſſed he had ſuch a Regard to his Report, that that brought him down from London. He had (as I was ſaying) put it down the 6th at his firſt writing; and I believe as to the thing it ſelf, it was as true the 6th as any other time, and the 16th and the 26th is all one to ſuch People. And this Letter, he tells you himſelf, was written ſix Weeks after, but Mr. Braddon muſt correct it: No, ſays he, you miſtake, it muſt be the 13th, it muſt not be the 6th; the 6th would not do the Buſineſs, for the 13th was the Day that he was murder'd, and ſo he was forced to interline it, the 13th, to make it to humour the Story; for the Lye would not paſs ſo well if it had been put upon a Day ſo long before; but to make the Lye a correct Lye, and to humour the reſt of the Evidence, Mr. Braddon comes and informs him, it muſt be the 13th.

That was the next piece of Evidence that was given, and I think the Subſtance of the Evidence of the whole Matter given againſt the Defendants for the King, except it be ſome Remarks out of the Evidence that has been given on the other ſide, which it will be material for you to take notice of.

Now, Gentlemen, for the Defendants they bring this Evidence: Firſt, They bring a Man, I think his Name was Lewes, to whom they gave the Money before he would give his Evidence. And he ſays, one Day he was going up a Hill near Andover, and going up the Hill, he heard the News of my Lord of Eſſex's cutting his Throat; but what Day, Week or Month it was, he cannot tell, that he heard this. And, Gentlemen, Let me tell you, 'tis as bad as the Caſe it ſelf, and worſe if poſſible, the endeavouring to pick up Witneſſes to put a Colour and Countenance upon ſo black a Villany as this is. Then the next Evidence is Fielder, and he tells you, that at their Town of Andover the Wedneſday before my Lord murder'd himſelf, it was all the Talk about the Town, that he had cut his Throat; it was in every body's Mouth, the Market-people, Men, Women and Children, all over the Town had it, when the Earl of Eſſex did it not till the Friday following.

We asked him to name any one; no truly he could not, the Town was ſo full of People, and yet he cannot remember one, whence he had it: But, Gentlemen, here is the malicious Deſign of the Matter. 'Tis to make it believed it was a deſigned Buſineſs to murder my Lord, and caſt it upon himſelf, and they knew of the Deſign at Andover, two Days before the Fact was done: As tho' the Perſons that deſigned to murder him, would go to make it publick, as ſuch a Report was likely to do. But the Deſign of this, beſides the Falſhood and Baſeneſs of the thing it ſelf, does ſpeak Malice and Sedition, and all the Diſtempers of a diſloyal Man's Heart; and to go about to get Witneſſes to ſupport the Credibility of a thing that is notoriouſly falſe, is ten times worſe than the ſpreading of ſuch a Report it ſelf.

Then comes Mrs. Edwards the Mother, ſhe is the next Witneſs, and ſhe tells you at firſt, the Boy did tell this ſtrange Story, but afterwards denied it, but ſhe likewiſe tells you, how Mr. Braddon came, and how he dealt with the Boy. He is a buſy Man, you ſee, a great Reformer that does mightily concern himſelf in the Reformation of the Government. I never knew that Mr. Braddon had any great ſhare in it: He has not ſuch a prodigious Eſtate I ſuppoſe, that for fear of loſing his great Eſtate he ſhould be ſo wondrous buſy and active in reforming the Government; but I have always obſerved it for a Rule, that your beggarly inconſiderable Fellows are the warmeſt People in the Buſineſs of Reformation, and for defending Liberty and Property as they call it; and then they put it under the Diſguiſe of Religion, when alas thoſe that have no Religion are generally the greateſt Pretenders of taking care of it; and thoſe that have no Eſtates nor Properties, are uſually the fulleſt of Noiſe about Liberty and Property. But the meaning of it is plain, if they can but exaſperate the People into a Rebellion, that is the way to get a Property: And if they can but have Liberty to do what they pleaſe, that is all the Liberty they contend for. They are ſuch mean inconſiderable Fellows only that make all this ado among us: For no Perſons of any Intereſt or Quality will offer to engage in any ſuch thing. But I hope the Snare is ſeen, and we ſhall avoid it; for God be thanked we live under a regular Government, where the Laws are duly executed; we need not be afraid of wrong from the Government. The Courts of Juſtice are open where they may have Security; and the beſt Security to good Subjects, is that which the Law gives them.

Mrs. Edwards, ſhe tells you, When Braddon came to inquire about it, it made them all a little concerned; and the Daughter was affrighted, and ſhe comes to the Boy, and ſays, Billy, Billy, here has been a Man about ſuch a thing, pray ſpeak the Truth: Why, ſays he, will any harm come of it? Says ſhe, I can't tell, but tell you the Truth. And then when the Boy comes to tell Truth, he then ſays, all the Story was falſe. Beſides this, ſays ſhe, We told Mr. Braddon, before the Boy ſigned it, That he had ſaid it was falſe; and he was told it again before the King and Council, that it was falſe. But nothing would ſerve him, but he muſt have a Horſe and a Man, and he muſt go his Circuit to pick up ridiculous Stories. Letters muſt be contrived from one to another to give a Colour to the Matter, and all this to ſpread about his malicious Reports and falſe News.

And by this means, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, The Matter is fixed as to the ſecond part of the Information, which is the corrupting of Witneſſes; for tho' he did not get any Witneſſes ſworn, and ſo 'tis no Subornation of Perjury, ſtrictly, yet however 'tis a Miſdemeanor to labour any one, much more ſuch a Child, into a Falſity, as apparently he did; for as the Boy ſwears now, He never did make mention of going to my Lord Gerard's Lodgings.

The next Evidence is young Mrs. Edwards, Sarah the Daughter, and ſhe comes and gives an account of the ſame. That the Boy did tell ſuch a Story at firſt, but, ſays ſhe, I knew him to be ſuch a lying Boy, and I had ſo often found him in Lies, that I did not mind what he ſaid. And he uſed to tell Lies when he had been playing Truant. Then comes Mr. Braddon to inquire about the Buſineſs, and when he began to proſecute it, the Girl began to be affrighted, and ſhe calls the Boy to her, and engaged him to tell her the Truth, and then immediately upon that, he did ſay it was all a Story, and Invention of his own.

And then 'tis very material to obſerve, That the Boy in that Paper of Information (which is all of Mr. Braddon's Hand-writing) makes the Circumſtance of the Razor's falling down, to be caſt of the inſide of the Pales, and the Girl ſays, it was of the outſide, and there was a Coach, and abundance of People by, and a great many fine Circumſtances, and not one of them true.

The next piece of Evidence is, ſhe does ſay, That after he told her it was falſe, ſhe gave notice to Braddon, and being asked, Whether ſhe did not frighten him by threatening his Father would be turned out of his Place? She ſwears, No. But all thoſe kind of Queſtions were by a Side-Wind, to make Reflections upon the Government; as tho' the King would turn Men out, becauſe they would not ſwear what was falſe. It carries, I tell you, a Sting towards the Government ſtill, and ſhews the Malice of the Deſign. But, Gentlemen, you hear what is ſaid about that, there was no ſuch thing ſaid; They did apprehend ſome Fear, but from whom their Fear came, that they can't tell. But ſhe poſitively ſwears, when the Boy had denied it, he had notice of it; and when he refuſed to ſign it, yet he preſſed him, by telling him, there was no Harm in it like to come, but only to Mr. Braddon himſelf, and ſo he was perſwaded to ſign it.

The next Witneſs is Mrs. Barton; She comes and tells you, that ſhe was at Mr. Edwards's Houſe, and what ſhe tells you of her own Knowledge, you are to take for Evidence, and nothing more. She ſays, Braddon did engage the Boy to tell Truth, and put him in mind of that Chapter in the Acts, of the great Diſpleaſure of God againſt the two Witneſſes that forſwore themſelves, and bid him ſpeak nothing but the Truth. And after he had talked thus awhile, ſhe obſerved he was going to take Pen, Ink, and Paper, and ſhe was afraid ſhe might be drawn in for a Witneſs, and ſo ſhe went out of the Room. But before that time,

Mr.

Mr. Braddon did go to ſee the Window, and the Place where the Boy ſaid the Razor was thrown out.

Then there is the Evidence of the little Girl, who is the next Witneſs, Jane Lodeman I think her Name was, and that is likewiſe written by Mr. Braddon. Now you hear what that young Wench ſays. She comes and would give ſome ſort of Countenance to the thing, How ſhe was looking up at the Window of my Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings, and that there was a bloody Razor thrown by a Hand out of the Window, but whether it was half bloody, or all over bloody, ſhe can't tell, but bloody it was; and it was, as ſhe ſays, thrown on the outſide, though the Boy ſaid, it was thrown of the inſide. But the Wench being asked, Whether ſhe knew that was my Lord of Eſſex's Lodging? She anſwered, No, ſhe did not, when they come and make her ſwear in her Information, that ſhe ſaw the Razor thrown out of my Lord of Eſſex's Lodgings: And then ſhe ſays, ſhe heard no Soldier ſpeak a Word at all; but in the Information, it is ſet down, that the Soldier cried out to the People of the Houſe, Go and fetch up the Razor. And this was all done in the open Day, and there were abundance of People, but ſhe could not tell any particular body. So that of one hundred People, which, if ſhe ſay true, were there, Mr. Braddon could not ſatisfy himſelf to enquire after ſome of them, but only he muſt pick up a Child of 13 Years of Age to practiſe upon in this villainous manner. And it carries the greater Venom, and Malice, and Virulency, and Baſeneſs, to endeavour to corrupt young People to that heighth, as to come and ſay, and ſwear thoſe things in the Face of a Court, that are impoſſible to be true. It is impoſſible to be true, that ſhe ſaw a Coach in the Yard; for you hear what account Captain Hawley gives of his Houſe. It is impoſſible to be true, that there ſhould be a Crowd of People, becauſe that there was a Sentinel at the Door, who muſt ſee all that go out, and that come in; and there is no way to go into the Yard, but through the Back-door, and the Pales are ſo high, that nothing can be flung over, that could be eaſily diſcerned. So that the very Thoughts of ſuch a thing as this are ridiculous in themſelves, and not only the Falſity of the Story is apparent, but there is alſo apparent a great Villany, in endeavouring to get Witneſſes to prove that Falſity. For you ſee who Mr. Braddon employs; he gets a Barber to go along with him on purpoſe to teſtify what idle Reports he could pick up. But this Barber, and the other Witneſſes, when they come here, can't tell any thing. For the Barber, he ſays, ſhe ſaid, There lay a Razor; but the Information ſays, (to which he is a Witneſs) that the Soldier cried, Take up the Razor; and ſhe now upon her Oath denies any thing of that.

The next Evidence is the Aunt, and ſhe tells you, ſhe does not remember ſuch and ſuch Particulars, but ſomewhat to that purpoſe ſhe does; but whether ſhe named my Lord of Eſſex, or no, in particular, as to his Lodgings, ſhe cannot give an account.

Then you have Glasbrooke, that comes to give an account concerning this Girl's Story, and he plainly is quite different from what the others had teſtified before; for his Evidence is, That the Girl had ſaid my Lord of Eſſex cut his own Throat, and afterwards flung the Razor out of a Window: After he had committed this horrid Murder upon himſelf, he got to life again, and threw away the Inſtrument he did it with, that is plainly his Teſtimony, that this Child ſhould ſay ſo. So that, as in the Caſe of Suſanna, which I heard cited here upon another occaſion, the wicked Elders were diſcovered by the different Circumſtances of Time and Place; ſo here you have Circumſtances of Time and Place, and of all things in the World that can contribute to prove the Falſity of this Report, and to prove the malicious Deſign of theſe People that were engaged in this Buſineſs.

The next Witneſs is one Smith, and he ſpeaks much to the ſelf ſame purpoſe. He was the Barber that went with Braddon to examine this Girl.

Now, Gentlemen, You are to conſider of theſe Contrivances of Braddon, in buſying himſelf to ſollicite theſe Children to teſtify theſe Stories, after a Denial by the Boy to ſign the Paper, To tell him there was no Harm could come to him, to dictate what he ſhould ſay, and put Words into his Mouth, about going to ſee my Lord Gerard's Lodgings, which he never ſpake of; for him to dictate to the other Witneſs the Pinmaker of Marlebrough, what the right Day ſhould be, to ſet up ſuch a ſenſleſs Story that he heard ſuch a thing at the Poſt-houſe, but he cannot tell from whom, or name any one that heard it or ſpake it beſides himſelf: It is ſtrange how he ſhould meet with this Man, for even the Man himſelf tells you, he knows not who he had diſcourſed of it to; and never ſaw Braddon till that time he writ the Letter. But you may obſerve, that to be ſure the Report might be ſpread, it was ſo contrived that the Scene ſhould be laid in the Poſt-houſe, and then it was like to run abroad quickly; for alas it was not their Buſineſs to make Truth of it, but to make the diſcontented Rabble believe it to be a Truth. And ſo they began to conſult with themſelves where it was beſt to lodge it, and upon deliberation the Place muſt humour the Deſign as well as the Time, and that muſt be at the Poſt-maſter's Houſe, in order to diſperſe the Noiſe of it, and then Mr. Braddon takes his Circuit to Salisbury unto Sir Robert Atkyns at Stow in the Hold, and to other People, filling the Country with his braded Ware; and 'tis time to look after ſuch Pedlars, for they vent the worſt of Ware.

Then, Gentlemen, you may obſerve this Fellow is eaſily perſwaded to ſwear any thing, for he gives no manner of account how he came to hear what he ſpeaks of, or from whom, or how Mr. Braddon came to him: He had never ſeen him before that time, he ſays; (tho' Mr. Braddon had ſuch a value for this worſhipful Pinmaker, whom he never ſaw, that he came from London upon the leaſt intimation of this Man, ſo zealous he was for the carrying on this weighty Affair, which I may call this impudent and intolerable Lye.)

Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, if any Proof in the World be ſufficient to prove Malice, you have ſufficient Proof of it before you now. If it had been a thing of Indiſcretion only without Malice, if there had been nothing of Caution given to him about it as a thing that concerned cerned not him, there might have been ſomething ſaid to alleviate it; but for him to come as if he had Authority from the Counteſs of Eſſex, and Sir Henry Capell who denies it, ſhews the Malice of his Deſign.

Gentlemen, 'Tis a Concern of an High Nature, and if you do believe theſe Perſons that are Defendants, or either of them to be guilty; ſuch as you believe to be guilty, you muſt find guilty, and of ſo much as you believe them guilty. And if in caſe they ſhall by you be found guilty, the Court is to take care to inflict a Puniſhment, if it be poſſible, ſuitable to their Offence.

Then the Court aroſe, and the Jury afterwards gave in a private Verdict, which the next Morning was repeated in Court and recorded. And by that Verdict they found the Defendant Laurence Braddon guilty of the whole Matter charged upon him in the Information, and the Defendant Hugh Speke guilty of all but the Conſpiring to procure falſe Witneſſes, and of that they found him Not Guilty.

Lunæ 21. Aprilis, 1684. Termino Paſchæ, 36 Caroli Secundi Regis. B. R.

Dominus Rex verſus Braddon and Speke.

Mr. At. Gen. MY Lord, Here are two Perſons to receive your Judgment.

L. C. J. Who are they?

Mr. At. Gen. Braddon and Speke. But it being late, I know not whether you will give it now, or appoint ſome other time.

L. C. J. No, no, let them come in, They will ſay we are afraid of giving Judgment elſe.

Then Mr. Braddon and Mr. Speke came into Court.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We pray your Judgment for the King, that you will ſet a good Fine.

Mr. Williams. We are retained to move in Arreſt of Judgment.

Mr. At. Gen. Judgment is enter'd already, and there is nothing but a Fine in the Caſe.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, If it be enter'd, it is enter'd but this Term, and 'tis in the Breaſt of the Court, if they pleaſe to admit us to ſpeak in Arreſt of Judgment.

L. C. J. When were the Rules out?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, It was put off by Conſent to this Day.

L. C. J. But when were the Rules out, I ask?

Cl. of Cr. The Rules were out the laſt Day of the laſt Term, and then Judgment was entered.

L. C. J. Well then, Judgment is entered, what ſay you againſt a Fine?

Mr. Williams. We were retained to move in Arreſt of Judgment, I am ſure I was, and inſtructed to that purpoſe.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what you were retained to do, but now Judgment is entered, what ſay you as to the Fine?

Mr. Williams. We cannot ſay any thing as to that, we are not inſtructed; I am ſure I am not.

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, We took it, and I was told ſo, That it was put off by Conſent to this Day.

L. C. J. I know nothing of your Conſent, nor what you conſented to. If you conſent among your ſelves at the Bar, that is nothing to the Court. Here we find Judgment entered, and we muſt proceed upon what is before us.

Mr. Wallop. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to remember, what the Evidence was.

L. C. J. I do remember it very particularly.

Counſel. My Lord, Mr. Speke is found Guilty of nothing but writing that Letter.

Mr. At. Gen. He is found Guilty of all but the Suborning.

L. C. J. We do very well know there is a difference between them.

Then the laſt Rule was Read.

L. C. J. Well, Judgment is regularly entered, What ſay you to it for the Defendants?

Mr. Wallop. My Lord, we conceive we have very good Matter upon the Verdict, to move in Arreſt of Judgment.

L. C. J. Yes, no doubt what you have to ſay is extraordinary material, but you come too late, we cannot hear you. Sir Samuel Aſtrey, is Judgment entered according to the Courſe of the Court?

Cl. of Cr. Yes.

L. C. J. Then we muſt proceed to fine them.

Mr. Braddon. Pray, my Lord, Let Mr. Ward be asked, whether they did not agree we ſhould move to Day?

Mr. Ward. That was only an Agreement on Saturday, that they might appear to Day, and I would not take them in Execution.

Mr. Braddon. This was the Day I was to move in, my Lord; Mr. Burton knows very well, he agreed to it.

Mr. Burton. I know nothing more of it, my Lord, but that indeed I did conſent on Saturday, that whatſoever they could move then, they ſhould move on Monday.

Mr. Ward. That was only that they ſhould appear to Day, inſtead of Braddon's being taken up by a Capias pro Fine.

L. C. J. Well, well; I know nothing of your Agreements, here is Judgment entered regularly, as we find it, you had beſt bring your Action againſt Mr. Burton, if he have done you any wrong, but I did not know that Mr. Burton was the King's Attorney. But I find here is Judgment againſt you, and 'tis for a very foul Offence, as notorious an Offence as any Perſon, under under that which is Capital, could be guilty of; baſe Aſperſions of the Government, in order to promote Sedition, and Faction, and for that End, made uſe of all villanous Means to corrupt Infants, and then juſtify that Villany with a brazen Face, to that degree of Impudence, as I never before ſaw, That all the Juſtice of the Nation muſt be affronted by ſuch audacious Fellows, for it ſeems his Confidence has not left him, but here he ſmiles, and ſeems as if he done no harm.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, I know my own Innocency, and therefore have no reaſon to be troubled.

L. C. J. Your Innocence! Your Impudence, you mean. I tell you, had you been in any other Countrey, but this, the Innocence you brag of, would have ſent you to the Gallies.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Then you think, Mr. Braddon, you have done very well in what you have done?

L. C. J. Ay, I aſſure you, does he. And the Zeal of his Party has gone ſo far, that at Winchester, when I was there in the Circuit, I was told that his Doctrine had obtained ſo much in that Countrey, eſpecially about that Place, whence ſome of his Witneſſes came, I mean, Andover, that there was a Woman that was here the other Day, Mrs. Drake, being at Conventicle, held forth, That my Lord of Eſſex was murdered while the King was in the Tower, and that God was the Avenger of Murder, and had found out a proper Perſon for the Proſecution of it, that was Mr. Braddon; and this ſnivelling Cant prevailed at the Conventicle. It is no ſuch ſmirking Matter as you make it, Mr. Braddon, I aſſure you.

Mr. Braddon. My Lord, if I did know my ſelf to be under any Guilt, I would very readily and humbly acknowledge it.

L. C. J. Well, I ſee a great many of the Party about you, I can ſpy them out, though they think they are not ſeen; but they ſhall know we will not ſuffer ſuch Monſters as theſe to go without due Puniſhment.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He ſtands upon it, he is innocent ſtill, notwithſtanding all that was proved, and the Juries Verdict.

L. C. J. Yes, alack a Day, he wipes his Mouth, and has not ſo much as eaten, I'll warrant you.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I expected you would have been ſorry, Mr. Braddon, for what you had done, and expreſſed ſome Penitence, but, it ſeems, you are very innocent.

Mr. Braddon. I did not directly, nor indirectly, offer any thing to induce the Children to give their Teſtimony, nor was any ſuch thing proved: I know my own Innocency.

Mr. At. Gen. The Jury have found it otherwiſe.

L. C. J. And that upon a fair, a full, and a convincing Evidence, and no Man in the World can make any doubt of the Truth of that Verdict; but he that had a ſhare in your Guilt, or in that it had a tendency towards, I mean that horrid Conſpiracy. And I aſſure you, Mr. Braddon, you tread upon the very Heels of it; ſmirk at it, and be as merry about it as you will.

Mr. Braddon. If I did not know my own Innocency, then I had reaſon to be troubled.

L. C. J. Your own Innocency! If you did not know your own Impudence, you mean; 'tis that only that makes you ſmirk and ſmile at ſuch Things as theſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Braddon, when you were adviſed by Sir Henry Capell to take a prudent and a good courſe, to go and leave it with a Secretary of State, you would not take that Advice, but you would go your own way, and you would turn Examiner, and Proſecutor your ſelf; when he that was the Earl's Brother, and was ſure more concerned than you, thought it fitter to go that way.

L. C. J. We remember what Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, in his Letter, ſpeaks of this Matter, Mr. Braddon, he was got off; why, they dare not meddle with Mr. Braddon, he is ſuch a dreadful Man, and his Party are ſo conſiderable, that we dare not meddle with them; and the TORIES are all caſt down; alack a day! becauſe theſe Fellows can't caſt down the Government, therefore all honeſt Men muſt be caſt down, and not dare to meddle with them; but they ſhall ſee we are not ſo much caſt down, but we are able to reach the higheſt of them. What Condition is this Man in? I ſpeak in Point of Eſtate, for his other Conditions, we know what they are, his Tryal will ſatisfy any Man of that.

Mr. At. Gen. He is the eldeſt Son of a Father that has a good Eſtate.

Mr. Williams. He is then but Heir Apparent.

Mr. Braddon. No, I am a younger Brother.

Mr. Williams. It ſeems he is but the Second Son, and a young Gentleman.

Mr. Braddon. My Father has an elder Son alive.

L. C. J. I remember particularly 'tis ſaid in one of the Letters, That he was a Man of 7 or 800 l. a Year.

Cl. of Cr. That was in Mr. Speke's Letter. He ſays his Father had ſo much.

Mr. Braddon. That is in Mr. Speke's Letter; but that is not true.

L. C. J. I don't know truly, that may be as falſe as any thing elſe you went about to have theſe Children Swear, but I'll undertake it, if thou had'ſt told the little Girl that he had 800 l. a Year, ſhe would have been as ready to have Sworn it as the other.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. 'Tis a wonderful Thing, Mr. Braddon, you could bring no body to come and teſtify theſe Things, but thoſe two little Children.

L. C. J. But oh! What a Happineſs it was for this Sort of People, that they had got Mr. Braddon, an honeſt Man, and a Man of Courage, ſays Mr. Speke, a Man à propos; and pray, ſays he to his Friend, give him the beſt Advice you can, for he is a Man very fit for the Purpoſe, and pray ſecure him under a ſham Name, for I'll undertake there are ſuch Deſigns upon pious Mr. Braddon, ſuch Contrivances to do him a Miſchief, that if he had not had his Proteſtant Flail about him, ſomebody or other, would have knocked him in the Head, and he is ſuch a wonderful Man, that all the King's Courts of Juſtice, muſt needs conſpire to do Mr. Braddon a Miſchief; a pretty ſort of a Man, upon my Word, and he muſt be uſed accordingly; Men that arrogate and aſſume to themſelves a Liberty to do ſuch kind of Things, muſt expect to fare accordingly.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Speke is not found Guilty of the Subornation.

Mr. At. Gen. He is found Guilty of all but the Subornation, he is found Guilty of Conſpiring to ſpread the Report. The Subornation will require another Sort of Puniſhment.

L. C. J. Ay, but there is a Difference between them. The Crime was very great in Mr. Speke, though not ſo great as in Mr. Braddon, and I am ſorry that Mr. Speke ſhould be concerned in it, and ſhould take ſuch care about ſuch a Buſineſs, with all that Piety and Zeal for Religion he expreſſes in his Letter to Sir Robert Atkyns (Mr. Juſtice Atkyns that was) that he ſhould recommend him to have a wonderful Care of him, and then thank him for his Kindneſs ſhewed to Our Party: So he makes himſelf to be of the Party, and makes this the Buſineſs of the Party, and ſo makes himſelf to be a Sharer in the Buſineſs; for 'tis We thank you for your Kindneſs to Us, and the Tide is ſtrong againſt Us; and We hope we ſhall be able to bring the Buſineſs of my Lord of Eſſex upon the Stage, before they do any of thoſe in the Tower. So Mr. Speke makes himſelf a Party in the Buſineſs. And I am mighty ſorry that when he comes to be asked the Queſtion, How he came to write this Letter, he ſhould tell us, He had been at the Tavern, and did not know what he writ, but does not ſay, he recollected afterwards. It ſeems he uſed to be often at the Tavern, and had been there when he writ this pious Letter, and ſo his Saintſhip broke out in a Fit of Drunkenneſs, for moſt of our Reformers of Religion now a-days want common Morality. And yet they are wonderfully Zealous for Reformation and Religion. All the Villany that has been thought of, nay, more than ever could enter before into the Imagination of Mankind, has been wrought by theſe Men, that pretend to be Reformers of Religion, and amongſt the reſt Mr. Braddon; and indeed I look upon Braddon to be the Daringeſt Fellow of the Party, he and his Brother Smith. If there were any Reluctancy, or any Senſe of any Guilt they had contracted, and would ſhew it by acknowledging their being ſurprized into it, and teſtified Repentance by a ſubmiſſive and dutiful Behaviour, that were ſomething to encline the Court to Commiſeration; but when we ſee, inſtead of that, they are more obdurate and ſteeled in their Oppoſition to the Government, they muſt be reclaimed by Correction, and kept within due Bounds by condign Puniſhment, otherwiſe it will be thought by the ignorant Sort of People, that all Courts of Juſtice are afraid of them.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Nay, Mr. Braddon's Zeal was very extraordinary in the Caſe, going on in this Buſineſs, not only without, but contrary to the Advice of Sir Henry Capell, who ſurely was moſt concerned about the Death of his Brother.

Then the Judges between themſelves conſulted about the Sentence, which Mr. Juſtice Withins pronounced thus.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Braddon, You ſee what it is you are convicted of, It was for as foul an Offence, as any can be imagined, that is not Capital, wherein the King is very much concerned, for the Inſinuations were ſuch, as that the King was mightily concerned, for in as much as you ſay the Earl of Eſſex ſhould be murdered at that time the King was in the Tower, it was an implied Accuſation of the King, and an Inſinuation that the King ſhould deſign to take away an innocent Man's Blood, and ſo downright be guilty of murdering an innocent Perſon, which how great an Offence that is, let any Man that has any Loyalty, or Reverence for the King in him conſider, and you cannot ſay you are innocent, Mr. Braddon. Your Proſecution was moſt pertinacious, and you would proceed after the Boy had denied it, and proceed in ſuch a manner, when Sir Henry Capell had told you what you ſhould do; and what did you go upon? You had got a little Girl, a Child of 11 or 12 Years old, to tell a Story of I know not what, and no body elſe knew any thing of it, and this muſt be a ground ſufficient for you to go up and down, and ſpread ſuch a Report, when Sir Henry Capell gave you Advice to go to a Secretary of State, and let him examine it; indeed you did go to him, but would not reſt ſatisfied with what the King and Council did; no, Mr. Braddon, you thought that would not gratify your own Paſſion, and Malice, againſt the King and the Government, but you muſt take Ways of your own. This is to ſcandalize the whole Juſtice of the Nation, and not only make the King a Murderer, but you would have all the Plot hereby quite loſe its Credit; and you would make it, as Sir Samuel Bernardiſton would inſinuate, a Sham Plot, to take away innocent Proteſtants Lives. But as to the Plot, there has been freſh Proof of it beyond all Contradiction this Day, a Man here in the Face of the whole Court has owned the whole Thing, he would not take the liberty of defending himſelf, that was offered him, if he would try it, but confeſſed that Conſpiracy, which you had a great Mind to be an Inſtrument of making the World to believe, was nothing but a Sham. I ſhall not make any long Speech to you, The Court for this Offence, Sets upon you, Mr. Braddon, the Fine of 2000 l. and Order that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life, and that you be Committed till this be Performed. And for you Mr. Speke (we have conſidered that you are not ſo highly Guilty as Mr. Braddon, you are Guilty of a great Offence, but not ſo Guilty as he, and therefore) we think fit to ſet upon you the Fine of 1000 l. and that you find Sureties for your good Behaviour during your Life, and be Committed till you perform it.

L. C. J. Marſhal, Take them in Cuſtody, and uſe them as they ought to be uſed.

Counſel. My Lord, Mr. Speke's Bail is diſcharged, I ſuppoſe?

L. C. J. Ay, they muſt be, as to this Matter, but nothing elſe but this.

Then they were carried away to the King's Bench.

OF

Sir SAMUEL BERNARDISTON, Bar.

The 14*th* of February, 1683.

THERE being in Hillary Term laſt, an Information in the Court of King's-Bench preferred by His Majeſty's Attorney-General againſt Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, for a very great Miſdemeanor; upon Oath made, that he was ſo extreamly indiſpoſed, that he could not appear in Perſon without danger of his Life: The Court were pleaſed to reſpite his Recognizance, (which he by order of the Lords of His Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, entered into the laſt Vacation, to appear in Court the Firſt Day of this Term) and to allow him the liberty of Pleading to the Information by Attorney, which he did. And Thurſday the 14*th* of February, 1683. being the Seſſion of Niſi Prius, after the Term holden for the City of London, and County of the ſame, was appointed for the Tryal of this Cauſe, and accordingly then the ſame came on, and was tried before the Right Honourable Sir George Jefferies, Knight and Baronet, Lord Chief Juſtice of His Majeſty's Court of King's-Bench, in this manner.

Clerk. Call away Cryer.

Cryer. You good Men of Niſi Prius, ſummoned to appear here this Day between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, Baronet, anſwer to your Names, and ſave your Iſſues.

Cl. Thomas Vernon and his Fellows. Vous avez plein Inqueſt. Call the Defendant Sir Samuel Bernardiſton.

Cryer. Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, come forth, or this Inqueſt ſhall be taken by your Default.

Mr. Williams. He appears.

Cl. Gardez voſtres Challenges. Swear Thomas Vernon.

Cr. You ſhall well and truly try this Iſſue, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Sir Samuel Bernardiſton according to your Evidence. So help you GOD.

Cl. Percival Gilburn. Who was Sworn, and ſo the reſt.

The NAMES of the Twelve were theſe.

Thomas Vernon		Samuel Newton
Percival Gilburn		George Torriano
Edward Bovery		Kenelm Smith
William Withers, Sen.	Jur'	Thomas Goddard
James Wood		Thomas Amy, and
Robert Maſters		Richard Blackburn.

Then they were counted, and Proclamation made for Information, in uſual manner.

Mr. Poultney. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury; this Cauſe is between the King and Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, and it is upon an Information exhibited by Mr. Attorney General, wherein he ſets forth, That there having been lately a horrid Plot diſcovered (as appears by the Convictions of thoſe that have ſuffered juſtly for it, and by the Evidence that has been given of it, has been made ſo apparent, that I do not queſtion, but that no Man, but who either has a Hand in it, or elſe bears a good Will to it, doth at all ſcruple the belief of it) Sir Samuel Bernardiſton the Defendant intending to ſcandalize and vilifie the Evidence, wrote a Letter, wherein are contained theſe Sentences.

The return of the Duke of Monmouth to White-Hall, and his being received into extraordinary Favour of His Majeſty, hath made a ſtrange alteration of Affairs at Court; for thoſe that before ſpake of him very indecently, now court, cringe and creep to him. His Grace complained to the King of the ſcandalous Miſrepreſentation that was made of him in the Monday's Gazette, upon which the Gazetteer was called to Account for it, who alledged for himſelf, that a Perſon of great Quality ſent him in Writing the Words therein recited, commanding him to put them in the Gazette. Yeſterday being the laſt Day of the Term, all the Priſoners that were in the Tower upon the late Sham Proteſtant Plot, were diſcharged upon Bail. Mr. Braddon who proſecuted the Murther of the Earl of Eſſex, the Information put in againſt him in the King's Bench by Mr. Attorney, for a pretended Subornation, &c. was not proſecuted, and his Bail was diſcharged.

And the passing Sentence upon the Author of Julian the Apostate, and the Printer of the late Lord Russel's Speech was passed over with silence. Great Applications are made to His Majesty for the pardoning Mr. Sidney in the Tower, which is believed will be attained, and that he will be banished. The Lord Howard appears despicable in the Eyes of all Men; he is under Guard at Whitehall, and 'tis believed will be sent to the Tower, for that the Duke of Monmouth will accuse him concerning the Testimony he hath given, and the Papists and High Tories are quite down in the mouth, their Pride is abated, themselves and their Plot confounded, but their Malice is not asswaged. 'Tis generally said the Earl of Essex was murthered. The brave Lord Russel is afresh lamented. The Plot is lost here, except you in the Country can find it out amongst the Addressers and Abhorrers. This sudden Turn is an Amazement to all Men, and must produce some strange Events, which a little time will shew.

And then he goes on further, and says in another Letter these Words.

I am to answer yours of the 27th and 29th past, and truly I cannot but with great Sorrow lament the Loss of our good Friend honest Mr. John Wright, but with patience we must submit to the Almighty, who can as well raise up Instruments to do his Work, as change Hearts, of which we have so great an Instance in the Business of the Duke of Monmouth, that no Age or History can parallel. I am now throughly satisfied, that what was printed in the Monday's Gazette is utterly false, and you will see it publickly declared so shortly. The King is never pleased but when he is with him, hath commanded all the Privy Council to wait upon him, and happy is he that hath most of his Favour. His Pardon was sealed and delivered to him last Wednesday. 'Tis said, he will be restored to be Master of the Horse, and be called into the Council Table, and to all his other Places, and 'tis reported he will be made Captain General of all the Forces, and Lord High Admiral, &c. he treats all his old Friends that daily visit him with great Civilities, they are all satisfied with his Integrity, and if God spares his Life, I doubt not but he will be an Instrument of much Good to the King and Kingdom. He said publickly, That he knew my Lord Russel was as Loyal a Subject as any in England, and that His Majesty believed the same now. I intend shortly to wait on him my self. It would make you laugh to see how strangely our High Tories and Clergy are mortified, their Countenances speak it. Were my Shesorary to be moved for now, it would be readily granted. Sir George is grown very humble: 'Tis said Mr. Sidney is reprieved for 40 Days, which bodes well.

And then, Gentlemen, he goes on further, and in a third Letter says,

The late Change here in Publick Affairs is so great and strange, that we are like Men, in a Dream, can hardly believe what we see, and fear we are not fit for so great a Mercy as the present Juncture seems to promise. The Sham Protestant-Plot is quite lost and confounded. The Earl of Mackensfield is bringing Actions of Scandalis Magnatum against all the Grand Jury-men that indicted him at last Assizes.

L. C. J. That is the only true thing in the whole. Sir George Jefferies.

[Mr. Poultney reads.] —— And the several Gentlemen that were indicted in Cheshire and Northampronshire will bring their several Actions at Law against them.

And, Gentlemen, then in a fourth Letter are contained these Expressions.

Contrary to all Men's Expectations, a Warrant is signed at last for beheading Col. Sidney at Tower-Hill next Friday. Great Endeavours have been used to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much dasheth our Hopes, but God still governs.

Gentlemen, All this the Information says, he has done against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity. To this he has pleaded Not Guilty. We will call our Witnesses, and if we prove it, we question not but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. Recorder. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counsel for the King in this Cause. Upon the opening of these Letters to you, you cannot but wonder much more than he does that wrote them. His matter of Wonder was one way, and I suppose your matter of Wonder is another way, that a Man, such an one as he is, should have that confidence to write such Letters as these are. Gentlemen, I do not doubt but you observe in the Series of these Letters how he hath travelled through all the Transactions of this horrid Conspiracy, that was of late contrived against the Life of the King, and the Life of His Royal Highness, and for the Destruction of the Government; and how he does endeavour to turn it all into ridicule, and to magnify the Men that have come to Publick Justice for being concerned in that horrid Conspiracy, as being very brave Men. The brave Lord Russel he is lamented as a brave Man lost; The Earl of Essex he forsooth was murthered, and Mr. Braddon, who prosecuted that Murther, he is a brave Man, whom I suppose some of you have heard of, and what is become of him, how he is convicted of one of the most notorious Facts that ever was acted by Man in any Civil Government, which was that Braddon should go up and down to get Witnesses to make it appear to the World, as tho' some body had murthered that Earl. Thus you see he goes through the Conspiracy from one thing to another, and calls it a Sham Protestant-Plot, and all to ridicule the Discovery, which by these very Letters you may easily be satisfied of the Reality and Extent of. You see how he magnifies his Julian, but he likewise is come to condign Punishment for that most pernicious and scandalous Libel. In the next place he comes to the Duke of Monmouth, and tells you what a brave Man they have in him to be their Captain General, and he did not doubt but to see him come to it; and sets forth that he has denied all the Plot, and how he doth persist in that Denial. And this Gentleman has raised his Confidence in these Letters to that degree, that I think any Man, that has lived any time in this Nation, cannot but wonder, der, that ever there ſhould be ſuch an impudent Action committed in it. Gentlemen, We ſhall call our Witneſſes and prove it poſitively upon him, that theſe Letters he did write, and then I ſuppoſe he will give an account how he came to write them.

Mr. Herbert. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I have but one Word which I deſire to obſerve; for the opening of the Caſe, and a right Underſtanding of the Matter will have a great Influence upon the Proofs. And I ſhall not inſiſt upon any thing that has been opened at large out of the Letters, but one thing I would obſerve to you, and that is out of the laſt Letter. Great Endeavours have been uſed to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much daſheth our Hopes. So it ſeems by this that the Faction, the Party, have their Hopes ſtill, and it ſeems likewiſe the Writer of theſe Letters hath a very great ſhare in them. We have, Gentlemen, nothing to do here before you, but to prove that Sir Samuel Bernardiſton was the Author, Writer and Publiſher of the Letters, which contain that which is charged in the Information, and that we queſtion not but to prove clearly without contradiction. Call Mr. Blathwaite. (Who was ſworn.) Pray give in the Letters.

[Which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, look upon thoſe Letters, and give the Court and the Jury an account where you had them.

Mr. Blathwaite. Gentlemen of the Jury, Theſe three Letters Sir Samuel Bernardiſton upon the 10th of December, before the King and the Lords of the Council, did own to be of his Hand-writing. I marked them at that inſtant of time, and I am well aſſured they are the Letters he owned to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Williams. Did he own them to be of his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes.

L. C. J. Did he own them all three?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, my Lord, he did.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, who are they directed to?

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, He is informed againſt for writing, not for ſuperſcribing.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I ask that Queſtion for this reaſon, He is indicted for writing and publiſhing, therefore I would know who they are directed to. Did he ſay they were publiſhed by him, or ſent to any one?

Mr. Blathwaite. He did not deny but that he had publiſhed and ſent them.

Mr. Williams. Did he confeſs it?

Mr. Blathwaite. He did not deny it.

L. C. J. I ſuppoſe they on the other ſide will give an account where they were taken.

Mr. Herbert. Yes, my Lord. Swear Mr. Atterbury. [Which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Heark you, Mr. Atterbury, Do you know any thing of theſe Letters?

Mr. Atterbury. If you pleaſe to let me ſee them, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. Shew him them.

Which was done, and he looked upon them, and gave them in again.

Mr. Herbert. Did you hear Sir Samuel Bernardiſton own them to be his Letters?

Mr. Atterbury. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I had a Warrant from Mr. Secretary Jenkyns, about two Months, or ten Weeks ago, to apprehend Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, and I did, according to Order, by virtue of that Warrant, apprehend him, and carry him before His Majeſty. When he was there, thoſe three Letters I had juſt now in my Hand, were then ſhewn to Sir Samuel Bernardiſton. I marked them, and know them to be the ſame; Sir Samuel Bernardiſton did own he wrote them Letters all three.

L. C. J. Were the Superſcriptions upon them all, as they are now?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, They were all as they are now.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Blathwaite?

Mr. Blathwaite. Yes, They were juſt ſo, the ſame Superſcriptions.

Mr. Atterbury. His Majeſty asked him, Who ſubſcribed them?——

L. C. J. Superſcribed them, thou meaneſt, they are not ſubſcribed.

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, my Lord, ſuperſcribed them; and he looked on them again, and ſaid, They were ſuperſcribed by one of his Servants, and ſo ordered to be carried to the Poſt-houſe.

Mr. Recorder. Where is Nehemiah Oſland?

Jury-man. My Lord, We would ask the Witneſs, Whether he did own that he ſent them to the Poſt houſe?

L. C. J. He ſays, he order'd his Man to ſuperſcribe them, and ſo to carry them to the Poſt-houſe.

Mr. Williams. Look you, Mr. Atterbury, Did he ſay he directed any of his Servants to carry them to the Poſt-houſe, upon your Oath?

Mr. Atterbury. I am upon my Oath, Sir; I ſay, that he did ſay, that they were ſuperſcribed by ſome of his Servants, he could not ſay which of his Servants it was, and then they were ſent to the Poſt-houſe.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, mind, and anſwer my Queſtion, Did he ſay, he directed any of his Servants to carry them to the Poſt-houſe?

L. C. J. Did he take any notice to you, or did you underſtand by him, that they were ſent to the Poſt-houſe by his Conſent?

Mr. Atterbury. Yes, my Lord, I did underſtand him ſo.

L. C. J. Did he write theſe Letters to keep them in his Pocket, do you think, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. I do not know what he deſign'd them for, my Lord; nor do I yet know till they are read, what is in them: But I ask him this Queſtion, Did he ſay he ſent them to the Poſt-houſe?

Mr. Atterbury. With your Leave, I remember one thing more, my Lord; while he was in my Houſe, (for there he was in Cuſtody two Days or more) talking about theſe Letters, ſays he, I wonder how they were taken, they were ſent to Sir Skippon, or ſome ſuch Name he named.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Nehemiah Oſland.

[Which was done.

Mr. Herbert. Look upon thoſe Letters, Sir. Shew him them. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Is this Man's Name Oſland?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, Nehemiah Oſland, Do you know any thing of thoſe Superſcriptions?

Oſland. Two of thoſe Superſcriptions I writ by his Order as his Servant.

Mr. Recorder. Which are thoſe two? Then he gave them into the Court.

L. C. J. Can you tell whoſe Hand is the other Part?

Oſland. I did not ſee it writ, but the Hand is ſomewhat like Sir Samuel Bernardiſton's Hand.

L. C. J. You believe it to be his Hand?

Oſland. Yes, I do.

Mr. Williams. Did you ever ſee the Inſide of thoſe Letters that you ſay you ſuperſcribed?

Oſland. No, I never ſaw the Inſide.

L. C. J. What Directions had you about them, after you had ſuperſcribed them?

Oſland. I had no Direction, but to leave them where I uſed to leave his Letters, and that was in a Window that Sir Samuel Bernardiſton always left his Letters in, and from thence one of the Boys uſed to carry them to the Poſt-Houſe.

Mr. Williams. Sir, Did Sir Samuel order you to ſuperſcribe thoſe three Letters, and ſend them to the Poſt-Houſe?

L. C. J. He ſaid he ſuperſcribed them by his Command, and left them in the Place that Letters uſed to be laid that were to go the Poſt-houſe.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, look upon thoſe Letters again.

L. C. J. Whoſe Hand is the Superſcription? Is that Sir Samuel's too?

Oſland. I believe it Sir Samuel's Hand.

L. C. J. Shew that other Letter to Mr. Blaithwaite: What ſay you to it, Sir?

Mr. Blaithwaite. Gentlemen of the Jury: This is another Letter that was ſeized and brought before the King and the Lords of the Council, and this Letter was afterwards owned by Oſland, to be writ by him by Sir Bernardiſton's order.

L. C. J. Did Sir Samuel own this Letter to be his Hand writing too?

Mr. Blaithwaite. No, he did not, but Oſland did own it.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, We prove it otherwiſe to be Sir Samuel's Letter, becauſe it is not his Hand, but his Man's. You Oſland, Do you know who writ that Letter?

Oſland. I writ it.

Mr. Recorder. By whoſe Order?

Oſland. I tranſcribed it out of a Copy given me by Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, as I was his Servant.

L. C. J. And did you write the Superſcription too?

Oſland. Yes, I writ the Superſcription.

L. C. J. In order to what? To go down into the Countrey too?

Oſland. In order to go where it was directed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was that?

Oſland. Into Suffolk, to Sir Philip Skippon.

L. C. J. This Letter was written at London, was it not?

Oſland. In Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, at Sir Samuel's Houſe.

Mr. Williams. What is your Name, Sir?

Oſland. My Name is Oſland.

Mr. Williams. Your Chriſtian Name?

Oſland. Nehemiah.

Mr. Williams: Then, Nehemiah Oſland, I ask you this Queſtion upon your Oath, when theſe Letters were ſuperſcribed by you, did you lay them in that Window you ſpeak of, or did you give them back again to Sir Samuel?

Oſland. Sir, I am not ſo certain as to ſwear to theſe particular Letters; but his uſual Cuſtom was, He would write a Letter, and then give it me to Copy: His Cloſet-door was near another Window, and there he would leave it. If it were but one Letter, he would uſe to ſay, direct ſuch a Letter to ſuch a Perſon, or ſuch a Place, and when it was ſo directed, I was uſed to put my Letters there, and thence one of the Boys came and fetched them to carry them to the Poſt-houſe. But ſometimes he would ſend me down directly with it away to the Poſt-houſe, if he had not any other Buſineſs for me to do.

Mr. Williams. But, Sir, mind the Queſtion. I ask you again: Did you deliver theſe Letters, or any of them back again to Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, or no?

Oſland. I cannot tell for theſe particular Letters. I tell you what the uſual Cuſtom was in the Houſe.

Mr. Williams. Pray when you had ſuperſcribed them, or Sir Samuel, what became of them Letters?

Oſland. They went to the Poſt-houſe, as I believe.

Mr. Williams. How long have you ſerved Sir Samuel Bernardiſton?

Oſland. Five Months.

Mr. Williams. Did you ſerve any body before?

Oſland. No.

Mr. Recorder. Why, do you think he doth not ſerve him well now, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. I know very well what I think of it, Mr. Recorder.

L. C. J. Well, come read them.

Clerk reads —— This is directed to Sir Philip Skippon, Knight, at Ipſwich, and dated Novemb. 29. 83.

(Reads) Sir, The Return of ——

Mr. Williams. That is not Sir Samuel's Hand, I think.

L. C. J. No, but writ by his Order.

Oſland. I tranſcribed it by his ſpecial Order: For he came to me and gave me a Letter, ſays he, Go and make a Copy of this Letter.

Mr. Recorder. And you did tranſcribe it exactly as it was in the Paper he gave you?

Oſland. I examined it after I had writ it my ſelf, and read it over again.

L. C. J. What did you write it out of?

Oſland. A Copy he gave me.

L. C. J. Was that Copy his Hand-writing?

Oſland. I did not ſee him write it, but I believe it to be his writing.

L. C. J. Come read it.

Clerk reads——

Clerk Reads—— This is directed, To Sir Philip Skippon, Knight, at Ipſwich, Suffolk.

L. C. J. That is one of his own writing.

Mr. Recorder. Yes, my Lord.

Clerk. It is dated London the firſt of December, 1683.

Dear Sir,

Mr. Kedder ſat with me ſometime this Evening.

L. C. J. There is no more in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. No my Lord. Then go on to the Third.

Clerk. This is directed, For Mr. Edward Gael, Linnen-Draper at Ipſwich.

Mr. Williams. It is likely he ſhould write theſe Letters to a Draper?

L. C. J. It is, it ſeems, the ordinary riff-raff he writes. He thinks it not below him to keep a Correſpondence with all the Scoundrels of his Party in the Country.

Mr. Recorder. Ay, all Sorts of Trades he is acquainted with.

Clerk. It is dated the firſt of December, 1683.

Reads——Mr. Gael,

This Evening Mr. Kedder came and ſat with me——

L. C. J. Will you have it all read?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we do not deſire it.

L. C. J. Then read what is in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. Look where that Paſſage begins, The late Change——

Clerk. Where is it, Sir? It is not marked.

L. C. J. If you cannot find it out, then read the whole.

Clerk Reads——

Mr. Gael,

THIS Evening Mr. Kedder came and ſat with me, when acquainted him what you and others writ me in reference to himſelf, as alſo of the Death of Mr. Wright, *which he was ſorry for. L. C. J. There begins the Paſſage in the Record.

Clerk reads —— *The late Change here in Publick Affairs is ſo great and ſtrange, that we are like Men in a Dream, can hardly believe what we ſee, and fear we are not fit for ſo great a Mercy as the preſent Juncture ſeems to promiſe. L. C. J. There is all that is in the Record.

Mr. Recorder. There are but two Lines more.

Clerk reads—— Acquaint Mr. Snilling we received the two Barrels of Oyſters, and two Couple of Ducks, and deſire him to take Money of Buckle for them.

I reſt, yours.

Mr. Recorder. Now go on to the next.

Clerk. This is the Fourth Letter: It is directed to Mr. William Cavell, at Brightwell near Ipſwich in Suffolk, and dated London the 4*th* of December, 1683. Shall I read it all?

L. C. J. No, no: If you can find that Part that is in the Record, Contrary to moſt Men's expectations, there it begins.

Clerk Reads——Contrary to moſt Mens expectations, a Warrant is Signed at laſt for Beheading Colonel Sidney at Tower-hill next Friday. *Great Endeavours have been uſed to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much daſheth our Hopes, but God ſtill governs. Clerk. Here is but a Line more (reads) Acquaint Buckle, here is no News of Crafton Hoy, notwithſtanding the Wind is fair, 'tis his Practice always to loyter by the way.

I reſt,

Your loving Friend.

Mr. Williams. Pray let me ſee that Letter.

Mr. Recorder. We have done, my Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Well, What ſay you to it that are for the Defendant?

Mr. Williams. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel here for the Defendant, Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, and the Queſtion now before you is, Whether this Gentleman be knowingly guilty of the writing and publiſhing theſe four Letters that have been read here to you, and which of them he is guilty of writing, and which not? I do not ſee that his Name is put to any of them, nay, the Letters are not ſubſcribed by any body, and that, Gentlemen, you may ſee by looking upon the Letters. For the Evidence that hath been given, I beſeech your Lordſhip to obſerve what it is. As to his publiſhing of them, I ſee no Evidence at all to prove him any way concerned in that: Some of them indeed are his own Hand-writing, and proved to be his Letters, by his own Confeſſion before the King and Council; that Mr. Blathwaite and Mr. Atterbury the Meſſenger ſwear directly, That Sir Samuel Bernardiſton did own the Letters, but for the fourth they ſay he did diſown that to be his Letter, and it is not ſo much as his Hand; but what Proof is it they have brought to apply this to him? You ſee what a Sort of Proof is made: They produce you here a young Man that was (as it happened) his Servant at this time, and lived in his Family with him in the nature of a Secretary, it ſeems; and how fit he was to be entertained in that Quality, you I queſtion not obſerve. He ſays, he did copy this Letter by the Direction of his Maſter. It is well if he did not keep a Copy himſelf by him of ſuch a Letter as this for a particular Uſe, as ſome honeſt Servants have done before now, that have deſigned ſomewhat of Advantage to themſelves: But that is his Evidence about this fourth Letter. That then Gentlemen which we would offer on behalf of the Defendant, is this, Whether there be any Evidence of the publiſhing of theſe Letters by Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, either of all, or any, and which of them? All the Proof that I hear, comes from Atterbury, and the Clerk of the Council Mr. Blathwaite, which is but this: Atterbury ſays, That Sir Samuel ſhould ſay, they were ſent to the Poſt-houſe; and Mr. Blathwaite ſays, he did not deny the publiſhing of them, but he does not ſay, he confeſſed it. As to the ſending to the Poſt-houſe, if it be true, I ſhall leave it to your Lordſhip, how far that, my Lord, can be a publiſhing of a Libel; whether that be a publiſhing within the Information, or no? A Gentleman writes a Letter to a private Friend, and ſends it to the Poſt-houſe; whether that be a publiſhing of a Libel, I leave it to you? For the fourth Letter, this ſame truſty Secretary cannot tell you, whether he delivered it back again to Sir Samuel, or no; or whether he put it in the Window; or whether he delivered it in at the Poſt-houſe, only, as he believes, he laid it in the Window as he uſed to do other Letters. But whatever he believes muſt not paſs for Evidence, eſpecially in Matters of this nature, it being a great Crime, as the Information has ſet it forth. If then there is no Proof (as with Submiſſion I hope there is not) of the Publication of theſe Letters, I ſuppoſe, Gentlemen, you will not take it upon your Oaths, that he is Guilty of what he is here accuſed of without Evidence. This Information, Gentlemen, doth mention ſeveral Things which do very much aggrave the Matter, if they were proved. Many Things are laid in it to induce the Information, and which may much enhance the Crime, but of which I ſee no manner of Proof at all. Many Things are mentioned as Facts leading to the main Fact, which is the great Offence; but theſe not being proved upon him, I deſire he may be acquitted of that Part.

L. C. J. What do you mean Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. Of all your Preamble.

L C J.

L. C. J. What Preamble do you mean?

Mr. Williams. That he being a Perſon of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit——

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Williams: Would you have the Jury find that he is not ſo?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, There is no Proof of it; or that he did do it with a Deſign ſeditiouſly to diſturb the Peace, that he did it with a ſeditious Intent.

L. C. J. You would have the Jury find, I warrant, that he did it piouſly, and with a good Intent.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, There is a middle way——

L. C. J. No, no, Mr. Williams. Let us have none of that Doctrine, we muſt have a care of that, and your middle ways. For certainly the Law ſupplies the Proof, if the thing it ſelf ſpeaks Malice and Sedition. As it is in Murder, we ſay always in the Indictment, He did it by the Inſtigation of the Devil: Can the Jury, if they find the Fact, find he did it not by ſuch Inſtigation? No, that does neceſſarily attend the very nature of ſuch an Action, or Thing. So, in Informations for Offences of this nature, we ſay, He did it falſly, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly, which are the formal Words; but, if the nature of the Thing be ſuch as neceſſarily imports Malice, Reproach, and Scandal to the Government, there needs no Proof but of the Fact done, the Law ſupplies the reſt. If the Fact were indifferent in it ſelf, then to make a Crime of it, the accidental Circumſtances muſt be proved, but it needs not where the Thing implies Malice in its own nature. You would have the Jury find he had no ill Deſign in it; he did it with a good Intent, I warrant you.

Mr. Williams. All I would ask, my Lord, is but this——

L. C. J. Do you think he did it to ſerve the Crown? If the Jury will take it upon their Oaths that Sir Samuel Bernardiſton wrote theſe Letters to ſerve the Crown you ſay ſomething. Pray ask them that Queſtion. Try, if you can make them believe that, Mr. Williams.

Mr. Williams. There is no Evidence given about his Malice.

L. C. J. Yes, The very thing is Evidence of it ſelf.

Mr. Williams. Pray, my Lord, let the Fact lie upon its own weight: There is no Proof given of any of theſe aggravating things.

L. C. J. How ſhall any Man prove another Man's Malice, which is a thing that lies only in a Man's Mind? How ſhould any Man know that I am malicious againſt the Government, but by my Actions?

Mr. Williams. I lay it before your Lordſhip and the Jury.

L. C. J. No Proof can be expected, but what the nature of every thing will bear.

Mr. Williams. Then I pray this, my Lord, that I may be at liberty next Term, if we be convicted, to urge this, and obſerve in mitigation of the Puniſhment, that there was nothing of theſe things proved.

L. C. J. Urge what you can in its proper time, but offer nothing here but what is fit to be offered.

Mr. Williams. Here are mentioned in this Information, (tho' it be by way of Inducement, yet they muſt be proved) things that are Matters of Record, but they have proved none of them.

L. C. J. Have you any of thoſe Records here, the Convictions of my Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney?

Mr. Recorder. Thoſe things are ſo well known, I ſuppoſe they will not conteſt them.

Mr. Williams. Sir, I muſt lay hold on all Advantages for my Client. You have made them part of your Caſe, pray prove them.

Mr. Recorder. Truly, my Lord, We did not think they would have made that any Queſtion, and we have them not here. They know it well enough to be true.

L. C. J. If you have them not here, go and find them; if they inſiſt upon it, you muſt prove them. I will ſtay till you ſetch them.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, We would not hinder your Lordſhip's Buſineſs.——

L. C. J. No, no, It will be no hindrance, I will do ſomething elſe in the mean time. This is a Cauſe of publick Example and Conſequence, and I will give it all the fair Hearing I can.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, If you pleaſe, there is, I ſuppoſe, no ſuch haſte of Trying this Cauſe now, to hinder Buſineſs and keep you here longer than needs. This Cauſe may as well be Tryed the beginning of next Term.

L. C. J. No, no, I will make an end of it now, if I ſtay never ſo long for it; indeed the Defendant ſays, I am down in the Mouth: 'Tis true, I have got a little Hoarſneſs, but I thank God, my Heart is not down, nor I hope never will be to ſerve the Government.

Mr. Williams. If they will, they ſhall find the Letters without the Records.

Mr. Jones. No, no, We muſt have the Records, tho' it is true it is but matter of Form, yet we muſt prove our whole Caſe.

L. C. J. Well, I will ſtay till they are fetched. Let the Jury ſtand by, and I will go on and Try another Cauſe, and in the mean time fetch theſe Records. Do not make two Journeys, but bring all that are mentioned in the Record.

Then the Jury were ſet by, and the Court went on in ſome other Cauſes. and about an hour and an half after the Records were brought, and this Cauſe was reſumed, and proceeded thus.

L. C. J. Well come, Have you thoſe Records now?

Mr. Recorder. Yes, ſwear Mr. Tindal. (Which was done.) Is that a true Copy?

Mr. Tindal. Yes, It is a true Copy of the Indictment, Conviction and Attainder of my Lord Ruſſel. I examined it with Mr. Tanner.

L. C. J. Well, put it in. (And then a Word of it was read by the Clerk.)

Mr. Recorder. And here is the Record it ſelf of the Attainder of Colonel Sidney.

[Which was ſome part of it read alſo.

L. C. J. What ſay you now to it, Gentlemen, for the Defendant?

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I have nothing more to ſay than has been ſaid.

L. C. J. All this was well enough known.

Mr. Jones.

Mr. Jones. Ay, but they would give the Court all the trouble they could by making them ſend for that which they could not deny.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Here is an Information exhibited againſt Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, and the Information ſets forth this Matter. It doth take notice of a horrid Conſpiracy, a damnable Conſpiracy, lately hatched and ſet on foot for the Deſtruction of the King, and for the Subverſion of the Government, That there were divers Perſons who were Indicted, and ſtood Convicted, and were afterwards Executed for this horrid Conſpiracy. Among the reſt, there is notice taken of my Lord Ruſſel for one, and Colonel Sidney (he went by that Name, Algernone Sidney I mean) for another, to be two of thoſe Conſpirators that were engaged in that damnable Conſpiracy for the Deſtruction of the King, and Subverſion of the Government.

Now, Gentlemen, That theſe Perſons according to the Inducement of this Information, were ſo Indicted, ſo Attainted and Executed (as far forth as is recited in the Information) is proved to you by the two Records, which the Counſel on the other ſide inſiſted to have ſhewn, and which have been now produced. The one is ſworn to be a true Copy of the Conviction and Attainder of my Lord Ruſſel, and the other which they produced, was the Record it ſelf of the Conviction and Attainder of Sidney. So that, as to that part it is plain, they were Convicted and Attainted, both the one and the other, as Actors in that Helliſh Plot.

The next thing, Gentlemen, and which was ſo much inſiſted upon by the Defendant's Counſel, is this: The Information takes notice that the Defendant Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, being a Man of a factious, ſeditious, diſaffected Temper towards the Government, a Man of ill Principles, in order to diſturb, diſquiet, and diſcompoſe the Government, he did cauſe ſeveral Letters, Four in Number, to be Writ and Publiſhed, which Letters have been read unto you.

It hath been objected, That in as much as the Words, Falſly, Seditiouſly, Maliciouſly, Factiouſly, and the like Words are in the Information, they would have you believe, That there being no Evidence of any ſuch thing as Faction, Malice and Sedition, or that the Man did it Maliciouſly, and Adviſedly and Seditiouſly (which are the Words in the Premiſes, as I may call them, or the Preamble of the Information) therefore they muſt be acquitted of that part. Now as to that, I told them then, and tell you now, Gentlemen, That no Man living can diſcover the malicious evil Deſigns and Intentions of any other Man, ſo as to give Evidence of them, but by their Words and Actions. No Man can prove what I intend, but by my Words and Actions. Therefore if one doth compaſs and imagine the Death of the King, that by our Law is High Treaſon; but whether or no he be guilty of this Treaſon, ſo as to be convicted of it by another, is not proveable, or diſcoverable, but by ſome Words or Actions, whereby the Imagination may be manifeſted. And therefore my Imagining, my Compaſſing, which is private in my own Mind, muſt be ſubmitted to the Judgment that Reaſon and the Law paſſeth upon my Words or Actions, and then the Action it ſelf being proved, that diſcovers with what mind the thing was done; as in the Caſe I put before to the Counſel. Suppoſe any Man without Provocation kill another, the Words of the Indictment are, That he did it Maliciouſly, Feloniouſly, not having the Fear of God before his Eyes, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil. Now all theſe things, whether he had the Fear of God before his Eyes, or not; or whether he were moved by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and of his Malice forethought, or no; theſe cannot be known, till they come to be proved by the Action that is done.

So that in caſe any Perſon doth write Libels, or publiſh any Expreſſions which in themſelves carry Sedition and Faction, and ill Will towards the Government; I cannot tell well how to expreſs it otherwiſe in his Accuſation, than by ſuch Words, that he did it Seditiouſly, Factiouſly, and Maliciouſly. And the Proof of the thing it ſelf proves the evil Mind it was done with. If then, Gentlemen, you believe the Defendant, Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, did write and publiſh theſe Letters, that is Proof enough of the Words, Maliciouſly, Seditiouſly, and Factiouſly, laid in the Information.

The Letters are Factious, Seditious, and Malicious Letters, and as baſe as the worſt of Mankind (tho' he had had all the Provocation that ever could be given a Man to libel another) could ever have invented. And let Sir Samuel Bernardiſton put it under the Countenance, or under the Umbrage, or under the Enamel of his Zeal for the true Proteſtant Religion, if he will; or if he have a mind to it, to give himſelf any Fine Name, by calling himſelf one of the Sober Party, or the Godly Party, or the Upright Party; let him gild himſelf, and paint himſelf as he pleaſeth, yet the inſide is rotten, and 'tis Factious and Seditious at the bottom to all Intents and Purpoſes whatſoever. And if he be Guilty of it, as you Gentlemen are to Try and Conſider; the greater the Man is, the greater the Crime, and the more Underſtanding he has, the more Malicious he ſeems to be: For your little ordinary ſort of People, that are of common mean Underſtanding, they may be wheedled and drawn in, and ſurprized into ſuch things; but Men of a publick Figure, and of ſome Value in the World, that have been taken to be Men of the greateſt Intereſt and Reputation in a Party, it cannot be thought a ſudden Surprize upon them, no, 'tis a Work of Time and Thought, 'tis a thing fixed in his very Nature, and it ſhews ſo much Venom, as would make one think the whole Maſs of his Blood were corrupted. I had thought the Act of Oblivion might have put Sir Samuel Bernardiſton in mind, That it was not fit any more to go down to Whiteball, to make Uproars, and Tumults, and Hubbubs.

But here is the Matter that he now is accuſed of, and here is in it Malice againſt the King, Malice againſt the Government, Malice againſt both Church and State, Malice againſt any Man that bears any Share in the Government, indeed Malice againſt all Mankind that are not of the ſame Perſwaſion with thoſe bloody Miſcreants, (I cannot give them a milder Name) I mean the Conſpirators in the late damnable Conſpiracy, ſome of whom have been Attainted and and Executed for it. Here is the Sanctifying of Traitors, that were juſtly Sentenced to Execution according to the Law of the Land, and at the ſame time there is joyned with it the moſt inveterate Inſinuation againſt the Government that can be, as tho' the King was prevailed with, upon a Sham Proteſtant Plot, to do things in order to deſtroy the Government it ſelf, and every one of the Sober Party, as they call themſelves. For theſe Perſons could not have ſuffered, but as Condemned according to the Rules of Law, but theſe Letters carry an Inſinuation as if they were cut off by a Sham Trick and Deſign. For after the good News of the Reprieve of Sidney was contradicted, the Warrant for his Execution is taken notice of, and you ſee the manner of Expreſſion that is uſed, their Party has prevail'd, as tho' the putting the Laws in Execution, and hanging of Traitors, were ſuch a thing that a Party muſt be ſet up to prevail to do it, and Mankind muſt be divided into Parties, their Party and our Party, and the contrary Party, they have prevailed; and truly now our Party, the Sober Party as he calls it, are in a very ſad Condition.

Then here is, as I ſaid, the Sainting of Two horrid Conſpirators, here is the Lord Ruſſel Sainted, that bleſſed Martyr, my Lord Ruſſel, that good Man, that excellent Proteſtant, he is lamented, and what an extraordinary Man he was, who was fairly Tryed, and juſtly Convicted and Attainted, for having a hand in this horrid Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the King, and his deareſt Brother His Royal Highneſs, and for the Subverſion of the Government. And here is Mr. Sidney Sainted, what an extraordinary Man he was? Yes ſurely, he was a very good Man, becauſe you may ſome of you remember, or have read the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, and know what Share Mr. Sidney had in that black and horrid Villany, that curſed Treaſon and Murder, the Murder I mean of King Charles I. of Bleſſed Memory, a Shame to Religion it ſelf, a perpetual Reproach to the Iſland we live in, to think that a Prince ſhould be brought by pretended Methods of Law and Juſtice to ſuch an End at his own Palace. And 'tis a Shame to think, that ſuch bloody Miſcreants ſhould be Sainted and Lamented, who had any hand in that horrid Murder and Treaſon, and who to their dying Minutes, when they were upon the brink of Eternity, and juſt ſtepping into another World, could confidently bleſs God for their being engaged in that Good Cauſe, (as they call it) which was the Rebellion which brought that Bleſſed Martyr to His Death. It is high time for all Mankind, that have any Chriſtianity or Senſe of Heaven or Hell, to beſtir themſelves, to rid the Nation of ſuch Caterpillars, ſuch Monſters of Villany as theſe are.

Nay, In theſe very Letters is contained the very Language of that curſed Murderer and Traitor Walcot himſelf, That God Almighty in his own time would raiſe up Inſtruments. I know, Gentlemen, you have heard and read what that bloody Traitor ſaid to that effect; and you hear what Expreſſions like it are in theſe Letters, I am ſorry for the Death of our Friend, honeſt Mr. John Wright, but God can eaſily raiſe up Inſtruments to do his own Work; the very Language of Walcot. And I would have you take notice of it, Mr. Blackerby, for I would have you take warning by theſe things.

[Speaking to a Gentleman that was taking Notes.

Mr. Blackerby. My Lord, I have neither ſaid nor done any thing that ſhould give you occaſion to ſpeak thus to me.

L. C. J. Theſe Letters tell you, God will be ſure to raiſe up Inſtruments, but what Inſtruments do they mean? Inſtruments of Rebellion, and Faction, and Sedition, which they moſt falſly call, his own Work. For it is that monſtrous Sin Rebellion that they mean by it, Inſtruments of Treaſon, under pretence of fighting for God Almighty they would fain be fighting againſt the Government. It was the Language of the former Times, wherewith they deſtroyed the beſt of Kings, and ſubverted the beſt of Governments for a time, and were very near having totally deſtroyed Three Kingdoms, under pretence of doing God good Service. And when once a People purſue ſuch Principles, and, under the Pretence of Religion, endeavour to deſtroy Monarchy and Government it ſelf, it is high time for all honeſt Men to look about them.

Nay, and you may obſerve, Gentlemen, another thing in theſe Letters, it is not only the Deſtruction of the Civil Government, the King and thoſe that are in Authority near Him that are aimed at; but all Perſons that come with humble Repreſentations of their Loyalty to Him, all that Addreſs themſelves to the King to ſhew their Duty, and their Diſlike of that damnable Deſign and Conſpiracy againſt Him. For now (ſays Sir Samuel Bernardiſton) all the Sham Plot is quite blown off, and we cannot find any here, 'tis loſt except you can find it among the Addreſſers and Abhorrers in the Country, or among a parcel of Clergymen. —— So that all Mankind, that ever thought themſelves obliged to congratulate that bleſſed and happy Deliverance, either to own our Thankfulneſs to God for it, to whom we owe more than we are able to pay for his great Mercy to us therein, or to expreſs our Joy to the King, in humble Addreſſes, Congratulating His Deliverance from the horrid Conſpiracy lately deſigned againſt Him, His Brother and the Government; theſe Gentlemen, becauſe they are Loyal Subjects, and deſire to ſhew themſelves ſo, muſt be branded with the Names of Abhorrers, Tories, Addreſſers, Sham-Plotters, and all the Ignominy they can lay upon them. This ſhews it was not only aimed at the Civil Magiſtracy, but at all that dare be honeſt and oppoſe Faction and Rebellion.

As for any thing that he has ſaid of me, Sir Samuel Bernardiſton ſhall write and ſpeak of me as long as he pleaſes. But tho' he ſays, I am down in the Mouth; it is true, I have a little loſt my Tongue by my Cold, yet I hope I ſhall never loſe my Heart nor Spirit to ſerve the Government, nor forbear to uſe my utmoſt Diligence to ſee that ſuch Offenders as theſe Perſons, that entertain Principles ſo deſtructive to the Government, be brought to condign Puniſhment. And be they who they will, were they my own Brothers, I ſhould be of the ſame mind, and in that mind I hope in God I ſhall live and dye.

Gentlemen, the Queſtion before you is, whether the Defendant be guilty of writing theſe

Malicious, Seditious Letters; for that they are Malicious and Factious, no honeſt Man can doubt in the leaſt, and I do not find that the Counſel for the Defendant do offer to ſay any thing in defence of the Letters, or can ſay, but that they are as venomous, malicious, ſeditious, factious, tumultuous Letters, as can be written, and I muſt tell you, tread very near upon the Borders of High Treaſon it ſelf. I am ſure I may venture to call it Cozen German to High Treaſon.

Now that he did write and publiſh them, you have this Proof before you: Mr. Blathwaite tells you, That Sir Samuel did own three of them, acknowledge them to be his own Writing, before His Sacred Majeſty in Council. Atterbury the Meſſenger ſays, he was by too when he did before the King acknowledge the Writing of thoſe Three Letters. As to the Superſcription to one of thoſe Three Letters, you have the Teſtimony of Oſland, the young Man that lived with Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, he Swears he writ it by his Direction, being his Servant. And as to the Fourth Letter, this young Man does directly ſwear, that the Original he copied it by (for it is his Writing) he had from Sir Samuel Bernardiſton, and 'twas of Sir Samuel's own Writing (which he knows well, being acquainted with his Hand) and that Sir Samuel expreſly directed him to Copy it out, which he did by his Command, and this is the ſame Letter; and ſo though 'tis not under his Hand, yet it is under his Man's, and written by his Direction. And he ſays, he does believe the other Three to be his Hand-writing. So as to the Dictating and Writing of theſe Letters, you have as full and as plain a Proof as can be made.

And as to his Publiſhing of them, which is another Part of the Information, and of which Mr. Williams ſaid there was no Proof, I would ſay but this to you. Is it not very prepoſterous, abſurd and ſenſeleſs, to think that ever it ſhould enter into any Man's Imagination, That Sir Samuel Bernardiſton would take ſuch a wonderful deal of Pains and Care to write theſe Letters to Sir Philip Skippon, and to the other two Men, to tell them of his Endeavours to take off Mr. Kedder's Scruples, and perſwade him to go down to Ipſwich, and to deſire them to take care of the Sober Party, and endeavour to get Sober Men into play, and all will do well, and that the Duke of Monmouth had denied all the Plot, and ſo given the Lie to the King and the Courts of Juſtice, and now there was a Door opened for Sober Men to come in, and God would raiſe up Inſtruments, and the Sober Party will up again? Do you think, I ſay, he would write all this Fuſtian Stuff (for I can call it no better than Stuff, though it be very malicious Stuff) and carry to his Man to Copy out, and Superſcribe them and Seal them, only to put them in his Pocket? If you can believe this, upon my Word you have a Faith able to remove great Mountains; but I aſſure you my Faith cannot get to that Strength.

But for further Proof of the publiſhing, you hear what the young Man that was the Defendant's Servant ſays. He tells you, the uſual way of dealing with Sir Samuel's Letters was this, There was a Window near Sir Samuel's Cloſet, and when the Letters were Sealed up, they were uſed to be put there, in order that the Boy, according to the uſual courſe, might carry them to the Poſt-Houſe. And he doth believe theſe Letters (though he cannot particularly and poſitively ſpeak to them) were ſo uſed.

Beſides all this, you have it by Atterbury poſitively Sworn, that about the ſame time that Sir Samuel Bernardiſton did acknowledge before the King, that he writ thoſe Letters, being in his Cuſtody, he did ſay they were ſent to the Poſt-houſe, and he wondered how they came by 'em. That proves it was done by his Privity. And beyond all there is this Circumſtance, that the Thing ſpeaks it ſelf, they are directed to Men at Ipſwich, where Sir Samuel Bernardiſton is known to have a Correſpondence, they take notice of the receipt of Letters from thence, and of the Death of Mr. Wright, mentioned in thoſe Letters, which ſhews them to be Anſwers to Letters received, and muſt not theſe think you be ſent, but kept ſtill in his Pocket? There is notice alſo taken in them, of their Country Affairs: Though they ſeemed to have met with ſome Diſappointment in ſuch a Buſineſs about Mr. Kedder, yet they were reſolved to go on, and deſires them to communicate this Buſineſs of Mr. Kedder and Dr. Clegitt, to ſuch and ſuch of our Friends, and deſire them to beſtir themſelves, and get in Sober Men, ſuch as Mr. Kedder, among them. For it is mightily for our Advantage, that there ſhould be Sober Men brought into play at Ipſwich, and pray be ſure to keep the Sober Party up. Theſe Things in their own nature ſpeak, that theſe Letters were intended and written, in order to preſerve a Correſpondence between thoſe of the ſober Party in Ipſwich, and their Friends here, and therefore you may eaſily conclude what was to be done with them.

So that, Gentlemen, this Information ſurely (if ever any was) is fully proved, as it is laid in all the Parts of it.

I would not have given you ſo much Trouble at this Time, in an Affair of this Nature, that has been ſo evidently proved, becauſe your Queſtion that you are to Try, is only, Whether the Defendant be Guilty of this Offence, or not Guilty? (You are not to inflict the Penalty, that is the Province of the Court above;) but only becauſe I ſee it is a Matter of great Expectation and Conſequence. I would not we ſhould be gulled twice in one Age, by the ſelf-ſame Men, and the ſelf-ſame Way, into the ſame Treaſon and Rebellion, and all thoſe other Miſchiefs, that dreadful Chaos and State of Confuſion, Miſery and Deſtruction, that we were brought into in the late Times. And that has made me take ſo much notice now in this Place of the Tendency of Things of this Nature, that we may learn to beware of, and know theſe Men that carry Sheep's cloathing, pretend Zeal and Religion, but their Inſides are Wolves. They are Traitors in their Minds, whatſoever they are in their outward Pretences.

Then the Jury laid their Heads together in the Place where they ſtood, and being preſently after agreed upon their Verdict, the Foreman gave it in,

That the Defendant Sir Samuel Bernardiſton was Guilty of the Offence and Miſdemeanour, Charged on him by the Information.

Which Verdict was Recorded by the Clerk.

PRO-

PROCEEDINGS on the OUTLAWRY againſt James Holloway, for High Treaſon.

Die Lunæ 21 April. 36 Car' Secund. Regis. Anno Dom' 1684. B. R.

Dominus Rex verſus Jacobum Holloway.

HIS Majeſty's Attorney General having on Friday laſt, moved the Court of King's Bench for an Habeas Corpus Returnable this Day, directed to the Keeper of His Majeſty's Goal of Newgate, to bring thither the Body of James Holloway, then in his Cuſtody, to ſhew Cauſe why Execution ſhould not be awarded upon an Outlawry for High-Treaſon againſt him. The Keeper of Newgate, according to the Command of the Writ, brought him this Day to the Bar of the ſaid Court, where he was proceeded againſt in this Manner.

The Return of the Writ of Habeas Corpus was firſt Read.

Cl. of Cr. James Holloway, Hold up thy Hand, [Which he did.

Thou haſt been Indicted in London, by the Name of James Holloway, late of London, Merchant, for High Treaſon by thee committed, touching the King's Majeſty's Perſon, and the Government of this His Kingdom of England, and for not appearing and anſwering that Indictment, by due Proceſs of Law, upon the Indictment thou ſtandeſt Outlawed, and upon that Outlawry thou ſtandeſt Attainted of the ſame High Treaſon; What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt thee upon that Attainder by this Court according to Law?

Holloway. My Lord, I have been a great while Abſent, and know not what hath been done in this Matter, or proved againſt me.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. Yes, you have been abſent ſo long it ſeems, that you now ſtand Outlawed, and thereby Attainted of High Treaſon; there is nothing now remains with the Court, but only to make a Rule for your Execution.

Holloway. If an ingenuous Confeſſion of the Truth will merit the King's Pardon, then ſure I have done it.

L. C. J. For that Matter we are not to diſpoſe of the King's Mercy, he will diſpoſe of his own Mercy as he ſhall think fit. Is Mr. Attorney in the Hall?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he is.

L. C. J. Then pray ſend for him.

Which was done, and in a little time after he came into Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, here is the Priſoner at the Bar, Holloway.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, I ſee he is. Sir Samuel Aſtry, have you the Record there?

Cl. of Cr. Yes, Sir.

L. C. J. It has been read to him, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would know what he ſaith that Execution ſhould not be Awarded.

L. C. J. He talks of Diſcoveries and Confeſſions which we, you know, cannot take any notice of; Ask him again.

Cl. of Cr. Haſt thou any thing to ſay for thy ſelf why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt thee according to Law?

Holloway. My Lord, I know not what hath been proved againſt me, but I have made ſuch an ingenuous Confeſſion to His Majeſty of what I know———

L. C. J. Proved againſt you? You are Outlawed upon an Indictment for High Treaſon; what can you ſay againſt the Court's awarding Execution?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, has he heard the Indictment upon which the Outlawry was grounded?

Cl. of Cr. No, Sir, only the Subſtance was told him, That he was Indicted of High Treaſon, and Outlawed for it, and ſtands Attainted by that Outlawry.

Mr. At. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, the Indictment may be read to him, that he may underſtand what it is, and may not go blind to Execution.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Attorney, if you pleaſe, let it be ſo.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. The Jurors being Sworn to enquire for our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the County of the City of London, upon their Oaths preſent, That——— [And ſo the whole Indictment was read.

Cl. of Cr. That is the Indictment, Mr. Attorney, and upon this he is Outlawed.

Mr. At. Gen. And ſo ſtands Attainted. What hath he to ſay to it?

L. C. J. Ay, why ſhould not we award Execution againſt him according to Law?

Cl. of Cr. Have you any Thing to ſay?

Holloway. I have ſaid what I have to ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what is that, my Lord, that he has ſaid, for I was not here?

Holloway. I beg His Majeſty's Mercy.

Mr. At. Gen. If the King be ſo Gracious as to admit you to your Tryal, can you make a Defence againſt the Indictment? Have you any Thing to ſay that you can defend your ſelf by, if the King do admit you to be tryed, and that is a Mercy and a Grace, for at Law you are gone.

L. C. J. It is ſo, indeed, Mr. Attorney; if you will on the King's Behalf indulge him ſo far, as I ſuppoſe you have Authority from the King to Conſent unto, that if he has a mind to try the Fact, and can defend himſelf, he ſhall have that Liberty, that is a great Mercy, I aſſure you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, That is the only reaſon why I did cauſe the Indictment to be read that he might hear it; that ſuppoſing he were not Outlawed, but that were out of the Caſe, if he hath any thing to ſay that could defend him from it, the King would not exclude him, but admit him to his Tryal, and extend his Mercy ſo far to him.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, it is exceeding well. Now you underſtand what is ſaid by the King's Attorney, you have heard the Indictment read, it is an Indictment of High Treaſon, that you with other falſe Traytors, Hone, Rumball, the Goodenough's, and the reſt, did Conſpire the Death of the King. Now though you are in Law actually Attainted, as much as if you had been Tryed and Convicted, and received Judgment of Death upon that Conviction, to all intents and purpoſes, and there is no more for the Court to do, but to award Execution upon this Attainder, and be dealt with as a falſe Traytor. Yet however in as much as you have heard the Indictment read, if you think you have any thing to ſay that would ſatisfy the World, or a Jury, that you are not Guilty of what you are Indicted and Accuſed of, it ſeems the King is pleaſed to ſignify His Gracious Intention towards you by Mr. Attorney General, that he is contented to wave that other Part the Attainder by Outlawry, and you ſhall have the Liberty to try it, if you think you can defend your ſelf.

Holloway. My Lord, I cannot undertake to defend my ſelf, for I have Confeſſed before His Majeſty that I am Guilty of many Things in that Indictment, and I throw my ſelf on the King's Mercy.

L. C. J. Then he Confeſſeth it, and will not undertake to defend himſelf; as for the King's Mercy, that we muſt leave to His Majeſty, who is the Diſpenſer of his own Grace, we are to execute his Juſtice, and muſt give a Rule accordingly.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But I hope every body here takes notice of his open Confeſſion, when he might try it if he would. Surely none but will believe this Conſpiracy now, after what this Man hath owned.

L. C. J. We were well enough ſatisfied about it before, and ſo was every honeſt Man, I dare ſay.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Yet, perhaps, though he ſaith it, and others have confeſſed it, and the Evidence hath been made Publick, there are many People that ſay they will not believe it.

L. C. J. We do not mightily concern our ſelves what the People ſay. I am ſure not one of all that were concerned in this Conſpiracy, have dared to deny it abſolutely, though ſome have been prevailed upon by ill Advice, to Prevaricate about it, and ſhuffle it off. But none of them have had the Confidence abſolutely to deny the Truth of the Fact, notwithſtanding all the Calumnies and Reproaches caſt upon the Government, and all the Arts that have been made uſe of to ſtifle it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. My Lord, I ſpeak it the rather, becauſe we ſee what work Sir Samuel Bernardiſton has made of it in his Letters, where he calls it a Sham Plot, and ſays it is loſt, except it be found among the Abhorrers and Addreſſers.

L. C. J. But now the Plot is found among the Conſpirators and Traytors, he may write to his Correſpondents in the Country the next time: It is found among the Reformers of Government and Religion, that can ſwallow all Things, that can kill Kings, and levy War, and do the worſt of Villanies to promote Religion and Reformation, as they call it —— Let us think of ſome convenient Day, and give ſuch Order that the Sheriffs ſee Execution done according to Law.

Mr. At. Gen. You muſt firſt pronounce the Judgment, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is never pronounced in ſuch a Caſe, Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. No, we only give a Rule for Execution, the Outlawry is the Judgment, and that is upon the Record already.

Cl. of Cr. Yes, my Lord, we always enter it ſo.

L. C. J. Captain Richardſon, I think, Wedneſdays and Fridays are your uſual Execution Days in London, are they not?

Cap. Richardſon. Yes, my Lord, either of them.

L. C. J. Then Wedneſday ſeven-night.

Cap. Richardſon. Does your Lordſhip appoint Wedneſday next?

L. C. J. No, that will be too quick; Wedneſday ſeven night.

Cap. Richardſon. What Day your Lordſhip pleaſeth, I ſuppoſe I ſhall have a Rule.

Cl. of Cr. You ſhall have a Rule, and an Habeas Corpus to deliver him, as the Courſe is.

L. C. J. In the mean time take your Priſoner back again.

And accordingly he was carried back to Newgate.

HIS Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, having brought an Action againſt Titus Otes, grounded upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum, for very Slanderous and Opprobrious Words, the Defendant ſuffered Judgment to go againſt him by Default, and thereupon a Writ of Inquiry was taken out, directed to the Sheriff of the County of Middleſex, to enquire by a Jury of that County, what Damages the Plaintiff had ſuſtained thereby, and upon a Motion made at the Court of King's Bench, a Day was given to the Defendant, to ſhew Cauſe why that Writ of Inquiry ſhould not be executed at the Bar of that Court, which he not doing, it was ordered, That it ſhould be executed at the Bar on this Day, and that the High Sheriff ſhould appear and attend the Execution of the Writ in Perſon. Accordingly this Day Sir Peter Daniel, Knight, and Samuel Daſhwood, Eſquire, the preſent Sheriff of the County of Middleſex, came into this Court, and being placed at the Table at the Judges Feet, were during the Execution of the Writ, covered. L. C. J. How many do you uſe to have? Pray ſwear an odd Number as you uſed to do. Sir George Jefferies.

By reaſon whereof the ſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany our only Brother, in his Reputation, Honour and Dignity is very much hurt and ſcandalized. And the ſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, the Grace, good Opinion and Eſteem which we and others the great Men of this Kingdom of England before towards him JAMES Duke of York and Albany, did bear, utterly loſt, and divers Rumors and Scandals between very many Nobles and Peers of this Kingdom of England, and other our Subjects, by the Occaſions aforeſaid, within this Kingdom of England, are ariſen and divulged, and great Scandals and Diſcords by occaſion of the Premiſes between him the aforeſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, and divers Nobles and great Men, and other Subjects of this Kingdom of England are ariſen; and daily more and more in the like may ariſe, to the great Diſturbance of the Peace and publick Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, and in Contempt of us and our Government of this Kingdom of England, and to the great Scandal and Grievance of him JAMES Duke of York and Albany, to the Damage of him the ſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany, our moſt dear Brother, a Hundred Thouſand Pounds: As he then ſaid, and thereupon in our Court before us it was ſo proceeded, That the aforeſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany our only Brother his Damages againſt the ſaid Titus Otes by occaſion of the Premiſſes ought to recover: But becauſe it is not known to our Court before us, what Damages the aforeſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany our Brother hath ſuſtained, as well by occaſion of the Premiſſes, as for his Coſts and Charges by him about his Suit in this behalf expended. Therefore We command you, that by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of your Bailiwick, you diligently enquire what Damages the aforeſaid JAMES Duke of York and Albany hath ſuſtained, as well by occaſion of the Premiſſes, as for his Coſts and Charges by him about his Suit in this behalf expended, and the Inquiſition which thereupon you ſhall take, you ſhall have before Us at Weſtminſter on Wedneſday next after three Weeks of the Holy Trinity, under your Seal, and the Seals of them by whoſe Oath you take that Inquiſition, diſtinctly and openly you ſend, and this Writ. Teſte Sir George Jefferies, Knight and Baronet, at Weſtminſter the Thirtieth Day of May, in the Year of our Reign the Six and Thirtieth.

Ri. Swift. Henley.

You are to enquire what Damages his Royal Highneſs the Plaintiff has ſuſtain'd, by means of the Premiſſes; As alſo, what Coſts he has been at in this Suit.

Mr. Hanſes. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, you Mr. Sheriffs, and Gentlemen of the Jury, His Royal Highneſs the Duke of York is Plaintiff, and Titus Otes is the Defendant; And this is in an Action of Treſpaſs and Contempt, grounded upon the Statute of Scandalum Magnatum, wherein His Royal Highneſs ſets forth, That whereas ſuch a Statute was made, prohibiting the Slandering the great Men and Peers of the Kingdom, and the Plaintiff being the King's only Brother, and a Peer, the Defendant upon a Diſcourſe between him the Defendant and ſome other Perſons, about a Letter that the Defendant had then in his Hands, publickly, falſely, and with an intent to ſcandalize the Plaintiff, ſpoke theſe Engliſh Words:

This Letter (meaning the Letter then in the Defendant's Hands) coſt me (meaning the Defendant) nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny; I (meaning the Defendant) know no body is the better for it, but that Traytor JAMES Duke of YORK, meaning the Plaintiff.

Gentlemen, This is not all, the Declaration goes on further, and ſays, That the Defendant intending further to ſcandalize the Plaintiff, the Sixth of December in the Thirty fifth Year of this King, upon a Diſcourſe had and moved by and between him the Defendant and ſome other Perſons, in the Preſence of divers venerable Perſons, ſaid theſe Words of the Plaintiff:

The Duke of York (meaning the Plaintiff) is a Traitor; And this is laid to the Plaintiff's Damage of One Hundred Thouſand Pounds: The Defendant has not pleaded, and the Plaintiff has ſigned his Judgment; and now you, Gentlemen, are to enquire of the Damages.

Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. You obſerve, Gentlemen, the Words are acknowledged by the Defendant's Default, and not pleading; ſo that they were ſpoken is owned by him, and you are to enquire only of the Damages: And, I think, there will need nothing to be ſaid for the Aggravation of them, they are Words of the higheſt nature, in reſpect of Slander and Scandal, that can be ſpoken or thought of, Accuſing him of Treaſon. We ſhall only call you ſome Witneſſes to prove this way of Diſcourſe to be his conſtant habit in all Places, and among all Perſons and Company, inveighing againſt the Government, and particularly againſt His Royal Highneſs the Plaintiff; and then you will, I know, give ſuch Damages, as may be fit to repair the Plaintiff's Honour.

Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will call ſome Witneſſes, to give you an Account how he uſes to treat the Plaintiff in all Companies, and we ſhall begin with Mr. Smith. And the Truth is, the proving of the Words, will demonſtrate the Malice of them; and the Manner and Circumſtances of ſpeaking, will make them appear to be ſuch, as need nothing to be ſaid

ſaid for their Aggravation at all. Swear Mr. James Smith.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. The Evidence that you ſhall give to the Sheriffs and the Jury, ſworn about the Matter in Queſtion, ſhall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Smith, pray will you tell the Court and the Jury, what you have heard the Defendant Otes ſay of his Royal Highneſs.

Mr. Smith. At the laſt Weſtminſter Parliament, as I was ſitting in a Coffee-houſe, I ſaw Mr. Otes, he had a Letter in his Hand, and he ſaid, This Letter coſt me nine Pence, it might have been brought for a Penny, I know no body that is the better for it but a Traytor, to the beſt of my remembrance he ſaid, the Duke of York.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Penniſton Whaley (which was done) What Words did you hear Mr. Otes ſay of his Royal Highneſs?

Mr. Whaley. The Time was either the Eaſter or Whitſontide after Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Tryal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were the Words you then heard him ſay?

Mr. Whaley. It was at the Biſhop of Ely's Table at Ely Houſe. I had received the Sacrament at the Chappel there that Day, and ſo had the Doctor too; it was upon Eaſter-day or Whitſunday, I ſuppoſe, becauſe I never uſed to receive the Sacrament here in Town, but one of thoſe two times; and Dr. Otes and I were ſitting there, and ſome Diſcourſe happened about Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Tryal, and he fell very foul upon the Jury, and ſaid, They were a Company of profligate Villains (or ſome ſuch Expreſſion as he was wont to uſe) and ſaid, He would have them Attainted. Then ſaid I to him, Doctor, you are a good Man at a Matter of Fact, but, I doubt, you are not ſo at a Matter of Law. Upon that, we came to ſome high Words about that and other Things, and among the reſt of the Diſcourſe, he ſaid, The Duke of York was a Traytor. Upon that, I ſaid to him, Doctor you lie under a great Error in that, I ſuppoſe, by miſtaking a Statute made againſt Popery; ſays he, No matter for that, I ſay he is a Traytor. Then there were ſome other Diſcourſes happened afterwards, and I began to reply, and growing both of us pretty warm, the Doctor called to his two Men, his Myrmidons, that uſed to be always with him, and follow him up and down: Said I to him, Nay, Doctor, you need not call your Men to your Aſſiſtance, there is no body here will hurt you: Do you think the Biſhop of Ely's Table is not a Protection good enough for any body that comes here?

L. C. J. Where was this, Sir, pray do you ſay?

Mr. Whaley. At the Biſhop of Ely's Table.

L. C. J. Was the Biſhop there, then?

Mr. Whaley. He was at the Table, but at a great diſtance from us, the Doctor and I ſat at the lower end of the Table. Afterwards I begged the Biſhop of Ely's Pardon, for being ſo hot and loud at his Table; ſays the Biſhop to me, I thank you kindly for it, none of us dare talk with him.

L. C. J. And this you ſay was at Dinner, after the Sacrament was over?

Mr. Whaley. Yes, it was ſo.

Mr. North. Then ſwear Edward Johnſon.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Johnſon, Pray will you give the Court and Jury an Account, what Diſcourſe you have heard from the Defendant, Mr. Otes, againſt the Plaintiff.

Mr. Johnſon. Upon the Three and twentieth of Auguſt, 1680. I met Dr. Otes, and ſaid, Good morrow Doctor, all Things will go well now—

L. C. J. You mean him they call Dr. Otes, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Johnſon. Yes, they uſed to call him ſo; ſaid I, Good morrow Doctor, all Things will go well now, for there is a Parliament to meet in a little time. No, ſaid he, not till YORK is either Baniſhed or Hanged; but of the two, Hanging is the fitteſt for him. Said I, Do not talk ſo, Doctor: Says he, I ſpeak nothing but what is true; he has a good Brother, but he takes all the Courſes in the World to undo him: And then the Doctor and my Lord Howard went away together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Randall Bowring. [Which was done.

What have you heard Mr. Otes ſay of the Duke of YORK?

Mr. Bowring. About the middle of October, 1679. there were ſeveral Perſons at Dinner with the Doctor.

L. C. J. What Doctor, prithee?

Mr. Bowring. Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes we know very well, but we do not ſo well know who this Doctor is.

Mr. Bowring. They uſed to call him Doctor, or I ſhould not have taken upon me to give him the Title.

L. C. J. Well, go on: There were ſeveral Perſons at Dinner with him, and what then?

Mr. Bowring. There happened ſome Diſcourſe concerning His Royal Highneſs.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Mr. Bowring. At his Lodgings at White-Hall: And a Gentleman that was there, ſaid, In caſe His Royal Highneſs were a Papiſt, how ſhould we be ſecured, that in caſe he come to the Succeſſion of the Crown, he would not bring in Popery among us? Then the Doctor replied, I would not have you trouble your ſelf about that, for he ſhall be hanged before that time.

Mr. At. Gen. What have you heard him ſay any where elſe, at Foſter-Lane, or any other Place?

Mr. Bowring. After the Sermon he had preached there at Foſter-Lane Church, the Churchwardens, and ſome of the Pariſh, invited him into the Veſtry to drink a Glaſs of Wine.

L. C. J. What? He made as if he would preach there?

Mr. Bowring. He did preach there, and then the Church-wardens invited him to Dinner; but then he asked them, If ever any of them had dined with JAMES Duke of YORK, at any of the Feaſts of the City, where the Duke uſed to come ſometimes? To which none of them anſwering a Word, he replied, He would not dine with any Man that had eat with the Devil: And ſo would not go to dine with them, but went and dined at a private Braſier's by London-wall.

L. C. J. An excellent Goſpel-Preacher, upon my word.

Mr At. Gen. What Braſier was that?

Mr. Bowring. Truly I do not well know his Name.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he live?

Mr. Bowring. By London-wall.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then Swear Mr. Fairfax. [Which was done.

Pray, Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Words you heard this Man ſpeak of his Royal Highneſs.

Mr. Fairfax. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, in Auguſt 1679. I happened to come into the Company of Otes the Defendant, upon the account of an Election that was to be of Parliament-men for Grinſtead in Suſſex, by the means of one Aukland; Otes was to go down thither in my Lord Wharton's Coach, and then we came firſt to be acquainted, and afterwards we frequently did eat together, and became very well acquainted. And in my Lord Scrogg's Time, when he was Lord Chief Juſtice, there was ſome Preſentment intended to be brought in by the Grand Jury here at the Term, againſt His Royal Highneſs for being a Papiſt, and not coming to Church, and this Otes was the main Proſecutor of it. He was uſed often to come up to me, and ſpeak to me when he met me; and I was about that time walking in the Court that was built up here for the Tryal of the Lords in the Tower, it was after that Grand Jury were diſmiſſed, which was done a Day or two before they uſed to be diſmiſt in the ordinary courſe, and walking there I met Otes, and ſaid I to him, Doctor, Now you are Nonſuited, what will you do now? Oh, ſays he, We will do well enough; there will be a Seſſions after the Term, and there we will at him again; and we will have no more regard for him, than if he were Scavinger of Kent-ſtreet: And upon that he was called away from me, and he went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Philips. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Mr. Philips, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what you have heard Otes ſay of the Duke of YORK?

Mr. Philips. In or about January (78.) may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I was in the Company of one Deacon, at Otes's Lodgings at White-Hall, where Mr. Otes ſaid, He hoped to ſee your or our Maſter JAMES (meaning the Duke of YORK, His Royal Highneſs I ſuppoſe) at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons; and it would be no diſparagement to him to appear there, for there were better Men Members of that Houſe than he was.

L. C. J. Pray what was the Occaſion of this Diſcourſe?

Mr. Philips. Truly it was a Diſcourſe of his own; he ran it on, we talked but little to him.

L. C. J. Who did he apply himſelf to in that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Philips. To us two, Mr. Deacon and I.

L. C. J. How came he to mention your Maſter JAMES, had you any relation to the Service of His Royal Highneſs?

Mr. Philips. No, my Lord, we had not; but he ſaid, either our Maſter, or your Maſter: He run on in ſuch kind of Diſcourſe as he uſed to do.

L. C. J. But do you think he intended His Royal Highneſs, when he named your Maſter JAMES?

Mr. Philips. I could not imagine he did mean any body elſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear William Aſhlock. [Which was done.

Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, what Words you have heard him ſpeak of his Royal Highneſs.

Mr. Aſhlock. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, in Eaſter Term, 1682. Dr. Otes——

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes, you mean.

Mr. Aſhlock. Mr. Otes went out one Morning, with Dolben and Robin Nichols, two of his Men, from his Lodgings at White-Hall, and while he was dreſſing, he ſaid he went out, in order to draw up a Bill of Indictment againſt the Duke of YORK; but he did not do it, becauſe he was otherwiſe adviſed by ſome Perſons, as I heard. Then at Michaelmas, 1682. when he was going to dreſs him, I held the Baſon to him to waſh, as he commonly had two or three every Day to wait upon him to dreſs him, there came in a Gentleman, that came newly out of Suſſex, I cannot remember his Name: He asked him how all Friends did in Suſſex, and then fell a talking about the Election of Sheriffs, and abuſing them that were then choſen, and reflected very much upon Sir John Moor, and called him Rogue, and ſaid he deſerved to be hanged up as an Example. And afterwards, he ſaid, the City of London was fired by the Duke of YORK's Order, and Sir Thomas Bludworth had a Hand in it; and the Forces at Black-Heath were to have plundered the City, and killed all the honeſt Proteſtant Diſſenters in London: And this he would prove, if ever they had a Parliament to their mind that ſhould ſit. At another time there was one Starkey, Henry Starkey, that was concerned in College's Buſineſs at Oxford, and one Mr. Paſchall, and I think, Capt. Clare, and ſome others that uſed to keep him Company, and Mr. Otes ſtepped up on a ſudden, and ſaid, The Duke of YORK was a Son of a Whore, and he ſhould live to ſee him hanged; and if they could but get a Parliament to their mind, they would ſoon ſend the Duke and all his Gang out of England, for he muſt never expect to ſucceed to the Crown.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray who did he ſay was to head the Forces at Black-Heath, that you talk of were to plunder the City?

Mr. Aſhlock. The Duke of YORK, and London was fired by his Order; and this he would prove, if they could but get a Parliament to their mind: And he ſaid, They ſhould take away the Poſt-Office from the Duke of YORK, and give it to the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Captain Creſſett, and ſwear him. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Capt. Creſſett, Pray do you remember what Diſcourſe you had with Otes, when the Duke went into Flanders, what he ſaid of His Royal Highneſs?

Capt. Creſſett. It was the laſt time the Duke went into Scotland with her Royal Highneſs, I think it was in October 1680. I was commanded over Night to wait at the Duke's Lodgings, till a Paper ſhould be delivered me by my Lord Rocheſter; I ſtay'd there till Twelve a Clock at Night, and not ſeeing my Lord come out, I went away, and came early the next Morning. And when the Duke and Dutcheſs went to take Water at the Privy-Stairs, I came down through the Guard Chamber, and Dr. Otes was in the Gallery that leads betwixt that and the Gate; when he ſaw me, I bid him, good Morrow Doctor, or he bid me, good Morrow; one of the two, I cannot exactly tell which: Says he to me, You will never leave, till you have loſt your Reputation. Why, what is the matter now, Doctor, said I, I hope my Reputation is not hung upon so slender a Thread, as to be lost for my going any where? Says he, You have been with JAMES: Who do you mean by JAMES, said I? YORK, says he. Surely, said I, it might have been the Duke of YORK, or his Royal Highness: No, said he, he is a Rascal, a Papist, and a Traytor, and I hope to live to see him hanged. Truly Doctor, said I, now let me give you a little Advice to govern your Tongue and your Passions, I assure you, they will do neither you nor your Cause good; it may do you a great deal of hurt in time, if you do not take care.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Sir William Jennings.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think we need call no more, though we have Multitudes of them, it is his daily Discourse.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Mr. Attorney; for though it be the last Day of the Term, and it is an unusual thing to have a Jury at the Bar on that Day, and more unusual to have them to execute a Writ of Enquiry here; yet in regard of the Greatness of the Person that is concerned, and the extraordinary nature of the Cause, We have ordered it thus, That all the World may see how his Royal Highness has been abused and scandalized by this Person.

Mr. At. Gen. The Defendant, my Lord, has been a Person pretty much talked of too.

L. C. J. Yes, truly, it is done with regard to him too; for he has been an eminent Man in his way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Sir William Jennings. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, Sir William Jennings, speak out, you hear the Question, What have you heard Otes say of the Duke of YORK?

Sir William Jennings. My Lord, at the Time of the Sitting of the Parliament at Oxford, I was in a Tavern there with Mr. Cranfield, one of the King's Gentlemen-Ushers, who seeing Mr. Otes going along by the Room, invites him to drink a Glass of Wine, there were a matter of some eight or nine at the Table; there was a little Partition Curtain, it being a long Room, and there was some Company beyond that Curtain, and some body in that Company named James Duke of YORK, and the KING's Health being drunk at our Table, Mr. Cranfield began a Health to the DUKE: Says Mr. Otes, Do not you Drink YORK's Health. Why should we not, says Mr. Cranfield, and a Gentleman or two more in the Company: Why, says he, he has ruined the Nation; and if the Devil has a place in Hell more hot than others, I hope he will bestow it upon him. Several Words past between Mr. Cranfield and him upon it, and the KING was told of it presently.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Justice Warcup. [Which was done.

Pray tell what you know of this Man's discoursing concerning the Duke.

Mr. Warcup. My Lord, I went into the Company where Sir William Jennings was that he spoke last of, and being desired to drink a Glass of Wine with them, I did so, and they told me what Dr. Otes had said there.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Titus Otes you mean?

Mr. Warcup. Yes, my Lord, the Room had a Partition by a Hanging or Curtain, and I was first in the other Company beyond the Partition, and there some body began a Health to his Royal Highness the Duke of York; this Health went round, and Otes was, it seems, in the next Room, and heard this Health I suppose: When I came into Sir William Jennings Company, Otes was gone; the Company there told me what Otes had said, as Sir William Jennings has declared, they all agreed those to be the Words, That he had ruined or betrayed the Nation; and if the Devil had a hotter place in Hell than other, he hoped he would bestow it upon him. I met Otes afterwards, and asked him why he would speak such irreverent Words of the DUKE? His Answer was, He was a Traytor, and was in the Plot; and he told me, I was a Yorkist, and he would remember me for it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not that affright you, Mr. Warcup, to have him threaten you so?

Mr. Warcup. I had then an Impeachment against me, and truly I think I might well be afraid.

L. C. J. You say, he owned the Words they told you of?

Mr. Warcup. They did all agree those to be the Words; and I met him afterwards, and asked him why he would speak so irreverently of the Duke, considering he was the King's Brother, and as virtuous a Prince as trod upon the Earth? Says he, He is a Traytor, and in the Plot; and you are a Yorkist, and I will remember you for it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall only call one more, to shew in what mind he continues to be, ever since this Action brought. Swear Mr. Charles Chapman. [Which was done.

Pray, Sir, Tell what you know.

Mr. Chapman. My Lord, I met Mr. Swift, the Duke of York's Attorney, when he was going over, as he told me, to demand a Plea of the Defendant Mr. Otes, and he desired me to go along with him, I did so; and when we came to him, Mr. Swift told Otes the Rules were out, and desired to know what he intended to do, whether he would plead or no. Otes asked him, If he were the Duke's Attorney? He answered him, Yes; Says he, I do not value the Duke, nor his Attorney neither, I will plead as I shall see Cause according to Law; I declare I neither love the Duke, nor fear him: And so turned his back, and was going away, and comes up again, and says to him, It may be I may be in for One hundred thousand Pounds here, but if ever a Parliament sit, I do not question but to have some body else in my place. Mr. Swift asked him to explain himself who he meant, says he, Do you come to Trapan me? And away he went.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we have now done, if the Jury please to consider of it.

L. C. J. Is there any body here for Mr. Otes, to offer any thing to lessen the Damages?

[To which no body answered.

Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, your Business now is to enquire what Damages you think fit to assess to His Royal Highness, by reason of the speaking of the Words mentioned in the Declaration, there being in this Action Judgment by Default obtained by His Royal Highness; and you have nothing now to do, but only to assess to the Plaintiff such Damages as you shall think fit.

Now, Gentlemen, tho' the Acknowledgment of this Judgment (for so it is in effect, it being by Default) be a sufficient Confession of the Words

Words being ſpoken as they are laid in the Declaration, yet they have given you Proof of the very Words.

The Declaration is in an Action grounded upon the Statute De Scandalis Magnatum, taking notice that His Royal Highneſs is a great Peer of this Kingdom, and His Majeſty's only Brother; and that Otes the Defendant knowing him to be ſo, to bring him under Reproach and Calumny, and to cauſe Diſcord to ariſe between the King and him, and between him and other Great Men, did ſpeak the Words laid in the Declaration which you have heard read, and which are theſe.

The firſt are, This Letter (Otes having a Letter in his Hand) coſt me nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny; I know no body is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York. This is laid over again with a very little Variation, This Letter coſt me nine Pence, and might have been afforded for a Penny, I know no body is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York; which are Words of the ſame ſound, and to the ſame purpoſe with the former; they differ only in ſome minute Circumſtances a Word or ſo, but import the ſame thing.

The next Words are theſe, The Duke of York is a Traitor; and theſe Words too are laid two ſeveral ways, differing but in very ſmall Circumſtances (Is a Traitor, and Was a Traitor) the Subſtance of the Words is the ſame.

Now I ſay, Gentlemen, Tho' it is not your Buſineſs to enquire whether or no Otes ſpoke theſe Words, for by letting Judgment go againſt him by Default, he doth in Law confeſs the Words, but you are to enquire what Damages may be fit to be given to the Plaintiff by reaſon of theſe Words; yet in as much as this Caſe is a Caſe of an extraordinary Nature, Weight and Moment, having relation to ſo great a Prince, His Royal Highneſs the King's only Brother, requires this extraordinary Solemnity, it having not been uſual heretofore, that is to have Writs of Enquiry executed at the Bar. But the Occaſion is extraordinary, ſuch as has not happened before this Age, this Corrupt Age, this Profligate Age, wherein we live, and wherein common ordinary Fellows, the meer Scum and Scoundrels of the Factious Party, have taken a Liberty to reproach and calumniate Magiſtracy and Government, and the greateſt Perſonages concerned in it, not ſparing even Majeſty it ſelf, nor Him, who is next in Degree to His ſacred Perſon, His only Dear and Royal Brother. And therefore as the Caſe is extraordinary in its Nature, ſo ought the Example of it to be made as publick as can be, in order to ſatisfy all People what a ſort of Fellow this Defendant is, who has been ſo much adored and looked upon with an Eye of Admiration, courted with ſo wonderful an Affection, and ſo, I had almoſt ſaid, Hoſanna'd among People that have been Factious and Tumultuous to the Government.

Such as he ought to be made publick Examples of; and therefore the King's Counſel have deſired that this Cauſe might be canvaſſed here at the Bar, and the Defendant, as he has made himſelf eminent for ſome particular Qualifications, might be made a publick Example for this Offence

Thus this Writ comes to be executed here. Now tho' the Words laid in this Declaration are Words that do import in themſelves ſo much Scandal and Reproach, ſo much Malice and Venom, that they need no Aggravation beſides themſelves, and his ſuffering it to go by Default ſhews they are no way to be extenuated, but are thereby acknowledged. Yet however to ſatisfy all People that deſire or have any Inclination to be ſatisfied, that this Proſecution is highly reaſonable, nay abſolutely neceſſary; they come here and give you an account that theſe in the Declaration are but a ſmall Part of the ſcandalous and malicious Words that the Defendant uſeth concerning the Plaintiff. And indeed it doth plainly appear, that the Malice of the Defendant is attended with all the moſt unchriſtian and uncharitable as well as diſloyal and diſobedient Circumſtances that any thing can be, with deſign to traduce and diſparage a Subject ſo Loyal, and a Perſon ſo Great and Illuſtrious as His Royal Highneſs.

As to the firſt Words, you have the firſt Witneſs Mr. Smith, and he gives you this Account, He was in a Coffee houſe where he met the Defendant Otes; and the Defendant in a vainglorious huffing ſort of manner, takes occaſion, tho' none was offer'd him by any thing ſpoken to him by any body, but only on ſet purpoſe to expreſs his Malice and Venom againſt the Plaintiff. He takes up a Letter that it ſeems came to him by the Poſt, and to gratify his own malicious Inclination, and to give it vent, he proclaims, This Letter coſt me nine Pence, it might have been brought or afforded for a Penny; and I know no body is the better for it, but that Traitor JAMES Duke of York.

So you ſee, Gentlemen, he takes hold of every little Occaſion, if he can but happen upon an Opportunity, ſuch as this was in an open Coffee-houſe, to reek his Malice upon His Royal Highneſs. And ſure there can be no greater Imputation of Scandal brought upon any Man than this upon the Plaintiff. That the firſt and greateſt Subject of the King of England's ſhould be taxed with the greateſt Crime in the Law, Diſloyalty and Treaſon to his Sovereign. And ſo at once not only chargeth him with being perfidious to his only Brother, againſt that Affection which by Nature he is obliged to pay him, and which all that know any thing, cannot but obſerve to have always been extraordinary; but alſo touches that which is much dearer to him than his Life, his Honour, by charging him with the foulſt of Crimes, Treaſon and Breach of his Allegiance, which as a Subject he owes to his Sovereign. And thus beſides the Defendant's Confeſſion, by this Judgment you have the very Words proved that are in the Declaration.

The next Witneſs is one Mr. Whaley, and he gives you an account of another Paſſage which I cannot but take notice of by the way, to ſhew you what a wonderful Chriſtian Temper this Man is endued with. Mr. Whaley ſays, That being at the Biſhop of Ely's Houſe upon a Publick Feſtival either of Eaſter or Whitſuntide (and he is ſure it was one of thoſe two, Becauſe, ſays he, I never uſe to receive the Sacrament in London, but upon one of thoſe two Days; and therefore I take it upon me to ſay, it was one of thoſe two Days that I heard theſe Words) Otes having, it ſeems, recei-received the Holy Sacrament at the Biſhop of Ely's Chappel with Mr. Whaley that Day. When a body would have thought that if Mr. Otes would have been believed to be ſo hearty and pious a Proteſtant as he pretends to be, he ſhould have remember'd that he ought, according to the Proteſtant Doctrine, to have left behind him at his Approach to the Altar, all Malice and Rancour and ill Will and Hatred to every body: But you ſee what kind of Deportment his was.

For after ſuch time as he had been at the Sacrament, he takes occaſion without any Provocation to fall foul immediately upon His Royal Highneſs, giving him the Name of a Profligate Wretch; and then particularly he comes to ſay, The Duke of York was a Traitor. This Gentleman being concerned, as every honeſt and loyal Man ought to be, and I hope every good Subject is, and ever will be, to hear ſo great a Prince, the King's only Brother, ſo traduced and vilified, reproved him for it; but ſo far was he from taking the Correction due to his extravagant Tongue in a becoming manner, that he preſently (as the Gentleman phraſeth it) calls for his Myrmidons, two Fellows that he had along with him to come to him, upon which the Gentleman was pleaſed to ſay to him, Nay, good Mr. Otes, you need not be in ſo very much Fear of your ſelf as to call for your Men, no body here intends you any Harm. Nay certainly, Mr. Otes did apprehend himſelf to be ſecure from all manner of Correction, or he would never have been ſo impudent to ſpeak ſuch Words.

But you will no doubt take notice, as all Men cannot but do, of what an excellent Goſpel Spirit, what a delicate Chriſtian Temper the Man is of, after the receiving the Sacrament, that very Morning to come and belch out ſuch extravagant Words of Calumny and Reproach.

And it ſeems this Perſon had obtained to make ſuch a wonderful Figure in the World, that every body was afraid to ſpeak to him; for you hear what the Witneſs ſays when he came to beg the Biſhop of Ely's Pardon for being ſo loud and hot at his Table, the Biſhop gave him Thanks for it, and told him, None of us dare ſpeak to him. Such a Conſiderable Man hath he been, that he might rail againſt the King, and the Duke, and the Government without Controul. He was got into ſuch a Poſt that no body durſt meddle with him, but he muſt have liberty to ſay any thing of any body. To what an height of Corruption were we grown, that we could ſuffer ſuch a Fellow's Inſolence, at which no Man living that has any ſpark of Modeſty or Loyalty left in him, but muſt bluſh and tremble.

Then they produce to you one Mr. Johnſon, who gives you an account that after ſome Diſcourſe between him and the Defendant Otes, about the Duke of York, he immediately told Johnſon, That the Duke was either to be hanged or baniſhed; it ſeems he was ſo ill a Man in his Eye, but of the two, hanging was the fitter for him. So the Doctor ſheweth what a wonderful Kindneſs and Affection he has for the Duke, and what Thoughts he has of his great Deſerts.

Mr. Bowring is the next Witneſs, and he comes and tells you, That the Doctor could not be prevailed with to dine with the Gentlemen of the Pariſh of Foſter-lane, becauſe ſome of them had dined with the Duke, which he calls Dining with the Devil. It ſeems he made as tho' he would preach there to them, he got up into the Pulpit and took a Text, and pretended to preach, and if he would have preached according to the Duty of a Church of England Divine, he was by that to have preached not only Obedience and Submiſſion to Authority; but Reſpect to Superiors, and Charity among all Subjects towards one another; and if he did preach it, it was worſe in him not to practiſe it. But you ſee after he had performed his painful laborious Preachment, after he had taken ſuch a wonderful deal of pains, as no doubt he did in inſtructing his Auditors, what his Language is in anſwer to a Civil Invitation to Dinner by the Church Wardens: Have any of you dined with York at the City Feaſts? And they not anſwering, but being ſilently amazed at the impertinent Impudence of the Queſtion, why truly he would not dine with thoſe that had dined with the Devil. It ſeems His Royal Highneſs had been pleaſed to honour ſome Societies of Loyal Men in the City of London with his Company at ſome Entertainments they made, and that is a great Offence to the Defendant; and as for thoſe that had received that Royal Favour from His Highneſs, he takes notice of them as ſuch whom he would neither eat nor drink with, for truly they had eaten and drunk with the Devil; but immediately the Doctor, in his great Zeal and wonderful Concern for the Proteſtant Religion, broke up from the Company, would neither eat nor drink with them, but choſe rather to dine at a private Braſier's by London-Wall; a properer Place in good Truth for him, than any ſuch Converſation they offer'd him.

Then further to ſhew what mean Thoughts he had of the Plaintiff, Mr. Fairfax he comes comes and teſtifies, That there being ſome Talk of a Preſentment or Indictment againſt the Duke of York by the Grand Jury here, but that meeting with a Diſappointment, he met Otes, and asked him, What he would do, for, ſays he, now you are Non-ſuited? That is, You have happened not to obtain the End that you deſigned: Oh, ſays Otes, No matter for that, that is all one, we will at him next Seſſions; and for my part, I will have no more regard to him than I would to a Scavenger. Nay, and becauſe they ſhould ſee the very utmoſt of his Malice, and the low Thoughts he had of His Royal Highneſs, as if it had not been malicious enough to have compared him to a Scavenger of London or Weſtminſter, no, that was a Station too honourable for him in his Thoughts, but he muſt neceſſarily be compared to a Scavenger of Kent ſtreet; which we all know to be one of the meaneſt, filthieſt, and moſt beggarly Parts of the Town.

The next piece of Evidence is, that which is given by one Mr. Philips, and when he came to him, he began to have ſome Reflexions about the Houſe of Commons and the Duke; and truly he did not doubt but he ſhould ſee him at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons; and it would be no Diſparagement to him to come there, for there were a great many Members there that were as good Men or better than he. And even by this Fancy of his he would fain degrade His Royal Highneſs; for in case he had him in no other Consideration but as a Peer, he should know that no Peer of this Realm can be forced by any Vote or Order of the House of Commons to come to their Bar. But he had a mind to take off his very Privilege of Peerage, and it would be no lessening of his Greatness, since that House had in it many Members better Men than the Duke himself. I presume he meant some particular Friends of his own in that House.

for

The next Man is one Mr. Ashlock, and he tells you, That because he would engage all People into an Hatred of the Duke's Person, he must, as a thing of the greatest consequence in order to it, make it be believed, that the Duke had a great Hand and Concern in the dismal Fire of London in Sixty six, that thereby he might make him obnoxious to the Rancour and Malice of all that suffered in that dreadful Calamity. And with what handsom Expression he cloaths it? He fired the City of London, he is the Son of a Whore, and we will have him hanged or sent out of England for it, whenever a Parliament meets.

So that here is not only a Personal Reflection, and Malicious Indignity done to His Royal Highness, but carries in it a great Reflection upon His Sacred Majesty himself in his Relations, and he is not contented only to belch out his Venom and Malice against those that are alive, but even against those that are dead too. For you see it is a most foul Imputation and Slander against Her late Majesty the Queen Mother to our Sovereign and His Brother, by calling him the Son of a Whore; which is an Expression of that impudent and insolent Nature, as is not fit to be mentioned in a Civil Government.

These things I think my self obliged to take notice of for Example's sake, and to induce all People to consider to what a height of Corruption we were grown when such Scoundrel Fellows as this dare to take such base Words into his Mouth, of the Royal Family.

Then comes Captain Cressett, and he gives you an account, That when His Royal Highness and the Dutchess were going last to Scotland, as the Captain return'd from the Duke's Lodgings, he met with the Defendant, who fell upon him, What, you have been with JAMES? It seems he was one of his intimate Acquaintance, and very familiar he was with his Name. Indeed a Man would have thought, if in case he had spoke as one Man ought to speak of another, that he had been speaking of one of his Myrmidons, and it would have been a very hard matter to have known who else he meant by that familiar Appellation. Says the Captain, What James? Why York. And he was very kind that he gave him that Addition to let him know what JAMES he meant; but when the Captain chid him, and told him, Sure you might either say the Duke of York, or His Royal Highness, then immediately, instead of that, he flies out, He is a Papist, he is a Traitor, and I hope to live to see him hanged, and you will go near to lose your Reputation if you go so often thither.

So that I perceive, if he will not be advised by this Gentleman, he should lose all his Credit; and yet I presume it is wonderfully for the Advantage of Mr. Cressett to lose the Credit he could get by any Characters or Commendations such an one as he could give him.

Then Captain Cressett kindly advised him to take care of injuring his Party by his Passion and his indecent Behaviour, and told him, it would turn to his Prejudice at last. And truly now, I think, if all his Party were in his Condition, and made to smart for the Lavishness of their Tongues, I think it were a good Accomplishment of his Prophecy, and if we were rid of them, we should be more at Peace. And we may without offence hope to see that sooner, than what the Defendant says he hoped to see.

The next is Sir William Jennings, who tells you of a Passage at the Parliament at Oxford, which shews his wonderful Gospel and Christian Temper. When a Company of Gentlemen were met together to drink a Glass of Wine, and were wishing Health and Long Life to His Sacred Majesty, His Royal Highness, and the Royal Family, he would not be contented to refuse the Glass, but to shew how wonderful a Christian Spirit he was of, and to evidence his true Protestant Charity (and by his Carriage who was one of the Heads of the Faction, we may guess at the Temper of all the Party) he cries out, He has ruined the Nation, and if there be any hotter Place in Hell than other, I hope the Devil will preserve it for him.

I presume his great Conversation with him he spoke of, hath given him some Intelligence there is in Hell some hotter Places than others, and who they are reserved for. But, Gentlemen, I speak not this that I think any thing that is thus proved by the by, doth in the least aggravate the Damages, for the Words in the Declaration are as bad as bad can be; but to let you see the Disposition of this Man that has been so much admired and courted.

After him comes Mr. Warcup, who tells you, he was not in the Room with Otes when the last Words were spoken, but coming in immediately after, they all told him the same Words, and he afterwards meeting with Otes, and reproving him for his indecent Behaviour and Expression, instead of any Remorse or Concern that he had upon him, by reason of his having spoken such Words, he doth still add to it, The Duke of York is a Traitor, he is in the Plot; and because you take his Part you are a Yorkist, and we will be even with you for it at one time or another. So he threatens him only for asking him why he behaved himself in such an indecent manner towards his Royal Highness.

The last Witness Mr. Chapman, is produced to shew what Mind he continues in. After all this is past, and a body would have thought he might by this time have been brought to some Consideration and Submission to Authority; yet you see how the Man is. The Witness tells you since the beginning of this Term, the Declaration being delivered, and by the Course of the Court he ought to Plead within such a Time, the Attorney goeth to him for a Plea, in order to make his Defence if he could in the Action now before you, but he lets Judgment go by Default; and so far is he from repenting of what he had formerly done, that he persists in it, and tells him, Are you the DUKE's Attorney? Yes. Well, I care not a Farthing for the DUKE nor his Attor- ney neither; it may be I may be in here for 100000 l. (and that I believe is one of the trueſt Things he ever ſpoke in his Life) but ſuppoſe I be, I do not doubt but when a Parliament meets, a Time will come, when ſome other People may come in my Place. But truly ſince he has declared his Hopes, I think it may not be amiſs for us to declare ours too; and for my Part, to ſay I hope I ſhall never ſee ſuch a Parliament.

Mr. Under-Sheriff. Lay your Heads together, Gentlemen, and conſider of your Verdict.

PROCEEDINGS on the OUTLAWRY againſt Sir THOMAS ARMSTRONG.

De Term. S. S. Trin. Anno Regni Regis Carol. II. xxxvi. Die Sabbati, 14. Junii, An. Dom. 1684. B. R.

Dominus Rex verſus Thom. Armſtrong. Mil.

THIS Day Sir Thomas Armſtrong was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench at Weſtminſter, by Vertue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of the Goal of Newgate; which Writ was on His Majeſty's behalf moved for on Thurſday laſt by Mr. Attorney General.

The Return of the Writ was read by the Clerk of the Crown, by which it appeared he was in the Cuſtody of the Keeper of Newgate, by a Warrant from the Honourable Sidney Godolphin, Eſq; one of His Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State; which Warrant followeth in hæc verba.

Sidney Godolphin, Eſq; of His Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, and Principal Secretary of State.

THESE are in His Majeſty's Name to Authorize and Require you to receive into your Cuſtody, from on Board His Majeſty's Yatch the Catherine, Captain Davis Commander, the Perſon of Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Kt. Outlawed for High-Treaſon, and him ſafely to keep in His Majeſty's Priſon of Newgate, till His Majeſty's Pleaſure be farther known. And for ſo doing this ſhall be your Warrant. Given under my Hand and Seal at White-Hall, this 10*th* Day of June 1684. In the 36*th* Year of His Majeſty's Reign.

S. Godolphin.

To Captain Richardſon Keeper of His Majeſty's Priſon of Newgate.

L. C. J. What would you have, Mr. Attorney? Sir George Jefferies.

Mr. At. Gen. Have you the Outlawry there? Sir Robert Sawyer.

Cl. of Cr. Yes, Sir, here it is.

Mr. At. Gen. That which I humbly pray, my Lord, is, an Award of Execution for the King againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong, upon the Outlawry.

L. C. J. Firſt, we muſt file this Return.

Mr. At. Gen. I pray it may be filed.

L. C. J. Let it be filed: Now what do you deſire, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I pray an Award of Execution upon the Outlawry.

L. C. J. Arraign him upon the Outlawry.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Armſtrong, Hold up thy Hand, [Which he did.

Thou haſt been Indicted in London, by the Name of Thomas Armſtrong, of London, Knight of High Treaſon, for Conſpiring againſt the King's Majeſty's Life, and the Government: For not appearing to Plead and Try that Indictment by due Proceſs of Law iſſued againſt thee, upon that Indictment thou ſtandeſt Outlawed, and thereby Attainted of the ſame High Treaſon. What haſt thou to ſay for thy ſelf why Execution ſhould not be awarded againſt thee upon that Attainder according to Law?

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord, I was beyond Sea at the Time of the Outlawry; I beg I may be Tried.

L. C. J. That is not material at all to us; we have here a Record of an Outlawry againſt you, Sir Thomas.

Sir

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I deſire to be put upon my Tryal, my Lord.

L. C. J. We cannot allow any ſuch Thing, we have nothing to do upon this Record before us, but to award Execution. Captain Richardſon, Which are your uſual Days of Execution?

Capt. Richardſon. Wedneſdays and Fridays, my Lord.

Mrs. Matthews. Here is a Statute, my Lord.

L. C. J. What is the matter with that Gentlewoman?

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. Hold your Tongue. My Lord there is a Statute made in the 6th Year of Edward the 6th, which I deſire may be read.

L. C. J. To what Purpoſe would you have it read, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. It giveth the Priſoner, or Perſon Outlawed for High Treaſon, a Years time to reverſe the Outlawry, if he were beyond Sea. I deſire it may be read.

L. C. J. Ay, let it be read. Where is it, do you ſay?

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. It is in the 6th Year of Edward VI.

Mrs. Matthews. Here is a Copy of it——— [Shewing a Paper.

L. C. J. Why, how now? We do not uſe to have Women plead in the Court of King's Bench; pray be at quiet, Miſtreſs.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. Pray, hold your Tongue. My Lord, I could not come to alledge this before, becauſe I have been a cloſe Priſoner, and no body permitted to come at me. I deſire Counſel to be aſſigned me at this Bar.

L. C. J. For what, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. To argue whether this Outlawry ought not to be reverſed.

L. C. J. Read the Statute he deſires.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, let it be read. Sir Thomas will not find it to his Purpoſe.

Cl. of Cr. What Chapter is it?

L. C. J. You may eaſily find it about Outlawries for Treaſon.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Provided always, and be it Enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That if the Party———

Mr. At. Gen. Read the Clauſe before that, Sir Samuel.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. And that all Proceſs of Outlawry hereafter to be made and had within this Realm, againſt any Offenders in Treaſon, being Reſiant or Inhabitant out of the Limits of this Realm, or in any the Parts beyond the Sea, at the time of the Outlawry pronounced againſt them, ſhall be as good and effectual in the Law, to all Intents and Purpoſes, as if any ſuch Offenders had been Reſident and Dwelling within this Realm, at the time of ſuch Proceſs awarded and Outlawry pronounced.

L. C. J. Read on the next Paragraph.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Provided alway, and be it enacted by the Authority aforeſaid, That if the Party ſo hereafter to be Outlawed, ſhall within one Year next after the ſaid Outlawry pronounced, or Judgment given upon the ſaid Outlawry, yield himſelf unto the Chief Juſtice of England for the time being, and offer to Traverſe the Indictment or Appeal, whereupon the ſaid Outlawry ſhall be pronounced as is aforeſaid: That then he ſhall be received to the ſaid Traverſe, and being thereupon found not Guilty by the Verdict of Twelve Men, he ſhall be clearly acquitted and diſcharged of the ſaid Outlawry, and of all Penalties and Forfeitures by reaſon of the ſame, in as large and ample manner and form, as though no ſuch Outlawry had been made, any herein contained to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir Thomas, I ſuppoſe, now will ſhew he yielded himſelf to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. This is the firſt time I have ſeen Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord I have been a Priſoner, and the Year is not yet out; I now render my ſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. Before he went out of England he might have rendered himſelf, and been Tried, if he pleaſed.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I am within the benefit of the Statute, I conceive, my Lord.

L. C. J. We think otherwiſe, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I think, my Lord, the Statute is plain in the Caſe.

L. C. J. We are of another Opinion than you are; it doth not reach your Caſe.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. The Year is not yet out, and therefore I come time enough now; and here I am, and deſire the Benefit of this Act.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas, you ſhould have rendered your ſelf to me.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I do it now, my Lord, and the Year is not yet out.

L. C. J. We cannot take notice of that; we have nothing but the Outlawry, and you did not render your ſelf according to that Act, but are brought as a Priſoner before us now.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord, I beg I may have Counſel to Plead for me in this Caſe.

L. C. J. For what reaſon? We are of Opinion it is not a Matter of any doubt. For you muſt not go under the Apprehenſion that we deny you any thing that is right; there is no Doubt nor Difficulty at all in the Thing.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. Methinks, my Lord, the Statute is plain.

L. C. J. So it is very plain that you can have no Advantage by it. Captain Richardſon, you ſhall have a Rule for Execution on Friday next.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I would only take notice of one Thing, my Lord, may I ſpeak?

L. C. J. Ay, Sir Thomas, very freely what you pleaſe.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. A little while ago there was one in this Place had the benefit of a Tryal offered him, if he would accept of it; that is the Thing I deſire now, and I thank God, my Caſe is quite another thing than his, I know my own Innocence; and I deſire to make it appear by a Tryal.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Armſtrong. You may go away with what Opinion you pleaſe, of your own Innocency: But you are here Attainted by Outlawry. That which was done, to him you ſpeak of, was the Grace and Mercy of the King, and he may, if he pleaſe, extend the ſame Grace and Favour to you; but that is not our Buſineſs: We are ſatisfied that according to Law we muſt award Execution upon this Outlawry.

Mrs.

Mrs. Matthews. My Lord; I hope you will not murder my Father; this is murdering a Man.

L. C. J. Who is this Woman? Marſhal, take her into Cuſtody. Why, How now? Becauſe your Relation is Attainted for High Treaſon, muſt you take upon you to tax the Courts of Juſtice for Murder, when we grant the Execution according to Law? Take her away.

Mrs. Matthews. God Almighty's Judgments light upon you.

L. C. J. God Almighty's Judgments will light upon thoſe that are Guilty of High Treaſon.

Mrs. Matthews. Amen, I pray God.

L. C. J. So ſay I. But Clamours never prevail upon me at all; I thank God, I am Clamour Proof, and will never fear to do my Duty.

[Then She was carried away.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I would only acquaint you with one Thing, in reference to what Sir Thomas Armſtrong has ſaid: The King did indulge Holloway, that he ſpeaks of, it is true, ſo far as to offer him a Tryal, and His Majeſty perhaps might have ſome reaſon for it, but the Priſoner truly deſerves no Sort of Indulgence or Mercy from the King. For it has appeared by the Evidence that has been given of this late horrid Conſpiracy, that after the Diſappointment that was given by the Providence of God, by the Fire at New Market, to the meeting at the Rye; this Gentleman was one of the Perſons that actually engaged to go upon the King's haſty coming to Town, and to deſtroy him by the way as he came to Town. And this appears upon a full and clear Evidence, as poſitively teſtified as any thing can be. And when he was taken beyond Sea, Letters of Communication with foreign Miniſters and other People were taken about him, and will be——

L. C. J. We are not to meddle at all with the Evidence, Mr. Attorney; that is not our Buſineſs; here is an Outlawry, upon this Outlawry he is Attainted; we have nothing more to do, but to do the Duty of the Court upon this Record before us, to award Execution upon that Attainder, and we muſt give a Rule for it. If the King will be pleaſed to do for Sir Thomas Armſtrong what he did for Holloway, and indulge him a Tryal, and wave the Outlawry, with all our Hearts. We are not Diſpoſers of his Grace and Favour, but the Miniſters of his Juſtice. If the King will pardon him, he may; that is not our Buſineſs; but all we have to do upon what is before us, is to conſider the Record, and what the Priſoner ſays againſt our awarding of Execution. We have conſidered whether this be a yielding within the Proviſo of this Statute, and we think it is not, nor can be, by any means.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord, I am within the Statute, I was Outlawed while I was beyond Sea, and I come now here within the Twelve Month. That is all I know, or have to ſay in this Matter.

L. C. J. We think quite the contrary, Sir Thomas.
